However, if this (Salvo) as it hath been objected, would preserve this Aid now in question, yet the Statute made afterwards de Tallagio non concedendo, being without any Salvo, takes it away; which Statute, Raftal in his Abridgment, fol. 441. in his Title of Taxes, abridgeth it in this manner:

Anno 25 E. 1. It is Ordained, That the Taxes taken, shall not be taken in Custom, nor but by the assent of this Realm, except the ancient Aids and Taxes. And there the Taxes of Wooll of 40 s. a Sack is released.

Ibidem 2. That no Tallage by us or our Heirs in our Realm, be put or levied without the assent of the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, Barons, Knights, Burgessees, and other free Commons of our Realm, that nothing be taken from henceforth in the name, or by the reason of Male tout, of a Sack of a Wooll, Statute de Tallagio non concedendo.

Mr. Solicitor laboured much to prove, that there was no such Statute de Tallagio non concedendo.

1. For that it was not to be found in the Rolls of Parliament.

2. For that it was not set down when it was made.

3. That it was but an Abstract out of Confirmatio Charta Libertatum.

Mr. Attorney said he would not deny it to be a Statute, neither would he affirm it; but yet it did not extend to take away the Aid demanded by Prerogative or Power Royal for the defence of the Kingdom.

Sol. To this I answer, this was never doubted to be a Statute until this Argument; and that it is a Statute, appeareth.

1. For that it is printed in the Book of Statutes as a Statute.

2. It is recited in the Petition of Right, 3 Car. to be a Statute.

To that, that it is not found in the Rolls, I answer, that many Statutes which are known Statutes are not found in the Rolls, as Magna Charta is not.

And as touching the time, I conceive it to be made in 24 E. 1. cap. 1. for so it is set down in the great Book of Statutes, printed Anno 1618. to be the first Chapter of the Statutes therein made, viz. in these words.

No Tallage nor Aid shall be taken or levied by us or our Heirs in our Realm, without the good will and assent of Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, Barons, Knights, Burgessees, and other Freemen of the Land.

And that it is a Statute, all my Brothers the Judges have agreed.

The only doubt then is, whether this Statute extendeth to Aids for the defence of the Kingdom, which I think it doth; for it is the precise words, that no Tallage nor Aid shall be taken or levied, but by consent in Parliament, which extendeth to all manner of Aids.

Boden saith, fo. 97. by a Law made in the time of E. 1. that it was provided and enacted, that no Tax, Talliage, nor Aid shall be imposed, but by grant in Parliament; and by this Law the Subjects of England have defended themselves ever since, as with a Buckler, whereby it appeareth that notice was taken of this Law in foreign parts, and so held still to be a Statute in force.

The next Statute is 14 E. 3. cap. 1. which reciteth the grant of the great Subsidy of the ninth Fleece, ninth Lamb, &c. formerly granted; thereupon these words follow.

We willing to provide for the Indemnity of the said Prelates, Earls, Barons, and others the Commonalty of the Realm; and also of the Citizens, Burgessees, and Merchants aforesaid, will and grant for us and our Heirs, to the same Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Commons, Citizens, Burgessees, and Merchants, that the same Grant shall not be had forth in example, nor fall to their prejudice in time to come: nor that they be from henceforth charged nor grieved to make any Aid, nor sustain charge, if it be not by the common assent of the said Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men, and Commons of the said Realm.

Anno 1637. Realm of England, and that in the Parliament; and that all the profits arising of the said Aid, and of Wards, Marriages, Customs, and Escheats, and other profits arising of our said Realm of England, shall be set and dispended upon the maintenance of the safeguard of this Realm of England, and of our Wars of Scotland, France, and Gascoign, and in no place elsewhere, during our said Wars.

By this Statute it appeareth, that it is expressly provided, that the Subjects should not be from henceforth charged nor grieved to make any Aid, nor sustain any charge, but by common assent, and that in Parliament, which is as express as may be, and exclusive to any charge otherwise, which I conceive was made against the appointment of making or preparing, and sending out of Ships at the charge of the Towns wherein they were, or sending men out of their own Counties at the charge of the County.

Now where it is alledged by my Brother Wesson, and my Brother Barkley, that this was but a Temporary Statute, and ended when his Wars ended, which appeareth by the last Clause, for imployment of those profits of his Wards, &c. towards those Wars; I conceive it appeareth to be an absolute and perpetual Statute, for it is granted for him and his Heirs, which is in perpetuity: And also it appeareth by Plowden his Commentaries, fo. 457. in Sir Thomas Wroths Case, where a grant is by the name of the King, which is in his Politick Capacity; this extendeth against him, his Heirs and Successors, although they be not named.

Also the intendment of this Law appeareth to be for the security of the Subjects, from thenceforth for all future Ages; and then the Office of Judges is, as appeareth by Sir Edward Cook his Reports, lib. 3. fo. 7. and Plowden Commentaries in Eiston and Studs Case, to construe Statutes according to the true intent of the Makers thereof, which was in this Statute, that it should be perpetual security for the Subjects; and to little purpose it had been to make a Statute to continue but during the time of the Wars, or during the Kings life.

Obj. Also where it is alledged, that this Statute of 14 E. 3. is not mentioned in the Petition of Right, which is some Argument that it was not conceived to be a continuing Statute.

Sol. To that I answer, that in that Petition of Right it is said, that by the Statute there recited, and other the good Statutes of this Realm, the Subjects shall not be compelled to any Tax, Tallyage, Aid, nor other like charge not set by Parliament, in which this Statute is as well intended as other Statutes, and as far as if it had been expressly recited. Also it appeareth by all the Books of Statutes, that this Statute is printed as a Statute continuing, whereas others expired are so set down as expired.

21 E. 3. pars 2. m. 11. A Subsidy being granted by Parliament, viz. 40 s. of every Sack of Wooll transported before Michaelmas following, and 6 d. of every 20 s. of Merchandize for the safe guarding of the Merchants, defence of the Coasts, &c. After Michaelmas, viz. 31 Octob. 21 E. 3. by Writ the Collectors were commanded to continue the Collection of those Subsidies until Easter. But 26. Novemb. 21 E. 3. the King by Writ commanded the stay of the 6 d. in the 20 s. and to continue the Collection of the Subsidies upon the Sacks of VVooll until Easter.

22 E. 3. Parl. m. 16. The Parliament being holden in Lent, the Commons complained of this continuance of the Collection of the Subsidy upon the Sacks of VVooll longer than the Parliament had granted it, and provided that it should not be continued longer than Easter by the procurement of no person.

By this it appeareth, that the Parliament being careful, that the time for levying of a Subsidy granted, should not be enlarged by any Power, much less would they admit of a VVrit to lay a charge without grant by Parliament.

25 E. 3. m. 8. It was Enacted, That no man should be compelled to find Men at Arms, other than such as hold by such services, except it be by common assent in Parliament.

By this it appeareth, that if men be not compellable to find a Man at Arms, unless it be by common assent in Parliament, much less is any bound to be contributory to the preparing of a Ship with 180 Men at Arms, and Victuals, and Wages of the Souldiers for a time, unless it be by common assent in Parliament.

Rot. Parliamenti 2 H. 4. n. 22. An Act of Parliament (as I account it in the very point) is in these words; For that of late divers Commissions were made to divers Cities and Boroughs within the Realm, to make Barges and Barringers, without assent of Parliament, and otherwise than hath been done before these hours: The Commons do pray the King, that these Commissions may be repealed, and that they may not be of any force or effect; to which it is answered, that the King willet that the said Commissions be repealed in all points, which is an absolute and perfect Statute: but then there is added these words; But for the great necessity that he hath of such Vessels for defence of the Realm, in case that the Wars shall happen, he will treat with his Lords of this matter, and afterwards will shew it unto the Commons, to have their counsel and advice in this point: So by this Record it appeareth, that the Commons did conceive, that no Cities, Boroughs, nor Towns, without assent of Parliament, were to be charged with the making of such Vessels; to which the King agreeth; and from that day to this very day (until the making of these Writs) in no Age (although the Kingdom hath been many times in danger of Invasion, and hath been invaded) there do not appear any Records that ever I have seen, of any Writs directed to any Towns or Cities, at their charges to make or prepare any Ships or Vessels whatsoever.

Obj. And whereas it hath been objected, and specially insisted upon by my Brother Barkley, that this latter part (that the King will treat with his Lords concerning them, and after confer with the Commons) is a gentle denial of that Act, as the experience is at this day: Roy se aviserà, is a denial of an Act.

Sol. Hereunto I answer, that it is an absolute Act, for it is an absolute assent to the Petition, and that which came after was but a plausible excuse; for that such Commissions had gone out, and this further Consultation never appeared to be made, nor never any such Writ or Commission for such Vessels to be made, went out ever since until this Writ.

13 H. 4. n. 10. A grant is of a Subsidy of VVoolls, VVooll-fells, Hides, and other things there mentioned, and of Tunnage and Poundage for one year for the defence of the Marches of Calice, &c. and for the defence of the Realm, and safeguard of the Sea; and therein is the express

Car. 13.

1637. Ann. preis proviso, viz. Provided always, that this grant of a Subsidy of Woolls, &c. and of Tunnage and Poundage in time to come, shall not be taken in example, to charge the Lords or Commons of this Realm with any manner of Subsidy for the safeguard of Calice, &c. nor for the defence of the Realm, nor for the safeguard of the Seas, unless it be by the will of the Lords and Commons of the Realm, and that by a new grant to be made, and that in full Parliament to come: by this it appeareth, that it was then provided, that no charge should be laid upon the Lords or Commons, no not for the defence of the Realm, but by grant in full Parliament.

13 H. 4. n. 43. A Petition was in Parliament, reciting, that there was an Office granted of Almager within London, and the Suburbs of the same, with Fees to that appertaining, where any such Office never was, nor any such Fees appertaining thereunto; and that by colour thereof, they levy ob. of the buyer, and ob. of the seller; and upon sale of every hundred Ells of Canvas, a peny of the seller, and a peny of the buyer, wrongfully against the Statutes in the time of your Highness Progenitors made to the contrary; by which it is ordained, that no Talliage nor Aid shall be granted nor levied, without assent and consent of the Lords and Commons of your Realm, as by the said Statute fully is declared: wherefore they pray, that such Letters Patents made thereof shall be void, and holden for none: And this was granted; whereby it appeareth, that it is declared then in Parliament, that these Statutes were, and did continue, that no Talliage or Aid shall be levied without grant in Parliament.

1 R. 2. cap. 2. It is enacted in these words; Our Sovereign Lord the King, remembring how the Commons of this Realm by new and unlawful inventions, and inordinate Covetize against the Laws of this Realm, have been put to great servitude, and importune charges and exactions, and especially by a new Imposition, called a Benevolence, whereby divers Subjects of this Land, against their wills and liberties have paid great sums of money, &c. It is enacted and ordained, That the Subjects and Commons of this Realm from henceforth shall in no wise be charged by such charges or Impositions, called a Benevolence, or by such like charge; and that such exactions, called a Benevolence, before that time taken, shall be taken for no example, to make any such, or any like charge of any his Subjects of this Realm hereafter, but shall be damned and annulled for ever.

By this it appeareth, that it is expressly provided, that the Subjects shall not be charged by way of Benevolence (which is in nature of a free gift nor such like charge; that is, no charge of money shall be upon the Subjects for any pretence whatsoever, be it for defence in time of danger, or the guarding of the Seas.

The last and concluding Statute is the Petition of Right, made in the third year of his Majesties Reign, where reciting, that it was enacted by a Statute made in the time of E. 1. commonly called, Statutum de Tallagio non concedendo, that no Tallage or Aid shall be laid or levied by the King or his Heirs in this Realm, without the good will and assent of the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, Barons, Knights, and other the Freemen of the Commonalty of this Realm: And by a Statute of 25 E. 3. That none shall be compelled to make any Loans to the King, because such Loans were against reason, and the Franchise of the Land: And by another Statute, that none shall be charged by any Impositions, called a Benevolence; by which Statutes, and other the good Statutes of this Realm, your Subjects have inherited this freedom: That they shall not be compelled to contribute to any Tax, Tallage, Aid, or other like charge not set by Parliament.

And then they pray, that none hereafter be compelled to make or yield any Gift, Loan, Benevolence, Tax, or such like charge, without common consent by Act of Parliament.

And after five other things there mentioned, the conclusion is, all which they pray is their Rights and Liberties; unto which the King answers, let Right be done, as is desired, which is a full and perfect Statute, shewed in this point the liberty of the Kingdom prayed and allowed, which was not done without the advice of the Judges then being, whereof I was one; whose Opinions were then demanded, and resolved, that the same did not give any new liberty, but declared what the liberty of the Subject was in this amongst others, that they should not be compelled to be contributory to any Tax, Tallage, Aid, nor any like charge not set by Parliament.

By reason of all which Statutes, especially of those of 25 E. 1. 34 E. 1. and 14 E. 3. being in the Negative, and in force; I conceive that these Writs, to lay such a charge, is against the Law, and so the Assessment by colour thereof not lawful.

Obj. Now whereas the precedent Arguments have been, that the Kingdom being in danger, therefore these Writs went forth for the making of Ships, because there could not be so suddenly any Parliament called; and the Parliament is a slow body, and the Kingdom may be lost whilst there is a Consultation: And the danger is conceived, to be very great, because the first Writ of 4 Augusti so mentioneth, that the Pyrates provide a great Navy to infest the Kingdom, and it is fit with speed to provide a remedy; and that the Writ of Mittimus mentioneth, that Salus Reipublice periclitabatur: And we must believe these suggestions to be true; for the Kings Certificate by this Writ is, Recordum superlativum, as Mr. Solicitor and my Brother Berkley termed it; and we must leave it upon the Kings Conscience (if it be not true) to lay such a charge upon an untrue suggestion: And the Defendant also by his Demurrer hath confessed all the suggestions in the Writ to be true; therefore it must be conceived that the Kingdom was in great danger, and present remedy must be had by making of these Ships, and must be commanded by these Writs, and not to stay for a Parliament: And my Brother Crawley said, it may be that if a Parliament were called, they will not yield to the going forth of such Writs, although the Kingdom were never so much in danger.

And this Charge (in respect of the making of the defence) is not within the intention of these Statutes; and if it had been expressly mentioned within a Statute, that such a charge should not be imposed, it had been a void Statute, and contrary to the Law, that the Kingdom should not be defended.

Answ. 1. To all these I answer, That the matter now in question is upon the Writ of 4 Augusti, whether that be legal or not, and the suggestions therein be sufficient or not; for the Writ of Mittimus mentioning, that Salus Reipub. periclitabatur, at the day of the issuing of the Writ of Anno 1637. of 4 Augusti (which is a year and a half after the first VVrit) doth not help it: And this is not notified to the Sheriff and Inhabitants of the County, to make them the more careful, and in the greater contempt, if a Ship were not provided: but it is only a notification of the Barons of the Exchequer, that the same was the reason why the same issued forth.

Answ. 2. That the suggestions are not absolute, that any such danger was, or such Navy was prepared by the Pyrates, but only mentioneth, Quia datum est nobis intelligi, that the Pyrates had done such mischief.

Answ. 3. If such suggestions had been absolutely set down, yet we are not always bound absolutely to believe them, because many times untrue suggestions are made in VVrits and Patents; and yet it doth not lye upon the Kings Conscience, neither doth the Law impute any fault to the King, if any such be; for the Law doth always conceive honourably of the King, that he cannot, nor will not signifie any untruth under his Great Seal; but he is abused therein, and the Law imputeth it to them that so misinformed the King, and thrust in such suggestions into the VVrit; and therefore all Patents grounded upon untrue suggestions are accounted void.

Answ. 4. That the Demurrer confesseth nothing, but that which is legally and well set down; but if it be illegal, the Demurrer confesseth it not, but is well offered for that Clause.

Answ. 5. If the Kingdom were in danger, yet a charge must not be laid in general upon the Subjects without their consent in Parliament; for either the danger is near, and then the present provision must be made by mens persons, and the present Ships of the Kingdom, which the King may command from all parts of his Kingdom, as need shall require: but cannot command Money out of mens purses, by distraining of their goods, or imprisoning their persons: But if the danger be further off, by reason of any forreign Combinations (as it is conceived it may be here) then provision must be made of Ships by all the Kingdom for defence; then, as Philip Comines, fol. 179. that Cloud is seen far off, before that the Tempest fall, especially by a Forreign VVarr; and such Invasions cannot happen so soon, but that the King may call his Sages together, and by consent make provision for such defence.

So I say here, if there be a time to make Ships, or prepare Ships at the charges of the Counties; then is there time enough for his Majesty (if he please) to call his Parliament, to charge his Commons by consent in Parliament to have a Subsidiary Aid, as always hath been done in such cases; and they are not so long coming or meeting, but to make provision for defence, being for all their safeties.

For it appeareth by Cook, lib. 9. fo. 1. in his Epistle, that King Alfred made a Law, that the Parliament should be held twice every year, and oftner, if need require, in time of Peace: So that it was then conceived, that it was necessary to have Parliaments often to redress inconveniences.

Also by a Statute made 4 E. 3. cap. 14. It is Enacted, that a Parliament shall be held once every year, and oftner, if need be: Also by a Statute made 36 E. 3. cap. 10. It is enacted, for redress of mischiefs and grievances that daily happen, a Parliament shall be holden every year; as another time was ordained by a Statute, which I think referreth to 4 E. 3. Also it appears by the speed that was in the Parliament held in 3d. of his Majesties Reign, five Subsidies were granted, two of them to be paid within few days after the Session of Parliament ended; and therefore might (as this Case is) have been ordered and provided for by Parliament, within 7 Months, as the time was between the Test of the Writ, and the time prefixed for Ships to be prepared and sent.

Obj. Where it is objected, that the Parliament perhaps would not have consented, and so the Kingdom might have been lost.

Sol. It is answered, that it is not to be presumed, that the Parliament would deny to do that which is fit for the safety and defence of the Kingdom, their own Estates and Lives being in danger, if the Kingdom were not sufficiently defended; for it is a Rule, Nihil iniquum est presumendum in Lege: So of the High Court of Parliament, that they would not deny that which is fitting; But I confess I do think if it had been moved in Parliament, they would never have consented to these Writs, they never having been awarded before, since the Conquest; and if they had consented, they would have taken a course how the same should have been made with most conveniency, and not to leave it to the Sheriff to tax them how, and when he would.

Obj. 7. To that which hath been said, that this charge is not within the intention of the Statutes, and that a Statute to prohibit such a charge for defence were void.

Sol. I answer, that it is true, if a Statute were that the King should not defend the Kingdom, it were void, being against Law and Reason; but a Statute that Money shall not be charged or levied, nor that men shall be charged to make or prepare Ships at their own charges, without common consent in Parliament, I conceive were a good Law, and agreeable to Law and Reason; and the King may by Parliament restrain himself from laying such a charge but by consent in Parliament: And then, the King, being a just and pious King as ever governed the Kingdom, (which we that serve in his Courts of Justice have daily experience of) would not assent unto, or suffer any such charge, if he were truly informed, that the imposing of this charge were against any one Law of this Kingdom, as this is against so many; but would say (as it is said in the Statute made 35 E. 1. that the Pope should not be permitted to present to Benefices) that he was bound by his Oath to see that, and other Laws in force, and not repealed, to be performed, that he would not suffer such charges to be laid contrary to the Laws and Statutes of his Realm, and would do as the late famous Queen Elizabeth did, when having required a Charge, upon divers her Subjects by particular Letters from the Lords of her Council, of several sums of money, for present help towards her Wars in Ireland, hearing that one of her Judges being Convented before her Lords for not payment of it, thereby discouraging others to pay it, answered, that it was against the Law that the same should be imposed, there being an expresse Statute against it, which he being a Judge was bound by his Oath to signifie, he being, as much as in him was, to be a Conservator of the Queens Oath in that behalf; the Queen, I say, was very angry that such an Imposition had been made against Law, and commanded that it should be stopped from further gathering, and to some that had paid their moneys, the same were restored: And therefore the principal principal and only fault in the charging of his Subjects by these Writs (if they be unlawful, as I conceive they are) is in those that devised them, and informed him that they were lawful, and such as his Progenitors had from time to time used to send out, and in his Judges who have affirmed it to be lawful: Therefore upon this point I conclude, that this Charge by this Writ is illegal, and is no sufficient cause to charge the Defendant.

Obj. 3. Where it hath been much urged and argued by Mr. Solicitor and Mr. Attorney, that this VVrit is warranted by the Kings Prerogative and power Royal, to send forth such VVrits for defence and safety of the Kingdom in time of danger.

Sol. To this I answer, that I do not conceive that there is any such Prerogative; for if it were a Prerogative, I should not offer to speak against it; for it is part of our Oaths that are Judges, to maintain the Kings Prerogative to the best of our skill, and not to suffer the same to be diminished; but if it be (as I have argued that it is) against the Common Law, and against so many Statutes, that the Subjects should be enforced to sustain, or to contribute to any charge, without the especial consent or common assent in Parliament, then there is no such Prerogative: For whatsoever is done to the hurt or wrong of the Subjects, and against the Laws of the Land, the Law imputeth that Honour and Justice to the King (whose Throne is established by Justice) that it is not done by the King, but it is done by some untrue and unjust Information; and therefore void, not done by Prerogative.

This appeareth by the Authorities of our Books; for Bracton, lib. 3. fo. 107. who is an ancient VVriter in our Law, said, Nihil aliud potest Rex in terris, cum sit Dei minister, & Vicarius quam de Jure potest: And there a little after, Itaque potestas Juris sua est, & non injuria cum sit Author Juris, non debet inde injuriarum nasci occasio unde jura nascuntur. Sir Edward Cook in the eleventh Book of his Reports, in the Case of Magdalen Colledge, where the Question was, whether Queen Elizabeth having taken a long Lease of a Colledge, being conceived to be against the Statute of 13 Eliz. it was sought to be maintained by her Prerogative, but resolved it could not, being against a Statute, by which she was bound, although not named; and there fo. 72. it is said, Hoc solum Rex non potest facere, quod non potest injuste agere. Plowdens Comment, fo. 246. & 247. in the Lord Berkleys Case it is said, that the Prerogative of the King cannot do wrong, and his Prerogative cannot be any warrant to do any wrong to any.

Plowdens Comment, fo. 487. in Nichols Case, it is said by Justice Harper, although the Common Law doth allow many Prerogatives unto the King, yet it doth not allow any that he shall hurt or wrong any by his Prerogative.

21 E. 3. fo. 47. the Earl of Kents Case, it is said, that if the King under his Great Seal do make any grant to the hurt of any other, he shall repeal and avoid it Jure Regio; for the King is accounted to be abused by untrue suggestions, when he is drawn to do any wrong to the hurt of any other, much more, I say, when he is drawn to do any thing to the hurt of his Subjects in general.

Sir Edward Cook lib. 11. fo. 86. in Darceys Case, it is said, that every grant of the King hath this Condition unto it, Tacite or Expresse; Ita quod Patria per Donationem illam magis solito non oneretur seu gravetur.

The Book called Doctor and Student, fo. 8. setting down, that the Law doth vest the absolute property of every mans goods in him; and that they cannot be taken from him but by his consent, saith, that is the reason, that if they be taken from him, the party shall answer the full value thereof in damages: And sure, I conceive, that the party that doth this wrong to another, shall besides the damages to the party, be imprisoned, and pay a Fine to the King, which in the Kings Bench is the tenth part of as much as he payeth to the party: So then, if the King will punish the wrong of taking of goods without consent between party and party, much more will he not by any Prerogative take away any mans goods without his assent, particular or general.

So I conclude, that I conceive that there is not any such Prerogative, to award such Writs, to command men to sustain such Charge, or to be contributory to it, and to be distrained or imprisoned for non-payment thereof.

Also I conceive, that this is not an Act of Royal Power; for if it be illegal to impose such a Charge, then it is not accounted as a matter of Royal power, but as a matter done upon an untrue suggestion, and a matter of wrong done; and wrong is not imputed to the King, for he can do no wrong, but it is imputed unto them who advised him to this course.

Royal Power, I conceive, is to be used in Cases of necessity and imminent danger, when ordinary courses will not avail; for it is a Rule, Non recurrendum est ad extraordinaria, quando fieri potest per ordinaria; as in cases of Rebellion, sudden Invasion, and in some other cases where Martial Law may be used, and may not stay for legal proceedings; but in a time of Peace, and no extraordinary necessity, legal courses must be used, and not Royal Power.

Therefore where by the Statute of 31 H. 8. cap. 8. which was made upon the Suppression of Abbies, when Rebellions were begun to be stirred; it is recited, That sudden occasions happening, which do require speedy remedies, and for lack of a Statute, the King was enforced to use Royal Power: It was enacted for the Reasons therein mentioned, That the King, by the Advice of His Council therein named, 2 Bishops, 2 Chief Justices, and divers others, or the more part of them, by His Proclamation may make Ordinances for Punishment of Offences, and lay Penalties which should have the force of a Law (with a proviso that thereby no mans Life, Lands, or Goods should be touched or impeached) so that therein Royal Power was fortified by a Statute; yet that Statute took care, that no mans Life, Lands, nor Goods should be taken or prejudiced; and yet that Statute was thought inconvenient, and therefore by a Statute of 1 E. 6. the same was repealed.

Bracton lib. 2. cap. 24. fo. 55. and the same is cited in Cook lib. 7. fo. 11. in Calvins case, Regis corona est facere justitiam et judicium, et tenere pacem sine quibus Corona consistere non potest, nec tenere.

Cooke lib. 7. fo. 5. in Calvins Case cited out of Fortescue, Rex ad tutelam Corporum et bonorum erectus est; which being so, he cannot take any mans Goods, or charge him without his assent by any Prerogative or Royal Power.

Also there can be no such necessity or danger conceived, that may cause these Writs to be awarded warded to all Counties of England, to prepare Ships at such a Charge, and with such Men and Munition, without consent in Parliament.

For the Laws have provided means for defence in time of Danger, without taking this course; for that the King hath power to command all, or any persons of His Kingdom, to attend with Arms at the Sea Coasts, to defend the Coasts, or any other parts of the Kingdom. And also by His Officers, to make stay or arrest of all, or any the Ships of Merchants and others, having Ships, or as many as he pleaseth, to go with His Navy to any parts of this Kingdom for defence thereof, and to attend those to whom he appointed the Guard of the Sea or Sea Coasts, at such times and places as they should appoint: And this hath been always taken and conceived to be sufficient for defence against any Prince whatsoever; and yet the same was in times when the Navy of England was not as now (by the blessing of God, and good providence of His Majesty) it is.

That this course was then so taken, it appeareth by divers Records, viz. 23 E. 1. m. 4. The Record reciteth, that the French King had prepared a great Navy upon the Sea, and purposed to invade the Kingdom, Et linguam Anglicanam de terra delere; and thereupon the King commanded all His Ships and Men with Arms to be in readiness, to defend the Kingdom.

Seco. 10 E. 3. m. 16. reciteth, That certain Gallies in the parts beyond the Seas were prepared with provision of Men and Arms, and other necessities of War, and ready to invade the Land, command was, That divers Ships shall be in readiness to defend; and the Ships of the Ports of Ireland be sent into England, to help to defend the Kingdom.

Seco. 10 E. 3. m. 22. A Writ was to the Bailiff of South Wales, reciting, That the Scots, and divers others confederating together, prepare themselves to Arms and Ships in a great number, and intend to invade the Kingdom; Command to them was, To have one Ship ready upon the Sea, to defend their Coasts: The like Writ was then to North Wales.

Alm. 12 E. 3. m. 10. A Writ to the Major of London, Quia hostes nostri in Gallis cum multitudine non modica congregati, in diversis partibus Regni hostiliter ingressi sunt & civitatem predict. celeriter si possunt invadere proponunt: The King commandeth them to shut up the City towards the Water, and to put all their men in Arms ready to defend, &c.

Alm. 13 E. 3. m. 13. A Writ to the Bayliff of Great Yarmouth, Quia pro certo dediscimus quod hostes nostri Franci & adherentes eisdem Gallias & naves gucrinas in copiosa multitudine in partibus exterius congregarunt, & eis hominibus ad arma & al. arma parare faciunt & proponunt se movere versus Regnum nostrum, et navigium Regni nostri et portus prope mare situm pro viribus destruere et idem Regnum invadere, &c. Command to the said Town to prepare 4 Ships, with 240 Men, &c.

At the same time like Writs went forth to twenty other Towns upon the Sea Coasts, Franc. 26 E. 3. m. 5. A Writ to the Earl of Huntingdon and others, Quia adversarii nostri Franci nos & Regnum nostrum invadere machinantes, magnum navigium parare fecerunt & armari naves ad Regnum nostrum Anglicum subito attrahenda, sed ad nos et Dominium nostrum et totam nationem Anglicanam pro viribus subvertenda, &c. Commanding them to Guard all the Sea Coasts of Kent, and to array all men ready with Arms to defend the Sea Coasts.

5 H. 4. m. 28. A Commission is to Thomas Morley and others, Quod cum inimici nostri Franci Brittan. Sco. et al. sibi adherentes inter se obligati magna potentia Armari super mare in statu prox. futur. ordinarunt Regnum nostrum Anglie invadere, &c. commanding them to array Men with Arms to defend, &c.

4 H. 8. pars secunda; The King by Proclamation into the County of Kent, sheweth, that it is come to His Knowledge of certain, that His Ancient Enemy the French King, hath prepared and put in readiness a great and strong Navy, furnished with Men of War to invade the Kingdom of England; The King appoints the Lord of Abergavenny and others, to put men in array, and to be ready to defend that County.

Anno 1588, when the great Invasion was by the Navy, termed, The Invincible Navy, which was foreseen long before: This course of preparing Ships by every County of the Kingdom was not appointed. Yet in all these times, when there appeared so great dangers of Invasions, there never went any such Writs into any the Counties of England to provide Ships: But the Navy of England and Army of England was always accounted sufficient for the Defence of the Kingdom: So I conclude this point that I conceive this course cannot be taken by any Prerogative or Royal Power, nor any Allegation of Necessity or Danger.

For the 4th point, I conceive, That if it were legal to lay such a Charge upon Maritime Parts, yet to charge any In-land County with making of Ships, and furnishing them with Masters, Mariners and Souldiers at their Charge, which are far remote from the Seas, is not legal, nor warranted by any former Precedent; for it commandeth an unreasonable and impossible thing by them to be done: And then a Writ commanding such a thing as is unreasonable, and not possible for the Parties commanded of themselves to perform without help of other Counties, is always illegal, for it is a Rule, that Lex non cogit ad impossibilia; If one by Covenant bind himself to do a thing impossible, the Covenant is void.

This appeareth by the Book-Case in 40 E. 3. fo. 6. where the Case is expressly, That if a man do covenant to do a thing that is impossible, this Covenant is void, and the Deed is void in that respect: Also the Book in 2 E. 4. fo. 2. If a Feoffment be made upon condition to be void if the Feoffee do not a thing which is impossible, this Feoffment is good and the Condition void, for it was the fault of the Feoffer to annex such a Condition; and this appeareth by the Case of an Arbitrement: If the Arbitrator award that one shall enter into Bond with such an one as his Surety to pay a Sum of Money, or to do any other Act, it is void, as to the finding of a Surety at the least; for it is not in his power to compel him to be his Surety, therefore the Law accounteth it unreasonable, and so void; and this appeareth by the Book, Case 17 E. 4. fo. 5. wherein it is so resolved.

So this Writ, commanding the Sheriff and Inhabitants of an In-land County to find a Ship furnished with Masters and Mariners, whereas there is not any Ship-Wright that hath skill to make Ships, nor any Masters nor Mariners ever there inhabiting, to guide a Ship; for they are still conversant about matters of the Plough, and feeding Cattel, and Husbandry, and are trained up by Musters for skill of Arms to defend the Countries, but not with Sea Affairs; for most of the Anno 1637. the County never saw a Ship, nor know what belongeth to Masters or Mariners of Ships; and the County is not bound to seek out of the County for such men; and perhaps if they should, they cannot tell where to hire them: Therefore when such Writs to In-land Towns have been awarded to find a Ship with Masters and Mariners, it being conceived by information, that they were Maritime Towns, and had Ships and Mariners dwelling with them; the truth thereof being made to appear to the contrary, they have been discharged as it appeareth by a Record in 13 E. 3. pars 2. m. 14. where a Writ went to the Admiral of the Fleet: These Ports, upon complaint to the King, by the men of Bodmyn in the County of Cornwall, that they were unjustly charged to find a Ship with Masters and Mariners, whereas that Town was no Port Town, nor adjoining to the Sea, but far within the Land, nor ever had Ships lying there, nor Mariners, nor Seamen, nor ever used to find any such for Sea-Service; and that their Majors and Officers were imprisoned for not finding such a Ship; thereupon the King appointed to have it inquired, whether their Allegations were true, and if it were true, signified, that he would not have them so unjustly charged; but that they should be discharged thereof; which sheweth, that it was there accounted unjust to lay such a Charge upon a Town that was an In-land Town, and had no Mariners inhabiting in it, much more when such a Charge is upon an In-land County which is much further remote from the Sea, and cannot perform by themselves that which the Writ commandeth.

But this Record being objected by the Defendants Council, Mr. Solicitor gave answer, the same was because the Admiral of his own Authority had charged them, which was not according to his Commission, for he was only to charge the Port Towns and Sea Towns, but that the same may not be done by the Kings Writ, the Record doth not prove.

But to this I answer, that I conceive it is all one when such a Charge is laid upon a Town by Writ which is an In-land Town; for so it appeareth by another Record of the same year, viz. 13 E. 3. pars 1. m. 14. where a Writ was directed to the Admiral of the Fleet, ab ore Thamisis versus partes occidentales, reciting, That where the King by His Writ to the Town of Chichester commanded the Major and Commonalty there, that they should make unam navem & duos escularios de guerra parari, with Mariners and Men at Arms to be at Portsmouth such a day to go with the King's Ships, and that they had complained that they had not, nor ever had any Ships arriving in that Town, nor had any Seamen or Mariners dwelling there, and that it appeared unto the King by Inquisition of a Jury returned into his Chancery this Allegation to be true; therefore, because the King would not have them indebite pregravari (for so be the words of the Record) the King commandeth the Admiral, that they should not be troubled nor distrained for not performance of such Service; whereby it appeareth, that if they being within few miles of the Sea, should not be charged to find such a Ship, much more In-land Counties which are much further remote from the Seas are not justly to be charged with finding any Ships and Mariners; therefore I conclude this point, that I conceive this Writ in that respect is not legal, nor warranted by any former Precedent.

The fifth and great point hath been, and indeed the chief Argument hath been a multitude of Records and Precedents which have been cited that should warrant these Writs, and that the King hath done nothing but what His former Progenitors have done, and have lawfully done, and that he doth now but Mores Majorum; and that which always in ancient time hath been done and allowed, and therefore ought now to be done.

I confess, these Allegations much moved me when I heard these Records cited, and so learnedly and earnestly pressed by Mr. Solicitor; and after by Mr. Attorney, to be so clear, that they might not be gaind; but that they proved a clear Prerogative, or at least a Royal Power, than the King might do so, especially when my Brother Weston and my Brother Barkley (who had seen the Records) pressed some of them, and relied upon them for the Reasons of their Judgments; I say, I was much doubtful thereupon, until I perused all these Records sent me by the King's Council, and satisfied my Judgment therein.

But now I answer, That if there were any such Precedents (as I shall shew that there was not one shewed to me) to prove this Writ to be usual, yet it were not material; for now we are not to argue what hath been done de facto, for many things have been done which were never allowed: But our question is, what hath been done, and may be done de jure; and then, as it is said in Coke lib. 4. fol. 33. in Witten's Case, Judicium est legibus, non exemplis: And lib. 11. fol. 75. in Magdalen College Case it is said, Multitudo errantium non parit erroris patrocinium: And lib. 4. fol. 94. in Slades Case, Multitude of Precedents, unless they are confirmed by Judicial Proceedings in Courts of Record, are not to be regarded; and none of these were ever confirmed by Judicial Record, but complained of.

But to give a more clear answer unto them, I say, that in my opinion, upon view and serious reading of all the Records that have been sent me on the Kings part; for I have read them all over verbatim, and I presume they sent all that were conceived to be material, and I having taken notes of every one of them, I conceive that there is not any Precedent or record of any such Writ sent to any Sheriff of any Inland Counties, to command the making of Ships at the charge of the County; But this is the first Precedent, that ever was since the Conquest, that is produced in this kind; but it is true, that before 25 E. 1. there have been some Writs to Maritime Towns and Ports, and other Towns, as London &c. where they have had Ships, and Mariners to provide and prepare Ships, and to send them to places where the King pleased to appoint, upon any Just cause of fear of any danger for defence: And great reason that they having Ships, and Masters of Ships, and Mariners, should be at the Kings command, to bring all, or as many as he pleaseth, for the defence of the Sea and Kingdom, being those that had the most benefit of the Seas, and likely to have the loss, if the Seas and Coasts were not duly guarded; and those were most commonly appointed no be at the Kings charges: But sometimes upon necessity they were appointed to be at the charges of the Towns and parts adjoining, which I think was the true cause of the complaint in Parliament, in 26 E. 3. and the making of that Statute for the staying of that course; for there is no record afterwards of any such Writs in R. E. 1. time after that Statute to Maritime Towns to prepare or send Ships at the charge of the Towns, but in time of E. 3. then the wars began between him and the French King: in Annals 10, 11, 12, & 13. of E. 3. were the most Writs awarded to the Maritime Towns to send Ships at their charges sufficiently furnished; and those I think were the principal cause of the making of the Statute of 14 E. 3. Cap. 1. and after that Statute, no such Writs, nor any Commissions for that purpose, were awarded to any Maritime Towns and Inland Towns for the making of Ships but one, which Record was much pressed by Mr. Weston, and my Brother Barkley, to prove that this course was and might be practised after the Stat. of 14 E. 3. for sending forth such Writs, and allowed; but that Record is fully satisfied; for it was grounded upon an ordinance in Parliament in 1 R. 2. m. 52. That all ancient Cities, Boroughs and Towns, that would have then confirmed their Charter without any charge of Fine, save only to make a Ship of War for Defence of the Realm, so this was not Compulsary to any, but voluntary to those that would have their liberties confirmed, and afterwards in 1 H. 4. Commissions were awarded for making of such vessels of War, But those stirring forth without any ordinance of Parliament, were complained of in Parliament, 2 H. 4. as to be against the liberty of the Subject, as appeareth by the Statute before recited, and those Commissions expressly repealed, and since that time of 2 H. 4. no such Writ issued forth in any age to any Maritime Towns to make Ships, or prepare Ships at their own charge for the Kings service, until these late Writs.

This general answer I give to all the Records; and now I shall take a short view of all the Records that have been cited, and sent to me, and leave them to the Judgment of my Lords and others, if any of them prove these Writs usual and Legal.

The Records of King John.

6 Jo. m. 1. 9 Jo. m. 3. 14 Jo. m. 2. 17 Jo. m. 7. Three of these are to arrest & make Stay of Ships, that they should not go out of the Kingdom, but to be ready for the King's Service; and the other was to bring Ships of particular Towns to the Mouth of the Thames for the King's Service.

The like Writ was then to the Admiral of the Fleet, from the Mouth of the Thames unto the North-parts, with like Command to hold the Ships together upon the Sea.

Scot. 10 E. 3. m. 16. A Writ commanding the Ships of the Ports of Ireland to be sent hither to Guard the Seas there.

10 E. 3. m. 12. A Writ to the Bailiffs of Tarmouth, to cause the Men of that Town to contribute to the Charges of the Ships, and Men, and Victuals sent from thence for the defence of the Kingdom.

Scot. 10 E. 3. m. 22. A Writ to all the Bayliffs of Liberties and Men of South-Wales, to have one Ship riding upon the Seas for the Defence of those parts.

Idem. The like unto the Men of North-Wales,

Scot. 10 E. 3. m. 21. A Writ to the Arrayers of Men for the County of Berks, to compel them of that County assigned and assessed for the keeping of the Sea-Coasts in the County of Southampton, to go to Portsmouth by a Day therein appointed.

Alm. 12. E. 3. m. 12. A Commission that the King had appointed all the Ships from the Mouth of the Thames Northward, to be Arrested, and to cause them to be furnished with Munition, Men and Victuals, and to be brought to Tarmouth, and that the Men of Lynn refused to contribute to the Expences of the Charge of the Men sent in the Ship from the Town, and the furnishing of that Ship; and therefore commandeth the Commissioners therein named, to assess them that refuse so to contribute, and to distrain them.

Alm. 12 E. 3. m. 13. The like to compel the Men of Bardefsey to contribute for the Expences of the Men of that Town.

Clause 12. E. 3. m. 17. The like to compel the Men of Surrey and Sussex to contribute to the Expences of the Men of those Counties that attend for the Guarding of the Sea-Coasts there.

Vasc. 12. E. 3. m. 8. A Writ to all Archbishops, Bishops, &c. and to the Sheriff of Kent, and to the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, and all others in that County, commanding them to be assisting to J. de Cobham, to whom the Custody of the Seas in those parts is committed, and to defend those Coasts against Foreign Invasion.

Alm. 12 E. 3. m. 10. A Writ to the Mayor of London, reciting the danger of Invasion; and commanding to shut up the Gates towards the Water, if the Enemies approach.

Alm. 13. E. 3. m. 12. A Writ to the Bayliffs of Tarmouth, reciting by his Writ he had commanded 4 Ships of War of that Town to be made ready, with Men, Munition and Victuals, for three Months, at the Charges of the Town, to be brought to Grewel; and that they failed to come at their Day, to the great peril of the Land; therefore commandeth the Bayliffs to compel them at another Day therein prefixed, to be at the same place.

There is set down, that the like Writs were awarded to the Bayliffs of 17 other Towns, for sending their Ships, being Charged some for one Ship, and some for two Ships.

Clause. 13. E. 3. m. 38. A Supersedeas for the Abbot of Ramsay, for being Charged with Arms for Guarding of the Coasts in Norfolk, for his Lands in Norfolk. because he was by command attending with all his Forces in the County of Hunting. for the Safety of those Parts.

Clause. 13. E. 3. m. 14. A Writ of Supersedeas to the Arrayers of Arms in the County of Oxon, to discharge John Mandist to serve there, because he attended in Wilt.

Clause. 13. E. 3. m. 14. A Writ unto the Arrayers of Arms in the County of Wilt., which is only concerning the Payment of Soldiers wages then attended to Guard the Sea-Coasts.

These being all the Records shewed, it appeareth, that there were no Writs issuing out of those times to any Sheriffs of In-land Counties, or Maritime Counties, to make or prepare Ships upon any occasion whatsoever; but only to Maritime Towns, to send their Ships, or prepare Ships at their own Charges.

The Records shewed me since 14 E. 3. do not shew any Writs to be awarded to any Maritime Town to prepare Ships at the Charge of the Towns.

But these Records of 1 R. 2. and 1 H. 4. which I have before answered; and they, since that time, shewed unto me (except such as I have formerly mentioned in my Argument) are these.

Scot. 26. E. 3. m. 14. A Commission to Nicholas de Cartlage, to Array Men to resist the Scott.

Idem. A VVrit to the Mayor of York to Array all their Men to be ready when they shall be required.

20 E. 3. m. 15. A Commission concerning the Arrays of Men in the Counties of Derby and Northingham, and to punish them as came not when they were appointed.

Rot. Franc. 21. E. 3. m. 31. A VVrit to the Arrayers of Men in the County of Southampton, to discharge the Abbot of Battail to find Arms for the Sea-Coasts there.

Franc. 25. E. 3. m. 23. A Commission to John Bodingham for the Custody of the Ports and Maritime parts in Cornwal, and to Array all the Men to be in readines

There is set down that the like Commission is to others in several Counties.

Franc. 26. E. 3. m. 5. A Commission to the Earl of Huntingdon and others, to have the Custody of the Ports in Kent, and to Array Men, and to set up Beacons, &c. which is the first I observe in this kind.

The like Commissions then to several other persons to Array Men in several Counties, as Warw. Oxford, Berks, Bucks, &c.

Franc. 46. E. 3. m. 34. A VVrit to the Archbishop of Canterbury, reciting the danger of the Invasion by the French, to hurt the Church and Kingdom; commanding him to Array all his Clergy in his Diocess, and to be ready to go with the King's Forces, &c.

The like VVrits to all other Bishops in the Kingdom.

Franc. 50 E. 3. m. 47. A Writ to the Arrayers of Men in the County of Norfolk, and to the Sheriff of Norfolk. commanding them to command all Great Men and others that had Mansions upon or near the Sea-Coasts, to resort with all their Families, for defence of the Coasts.

The like to the Arrayers, and to the Sheriffs of Ten other Maritime Counties.

Scot. 29. E. 3. m. 13. A Commission to the Bishop of Durham and others, to Array Men in Durham, Cumberland and Northumberland, to resist the Scotts.

Franc. 40 E. 3. m. 31. A VVrit to William Zouch and others, to remove with all their Families milies to their Houses upon the Sea-Coasts.

In the Time of R. 2.

1 R. 2. m. 7. A VVrit to the Bayliffs of Scarborough, because their Town was upon the Coasts of the Sea, and in danger by Invasion, carefully to look to the Custody thereof, &c.

Eodem. Rot. m. 12. A Writ to the Mayor and Bayliffs of Oxford, to repair the Walls of the Town, and to compel those that had Lands there, to contribute to the Expences thereof: This Record hath been much urged by Mr. Solicitor and Mr. Attorney, that if the King have such a power to command the walls of a Town to be repaired, much more to command Ships to be made, which are the walls of the Sea, and consequently the walls of the Kingdom; but this is clearly answered; for that it is but a private Town, and that which hath formerly been so walled, and for defence and safety of the Town, and none charged but those that had benefit thereby, and so proveth nothing to the Case in question.

Eodem. Rot. m. 42. One Writ to the Sheriff of Kent, and another to the Sheriff of Essex, commanding them to perform an Ordinance made by the King and his Council, for setting up of Beacons, and keeping watch about them.

Scot. 7. R. 2. m. 8. A Writ to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to command all his Clergy between 16, and 60, to be Arrayed and put in Arms, both Horse and Foot, according to their Qualities, to be ready to defend the Kingdom.

Franc. 11. R. 2. m. 13. A Writ to Serjeants at Arms to Arrest all Ships of VVar in the Ports of Plymouth and Dartmouth, and other parts in the County of Cornwall, and to bring them to Hants Hook, to go with the Kings Majesties Ships.

In the same Roll divers other VVrits to divers other Serjeants at Arms, to Arrest the Ships in divers other Ports.

Scot. 21. R. 2. m. 3. A Commission to the Duke of Albnall. to Array Men in the VVest-Marches towards Scotland, to resist the Scots.

Rot. Vioagii, 1 H. 4. m. 11. A VVrit to the Sheriff of Derby and Nottingham. reciting that the King certainly understood that the Scots intended with a great Power to invade the Kingdom, commandeth him to proclaim in all parts of his Counties, that all men between 16, and 60, should put themselves into Arms competent, according to their Degrees, to be ready upon two days warning to defend the Kingdom.

The like Writs were then directed to the Sheriff of Lincolne, York, and Lancaster.

Claus. 1 H. 4. m. 12. A Writ to the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Satis informati estis qualiter inimici nostri Franc. & alii sibi adhaerentes, cum magna classe Navium, cum magna multitudine Armatorum, super mare congregat, diversas villas per Costeram Regni nostri invadere, & nos & Regnum nostrum destruere, & Ecclesiam Anglicanam subvertere intendunt & proponunt; Thereupon commandeth that the Clergy in that Diocels be arrayed and Armed, and to be ready at the Kings command to go against the Enemy.

The like Writs were then awarded to every Bishop of England.

Pat. 5 H. 4. pars 2. m. 28. A commission to Thomas de Morley, and others, and to the Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk, and to the Bailiffs of Great Yarmouth, reciting, quod cum inimici Franc. Brittan, Scotia & alii sibi adhaerentes, inter se obligat. magna potentia Armatis. super Mare in Esbat. proxim' futur' ordinaver' & intendunt Regnum invadere, &c. Command to survey the Town of Yarmouth and fortifie it.

Note here also notwithstanding such great danger mentioned, and such distance of time, yet no Writs issued to any Counties to prepare Ships.

Pat. 3 H. 5. pars 2. m. 37. A Commission to Array all men at Arms in the West Riding in Yorkshire, to be ready to Defend those parts.

The like Commission to others in 19 several Counties.

Pat. 13 H. 6. m. 10. Pat. 39 H. 6. m. 12. Pat. 39. H. 6. Pat. 39. H. 6. m. 1. Commission for arraying men for the defence of the Kingdom, if Invasion shall be, and for repressing of Rebels.

Pat. 10 E. 4. m. 12. Commissions to George Duke of Clarence & al. to Array men for Defence.

Pat. 10 E. 4. m. 13. Commissions to Marquess Mountague to array and put in Arms all men beyond Trent, Pat. 1 H. 7. pars 1. A Commission to Richard Fitzhugh and others, and to the Sheriff of Yorkshire, to array and to cause to be Armed all able persons, Abbots and others, to be ready to Defend the Kingdom.

1 H. 7. pars 3. A Writ to the Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk, to proclaim in all parts of these Counties, for that there was like to be open Wars between Charles of France and the King of the Romans, and great Navies are prepared of either side, commanding that watch and ward be kept, and Beacons kept to give warning that every man be ready if need be, to come and Defend the Kingdom.

4 H. 8. pars 2. A Writ to the Sheriff of Kent, commanding him to proclaim in his County, that the King being certainly informed that the French King hath prepared a great and strong Navy, furnished with men of War, to invade this Kingdom: Therefore commandeth all men within the age of 16 to 60, to put themselves in Arms to be ready to defend the Kingdom at an hours warning.

11 Eliz. Commissioners went to take view of all the horses of Engl. for service, and to survey all the Arms, to have them all in readines as necessity should require.

Now it appeareth upon view and examination of all these records (most of them being cited by Mr. Solicitor and Mr. Attorney, in their several Arguments,) they are none of them to prove the sending of any such writs to Inland or Maritime Counties, to prepare such Ships, although there have been many times of great danger, nor yet any VVrits to Maritime Towns, after the Statute of 14 E 3. to charge to find any Ships at their Charges; So then I conclude this point, that I conceive this VVrit is not warranted by any former Precedent.

Now I come to examine the point of this writ whether the same be legal and warranted by any former Precedents? and I conceive it is not.

First, the motives mentioned in the VVrit, Ffff 3 are

are quia datum est nobis intelligi (which is no certain information) Quod quidam prædones & Maris Grassatores, did take the Kings Subjects, Merchants and others, and carried them into miserable Captivity.

Secondly, Cumq; ipsos conspicimus Navigium indies preparantes ad Mercatores nostros molestand' & regnum nostrum gravand', all these and those following I conceive are not sufficient Motives, and were never in any Precedent before to have a Royal Navy prepared, for the former Precedents are, that great Princes in open time of Hostility, had provided great Navies with Munition, and Souldiers, with intent to invade the Kingdom, as appeareth by the former Precedents, and against such provision it was necessary to provide a Royal Navy, the Kings Ships, and all the Ships of the Kingdom to be gathered to withstand them: But to make such preparation against Pirates, it was never put in any VVrit before; for when Pirates infested the Seas, they came as it were by stealth to Rob and do mischief, and they never dare appear, but when they may do mischief and escape away by their lightness, but against them the usual course hath been that the admiral or his deputy with some few Ships, have scoured the coasts, and not to imploy the whole Navy, and this appeareth by a Record of 25 E. 1. m. 9. Will. Leighborn the admiral was appointed upon such an occasion with 10 Ships to lie upon the Seas for the safeguard of the Merchants, and the usual practice hath been when they hover upon the Sea, by sending a few Ships of war to scatter them, to make them absolutely to fly away, and there is no doubt of loss of the Dominion of the Seas by any Act Pyrates can do, neither is it convenient that every County of the Kingdom, should prepare Ships against them.

Thirdly, the command of this writ is to provide a Ship of 450 Tuns, at the charges of the County, furnished with Masters and Mariners, which is impossible for them to do for the reasons before alleaged, and therefore is illegal, and not warranted by any former precedent.

The command of this VVrit as to find wages for Souldiers, for 26 weeks after they come to Portsmouth, when they are out of their Counties; and in the Kings service is illegal being against the Course of Precedents in divers times, and against divers expresse Statutes, and this appeareth by divers records.

15 Jo. In the VVrits of Summons of the Tenants by Knights service, it is expressly mentioned, that after 40 days service (for so many days they were to do service by their Tenures) they should be satisfied ad denarios Regis.

Pasch. 26 E. 1. Amongst the VVrits of the exchequer, it is there set down, that the foot-men of Cheshire, being 1000, which were appointed to go to the defence of the Borders upon Scotland, would not stir out of that County without wages, and there is set down that one therein named was sent down with money to pay the said foot-men.

Mich. 26 E. 1. Inter Brevia irretornabilia in the Exchequer, by reason of the Invasion of the Scots, many Souldiers were taken from divers parts of the Kingdom, ad vadia Regis; and there is mentioned, that Clerks were sent down with Money to pay the Souldiers of several Counties their wages.

30 E. 1. In the Exchequer in Account the wages for Land-Souldiers for several Counties, and the wages of Mariners are set down, what the wages that was paid came to by day, and by week, both by Sea and by Land. Car. 13.

Tr. 31 E. 1. Inter Brevia in the Exchequer, the VVardens of the Marches of Scotland signified to the Barons, that the Men of Cumberland and Westmerland, appointed for the defence of the Marches, would not stir out of their Counties without wages; whereupon Order was given for wages for them.

19 E. 2. Commissions went out to pay the Souldiers which served out of several Counties, for defence against Scotland.

Hill, 2 E. 3. Rot. 16. In the Exchequer, it was Ordered in Parliament, that where some Souldiers had received of some of the Kings Officers Money for their wages, were fain to give Bonds for repayment, that those Bonds should be all redelivered.

1 E. 3. cap. 5. That no man shall be compelled to go out of his Shire, but where Necessity requireth, by sudden coming of strange Enemies into the Countrey; and then shall be done as hath been done in times past, which I conceive to be at the Kings wages, when any are out of their Counties.

But to clear all doubts, the expresse Statute of 18 E. 3. cap. 7. is, that Men of Arms, Hoblers and Archers, chosen to go in the Kings service out of England, shall be in the Kings wages, from the time they go out of their Counties where they were chosen, until the time they came again.

1. 19 H. 7. cap. 1. Those that had any grants of Lands from the King. And

2. 11 H. 7. cap. 1. Those that had any Offices of the grant of the King are to serve the King in his Wars; but in both it is appointed they shall have wages, from the time they shall come from their houses, until they return.

2 and 3 E. 6. cap. 2. It is enacted, that no Captain receiving Souldiers, serving by Sea or by Land, shall receive any wages for more Souldiers, or more time than they serve, and shall enter the days of their entring into wages, upon pain, &c.

3. All which Records and Statutes do prove, that the Souldiers should be at the Kings wages; therefore this Command for Souldiers wages for 26 weeks, when they go from Portsmouth, is illegal, and expressly against the said Statutes; and so the Assesment being entire, as well for the wages as the other charges, I hold it to be clearly illegal, and not to be demanded.

4. That the Command of this Writ to the Sheriff to assess men at his own discretion is not legal, nor warranted by the Precedents; for the Precedents are commonly, that Assesments for Contribution for making or setting out of Ships, have been by Commissioners, which by presumption had knowledge of such matters, as commonly Sheriffs have not.

Also this leaveth to the Sheriff too great a power to value mens Estates, as to inhaunce whom he will, and favour whom he will.

5. That the power to the Sheriff and Mayors of Towns, &c. to imprison, especially as it is used, is illegal, and expressly against divers Statutes; for it is provided by Magna Charta, cap. 29. Quod nullus capiatur vel imprisonetur, nec super eum ibimus nisi per iudicium Parium suorum vel per Legem terra.

Also in the 5 E. 3. cap. 9. That none shall be attached, attached, nor his goods seized, contrary to the form of the great Charter.

Also by the Statute made in the 37 E. 3. cap. 18. it is recited, that by that great Charter none should be taken or imprisoned but by due process of Law; yet by colour of this Writ, the Sheriff may imprison any person, yea any Peer of the Realm; for although Peers are not to be arrested upon ordinary Process between party and party, as it was resolved in the Countess of Rutlands Case in Cook lib. 6. fo. 32. yet for a Contempt, and upon Process of Contempt, which is always for the King, any Peer may be imprisoned, as it is resolved by all the Lords, and all the Judges in the Star-Chamber, in the Earl of Lincolns Case; and so the Sheriff, by colour of this Writ, may arrest any Peer as for a Contempt, in not paying. But by the Book Case, 2 E. 3. fo. 2. it is resolved, that a Writ to imprison one upon suggestion before he be Indicted, or without due process of Law, was illegal: So for this Clause I hold this Writ to be illegal.

6. The last Clause of this Writ is, that by colour of this Writ more should be gathered than will be sufficient for the necessary expences of the premises; and that none that shall levy any money towards these Contributions, shall detain the same with them, or employ the same to other uses; and if more then did suffice were collected, it should be paid amongst those that paid after a ratable proportion: These are reasonable Clauses, but as the course is taken, it is not to be performed; for no Ship, nor Tackling, nor Munition, nor Men, nor Wages, nor Victuals being provided, it is not to be known whether more to be gathered, or less than would suffice; and there being money gathered, it is of necessity either detained with the Collector or Sheriff, or employed to other uses than are appointed by the Writ, so the Writ is not performed, and the money assessed and collected is not duly paid nor collected, and the money assessed and unpaid, cannot duly be demanded.

7. Admitting that the Writ were legal, and the Commands therein legal, yet the Assessment, as it is certified, is not sufficient to charge the Defendant; for it is not certified that any Ship with Munition, and Men, and Wages for Men and Victuals was prepared; and this is a year after the time that it should have been prepared, and sent to Portsmouth; and if it were not prepared, there is no cause to charge the Defendant, and that not appearing to be done, it shall be conceived not to be done.

For if one be charged in consideration of a thing to be done, before a certain time to pay a sum of money, if the thing be not performed according to the time, none can be charged for not payment of the money after the time is past; for it is in nature of a Condition precedent, to have a duty or sum of money to be paid after the Condition performed, and there he that will have the duty, must shew that the Condition is performed.

This appeareth in the Case of 15 H. 7. 1. and Cook lib. 7. fo. 9. Ughbreds Case: And therefore if the Ship be not prepared according to the Writ, nor money employed for preparing a Ship for and in the name of the County, then every one that paid any money, either voluntarily, as in obedience to the Writ, or compulsarily upon distress, may demand their money again of the Sheriff, or of them that received it; for as they paid their money, so it must be disposed of, and cannot be disposed of otherwise by any Command whatsoever, although it be under the Great Seal; for the Command being under the Great Seal to prepare and furnish a Ship to such a purpose, as in the Writ is mentioned, and they paying it to that purpose, it cannot be otherwise disposed, although it be more for their advantage; for private men having interest therein that cannot be taken from them, nor dispensed withall: Therefore in Cock lib. 7. fo. 37. in the Case of Penal Laws, it is resolved, that if the penalty appointed to be forfeited upon a Penal Statute to be given to the poor of a Parish where the offence is committed, the King cannot dispence with the penalty for that offence, because the poor have an interest therein; but if the penalty be given part to the King, and part to the poor, the King may dispence with his own part, but not with the part of the poor.

Obj. And where it hath been said, that it is by way of Accommodation, because the Country cannot well know how to provide to content, and perhaps with more charge.

Sol. To this is answered, they must do it at their peril, if the Writ be legal; and then if it be done, they shall have the benefit thereof: For (as my Brothers Weston and Berkley have both agreed) if the Ship were made when the service is done, the County for which it is made shall have the benefit of the Ship and the Munition, and of the service of the Men, being made more expert against another time, and the Ship may with some easie charge serve again, and nothing lost but the expence of the Victuals, and the Kingdom shall be so much the more strengthened, by having so many Ships made or prepared; and they may have account of their money how it was bestowed, and if any surplussage be gathered, to have it restored; and that the Law is so, that if money be received of the County, and not employed accordingly, the party so receiving it, and detaining it, or misemploying it, is to pay a Fine unto the King for the same, and is accountable for the money, appeareth by two Records.

The one in Hill. 16 E. 3. Rot. 23. in the Kings-Bench, where two Souldiers were Indicted, for that they S. E. 3. taking 3 l. a piece towards their Armour, and to the bringing them to the place where they were appointed to serve the King in England in his VVars, they went not, but tarried still in their houses, and retained the Armour, and the money which they had received for that purpose; they thereupon being Convented, pleaded not guilty, and the one was found to go in service according to the appointment, so he was discharged, and the other was found that he received the money, and went not to do the service, nor restored the Arms nor Money; thereupon he was committed to the Prison, and paid to the King a Fine, and found Sureties to pay the money to the Hundred again, from whom he had received it.

The other was Hill. 20 E. 3. Rot. 37. the Kings-Bench; there two High-Constables were Indicted, for that they S. E. 3. had received six Marks of the Towns in their Hundreds to set forth Souldiers, and had not set them forth, but retained the money, which they denying, it was found that they had received the money for that purpose, and had disbursed 41 s. 6 d. thereof towards the setting forth of Souldiers, but had retained 38 s. 6 d. and not disbursed it; thereupon they were fined and imprisoned, and after enlarged, Anno 1637. enlarged, upon Sureties to pay the money they had retained undisbursed, at the next time the King commanded Souldiers for those parts: By both which Records, being for offences done so long before, it appeareth, that those that have received money of the Country to prepare Ships, and not imployed it accordingly, they are answerable to the King, or his Successors, to pay a Fine for their imployment of it otherwise: and are chargeable to those of the County, of whom they received it, for repayment thereof.

8. For the last point, I conceive, that this Certiorari directed to the two that were late Sheriffs at the times of the Assessment, and not to the Sheriff that was at the time of the Certiorari awarded, who is the only immediate Officer to return the VVrits, is not legal; for it is the first that hath been seen of that kind, for all VVrits are directed to some immediate Sheriff, requiring him to demand of the former Sheriffs, what they did upon the former VVrit; and they are to return to him what hath been done, and he to return the same unto the Court whereunto he is an immediate Officer, and the former are not any Officers; so the Scire Facias thereupon grounded, I conceive is not good: Also the Scire Fac. to warn Mr. Hampden, ad ostendend. si quid pro se habeat, & quare de predict. vigint. solid. onerari non debet, not shewing to whom, is uncertain and insufficient: Therefore I conclude upon the whole matter, that no Judgment can be given to charge the Defendant.

Finis Argumenti Justic. Crooke.

Judge Jones his Argument.

IN Easter Term there issued forth a Scire Fac. and this doth rehearse divers sums of Money assessed upon divers persons in the County of Buckingham, for providing a Ship of 450 Tun with Men, Munition, &c. to attend the Kings Navy for the defence of the Kingdom.

And afterwards upon a Certiorari out of Chancery, directed to the Sheriff to certify those Assessments, and those that made defaults of payment, Mr. Hampden was returned Selled at 20 s. and had made default.

Upon this Return, the King by Mittimus out of the Chancery sent the Writ, the Certiorari, and the Return, to the Barons of the Exchequer, to do as the Court should think fit.

Thereupon a Scire Fac. went forth to the Sheriff, to summon Mr. Hampden to shew cause why he should not pay the 20 s. assessed upon him; he was returned, warned, and appears, and demands Oyer of the several Writs and Returns, and of the Scire Fac. and upon all this he demurreth in Law, and Mr. Attorney hath joyned in the Demurrer with him; and my Lord Chief Baron, and the rest of the Barons, have adjourned this hither, to desire the Advice of all the Brothers of the Law; and indeed it requires advice, for it is as great a Case as ever came to be advised on before Judges.

I say, it is a great Case, it concerns the King in his Royal Prerogative, and the Subject in the Interest, in his Lands, and Goods, and Liberties of his person; they that have spoken already, and those that shall speak hereafter, shall hardly escape the Censure of the people, of some that have some understanding, some peradventure that have less, and some that have none at all, but speak according to their opinion, affection, and will; Falces essent Artifices, si per solos Artifices Judicarentur; We should be happy to be adjudged by them that are Learned: But when it is by them that understand not, then it turneth to Calumny and Reproach.

Some have taxed them that have gone, or will go with the King, as though they were fearful, and went about to captivate the liberty of the Subject, and take away their goods; some are taxed on the other side, if on the contrary Opinion that they are given to popularity; so as I may say as the Psalmist, Domine posuisti me in lubrico loco, for it is impossible to escape the venom of their tongues: Between those two Rocks of Censure I am like to fall; and howsoever I may fall in my sentence, with Gods Grace I shall make no shipwrack of my Conscience; I am trusted by the King to dispence his Justice equally to all, and sworn to maintain his just Prerogative, as well as the Subjects Liberty, and if we do otherwise than as Judges, we do as false men; if any man offend contrary to his Oath, he doth forfeit his Lands, Goods, and Tenements, and is at the Kings mercy; I shall not therefore for any respects do against my own Conscience, but descend to give my judgment, not regarding the watery mouths of others.

The Kings Council, and the Council at Bar, have spoken so largely to this business, and it is spoken to by my Brothers so fully, that I can hardly say any thing, but what hath been said before; so I will select some few things, to satisfy my own Conscience, though I can satisfy no mans else, which I will do as plainly as I can, and as I ought to do; and if there had not been a variety of Contestation, I should have spoken very little; but now necessity requireth, that I must enlarge my self a little more.

(1.) I will state the Question, and in it put many things objected out of doors.

The Question is, Whether the King of England, when he perceiveth danger to be imminent to the Kingdom, and a necessity of defence, may not by his Writ send to all Counties, Inland as outward, and at the charge of the County, for a convenient time, to provide Shipping, with Men and Munition, &c. but no money to come to his Purse, but the Ships to go to defend the Kingdom.

The Question stands not, whether the King may draw it to be a perpetual charge upon the Subject, which, under favour, he cannot, for this goeth upon a fear, upon a danger which continueth for a time, and therefore this cannot be perpetual; for when the occasion ceaseth, the Tax must likewise cease. There is a Case to this purpose, 39 H. 6. fo. 39. Protection. Brooke; a Protection granted to one for three years, and the question was, whether a good Protection: The Rule is, the King may grant a Protection for one year, and at that years end renew it for another year, if the occasion require it, and so for a third year, yet he cannot at the beginning give a Protection for three years together: So in this Case, though the King may upon an emergent occasion command Ships, yet by reason of that occasion, he cannot make it perpetual, for the occasion may cease.

(2.) Set out of the Case this, that I will not exempt the Kings Majesty himself to bear a part of the burden; the Head and Body must go together.

together, he must joyn with his Subjects in the defence and charge thereof.

(3.) The question is not, whether for a Foreign War he may command this charge; it must be only in defence of the Kingdom, in case of eminent danger.

(4.) It is not, whether the King may lay this, to draw a sum into his Purse; for the King tends to have no money, but to provide a Ship: and if the Sheriff accordingly provides a Ship, there is an end of the business. All this is out of the Book.

What Carlin Chief Justice compared a Fine to Janus Bifrons having two Faces, the one looking backwards, the other forwards; so may I, my Argument it shall first look backward, and tell you quid fecimus what we have done; and then forward, and tell you quid faciemus what we shall do.

The quid fecimus rests in what advice we heretofore have given his Majesty in the Case, and the Opinion of the Judges subscribed with their hands, delivered over to his Majesty; which being read at large by the Judge, he said the advice we gave consists of four Assertions.

1. That when the Kingdom is in danger, all the Kingdom is to joyn in the defence.

2. What shall be a Danger and what not, His Majesty is the sole Judge thereof, and of the Means how to prevent it and avoid it.

3. In this case of Danger he hath power to send to In-land places as well as to Maritime, to defend against Invasion.

4. The King hath a Power of Compulsion, to punish them that refuse to contribute towards this Charge.

This Opinion being jointly and severally delivered by us, declared by my Lord Keeper in the Star Chamber, in the presence of us the Judges before the Lords of the Council, with an Intimation as if it were the full consent of all the Lords of the Council before hand, and there commanded to be enrolled in all the Courts at Westminster; yet we so delivered our Opinions, that if better reason to alter them, we might go back, we had better recurrere, than male currere.

Now to the second Point, quid faciemus, whether to stand to this Opinion or not; and then, whether this Book or Record will warrant it, and how far it differeth from what we have done?

I shall speak my Conscience; I am an old Man, and ready for my Grave; my Tongue and my Heart shall go together; I am of the same Opinion I was of then, and conceive what we then delivered was according to Law, with all modesty and humility submitting to those that have been or shall be of a contrary Opinion.

For the grounds of Law and Nature support it.

1. Salus Populi Suprema Lex, qui sentit commodum, sentire debet & onus, quod omnes tangit ab omnibus debet supportari, what do these Rules intimate else, but that, when a Danger is eminent, that the Charge must lay upon the whole Kingdom, and the Burthen must be born by all; and that is not denied by them, that were of the Council on the other side: It must not be every kind of Fear or Rumour that must draw this kind of Burthen upon the Subject, but a Danger the King in His Understanding perceiveth to require a speedy Defence.

2. That the King is sole Judge of this Danger, and how to prevent it and avoid it, is not to be literally understood, for we are His Judges deputed, but our Judgment flows from Him; Judgment is settled in the King, He is the Fountain of Justice, from which other proceeds; Bracton, Rex Vicarius Dei est in terra sua; we are Judges cumulative, not primitive, so is the Supreme Judge.

In the Parliament the King is the Sole Judge, the rest but Advisers, 22 E. 3. fo. 3. Br. Hence it is, the old fashion of penning of Statutes was, Rex Statuit, 7 H. 7. Afterwards it came to be with the Advice of the Commonalty, Tr. 6. H. 6. Rot. 41 Kings Bench. There was a Prior brought a Writ of Annuity against one in Ireland, there was Judgment in the Common Pleas; then afterwards a Writ of Error in Parliament, and there both Judgments reversed. And in the Entry of the Judgment the Record saith, Nos cum assensu & ad requisitionem communilitatis, do reverse the Judgment; where note, that the King is the Man that is the Sole Judge thereof; but it left not here. By the way observe out of this Record, the Power of the Kings Bench in England: For upon this Record it appears. A Writ of Error brought in the Kings Bench in England, to reverse a Writ of Error in Parliament in Ireland: This sheweth the King in Parliament is Sole Judge, the rest but Advisers; so, as I said before, He shall be the only Supreme Judge. For my part, I thought my Brothers were all of Opinion, That the King is the Sole Judge of the Danger Himself alone, and of the way of prevention, whether by His Council or by His Parliament.

3. Assertion, That the King without Parliament, in case of imminent danger, hath Power to send to In-land and Maritime Counties to provide Ships; and I think He may by the Fundamental Laws, Common Laws, Statute Laws, and Precedents.

First of all for the Common Law admitted in Parliament here. I leave the Divines to talk of the Kings Power, who, under favour, take more liberty than is fitting: To say in a Pulpit, That he that will have the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo to be a Statute, or that if it be, that it binds the King that such a man is not Cesar's Friend. Bracton saith, That by the general Law of Monarchy, the Subjects Goods are at the Kings Pleasure: But a King ruling by Politick Advice, is to Rule according to His Fundamental Laws, which yet in England takes not away, but preserves those Judicia Suprema Majestatis, as to pardon all Offences, nummum percussere, and infinite others more declared in Parliament, 1 Jac. which Court is that Treshault Court, of which none ought to think dishonourably; I leave Divines to take their pleasure; we are to Judge according to the Fundamental Laws and Customs of this Realm. There is a Book which Mr. Attorney remembreth well, That the King of England hath more Power, than any other King: If the King must defend by Law, he must lay a Charge to provide for the same: The Common Law owns the King as Sovereign and Head of the Kingdom, that should defend and protect it, 8 Sam. 19, 20. They would have a King to be adjudged by, as other Nations had, and go in and out before them; that was the Fashion of Kings before. To Judge His People, and to defend His People with Arms: It is an incident quality inherent in the King: It standeth with Nature and Reason that the King should have the Charge of the Defence. If this Inherent Quality should be taken away, how can He defend His People, and be no more than a common Person? He cannot be a King, unless He take Defence and Protection over His People. Mr. Attorney shewed learnedly the King is a Monarch and Sovereign, and the People His Subjects: He is the Head of the Body, and therefore may command it, Fitz N. B. fo. and Stamfords Prerogative, That the King protects the Body and Lands of His Subjects, He is Vicarius Dei, appointed to protect the Kingdom: So there is a tie of Allegiance which binds every man, Stamfords 2 Cap. of Prerogative. The King by Law is the Protector of the Body, Lands and Goods: So He hath a Liberty and Prerogative for this end (not for His own Profit) in the Bodies, Lands and Goods of His Subjects in time of Danger. 11 H. 7. Every man in his own person is bound to serve the King for the Defence of the Realm, and gives a Reason, and that is the Reason of Protections; because they are bound to it, therefore they should have no harm done unto them: The King himself cannot free any man from his Allegiance without Act of Parliament; neither can the Subject free himself, as in Doctor Stories Case: So you see the Kings Majesty hath interest pro bono publico in the person.

Now also he hath an Interest in our Estates, if it be pro bono publico, as in the Case of L---- adjudged to come over mens Lands, what Prerogative hath the King concerning that; and yet by Popham, 2 Chief Justices and Chief Baron agreed, That where a man hath an Inheritance in Lands and Woods, the King cannot cut their Inheritance for his private Use, unless it is pro bono publico, nor digg Gravel in another mans Lands; but yet in case pro bono publico, he may do it, and make Bullwarks on their Grounds for defence of the Kingdom.

So for Pontage and Murage the King cannot compel the Subject to make the Walls of his own House, or a Bridge for his own private use: But when it is commanded to be done, where the Subject hath a Benefit by that, there it is good. So here is the difference of the Case, where the King commands for his private Benefit, or pro bono publico.

My Brother Crooke saith, That the King may press Ships for His Service in the Defence of his Kingdom, but not from In-land Counties; yet there is a Precedent in Oxfordshire to the contrary.

By the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, he is the Defender of his Subjects, of their Bodies, Lands and Goods, and where it is pro bono publico, they are to pay towards it. If there had not been Objections which have dazl'd me, I should have done before this.

The Case of the Abbot of Roberts Bridge is an allowance of this Charge, a double Charge for Lands there in two several places. I remember in a Parliament, where I learned a great deal of good, 1 Jac. the King without consent in Parliament laid an Imposition on Merchandize, but it was in case of necessity pro bono publico.

Now to answer Objections, and those were many: My Brother Crooke did double, and redouble them. Brother, we sit one next another, Ancient Judges, though different in Opinion; I speak out of my Conscience, as you have spoke out of your Conscience; so though variety of Opinion, yet Conscience is the same.

First, saith he, the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom have settled a property in the Goods in the Subject, that without their consent it cannot be taken from them. This doth not trench upon the property of the Subject, if you take the Case right: If this be a lawful Prerogative in the King to lay this Charge, then how can it be said, That the Subjects property is invaded? For if the property ab initio be in the King, then the Law annexed this tie to the Goods of the Subject in the beginning, and made them liable to it by a secret tacit condition, which binds the property. If a man do enter for a condition broken, this is no divesting of the property out of the Subject. If Goods be given to one until such a thing happen or upon such a condition, there is a property in the Donee, yet it is clogged with a limitation and condition; and when the one or the other happens, the property may be reduced or transferred; as in all Assessments and Rates goods are subject to the payment thereof: So for the payment of those things necessary for the defence of the Kingdom without their consent; for if legal, what needs this condition? I could wish no man to clamour, that this is to divest the property of the Subjects Goods, for it is nothing but what is for defence of the Kingdom.

The next Authorities objected by my Brother Crooke, the Laws of William the Conqueror and Charter of King John, then with the Statutes, then with Forrescue, and thereof saith very much, That the King of England cannot lay Taxes upon the Subject without their consent.

And where he speaks of Taxes and Charges cannot be imposed without consent, some other places of the Author do shew, That it is where the King imposeth it for His own private Use, and not in case of publick defence.

Next 13 H. 4. the Charge of 1 d. upon a Cloth, for measure, adjudged void.

I conceive it was not adjudged void upon that point; True, in Parliament it was complained of as an Aggrievance to the Subject. But every Petition in Parliament doth not argue a Right; it may be it was ad damnum, and yet absque injuria. That Case differs much from this; for there was a Charge to a private Benefit, and no regard to the Publick, which perhaps the Law will not allow: But where there is a quid pro quo, nor the Case of Dice and Cards, Monopolies, those Cases look nothing like to this: So for a Commission of Sewers, may lay (a Charge) for a Repair when the Lands are over-flown, and the Owners of the Land be not able, the Neighbourhood must be taxed; so in case of a Bridge.

Then the Statute of 2 R. 2. was objected: Nothing must come to the Kings Purse nor to the Kings Coffer, but for the Defence of the Kingdom.

This was no Charge, because the intention there was to fill the Kings Coffers which were empty, and that could not be done but by Parliament; so it is not in our Case, no Money is to come to the Kings private Purse.

That of H. 4. for repealing of Commissions awarded to provide Barringers; the Record saith only, that the Kings Answer to the Complaint was, Le Roy se advisera avec ses Seigneurs.

Then he cometh to the Statute of Tunnage and Poundage only for ordinary Defence.

Why there should be any difference between an In-land County and Maritime, I know not, since to common defence all are equally engag'd as one entire Body; and the In-land Counties have the benefit of Wools by Sea, and yet they must not help to the defence of the Kingdom. As in the natural Body one Member helpeth another, so when the Maritime Counties are not sufficient to defend (as in case of extraordinary defence they cannot be) the In-land must contribute; besides, the King may unite 1637. unite an In-land County to a Maritime County, and make them but one County: Is not he Lord of the Land as of the Sea? What was the Law before the division of Counties? sure it was equal in charging the whole Kingdom; for I see no reason but an In-land County should be chargeable by Law, as well as Maritime.

6 R. 2. In ancient times things done upon the Sea were tried upon the Land in the Kings Bench, as by many Records appeareth; one of a Norman Robber upon the Sea, &c.

Obj. That if this be so, then the Law suffereth a great inconvenience, to wit, That the King may by His writ charge what and whom he pleaseth.

Sol. This the Law trusteth the Kings Goodness with, that he will not require this but when there is occasion; and he may do it, so that he continues it no longer than there is occasion.

Obj. But were not Dr. Cowel and Dr. Manwaring censured in Parliament for these Tenents?

Sol. They were censured, and deservedly, but different from our Case: I was a Member in the Parliament, and was in the Lower House when Cowel was sentenced: I tell you what Dr. Cowel did, he wrote a Book, and under the words Prerogatives, Subsidies, and Kings, inferred as though the King might make Laws without consent in Parliament, and wrote against the Common Law, which the King is sworn to maintain; thereupon he was sentenced, and his Sentence was just, and I gave my Voice for it. The other was Dr. Manwaring, he preached two Sermons, that the King was not bound to observe His Laws, that the Right and Liberty of the Subject are at the Kings Will and Pleasure without Parliament, and that this doth bind the Conscience of the Subject, and that they are bound to pay Loan-Money upon Eternal Damnation, and that they that did refuse to pay the Loan-Money did offend against the Law of God, and were guilty of Disloyalty and Disobedience; and the Authority of Parliament was not necessary to the granting of any Subsidy: For this he was sentenced and made his Submission. That was for raising of Moneys for his own Use, but this is to require his Subjects to provide Ships for the Defence of the Kingdom.

Next Objection was Escuage, that by that Tenure great profits arise to the King for defence. Shall the Defence of the Kingdom be laid upon them which have a Revenue for their own Maintenance? What will you have to maintain the King, with Wife, Children, Intelligencers abroad? will you strip Him of all this? It is true, I hold that the King with the Subjects must joyn together in the Defence. If the King be Rich, you should have pleaded, The King hath sufficient in His Purse.

Obj. That there is no apparent danger, that this Charge is not due by the Common Law, Statute Law, nor Custom.

Sol. I say, it is due by the Common Law; but will you have the Danger so apparent, as Hannibal ad portas; will you suffer an Enemy to come in before you prepare to resist? If once he come in, you will hardly get him out. Is not that as much to be commended, that doth prevent a danger before it cometh, as when it comes? Is not the care to prevent Fire from a House, before the Fire take hold of it, as great, when it is on Fire? Therefore the King, (like a good Physician) sees a Disease growing, and before it gets too much strength, prevents it.

Obj. In a Months time, a Parliament may be called.

Car. 13.

Sol. Though it may; yet after they do meet, a long time they spend in Consultation, before they can do any thing; which would be too mischievous in a sudden Invasion.: And therefore King Edw. 3. in His 10, 11, and 12 years, while the Parliaments were sitting, sent forth Writs for Aids.

Obj. Objected by Mr. Holborne, That the Law of Nature teacheth every Man to defend himself.

Sol. What, I pray you, will you then have done on a sudden Invasion? when Forces must be raised in Cornwall, some in other parts of the Kingdom as remote, and all must meet together? If the King must expect such an Actual Invasion, before such time as He send forth His Writs to have them all in readiness, how poorly would the Kingdom be defended? At that time our Forces will be scattered, and cannot be brought together; which thus divided, cannot withstand a Forcain Power.

Obj. Last Objection, That the King at His Pleasure may draw when He will this Charge upon the Subject, if he say he is of Opinion that there is danger.

Sol. Why may not the Law allow this and trust the Kings Judgment here, as well as in the Case of a Ne exeat Regno; in which if the King command His Subjects to stay at home, for such and such a Cause, as for danger, &c. the Case is not traversable. Fe. 165, 85. 7 H. 7. saith, If the King doth certify an Act of Parliament, you cannot say against it: To the Kings Certificate under Seal Nul tiel Record, is no plea.

Again, (God Almighty bless the King) it is against the presumption of the Law, that the King, whose Heart is in the Hand of the Lord, should tell a Lye: God gives Wisdom to govern aright; lying Lips do not become a Prince; Truth to God Almighty he owes. The Law sayes, that the King may nescire verum, but not discere falsum. The King may not know a truth, but cannot teach false. Next, Juramento stricto, he is bound to administer Justice, and not to grieve his Subjects; Is he so unwise to charge them and himself without cause with a provision of Ships? what benefit comes to him by it? surely to tell a lye will be for some advantage; He were a King of Wickedness, to lay a Charge on the Subject to no purpose, here he shall charge himself and his Subjects to go about nothing: Doth any man think that he will put a Burthen upon his Subjects without Cause? We have a Good King, and our Imaginations ought to be Good of our King.

4. Assertion, That the King hath power to compel them to the contribution of this Charge; this Power of the King is a Special Prerogative, and if good at Common Law, it taketh away the Statute, when It is pro bono publico to defend the Kingdom.

The general words of a Statute shall never be construed to extend to it: The Charter of King John shall never take away the Kings Prerogative, neither the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, which I agree to be a Statute, and so my Lord Cooke allows it to be. Now this Power of the King of which I argue is a Special Prerogative in point of Government: It is a proprium to a Scepter quarto modo; therefore the general words of a Statute shall never be construed to extend unto it; as if the King have a special Interest in Land by His Prerogative: It shall not pass away without precise cise words; as the Books are infinite in it.

If the King grant away Lands by his Letters Patents, parcel of a Forest without special words, this shall remain subject to the Forest Laws; still so many Cases may be put, when general Words of this Statute extend not to particular Prerogatives. If the general Words of this Statute should take away this Ayd, why do they not take away these Ayds pour Jaier Fitz Chevalier, pour Marier, &c. since that general words may include them as well as this? But you all grant that these Ayds are not taken away, and by the same Reason I conceive this remains.

My Brother Crawley held that special Words in an Act of Parliament could not take away his Prerogative, because it would have been an Act against Reason: I will tell you what I have heard adjudged in this Case in the Parliament held 1 Jac. There were two things expressly moved; One, That there might be no Wardships or Tenures of the King: The other, That the King might not allow Purveyors. To these Questions, after long Disputes, it was Answered by the whole Parliament, That such an Act of Parliament to Top the Prerogative of Tenures, would be void, because it is inherent to the Crown; every man holds immediately or mediately, absolutely of the King; as 2 H. 7. An Act of Parliament to restrain the Kings Non obstante to dispence with Penal Laws, as not to pardon Murder, is void; his Person and Royal Prerogative cannot be restrained by Parliament. Thus I have done with the forme, and larger part of my Argument.

Now I come to see, whether this Record will maintain that which we have here; and I think it will bear it both for matter and form. 1. To see whether there be Substance enough to shew, that there is danger sufficient for this prerogative to require Aid and Assistance; and I think that there is sufficient: The French King, the Spaniard, and the Low-Country-men, are all up in Arms, who knows what danger this Kingdom may be in? and if the King say it is in danger, it is not traversable if the King had said no more but this pro defensione Regni; without more saying, it had been sufficient; It also Recites that there were predones, Pirata that took away both men and Ships, and that Foreign provision was making to take away the dominion of the Sea, and that all this was ad gravandum regnum nostrum, and therefore commands a Ship to be provided ad defensionem regni; Here the danger is general, and therefore the defence must be general.

An indifferent and equal Assessment is first to be made, and then the overplus of the Provision to be restored according to the Writ; for till the money be had, how can the provision be made? though it hath been said, let the Ship be first builded, and then make the assessment: That cannot be, for with what shall the provision be made? the money must do it,

For matter of Precedents as Danegelt, &c. I do not much stand upon, because I have not time to peruse them; But conclude on my former reasons.

(My Lord Chief Justice Finch asking the Judge what his advice was, he answered) My advice is upon the whole matter, that (the Barons finding the other process of Court and Scir. fac. to be according to the Course of the Exchequer, for that he would leave to them) Judgment shall be given that Mr. Hampden shall be charged with the 20 s., with this limitation and condition, that none of it come to the Kings purse, for it did, his Opinion was against it.

The Argument of Judge Hutton.

THE King by his Writ 4 Augusti Informs, that there were certain Pirata & Marii Grafsatores, and they were gathered together in Hostile manner to hinder all our Merchants from landing their goods in our Ports, or for having any free passage to foreign parts: And reciteth that there are Wars abroad, and that considering these perils and dangers, and that the Defence of the Subjects consists in the defence of the Sea; which at all times belongs unto the Kingdom, and the charge of the defence to be supported by all, the King is sorry that in his time it should fall away and not be defended; Hath sent forth a Writ therefore to the Sheriff of Buckingham (as to other Counties) to provide a Ship of such a burden against 1 Martii, and to come to Portsmouth, and there to remain for 26 weeks, and to do as shall be directed them for the defence of the Kingdom, and the Writ directed, That all that are Inhabitants shall be Assessed for the providing of this Ship with men and munition: By force of this Writ, Mr. Hampden being assessed at 20 s. there went forth a Certiorari a year and a half after, directed to the two Sheriffs of the County of Buckingham, to certify what Sums they had assessed by vertue of the said Writ 4 Aug. Two several Certificates into the Chancery of this Mr. Hampden 20 s. 3 Mois, 13 Car. The King by Mittimus out of Chancery recites, that when he had awarded the Writ 4 Aug. to the Sheriff of Bucks, and that it was for the defence of the Kingdom, and security of the Subjects, he doth send this Writ 4 Aug. and Certiorari, and commands the Barons to do that which appertaineth to be done; whereupon a Scir. Fac. is awarded, whereupon Mr. Hampden hath appeared and demanded Oyer of the Scir. Fac. mittimus, Certiorari, and the Writ 4 Aug. And hath joyned in demurrer. And how this Scir. Fac. lieth is the question, and I am of opinion that this Scir. Fac. doth not lie, and that Judgment in this case ought to be given against the King.

For the better understanding of the Court, I shall observe, in the method of my proceeding.

1. Whether a charge of this nature may by the King be imposed by original Writ; only under the great Seal of England, without a Parliament? wherein I hold it cannot be proved by authority and reasons, unless in time of Actual war and invasion.

2. I will answer those objections made only before by them that have argued, that these Statutes do not extend to this kind of Prerogative, that this Prerogative is not taken away by any of these Statutes.

3 I will answer the Precedents, both by Precedents of equal nature and by some reasons, whereupon I will conclude that this Prerogative and Power which is monarchical is included, and taken from the King, and that this must be done by Parliament.

4: I will answer some objections that now and before have been made by Mr. Solicitor, &c.

5. I will insist upon this Writ, that it neither containeth matter sufficient in the Writ it self; nor is there matter to warrant any such Levy, as is pretended, neither is the same lawful, nor can it be mended by the Mittimus, nor can be commanded by those Sheriffs that are in this case no Sheriffs upon the matter.

Now, as my brother Jones hath taken a great deal of time, I will not be drawn from my own order by what he hath said, but answer him in his Argument.

First I say that this power of Assessing of money being a general charge; cannot be by the law at this day, (unless in time of actual war,) imposed upon the people, but by the Act of Parliament.

The Acts of Parliament that have been mentioned.

The first was magna charta; which is an ancient and great Statute, it cometh unto us with an Inpeximus from E. 1. Confirmed 30 several times; the words are, dedimus & concedimus has libertates subscriptas in perpetuum, nullus liber homo capiatur vel imprisonetur, aut dissestetur de libero Tenemento suo vel libertatibus, &c. aut aliquo modo distringatur, aut in carcerem mittitur, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum, vel per legem terra. King William the conqueror made those Laws and swore men unto those Laws, and then King Edward in the last chapter, commands them to be kept, and he will keep them so long as concerned him, and all his people for ever, and for this they granted him a 15 part of all their goods, and it is a Statute clear to this day, Stamford 172. to be tryed per pares, as the Barons at this day have for their tryal the privilege of this Statute.

Next Statute 25 E. 3. Ca. 5. reciting: and forasmuch as divers of our people, &c. we have granted for us and our heirs, that we shall not draw such aid and prize into custom, for any thing done heretofore by any other rule or Precedent that may be found, so their is now not only for tax for war, but for any other business whatsoever; forsq; de Comon Assent de tout la Realm, saving the Ancient aids and prizes due and accustomed, and this saving is nothing; for these Statutes extend to no particular; for if any extend to aid by Tenure, all England is not bound unto this, but some few, the Statute extends to such aids as the whole Kingdom is Subject unto; none will say that all the people hold of the King pur file marier.

The Statute of 34 E. 1. concerning certain Liberties granted by the King to his Commons, this is 1524 printed 25 H. 8. no Talliage to be taken or levied to us, our heirs or successors without the good will, assent of Arch-Bishops, and Bishops, or other Burgesses, free men of the Realm. This Statute hath been quarelled with all, but the words thereof are very effectual.

Statute 14 E. 2. agreed to be perpetual by my brother Jones; for my part I can see no reason why it should not be so, the Statute reciteth that whereas the Barons and Commons of our Realm have granted of their good free will, the King an aid towards his wars as well on this side the Sea as beyond; the ninth Sheep the ninth Sheafe, &c. the ninth part of all their goods; And we Will and Grant for us and our Heirs that the same so charged, shall not be brought into example to make any Aids, he doth not say such Aids; and that in the Parliament, no man can say against these words, they are so full and absolute.

The Statute of 25 E. 3. Enacts that none shall be compelled to find Hoblers; si il ne soit per Common Consent in Parliament; The reason given in the Parliament-Roll is very Observable Car. 13. Car ceo est encounter le droit del Realm; these words are in the Roll; and yet left out in the printed Statutes; But the reason I know not.

This Statute of 25 E. 3. is confirmed by the Statute of 4 H. 4.

The Statute 1 R. 2. a very good Statute, though in a young Kings time, enacted and done by the Lords and Commons in Parliament, there hath been made Injunctions to charge the Subject.

Now H. 4. invented divers benevolences and that is recited; that whereas divers inventions, &c. (All the world I think is full of Inventions) It is enacted from henceforth that the Subject shall be no ways Charged with any such like Charge, they gave it the name of Benevolences; But indeed were impositions, and great charges collected with that name.

I conclude with that of the Statute of the King, the petition of right which reciteth the Statute de Tallagio very many particular things are mentioned there, men not to be compelled to lend money, without common consent in Parliament; which is rather a confirmation, then an affirmation of those Statutes; I have done with the words of the Statute.

For the Authority of the Year-Books.

I will confirm those two Authorities cited by my Brother Crooke, though my Brother Jones slight the Authority. 13 H. 4. The principal Case being then a Grant of an Office of Measurage of Cloth, and put in practice; and being granted out of Parliament, condemned to be void; for the King can grant no common Charge on his People, but in Parliament. And though my Brother Jones saith, that perhaps such a Charge was Dammum, but not Injuria, surely had not there been more in it, it had not been damned as not Legal.

The other Authority is that of Fortescue, (though my Brother Jones in that Book doth omit that which is material; for that man he was sworn Chief Justice of England, afterwards made Chancellor, who saith expressly in his Ninth Chapter, That the King of England cannot alter any Law; that he governeth his People not only by Royal, but by Politique Power and can lay no Charge upon them but by Parliament.

The King can change no Law, nor make Land Gavel-kind which is not; nor make Land devisable which is not; which he might do, if it were to be done by Power Royal. Fortescue concludeth with this excellent Saying, fol. 26. 6. Rejoyce therefore Sovereign Prince, and be glad; for the Law of your Realm administreteth to you and to your People no small Security and Comfort, &c. Prerogative strengtheneth Ability, Liberty maintaineth Prerogative. Cap. 38. is strong and full against the King; which my Brother Jones was pleased to omit: The King may by his Officers take Necessaries for his House; nevertheless he is bound by Law to pay for it; for by the Laws he ought not to take any of the Subjects Goods without making satisfaction for the same; neither can he lay any Talliage, Subsidy, or other Burden, or make new Laws, or alter old Laws, without express Agreement of his People in Parliament.

I have done with the Positive part of my Argument; I will not trouble you long: I will Answer swer some Objections now made, and heretofore made against these Statutes.

Anno 1637. 1. For the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo; True, it was very probable it was no Statute, but an Extract out of the Statute 25 E. 1. which is upon Record; the other not being to be found upon the Roll. It is averr'd (una voce) it was a Statute, though not without probability no Statute; as it was learnedly observed by Mr. Solicitor, in respect of the Kings Absence, being beyond the Sea: only I collect this out of his Argument, that he thought that that Statute did tend very far against the King; which he could Answer no way, but to take it away, therefore he thought it a Statute of some force.

Next, my Brother Barkely would have the Statute of 14 E. 3. to be but a temporary Statute, and during the continuance of those wars, the first part of the Statute is absolute; but the latter part is but a temporary Statute, and during the continuance of those wars; it must needs be perpetual, because it is granted for the King and his Heirs.

Next Objection, by my Brother Jones and Brother Crawley, That this Power Royal is a part of the Prerogative appertaining to his Person, and inherent to the Crown, a Proprium quarto modo, so inseparable, that an Act of Parliament cannot take it away.

Sol. I confess there are some inseparable Prerogatives belonging to the Crown, such as the Parliament cannot sever from it: And I will prove unto you out of Book-Cases and Statutes, that the King cannot release his Tenures in Capite. It was endeavoured a Law should be made, that the Court of Wards should be shut up: It was resolved, that it had been a void Law; such is the Care for the Defence of the Kingdom, which belongs inseparably to the Crown, as Head and supreme Protector: so that if an Act of Parl. should enact, that he should not defend the Kingdom, or that the King should have no Aid from his Subjects to defend the Realm, these Acts would not bind, because they would be against Natural Reason; but in our Case here, there is no such thing; for therein is no Act that restrains the King to lay any Charge at all, but only ties him to one Means by which he should come by it, to wit, by Parliament. If before the Statute, a Man Alien Land held of the King, without Licence, the King shall seize the Land, and have it forfeited to him and his Heirs for ever. Now by that Statute the Prerogative is restrained to a reasonable Fine only; this was as inherent in his person, as any thing could be; and yet it is restrained by Parliament.

Before Magna Charta, the King might take any Mans Goods for his Provision, and cut any mans Woods down to Build or Repair his Castles; yet since that Statute, it is Enacted, That Nullus Vicecomes, nec Ballivus noster capiet Equos, &c. nisi reddat liberationem, nec capiemus boscum alienum ad Casira, vel ad alia agenda nostra, nisi per voluntatem ejus, cujus Boscus ille fuerit: And to this day this Statute is of force, that the King cannot take these things, nor use his Prerogative.

This Prerogative of Nullum Tempus occurrit Regi, is a great one, yet in some Case of Lapse of Churches, this Prerogative is taken away by the Statute of 25 E. 3. cap. 1. where the King granteth for him and his Heirs, not to Present, but in his own time; and this being pleaded, 11 H. 4. fol. 7. is adjudged against the King, notwithstanding the Rule of Nullum Tempus occurrit Regi.

The Statute of 7 H. 8. cap. 3. concerning Restraint of Informations, and that of 21 Jac. whereby the King excludeth himself, to make a Title to any Lands whereof he had not been in possession within 60 years before this time; he was tied to no time, but unlimited; and yet this great Prerogative is thus bounded. 30 E. 3. cap. 10. Parliaments to be holden every year one or more, oftner if need be, because of divers mischances that may happen. It is to be acknowledged as a Gracious Favour from his Majesty to his Subjects, that he would admit of this Case to be argued in an ordinary Court of Justice, and not reserve it to the Parliament; to which place all such weighty Causes are most fit to be reserved. I am satisfied in my Conscience, he would do nothing in this Case, if he were justly informed, or may be informed he ought not to do it by Law.

The Laws of England mutari non poterunt without consent of Council gathered together, si in usitatum emerferit (saith Fortescue) as this Case is ore, it is referred to the next Parliament; si aliquid aut inconsuetum, then it is to be put to the Parliament.

2 E. 3. fol. 7. There ariseth a new Question concerning the Statute of Winchester, about recovering by Actions against the Countrey, when Robberies were committed; there the Case in respect of the difficulty, was referred to the Parliament; and there the Sheriff was warned to have his Money.

You shall see a Notable Case in the Register 224. among the Writs of Two that were at York, and served by a Clerk in the Chancery there, to appear at Rome; and because of this Contempt, they were committed to Prison, and a Writ came to Bail them, returnable coram nobis in Parlamento. So Matters of Difficulty were Adjourned into Parliament.

Westm. 2. cap. 28. In novo casu fiat novum Remedium in Parlamento, to resolve Cases of Difficulty, Statutes have Enacted, That there should be Two Parliaments every year. 4 E. 3. cap. 4. which was a great Confirmation of this Realm. Lit. 110, 180. Parliaments frequent. I know not what to say, that this Kingdom that hath thus long flourished, should now forget her frequent kind of Government by Parliament, whether by reason of things past, or some Disaster fallen, that this which is the Ancient way (I do not say that Parliaments is the Government, but that Kings have governed by Parliament) is so much out of use now adays; I do not prescribe Power to the Parliament to govern the Realm, but the Publick have been governed by the Parliament.

There was seen too much of the Ambitious Humour of some in the last Parliament, that stirred up nothing but Confusion and Discontentment, as we now feel it to our great prejudice.

PRECEDENTS.

Now I come to the Precedents. First, That of Danegelt hath been Objected: Of which there were two kinds; as Sir Henry Spelman in his Glossary observes; one ad pacandum, the other ad coercendum Danos; Great Sums of Money they had to go home again; from 12000 to 48000 l. per Annum, it was raised in three years: It continued till King Stephen's Time ; in which Time it is said it was released : For my part , I see not , but that it might be now put in use as formerly , had it not been for these Statutes of E. 1. and E. 3. before-mentioned ; for it was not laid down when the Danger ceased ; but was continued and taken up by Princes when they had a mind to it ; as by William the Conqueror , and William Rufus : But since these Statutes , it was never used (and here he read the Words of the Statutes) so if these Statutes took that away , why do they not bind in our Case ? which is a full Answer in my opinion to that and all other Precedents before these Statutes ; there have been 200 shewed on the one side , 200 on the other ; But I say , it had been better they had never made use of them : So to all the Precedents before the Statute de Tallagio concedendo , I give this general Answer , wto be of no force ; for the Precedents in the Time of H. 3. which were many , yet in those Commissions for preparing of Gallies , after they were made , they were at the Kings Cost ; this may be done at this day . And with the Statute of 14 E. 3. I Answer those Precedents of 10, 11, 12 E. 3. And by the way observe the Times that were then ; that Statutes were forced to be made to remedy those Evils ; and surely those were the Burdens and unreasonable Taxes which the King in the Thirteenth year of his Reign confessed he had oppressed his Subjects with , and desired they might be forgotten , because he was urged to it by his necessities , and not for any ill end of his own , (And so he caused the record it self to be read openly before all the Judges) 2 H. 4. 2 R. 2. a general assembly called and resolved that money could not be raised but by Parliament , since this time all the Precedents that have been vouched , were for arraying of men and putting them in Arms and readiness.

28 H. 8. There were some forced upon their own charges , to go to suppress some Rebels in Lincoln-Shire ; But afterwards were recompensed for their charges ; saith the record , our pleasure is to send a messenger and a bill of charges he shall satisfy them ; I do agree and there are many Statutes , that men should be arrayed ; as Statute of Winchester , which are only preparations to make men ready.

Now , for that hath been urged by Mr. Attorney excellent well , that the King by the Law of the land , hath a Prerogative in the Lands and Goods of his Subjects : So that the Sheriff may in some cases for him break open a man's house , and the like , because he cannot execute Justice . Tis true the King hath such a Prerogative and fit it should be used ; for otherwise Justice could not be administered , as it is in many cases ; The Sheriff (tho a verdict by default) hath power by the Prerogative of the King , to break into the house , and give possession ; for otherwise Justice could not be administered if all laws were contemned ; for which contempts the King may use his power : Again the King of his own charge maintains his Courts of Justice and is bound so to do 39 H. 6. 34 H. 6. and in lieu of these charges the Law gives these Fines and other duties ; for there is upon the matter a quid pro quo , But where there is an Interest in a Subject , he cannot take it away without his consent , as he may do it in Murage and Pontage and the like ; for their is a particular benefit to the Subject , so I think I am almost at an end of Answering the first and second part of the Precedents , the Ancient time was one way , the modern time another way.

In E. 4. Time Rich. 3. Hen. 7. Time , All for wages for Mariners , certain allowances they had , what a week and what a day.

But you say , here in this case appears no money to be paid by the Subject , but only for a Ship to be provided by the Sheriff , and not any money to come unto the Kings purse.

Sol. I must conclude this part with an Agreement agreed by all , That If this Writ had been to Levy Money , all have agreed it had been void.

As I do take it , the Writ is to prepare a Ship of such Burden ; So the Ship is the Matter ; then give me leave to say this ; and I say , as it appears plainly by the Record , there was no Ship prepared at all : then if no Ship , no Writ can be had against him for disobedience to his Commandments : Its known to all the world , it is not Ships , but Ship-money ; Ship-money in every mans mouth . It hath a Name of preparing of Ships , but the end of it is to prepare Money ; as in Yorkshire 12000 l.

If the Provision of a Ship had been expressly alledged , it might have been traversed ; and therefore Mr. Hampden's Counsel could do nothing but Demur ; and by Demurring , they confess nothing but that which is materially , and so sufficiently alledged , that it might have been denied by a Traverse.

But you will Object , That I did subscribe to a contrary Opinion , and set my Hand unto it.

To this , for my own part , I must say , and say it truly , That my private Opinion was ever against it : I did subscribe ; but it is true , that it was but for Conformity : for it is known to all , when a great Number meet together , the Judgment is , that as the greater Number saith : Besides , these words to which we subscribed our Opinion , are no ways pursued.

Secondly , Our Opinion was very suddenly required ; for the King's Letter bears Date Feb. 2 , and our Opinions unto it , bears Date following ; and it was in a Case wherein we never heard any Argument ; so that we usually do ; and God forbid but that we may dissent from our private Opinions upon better Reason heard ; but I am of the same Opinion now I was then.

But it will be said , we might have done it more advisedly . No man of us , but sometimes deliver our Opinion , and yet after we have heard an Argument , have changed our Opinion , and gone contrary to our former Judgment.

Thirdly , If after any Arguments heard , I had been of the same Opinion that was delivered , yet this Writ doth not pursue the Direction : for though we directed that the King might Charge in case of a general Danger , yet this was , and is intended not in danger of Pyrates : but upon an imminent necessity and apparent danger , as could not be avoided ; for I do agree , in time of War , when there was an Enemy in the Field , the King may take Goods from the Subject . Such a danger , & such a necessity ought to be in this Case , as in case of a Fire , like to consume all without speedy help ; such a danger as tends to the overthrow of the Kingdom : Give me leave to say , that Kings of England have had great Power to take this to themselves . 17 H. 8. In the Cardinals Time , that it was lawful to send forth Commissions throughout England to take a Sixth part of the Subjects Goods : whereupon , many upon Refusal , 1637. fusal, were sent to Prison; Lord Cobham amongst the rest sent to Prison from Huntington to London, that at length Norfolk and Suffolk grew to such a heat, for taking away their Goods in that undue manner, that the King was forced to call a great Council, who suppressed those kind of Writs, and the King laid the fault upon the Cardinal: and the Cardinal said, it was the Advice of the Kings Council; and they denied it, and he bore the Shame.

Anno

So in the Time of Gracious Queen Elizabeth, who was a Gracious and Glorious Queen; yet in the End of her Reign, whether through Covetousness, or by reason of the Wars that came upon her (I know not by what Council) she desired Benevolences. The Statute 2 R. 2. was offered; yet it went so far, that by Commission and Direction, Money was gathered in several Inns of Court; and I my self, for my part, paid 20 s. But when the Queen was informed by her Judges, that this kind of proceeding was against Law, she gave direction to repay all such Sums as were Collected; and so I (as all the rest of our House, and I think, of other Houses too) had my 20 s. repaid me again: and Privy Councillors were sent down into all parts, to tell them it was for Defence of the Realm, and that it should be Repaid unto them again.

Exceptions to the Writ.

Now for the Exceptions to the Writ it self, I must Answer my Brother Barkley, That no Conceit afterwards (if the first Writ be not good) will help it. The Writ is said to contain matter sufficient; quia datum est nobis intelligi, quod quidam Pirata, Naves & hominum Subditor. nostr. &c. and lead our men into miserable Captivity; and provide Ships, Mariners, &c. ad Gravandum Regnum. Now nothing here at all for the defence of the Kingdom: here is no Cognoscimus hostium Adventus, as the Writs did anciently run.

Again, Pyrates are to be withstood with ordinary Defence, which appertaineth to the King himself; but for extraordinary Defence for Invasion, when the Kingdom is like to be overthrown, there indeed the whole Kingdom is to contribute to the Defence; and our Resolution was, when such a Danger was apparent, the whole Kingdom in danger, then the Defence to be extraordinary.

Obj. But you Object, That though there be no Danger set forth in the Writ, yet it is in the Mittimus certified, Salus Populi periclitabatur.

Sol. The Writ issued 4 Aug. 11 Car. the Mittimus came not out till two years after; now the Council perceiving the first Writ was not sufficient, they politickly add to the Mittimus this Clause of Salus Regni periclitabatur; so this coming so long after, cannot make that which was not Legal ab initio, to be good by Matter ex post fact. This could not be helped by any subsequent Matter (as in Case of a Fine, &c.) This was much stood upon by my Brother Barkley: But I shall Answer him with Two Cases not to be denied

1. Vernon's Case, Report 4. A Man conveys Land to the Use of himself for Life, the Remainder to J. S. for Life, the Remainder to his VVife for her Joynture; though in this Case, J. S. die before the Husband, so that now it falls out to be advantageous to the VVife, as if it had been limited to her immediately after the Death of her Husband, yet 'tis resolved, that because it is not so limited in the beginning, no good Joynture to Barr her of her Claim to her Dower.

Also in Chenayes Case, Report 5, A VVill uncertain (and so not good) shall not be holpen by an After-Averment, subsequent to alter the Estate; so it is in our Case, if the VVrit were not Legal when it first issued, no subsequent Matter shall make it good.

The VVrit commands the Sheriff, Et quos Rebelles invenerit, to imprison, and to distrain all such as refuse to pay.

This is direct against the Statute of Magna Charta; None ought to be distrained, or imprisoned, but by the lawful Judgment of his Peers, and according to the Laws of the Land, never contained in any VVrit before; nor any such VVrit can be maintained. Besides, the VVords of the VVrit are to Rate every man in the County secundum Statum & Facultates. Shall the Sheriff be a Judge and a Party? If Assessment upon himself be not done according to the VVrit, he must be the Judge and the Party: never such a VVrit before. All Sheriffs must pay nothing for themselves, or every Sheriff must Sess himself, 8 H. 6. Dy. 320. So for the VVrit, for the Reasons aforesaid, I hold it to be against the Law.

For Demurre.

Again, No Ship was prepared; if it had been prepared, it had been their own Goods; and therefore the making of the Ship might have been pleaded, that there was never a Ship; and then the Sheriff might have been punished for not on beying the Kings Commandment.

It hath been said, he hath confessed all Matters contained in the VVrit; whereas in a Demurre he confesseth not Matter of Fact; but with sufficient, 30 Eliz. Lord Cooke 23. resolves the same.

But to the VVrit of Scire Fac. I conceive it not Legal: No such VVrit can go forth to two Sheriffs of one County; they being neither of them Sheriff at this time; for it went out after they were out of their Sheriffwick; therefore some Return should have been made by Inquisition. I never see nor heard of any VVrit that went to two Sheriffs of one County (as it was to Buckingham) and so two Sheriffs made two several Returns

Again, This Money cannot be levied by Scire Fac. because the VVrit directs other Means, either to distrain, or to imprison, therefore not by Scire Fac. for it is contrary to the words of the VVrit; and seeing the Sheriff hath not followed that Direction, he must Answer the Contempt.

But here to Answer my Brother Trevor, I do agree in some Cases, if a Certificate or Presentment, that a Bridge was out of Repair, or a High-way stopt, there shall go a Scire Fac. upon that; but that tells to whom the Money is to be paid: this VVrit doth not demand the Money to be paid the King for not preparing a Ship: It must be by Office, or Inquisition of Record, if a Legal Certificate, as it is; 2 E. 3. fol 2. The King commands by his VVrit, the Sheriff of Leicester to Summon J. S. &c. to come and meet him with Ayd, to go into Scotland; he spent the Money to a great value: There went a VVrit out of the Exchequer against this man, 1637. 10 Attach him; yet after long Debates it was held fit, the King must be first informed by matter of Record.

I agree, the King as he is Lord of the Sea, may lay Imposition; but then he ought to defend the Merchants Goods from the Pyrates: That famous Case of Mich. 4 Jac. in which Case I was of Council, of Imposition of 5 s. a Tun upon Currants; one Bates stood out, and would not pay it; adjudged that, that Imposition was lawful, for the King may make an Imposition, for he hath the Rule of the Sea, and hath power to hinder Merchants to Traffique; and if they Traffique, he secures them.

To conclude with that which my Brother Barkley said, That the Subjects of England are Free-men, and not Slaves, Subjects, and not Villains: Here is no apparent necessity of any Invasion; therefore by the Law they cannot be thus compelled by Writ to part with the Interest in their Goods; if an apparent necessity, they were without limit or stint. Thus have I, with as much perspicuity as those imperfections which attend my Age would give me leave, set forth my Reasons, and without any further Protestation, I conclude both for matter and form, that you are not to give Judgment for the King.

Baron Denham his Opinion presented in Writing; as also his further Declaration of that Opinion (upon some misconstruction thereof) with his Reasons presented in the Court also in Writing.

May it please your Lordships;

I Had provided my self for to have made a short Argument, and to have delivered my Opinion, with the Reasons; but by reason of want of rest the last night (my old Disease being upon me) my Sickness and weakness are greatly increased, insomuch that I cannot attend the business as I desired; and if my Opinion be required, it is for the Plaintiff.

26 Maii, 1638.

His second Certificate directed to the Lord Chief Justice Bramston, 28 Maii 1638.

My Lord,

Understanding that some misconstruction was taken by some in the Declaration of my Opinion, which I desired your Lordship the last Saturday to deliver in my Name; for further satisfaction therein, I have sent again, although I was most desirous to have passed my Vote in silence, in this work of weight, by reason I heard not the four last Arguments; yet I delivered my Opinion for the Plaintiff, which I took to be Mr. Hampden, by reason it appeareth by the Record, that he coming in upon Process, Queritur de Colore premissorum graviter vexatum & hoc minus iuste, which satisfied me that he was Plaintiff: And therefore I now declare my Opinion for Mr. Hampden, who did demur.

I shall only deliver these two Reasons for the maintaining of my Opinion.

Car. 13.

The first is, that the Kings Majesty is sola & suprema Justitia Regni: And the Rule of the Law is, and hath always been, that his Majesty can do no wrong: And thereupon ariseth another Rule of our Law, which I give for my second reason; That the Kings Majesty being of a Corporate Capacity, can neither take any Lands or Goods from any of his Subjects, but by and upon a Judgment of Record, which (according to our daily experience in the Exchequer) there must precede some Judgment in that or some other Court of Record, whereby his Majesty may be entitled either to the Lands or Goods of a Subject; as namely, where seizures of Goods is made for his Majesty, either upon Outlawries, Attainders, or matters of the like nature; as in Cases of seizures in the Court of Exchequer, where seizures are given by Statutes, yet without a Judgment in that Court upon a Tryal for the King, the Goods are not to be recovered to the use of the King, as forfeited.

Upon consideration whereof, and comparing the same with his Majesties Royal Writ, I find no Judgment thereupon had, nor given, which was the chiefest Reasons of my Opinion for Mr. Hampden.

28 Maii, 1638.

Finis Opinionis Baron. Denham.

My Lord Chief Baron Davenport his Argument.

My Lords;

There hath appeared unto us (upon this Record) many several Arguments, and excellently made; it comes now to my course to express my own Opinion.

It appeareth upon this Record, that Pasch. 13 Car. a Scire Fac. issued out of the Exchequer to the Sheriff of Bucks, reciting, that whereas several sums of money, mentioned in a Schedule to that Writ annexed, by vertue of the Writ 4 Augusti, assessed upon several persons for providing of a Ship, and were not paid; whereby he was commanded quod Scir. fecerit to those several persons in the Schedule annexed named, to appear in the Exchequer Octab. Trin. 13 Car. to show cause why they should not pay those sums of money assessed upon them: Thereupon a Certiorari 9 Martii 13 Car. was directed to the Sheriff of Buckingham, to certify the sums, and the several persons upon whom they were assessed, and of the warning given unto them to pay the same: The Certiorari being returned, and in Court, in April 13 Car.

Quinto Maii, then came there a Writ of Mittimus out of the Chancery, by which he said the former Writs were sent unto the Barons of the Exchequer, which Mittimus recites the VVrit 4 Augusti, and not the Record it self; and the Barons are commanded, that they should thereupon proceed, as by the Mittimus is required.

Upon these Records thus certified, there issued out of the Court of Exchequer 2 Scire Fac. that is now in debate, which was awarded against the parties mentioned in the Schedule; and Mr. Hampden being returned, hath appeared, and demandeth Anno 1637. mandeth Oyer of the Writ 4 Augusti 11 Car. of the Certiorari 9 Martii 13 Car. and of the Mittimus 5 Maii 13 Car. Upon Oyer of these, and they being read unto him as hath been demanded, Mr. Hampden doth demur in Law, alledging, that the VVrits, and every of them, and the Returns of them, and the matters therein contained, are not sufficient to charge him for the sum of 20 s. on him charged; and thereupon demandeth Judgment, if the King will be pleased any further to proceed upon this VVrit.

To this Demurrer thus tendred by Mr. Hampden, Mr. Attorney hath joyned in Demurrer, alledging, that the Writs mentioned, and all of them, and the matters therein contained, are good and sufficient in Law to charge the Defendant with 20 s. and demandeth Judgment thereupon for the King; and that thereupon Judgment would proceed for the King, that the Defendant Hampden should be charged with the sum of 20 s. and thereof make satisfaction, but to whom is not expressed upon the Record.

This Demurrer thus warily joyned on both sides, there hath been thereupon several Arguments, both at the Bar and Bench, excellently (no doubt) argued, and very fully: There hath been introduced and pressed to the Court (and whereof there hath been several Notes delivered) a number of Records appertaining to the question, so far forth, that in one of the Arguments at the Bar, there was excellently well remembered, at the least upon the particular of Records and great Authorities, above 300.

Upon this Record the Demurrer being thus joyned, my purpose is, after my meanness, (being not able to give an account of every particular) to make a summary Collection of that I am to say, and with that shortness and brevity that appertains to me (the weight of the Cause not deserted) upon the duty of my place, and upon my Oath, which I have learned, and hold to be Ligamentum fidei inter Deum & Animam, to declare unto this Court what I do conceive upon the Question arising upon this Record, wherein my meaning is to retain my self unto the parts of the Record.

Judgment is not here to be given, but a Judicial advice; and according to the number of voices, here Judgment must be given in the Exchequer, without any respect of our own particular Opinions which sit in this Court.

I shall do my best endeavour to open unto you such questions as do appear to me upon the Record to be aptly and fitly debated before us.

The state out of the Record will appear to be this.

That 4 Augusti 11 Car. there issued out of Chancery a Writ not returnable unto the Sheriff of Buckingham; this Writ was inter Brevia irritabilia, according to those styles in that Court, and in the Court of Exchequer.

By this Writ 4 Augusti, which I do conceive to be the original main ground of this Record.

It appears what was the occasion and ground that VVrit was then awarded; it was touching, and in respect of certain grievous Incurfions by the Pyrates upon the Sea-coasts, who commit depredations, and take Goods and Merchandizes both of the Kings Subjects, and others that traffique here, and carry them into Captivity; and this is said to be to the great damage of the Kingdom; that the times were dangerous and hostile times, tempora hostilia, and therefore it was fit there should be a convenient remedy provided by the Kingdom for defence thereof; and thereupon in that VVrit two several Mandates or Commands are imposed: The first of those was a Command and direction unto the Sheriff of the County of Buckingham, and to the Mayor of Buckingham, and to the Bayliffs and Burgeses of the Borough of _____ and Parishes of the County of Buckingham, & probis hominibus of those Towns, and of all others dwelling and inhabiting in that County; these are the persons who are charged.

By that same Writ 4 Augusti, they were charged with this particular, that they should before the first of March then following, at their own costs, provide and prepare a Ship of VVar, of the burden of 450 Tun, furnished and fitted with Victuals, Men and Munition, that they should be ready to be brought to Portsmouth, at their own charge, at or before the first day of March, and from thence to be maintained at their own proper Charges for the space of 26 weeks then following, to attend such Noble persons to whom the King should be pleased to commit the Custody of the Sea, and to pursue their directions.

The second sort of those two Mandates descends from the persons, to whom the VVrit was directed unto some few, and that is upon the matter unto the Sheriff of Buckingham, and to the Mayor and Burgeses of the Town of Chipping Wicomb, to those is given and limited a power by the VVrit distributively, as therein is appointed respectively, to tax and assess the whole County secundum statum & facultates, and those that they should find to be Rebels, they should distrain them, or by any due means commit them to Prison, there to remain, until his Majesty send forth an Order for their deliverance. This I do conceive to be the end of those two Mandates mentioned and comprised in the Writ 4 Augusti 11 Car.

After this Writ 4 Augusti 11 Car. almost a year and a half, then cometh forth the Certiorari out of the Chancery, dated 9 Martii 12 Car. directed unto the Sheriff of Buckingham, who with the other Referrees should certifie unto the King the names of such persons as were assessed, and when they were assessed, and who have performed the Assessment, that Writ was returnable 26 Aprilis then next following, and therein Mr. Hampden appears as a Defendant unto the Scire Fac. therein was he certified to have been taxed to the Sum of 20 s. for the Town of Sroak Mandevil, and that he did refuse to pay it, and did not pay it unto him, nor unto any of the Collectors that were appointed: This being returned into Chancery, and no Order there made, or any Rule that the Sum imposed on Mr. Hampden should be paid; then in 5 Maii then following the same Term, cometh a Mittimus, reciting the effect of those Writs, and is directed to the Lord Treasurer, and Barons of the Exchequer; herein the Tenor of the Writ 4 Augusti, and not the Writ it self, is certified into the Exchequer; and withall certifieth the rest of the Record, together with the Schedules annexed unto those Writs, and by that is commended unto the Court, that they should proceed to do for the further receipt and collection of the Sums behind, as by the Law and Custom of the Kingdom of England should be required; and upon that Certificate here cometh a Writ of Scire Fac. directed to the Sheriff of Buckingham, to give notice to the persons that were defective, and that they should appear, and shew cause, if they could say any thing, why they should 1637. should not be charged therewith according to the Laws and Customs of the Realm; and the Writ is so returned, and upon that return Mr. Hampden appears at the day in person, and after Oyer of the proceedings hath demurred.

Upon this Record, this being the Case, and the Demurrer thereupon joyned, we are to see what is the Law and Custom of England upon the matter extant in this Record, for I intend not to expatiate besides the Record, but to stick close to it, as it is in the Case now depending in Court upon this Record; and therein I shall restrain my self unto some few general Heads, nor will not be long I trust in any thing.

1. The first thing is, whether these two Powers and Mandates mentioned in this Writ 4 Aug. 11 Car. (the original ground thereof) the one for preparation of a Ship, and furniture, and of the residue therein mentioned, and the other for the Taxation, at pleasure of the Sheriff and persons therein referred, and that expressed upon the Motives in the Writ 4 Augusti; whether (I say) that these same Mandates were and are good in Law, according to the Law and Custom of the Kingdom of England, upon the matter upon this Record, that is the first question; if that do fail, then the Scire Facias is at an end: if there is no Legal Charge imposed upon the Country, then he ought to be discharged.

2. The second question upon the principal Head, admitting that these were legal in themselves, according to the Tenor of the Writ, to see then how it is reduced by the Record; therein I shall offer unto consideration, whether that upon this Certificate upon the Writ 9 Martii out of the Chancery, after the time so past for execution of the first Writ, which is irreturnable, that upon that it be so legal, and according to the course of Law conveyed over by the Record to be a sufficient ground and warrant of the Scire Facias here brought, is the second question.

3. The third question: This Writ of Scire Fac. issued out, the Defendant appeared, and demurred in Law, whether hereupon there be such matter therein, that they may charge the Defendant with the sum imposed upon him, so that the King may have a Judgment and Execution upon it; that I conceive to be the last question.

This Cause is a Cause of great weight, and doth nearly concern every one of us to have a special eye unto it; it is not an usual question in our Books, whereof we have much view.

However it be in the Record to which we are now tyed, it concerns highly the Prerogative of the King, and the Estate of the Subject: In my Conscience I think, for the Act that was done was a gracious Act, an honourable Act, a Royal Act, and proceeding upon just Cause, that there should be a present remedy for the avoiding of the inconveniencies that did appear, no doubt for our good: Herein, though it be known to every one that knoweth me, but especially to my self, if I partake of the Rule that every man is bound unto, Nosce te ipsum, knows withal, that no man is more bound, nor oweth a more tender care to preserve the Kings Prerogative, and to do that which may advance the same, as we are all bound unto by the great Oath that we have received upon our Promotion: And in that particular, I profess none more bound than my self.

Upon this I have been told, and I have truly looked into the Records, so far forth as my meanness will give leave, and according to what I understand of the Law and Custom of the Kingdom of England to be upon this Record. Car. 13.

I must needs say, though I do confess in my own particular unwillingly, that upon this Record Judgment ought to be given for the Defendant, Quod Johannes Hampden sit quietus, &c. however, with submission to the greater Vote of my Brothers: For first, I do conceive that this Charge thus commanded, and thus taxed, is not warrantable by the Laws and Customs of the Kingdom of England: I shall therefore offer unto the consideration of the Court, the several discussions upon the Writ.

First, For the Writ 4 Augusti 11 Car. directed to the Sheriff of Buckingham, to the Mayor and Burgesses of Buckingham, and Bayliffs and Burgesses of Chipping Wicomb, & probis hominibus Com. Bucks. Hereby are they charged upon their Allegiance, that they should before 1 Martii following, prepare at their own costs and charges, per probos homines, throughout all the County, a Ship of War well furnished; and that the same Ship of War they shall maintain at their own costs and charges for the space of 26 weeks, to attend the Kings Navy for the custody of the Sea, as the King shall appoint and direct.

This first part, I take it not warrantable by the Law and Custom of England, in respect being a matter of so great a charge, and by them being an Inland County impossible to be performed to prepare a Ship before that time, being no Maritime County, but an Inland County: This I do take in it self, that this is not a Charge to be imposed upon by the name of probos homines, or of the particular men there named, except it were by their own consent and approbation, and with their consent I agree a Charge upon probos homines, so they receive nothing to their own use, is good enough; whereof I find an excellent Record, 24 E. 1. a Writ that issued out of the Exchequer, and whereof there is the Record remaining to this day enrolled, and certified to be a true Copy; there it is directed, in case of necessity, when the King is absent beyond the Sea, upon Information of the discovery of a present and instant incursion of the Enemies in Flanders and France, under colour of coming as Fishermen, to surprize the Town of Yarmouth, and all the parts of the Coast thereabouts; my Lord Treasurer that then was (the King being beyond the Sea) the Under-Treasurer who had the custody of the Sea, and the Barons of the Exchequer, caused a Writ to be directed unto the Bayliffs & probis hominibus, and no doubt of it, in the Judgment of our Predecessor himself was good Law, and the Writ legally executed, upon the instant necessity appearing: But Forrescue speaks not so much of the necessity, as hath been observed; therefore it is not good to conclude upon some general words in him, that in no case of necessity the Charge may be laid, for the scope of the whole Book considered well will not warrant it, the intent of it is not against Cases of extremity; you see not in the Case, but that therein the Regal course must be observed, according to the Law and Custom of the Kingdom of England: But when I do consider of the first charge of preparing of a Ship at their own charges, and of the consideration of the next charge in the same Writ for Taxation, I do not see, nor I do not perceive how the same do agree, but that the one is repugnant unto the other; for that the former part commands the Charge to be generally by all, and by this last power it is limited to be done by a particular person, and that to be done at his Will, and as he shall think fit, whereby the Sheriff and Bayliffs thus employed, are excluded from the Charge, for they can do no Act upon themselves; it should have been done per Sacramentum proborum hominum, considering these two different Powers, I hold the Law so to be clear in this point: It appeareth not upon this Record that they were assenting unto it, or agreed upon any Ordinance herein. Now the Power of the Preparation, it is upon the whole, upon the Sheriff himself, Major, Bayliffs, & probos homines. But when you come to the latter ipso facto, by the Laws and Customs of the Realm, a great part of the former is removed directly from those that were therewithal chargeable: Power and Taxation is appointed; to whom? to the Sheriff; and how can he Tax himself; he and all his Estate and Goods within the County of Buckingham under the first Charge, and all discharged by the power of Taxation limited in the second Clause; & therein I take it that this same is not legal according to the Custom & Laws of England, the one doth not agree with the other; if you ask me the reason of it, my Brother Hutton hath given it; That the Charge is upon the Sheriff, and not possible for the Sheriff to Tax himself, he cannot find himself inter Rebelles; he cannot commit himself to Prison, there to remain till such time as the Kings Majesty shall deliver him, that he cannot do: So for other Referrees of Buckingham exempted likewise. If they can do this, then clearly the former Charge imposed by the first, and said to be done by them all, is out of doors. Now it cannot be done according to the Law of England upon the Sheriff, upon his Land. This point, I think, is very evident in our Books, 18 H. 8. If a Defendant that is Sheriff be to be summoned, and he return that he cannot do it, Justice H. was of Opinion that that return was not good, for he might summon himself, 8 E. 3. But if it come to a further Question, That if there be any Execution to be done where another will be prejudiced, he cannot do it, as to impanel a Jury upon a Writ where he is a party which may prove a prejudice to another, for if he do it, it is not lawfully done. As it is in Dyer, 8, and 9. Of the Sheriff in a common Recovery, so upon these Authorities for the first Question; I could it manifest, that this Act which the Sheriff is charged to do, is afterwards by this second Power discharged. These two Powers do not cohere, and therefore not warrantable by the Laws and Customs of the Realm of England.

Concerning the first of these Questions, my Opinion is clear, that there is a material and legal Exception appearing upon the self same Writ: My Reason is, The Sheriff is the Great Officer of the County, but when he must do it, I take it legally, he ought to do it according to the Duty of his Place by the Law of England: That I do not take to be at his will and pleasure to lay one thing upon one, and another thing upon another; for my part, I conceive this must be done per Sacramentum; he is not to be Judge in case of uncertainties when a division of Charge and Taxes is to be made; where things are put in certainty in any of the Kings Courts, there he may execute, as, take a mans Goods, Imprison, &c. But in such cases of uncertainty, the Law hath annexed to his Office a way and means how to reduce the thing to a certainty, and that is, per Sacramentum proborum hominum, As in the Case of Perceners, if they have a mind to make Partition of their Inheritance, they may do it by agreement between them if they will, or by making of Lots by a third person, the elder shall choose; but if she her self make the Partition, she shall not both divide and choose, that alters the case for execution, when it is in propria persona. But admit they cannot agree, the Judgment of the Law is, that the Sheriff shall go in his proper person into the ground; shall he in his discretion make the Partition as he pleaseth? No; the Judgment is, The Sheriff shall go in person unto the Land, and that there per Sacramentum, per Inquisitionem, to be taken by chosen Jurors, they must consider of it; upon such a thing so done per Sacramentum, then indeed it is in the Sheriffs Power, he may now chuse whether he will prefer the elder or the younger. But for our Case that this should be done by a Sheriff, by his discretion, while the Interest of several persons are concerned as it were to make a Rape, I do not find that, in a Book of Law, I must confess. In that Act which is done by the Law, there can be no error or partiality: So in Fitz N. B. in his Writ de onerando pro rata portione, see what there is to be done; it goeth to the Sheriff, he is trusted with the doing of this, but he is trusted by legal means, what shall he there do? Where 20 Acres of Land held of the King in chief, they are sold to several hands, there must be a Writ de onerando pro rata, for discharge of the Rent, but this must be done per Sacramentum, not by the sole power of the Sheriff. Hereof I find a notable Precedent; it is true it is not in our Books of Law, but in an Historian, yet he doth set it down in that manner as a man may trust him so far; Matt. Paris, fo. He saith and sheweth us there, That 17 H. 3. 8 years after the making of the Statute of Magna Charta authorized by Parliament, That the King himself in His Parliament was pleased (that according to the Institutions of Parliaments) to require Concilium & Auxilium for the Kings Wars, where by the way let me observe, that Auxilia from the Subjects to the King granted in Parliament are not merely voluntary, but Duties, to give Moneys for supply of necessities of State; and in that I agree with the Opinion of my Predecessor Ho. Chief Baron, 19 H. 6. the King is bound to defend the Kingdom; the same Law that binds him to the Defence of the whole Realm, gives the King a right of Inheritance to claim Subsidies for the defence thereof. But to return to Matt. Paris: It appeareth there, that the King in Parliament did demand Aid of His Subjects, Concilium & Auxilium, their Counsel as they were bound, their Help as they were able; it is said there, that they made choice of the Earl of Chester, to give their Answer, who at first held not fit to do it, alledging their Estates were but weak, that by the Law of the Kingdom they that had been there in person, they for their Escuage might not be touched: The Prelates they were more courteous in their Answer, they desired time to assemble themselves together, many being far distant: Thereupon was a time assigned until Mens. Pasch. In the mean time they all considered, the Lords on the one side, and the Lords Spiritual on the other side; and being demanded a Fifteenth of their Goods, they answered, So as they might have their Ancient Laws established unto them, for which there had been so much trouble, they would willingly assent unto it: The King consented unto it; and thereupon the Statute of Magna Charta was there confirmed upon grant.

grant of the Fifteenth to His Majesty. But when they came afterwards, they did all agree, That for necessity, and for the Kings Charges in His Wars, which did require a speedy Supply, they were contented to yield to Him a Fourth part of their Goods to be levied in this manner; that is, for so it is mentioned expressly in Matt. Paris, and the Form is there set down de verbo in verbum; there it is set forth, how the Collection and the manner of it should be; it is in this manner, I have it here to read it; That every Sheriff within his County should return a Juror in every Town, that to four Gentlemen of good value and accounted principal men in every Town power is given they should do (as a Jury to set forth upon their Oaths) Assessments reasonable according to their Estate and Power; and because it appeared then there, the very exception now taken, that the Assessors could not tax themselves, they had power to tax the residue; therefore a Power was given to two others of every Town, and they should be sworn, and upon their Oaths tax the four former Assessors. This tells unto me what the Ancient and Usual manner was of Taxes and Assessors by the Custome of England; the manner was not at the voluntary pleasure of the Great Officer of the County: That they that did tax others, should be taxed by others. And this Opinion is directly in Matt. Paris, that the Laws of England were so; and therefore for my own part, for the Sheriff to tax at his discretion, I know no Law for it.

Stat. 1 E. 3. by the true Record according to the Manuscript of the Exchequer Book here, in French it is there, cap. 7. And so it appeareth in the Tower there enrolled; it is expressly there upon a complaint made, that they held themselves agrieved with an Assessment, their grief was, That whereas Aids were granted to the Crown more than formerly was used, &c. and Taxes not rightly laid upon them by the Sheriffs and Communioners. This grievance thus complained of here in Parliament, and the manner of their taxing disliked; the King saith, that from thenceforth the Taxations and Assessments should be made as in ancient manner and not otherwise: Here is an expresse Negative, no taxes to be done but by Jury, which excludes in my Opinion this same Tax thus done; that is by his own power and discretion, is not warrantable by the Law of the Land: And herein give me leave, as I think in my Conscience, and as I think the truth, if this Inconvenience had not tended to a Grievance in very many particulars, we should never have heard of this Question, but by this means it cometh in question, both the one and the other; for the Act it self, it is a Gracious and a Loyal Act. It is requisite and necessary as the State and Condition (if it so appear upon this Record) of the Kingdom may be in, That there be a Supply according to the necessity, for the King is Lord of the Sea, as it was argued at Bar in a Case brought in question before us the Barons in the Exchequer, where we did unanimously agree and adjudge, That the King was, and is, in my Conscience, rightly true Lord of the very propriety and ownership of the Sea: The occasion upon which this grew, a Question was, as I conceive, upon the writing of two Books, the one called Mare Liberum, That no Ownership of the Sea should belong to the King, whereas it is the Sea of our Sovereign, and defence by Sea under Almighty God, that is our Protection; and if we should suffer any else to have an Interest in it, it would hazard

the whole Kingdom. But in answer to this Book Mr. Selden hath very learnedly writ a notable Book called Mare Clausum, approved of by His Majesty, and enrolled in the Exchequer by Command from His Majesty, and there to remain. But since there is another Book written (which I had at my Argument) by one Pontanus, directed to the great Chancellor of the K. Denmark, and he undertaketh therein to make an Answer to every particular Chap. in Mr. Selden's Book; and truly, as I think in my poor Opinion, though weak, Mr. Selden hath a Judgment in Law against him upon a nihil dicir.

Of how great consequence the Dominion of the Sea is to this Kingdom who knows not? So that without question the Tax was very fit to be done, if the Power given to the Sheriff had been as warrantable. But this same second Power to free himself and lay it upon the residue, is not good nor warrantable by the Law. Thus much for the First Question concerning the Powers contained in the Writ 4 Augusti, which doth not resort unto the Rule and Custom of the Kingdom of England.

In the next place, let us see whether the Writ mentions Causes sufficient for the Issuing of it: For the Incursions of Pirates, I conceive it no just Cause. But the Expressions in the Writ, as, Quod datum est nobis intelligi, ut informatur, vulgaris opinio est & rumor est, &c. If the King do undertake it upon this, He is not to shew how He discovereth it: I am satisfied in my Opinion upon view of the Precedents; it is sufficient if the King do alledge Quia datum est nobis intelligi, or Quia intelleximus, &c. It is enough, for it is so in these Precedents, Quod vulgaris opinio, &c. All these, or any of these containing such a matter, that the Kingdom is in danger, I do agree the same doth conclude the party, and that the King is the Sole Judge of it; the Case is not traversable; the Writ must be obeyed, agreeing with the Laws and Customs of England. That this may be done by the Kings Writ, excellent and strong Arguments have been made, that this Imperial Power belongeth to the Crown, I heartily acknowledg it; His Power declareth it so, Reason it should be so; not voluntary at His Pleasure, but it is according to His Politique Capacity, not excluding His Natural Imperiality, Quia Rex he doth it not, but Quia Rex Anglia he doth it; so I find it in Fortescue: The Grounds premised in this Writ, that the Kingdom was in present danger, truth, in my Conscience it was so; and if that had not been done so, England had heard of it before this day. Therefore there must be an expression of the Kingdom to be then instantly in danger, or such a preparation in such a convenient time, or else it will be in a great danger; but that must be expressed, for I hold the Law to be so. Doctor and Student saith, It is the old Custom of the Land the King shall defend the Sea: True; Against whom? Against Pirates and petty Robbers, but not against a sudden Invasion at his own Charge. These Pradones which were spoken of in the Laws of King Edward, when Danegelt was given, they were in that condition that they endangered the whole Kingdom. They did occasion that of Danegelt from 16 to 26 a Hide; William Rufus to 46 a Hide, imposed upon a just ground, to repel the Danes, being common Enemies; and was continued until H. 2d's time, but since taken away by several Statutes, 25 E. 1. &c.

That

1637.

That same Danegelt which was heretofore imposed upon the Kingdom by the Terror of the Danes continued still though the name be altered; It is mentioned in the Red Book in the Exchequer to be used in H. 1. time, but after the time of H. 2. I hold that they are taken away by those Statutes before mentioned of E. 1. & c. And therefore if for private danger this Assessment be imposed, it is not according to the Laws and Customs of the Realm.

I am over-troublesome and shall hardly hold out; give me leave to proceed to the Second Consideration: And admitting those Charges in the First Writ to be legal, the next Consideration to be had, is, Whether the Certiorari and the Mittimus do legally revive the First Writ, it being a Writ irreturnable, and not excluded according to the Tenor of it within that limited and prefixed time.

This Certiorari issued long after the first Writ, dated a year and an half after; and in my Opinion this cannot be, for the nature of a Writ not returnable is to command a positive thing to be done within such a time; if it be not done accordingly, there is an end of the Force of that Writ. So that here in our case the Power given to the Sheriff being not executed in due time by him, but done out of time, cannot be renewed now; for otherwise you would make a man an Offender by a Relation, which being a Fiction of Law, cannot so operate, nor be made penal unto him for non-performance; though afterwards by the Mittimus these words, Salus Regni periclitabatur come in, yet they will not revive or make good the Commands of the First Writ: If the First Writ had been returnable, and return made, and a default according to the Return, the Writ had been still continued; and must have been informed by another Court, presented by a Jury upon default, and upon presentment and indictment, shall have his remedy to the King; but it being not so, it is but a suggestion, upon which a Scire facias cannot issue, as in Butler and Bakers Case, 3 Rep. And being not returnable, is but dead in Law, and being certified upon the second Writ, is not good, it cannot be to relate to make him a wrong Doer; to that purpose is the case cited in 26 E. 3. Leicestershire Case, reciting, Whereas one Sir John de Lungston, that he had delivered certain Moneys to Robert de, &c. and that he had wasted such a Mannor, and taken away goods to the value of 2000 l. And thereupon it was commanded he should be Attached by his Body; he appeared at his day, and because, &c. he was discharged of it: And according to that I find it 7 E. 3. there it was suggested to be made in one Kings time, and whereas it was not, and there abated: Then the question, Whether the King may do it or no? He giveth the Answer, That where it concerneth the King in his own Right, there the King may do it; but when the Title came to the King from another party, there it is otherwise.

Upon this I do conceive this same breve irreturnabilis falleth short of making him punishable, as if it had been a Writ returnable. Let the Writ 4 Augusti be never so good, the Writ thereupon is not legally issued.

Next thing is upon the Scire facias; the question is upon this Record, Whether this doth appertain unto the King? I conceive it doth not appertain unto the King: My reason is this, Because in the very Writ 4 Augusti, it is expressly provided for by that, that it shall be employed to no other use but for the Preparation of the Ship therein mentioned, by no means to any other purpose: Car. 1. It doth not now appear who were Collectors therein appointed to receive the Money, whereby to become chargeable over to the King, it doth not appear upon this Record that any Ship was provided, or that any fault was in them that were employed, or of Surplage in the Collectors hands; though it was a worthy and gracious Act of His Majesty, yet this is not so legally executed as the King may have a Writ of Scir' fac'.

If Judgment be for the King, it must be with this limitation, that it must not go to the proper Coffers of the King (as my Brother Jones observed) And in my Conscience, if it were paid unto him, he is a loser by it; you see what the Writ is; you should be charged upon, for what? onerari & satisfacere, one Ship, non constat, there was any Ship, or any Collector, or any Act concerning it. This Money was pre-ordained only to prepare a Ship, and to be employed meerly upon that, and for no other purpose; and this appeareth not at all, whether any Ship made yea or no: for whom shall we give Judgment? The scir' fac' is, That Mr. Hampden should shew cause why he should not satisfy the Sum imposed upon him; but whom he should satisfy, or to whom the Money should be paid non constat, well penned upon the Demurrer, si Dominus Rex valet aut debeat onerari le Defend. But oneretur & inde satisfac'; nothing of that put into the Record to bring this unto the King; therefore Quod oneretur, cannot be executed at all, according to the Books of 39 E. 3. and 49 E. 3. where if Judgment be to be given, and cannot be executed, there it shall not be given at all. So the Judgment required upon this Demurrer, is upon the matter, oneretur, and shall by no colour come unto the King; God knows, it belongs unto him, and that deservedly, but in legal course non constat. Therefore to give Judgment quod oneretur, and not know to whom; to the King he cannot; for this reason I cannot see how Judgment can be quod oneretur.

But hereupon another thing troubleth me very much, and which in my Opinion makes it clear, that Execution cannot be made upon this Scire facias, and that is the Mittimus to us in the Exchequer, which by Recordum ipsum is not certified, but only the Tenor of the Record. I do conceive the Law to be so upon this difference, as it is taken in a Case excellently well argued 33 H. 6. where it is said, If the Record be in any other Court whence Execution may be awarded, and the Tenor of that Record is by Mittimus sent into another Court where Execution may be likewise awarded; in such a case a Scire fac' cannot issue upon such a Record, for this is but an Extract of the Record. So if a man should sue out Execution upon a Judgment given before the Justices of Assize, what will you do with this, and he have no goods within the Precinct? You must remove this: How do you remove it? Not by certifying the Tenor of the Record, but ipsum Recordum: But if the Record it self be certified into the Chancery, and sent by Mittimus into the Common Pleas, that is good, as we are Judges of the Record, no other Court can give Judgment upon that Record, but we.

Here is sent unto us the Tenor of the Writ, and not the Record it self that I can find, and so two Executions may be upon one Judgment, 37 H. 6.
A Transcript

Anno 1637. A Transcript or Tenor of a Recognizance came out of Chancery into the Common Pleas, to have Execution & non allocatur. And so it is Dy. 4, & 5, and 22 of the Queen; there was a Transcript there of a Recognizance to the intent that they might have a Scire fac. upon it, and held clearly by the Court, that upon the Tenor of a Record, no Scire fac. could lye. So all this appearing upon the very first Branch of the Record, that this fame was meerly a Tenor of the Record, and not Recordum ipsum; I do not know how upon this Record there can be Execution.

Thus have I done with the several Discussions of the Writ and Record, which upon my Reasons before alledged, I conceive it not sufficient in Law to Charge Mr. Hampden.

I come now to the great Question concerning the danger of the Kingdom, and our Certificate to His Majesty: Give me leave (according to our former Resolution made in Answer to His Majesties Question proposed) to speak of what we did certifie; and in my Conscience, truly, and I hold it real, That when any part of the Kingdom is in danger, actually in danger, or in expectancy of danger, and the same expressed by His Writ, I do agree the King may without Parliament charge the Subjects towards the Defence; For necessitas est Lex temporis: In vain to call help when the Enemy is landed. Clearly, I hold the King to be the Sole Judge, and the Danger being certified so by His Majesty, I hold it not Traversable. And in such a Case he may without Parliament charge the Subject, so that the very Cause be expressed effectually upon the Record, that the Kingdom was in danger: But if a Parliamentary Advice may be called, and the danger not so eminent, then regularly no such Charge can be laid out of Parliament; legally and rightly I hold things done by the Advice of Parliament were the best. But if it be so that the necessity will not admit the delay of Parliament when the Enemy is in view and expectant; that is such a Danger as we did certifie to the King in our Opinion to be; and in E. 3. time Writs issued the Parliament sitting.

To say, there cannot be Incurfions but that they may be known within seven months, wherein a Parliament might be had, is a great hazard to the Kingdom.

It is probable indeed the danger may be discovered before it come, but it is possible it may come unexpected. In 88; when that great Invasion was, at which time, if the Queen should not have used Her Royal Prerogative without calling a Parliament, the Kingdom perhaps might have been lost by the delay, and yet great expectation was then of a Parliament.

So if William the First, not William the Conqueror, for he did not conquer the Kingdom, he conquered the King of the Kingdom; his coming was sudden, he landed at Hastings; and was not the King advised of this at York? Did he not then make all haste by Post, raised a sudden Army and bad him Battel, and Will. the Conqueror had the Victory not of the Kingdom, but against the King. Lamert saith, He came not in per Conquestum, but per acquisitionem. After that he was Crowned and received by the Londoners, he sent forth Commissions to all the Counties of England, to enquire per Sacramentum, what the Ancient Laws of England were, and of the State of the Kingdom, and Certificate made thereof; and that of Danegelt certified to be a Tribute enforced. I say in times of Necessity the King may command this Aid by his Writ under the Great Seal, when the Danger is instant, nay the expectation is not traversable. Car. 13.

Obj. Then upon every Certificate that the K. makes that he is of Opinion that the danger is instant or expectant, this Charge may come by that means to be Annual.

Sol. No: We need not fear that the King will require it but upon just Occasion; the Law presumes it: And legally it cannot be laid upon the Subject but in such Cases of Necessity as aforesaid. By the Charters of Will. the 1. K. John, and H. 3. no Charge without Parliament by the Stat. of 10 E. 3. None is forced to go out of his County, 14 E. 3. I hold it to be a general Statute, and doth bind, but doth not bind in case of necessity; for they are not to be understood to be binding in all Cases.

The Charter of K. John as it is inrolled (not as it is printed) according to Mag. Cha. saving two Clauses that are not now in Mag. Cha. hath this exemption in it to the Subject, of these and these Immunities; No Tax nor Tallage but by a Parliament. But he excepts three Cases, 1. Nisi ad redimend^{um} corpus nostrum, pur Faier Fitz Chevalier, & pur file marier. These Prerogatives of the K. are not bound up by the Parliaments: The very Commons themselves did agree to these 3 Cases. As for the Stat. de Tallagio, I hold to be a good Stat. and much for the Liberty of the Subject; but if you come to a Case of Necessity, they will not stand in force.

There is an Omission in the Printed Stat. 25 E. 3. which is in the Records of the Tower (as it was observed by my Brother Huston) of these words, Car ceo est encounter le droit del Realme; how this comes to pass I know not, I caused it to be searched, and I find these words only in the Articles upon the Roll, where they do complain for finding of Hoblers, and are grieved for it, and give this as a reason, Car ceo est encounter droit del Realm; And the Answer which the K. gave unto it, was a Royal Answer to the thing proposed; but those words are left out of it: But if it were the Right of the Subject (le droit del Realme) as Littleton saith, that cannot dye.

And certainly in Case of Necessity there is a Right belonging to the K. to prevent danger; for legally when the safety of the Kingdom is in danger, in danger apparent, in that Case the K. hath a Power of Prerogative do compel Aid. And if an Act of Parliament should be made to restrain such a Charge on the Subject in case of necessity, it would be, felo de se, and so void, for it would destroy that Regale Jus.

So to this great question of imposing this Charge in case of Necessity, I am of Opinion it may be done without Parliament, as it was in 88, so long as the present and apparent danger continueth; and I am of Opinion (as I was when we gave in our Certificate to His Majesty) That the King is the Sole Judge of the Danger, and how to provide against it. But however, I do conceive upon this Record vpon which I am to give Judgment, That the Mandates in the Writ 4 Augusti are not good in Law, nor according to the Laws and Customs of the Kingdom of England, nor well grounded upon the Certificate; and that the Information afterwards cannot make a former Writ good which was first defective: And the Sheriffs which were, their Return is not effectual, upon which Judgment may be given.

Anno 1637. I cannot see how Judgment can be given quod oneretur, and not tell to whom, and nothing visible in this Record to whom we may find it; and therefore in my Opinion Judgment is to be given for Mr. Hampden.

F I N I S.

Sir John Finch, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, his Argument touching the Ship-Money, June 9. 1638. in the Exchequer-Chamber.

A Writ under the Great Seal of England, Dated, 4 Augusti, 11 Car. went to the Sheriff of Buckinghamshire (Sir Peter Temple) commanding that a Ship of 450 Tun, and 180 Men be ready Furnished with all Ammunition and Tackling, at Portsmouth, for 26 Weeks; to go with other of his Majesties Ships, and of the Subjects, to defend the Dominion of the Sea, and Realm, being in danger; and for to Charge and Assess all his Majesties Subjects, and all the Inhabitants within the said County, and all Occupiers, Tenants and Ter-Tenants there, that have no part in the Ship, nor serve in the same, to contribute for and towards the Preparation and Setting forth of the Ship, according to their Abilities.

The Record of Certiorari saith, Stoke Mandeville is within the said County, and was Assessed upon the Lands of John Hampden Esquire, as by a Schedule of 9 Martii, 12 Car. annexed unto the Certiorari, may appear.

Whereupon a Mittimus 5 Maii, 13 Car. with the Certiorari and Schedule, was directed unto the Barons of the Exchequer, to do there for the Sum unpaid, prout de Jure & per Legem & Consuetudinem Regni nostri fieri faciend.

A Scire Fac. upon this went forth of the Exchequer, to warn Mr. Hampden to shew Cause why he should not pay the 20 s. Upon the Return of which, Mr. Hampden appeared, and demanded Oyer of the Writ, Certiorari, Schedule, Mittimus and Scir. Fac. and upon hearing of them read, he Demurred; and Mr. Attorney joyned. Then my Lord Chief Baron and the Court of Exchequer Adjourned it to the Exchequer-Chamber, desiring the Advice of all his Majesties Judges; and look what Advice we (or the greater Number of us) give, the Court ought and must give Judgment upon it accordingly.

In the Debating of this Case, there hath been great variety of Opinions amongst the Judges; a thing usual and frequent in all great Cases and Consultations; which shews commonly the difficulty of the thing, and argueth a Candor and Clearness in the Judges, between whom Combination and Conspiracy would be most odious: All that have gone before me, have in one thing agreed; That it is the greatest Cause that ever came in any of our Memories, or Memorial of----

As the Sun arising in the Horizon, shews not the Figure so clear, as when it is beholden in the Meridian; so by mixing many Impertinencies with the Case in Judgment, it hath been apprehended to be of a far tenderer consequence than indeed it is; yet tender and weighty it is, if equally weighed, in one Ballance we may put the Regal Power, or rather the Regality it self; in the other, the Priviledges and Liberties of the Subject in his Person and Estate.

To look upon either of these, or both, through the Multiplying-Glass of Affection, is to behold neither of them truly; neither can they be so truly discerned, much less to multiply by the Glass of Phancy; and therefore Justice needs to hold the Beam straight.

I cannot fear my self, when Vulgar Censure hath exercised it self upon every one that hath delivered himself in this Matter; yet I will not say, Domine posuisti me in lubrico loco; for we that do sit here, do move in a Sphere, and should be like the Primum Mobile, according to whom, all others are to steer their Course: and Judges themselves must move steddily upon their right Poles, as I hope this Court will.

What Judge soever he be that is elevated by popular Applause, or animated by the contrary, to accumulate Honour, is fitter rather to live in Festo Romuli, quam in Politia Anglie.

Nor will I lose time in remembering the strict Oath of a Judge, who should expell all By-respects, and speak his Conscience; I hope none of us forget the Duty we owe to God, to the King, and Common wealth, and to our selves. I shall endeavour to satisfy my Conscience in all that I shall say: And they forget their Duty to the first, and Humanity towards us, that say or think the contrary of any one of us. Some of us have Fortunes and Posterities, and therein have given Hostages to the Commonwealth, and have as much Interest in this Case as Mr. Hampden.

Those that want those Blessings, want those Temptations that make them dream of (or hunt for) Honour or Riches, to perpetuate their Name and Families, to them nothing can be more precious than the Balm of Integrity, which will preserve their Names and Memories. It cannot be presumed but that we should speak our Consciences, since we well know shortly (as the Psalmist says) Corruption shall say I am thy Father, and the Worm I am thy Mother.

In handling this Case, no man can think I shall do other than right; and herein I am troubled rather for a Method, than Matter; rather how to dispose what I find, than find what to dispose: I shall endeavour shortly and clearly (considering the Time I have to spend, and the weightiness of the Matter about which I am to speak) to deliver my Opinion, with the Reasons of it; and my endeavour shall be rather to contract, than omit.

I have, with the best care I could, taken my Notes of all that hath been said for or against Mr. Hampden, and have, according to the measure of my understanding, weighed and pondered all that hath been spoken, both at the Bar, and by my Brothers, and bestowed many hours in Meditation about them, which the Time of Rest and Repose might have challenged.

Before I enter into the Case, I shall speak of the steps and degrees by which this Cause hath come to Judgment; whereby it will clearly appear, with what Clemency, Wisdom, Justice, and Goodness his Majesty hath proceeded in this Business.

The

1637. The first Writ went out to the Port-Towns and Maritime Parts of the Land the 20th. of October, 10 Regis, upon Advice taken between his Majesty and his Counsel: Before then, of these Writs I can say nothing; for I was commanded at that time to attend another Service about another Employment, the Forest of Dean. But it is well known, the Resolution taken by his Majesty therein, was grounded, and relied upon the Judgment and Learning of Mr. Noy, Attorney General; a Man of great Learning, and one that had great insight into Records, by whom the Matter was first prepared, collected and digested; and afterwards imparted to some of his Majesties Learned Council, and afterwards to some others, eminent persons of the Commonwealth, of no less Judgment and Knowledge of the Laws of this Realm; and upon Consultation with my Lord Chief Baron, and his Majesties Barons of the Exchequer, his Majesty commanded these Writs to be sent forth, against the Legality of which, nothing hath been truly alledged: It is true, they are not in Judgment properly before us; and if Method did not press it, I should not have mentioned them.

Primo Octobris, Anno 10. of his Majesties Reign, his Majesty was pleased to command me to serve in the Place that now I do; and those Records, Writs, Commissions, and other Precedents were brought unto me, as they had been formerly to my Lord Chief Justice, and my Lord Chief Baron; and we three did confer together, and delivered our Opinions in writing under our Hands.

Upon View and diligent Perusal of a multitude of Ancient Records, Writs, and other Precedents of E. 1, E. 2, E. 3. and other Records of other Kings Reigns, delivered our Opinions in these Words:

That the Dominion of the Sea belongeth to the King, and that he is sole Lord and Proprietor of the same; in which respect, his Excellent Majesty these Regalities and Royal Powers is to defend, against all Hostile Actions, Intrusions and Invasions, as well for the Good of his Subjects, as Strangers, importing and exporting their Commodities, and for Defence of the Kingdom; and for the better performing whereof, the Cinque-Ports have been required to prepare such a certain Number of Ships of divers Burdens, and Men of Arms, and at such times, at their own Charges from time to time, as the same Writs, and the present Occasion required: And for the Time and Place, and Residence of their Attendance, his Majesty was the sole Appointer and only Judge: and this was the constant Use in the Reigns of those Kings; and this was agreeable to the Common Law of Kingdoms.

And 15 Novembris 1634. before the next Summer, his Majesty finding the Danger to grow general, and conceiving that there was little reason that those Maritime parts should bear the whole Charge, for that the whole Realm was interested therein, afterwards he required our Opinions, viz. my Lord Chief Justice, my Lord Chief Baron, and my self.

June 1635. After Conference together, we delivered our Opinions; and we upon Consultation, conceiving the Reason of the Precedents before, and the Rule of the Law and Reason, requiring, that when the whole Kingdom was in Danger, the Defence that concerned the whole Kingdom, should be born by all the Subjects of the Kingdom. This was first Verbally delivered to his Majesty; and afterwards we put it in Writing under our Hands in these Words:

Whereas the Charge of Defending of the Sea had been imposed on the Cinque-Ports; so, where the whole Kingdom is in danger, the whole Charge ought to be maintained by all the Subjects of the Realm.

And amongst other Writs, this to the Sheriff of Buckingham, went forth at the time aforesaid; after which, his Majesty finding some Question made of the Legality of it, he called all his Judges, not singly; nor any one in a Corner; but because he would have every one of them truly informed, required them to Advise together, and every one of them by themselves to give his Opinion; according to which, we severally, and every man by himself, and all of us together, delivered our Opinions under our Hands, in this manner, viz.

That when the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in danger (of which your Majesty is the Sole Judge) your Majesty may by Writ, under your Great Seal of England, Command all the Subjects of this your Kingdom at their own Charge to provide and furnish such a Number of Ships, with Men, Munition and Victuals, and for such a time as your Majesty shall think fit for the Defence and Safeguard of the Kingdom from such Danger and Peril; and that by the Law your Majesty may compel the doing thereof, in case of Refusal.

In which (the Clause, His Majesty was the sole Judge) was only put in by Ten of us; my Brother Hutton having not seen nor weighed the Precedents, took time to Advise, and gave no Opinion till Conference between us; and my Brother Croke had the same reason, being not acquainted with those Writs; but yet subscribed his Opinion singly by himself, December 1635. viz.

That where the Good and Safety of the Kingdom is in danger, of which his Majesty is the sole Judge, his Majesty may Command all his Subjects, at their Charge, to provide and furnish such Ships at Sea with Men and Munition, as shall be necessary for the Defence thereof; and this I hold to be agreeable to Law and Reason.

Though I perceived nothing of this his Opinion in his Argument, yet he still holdeth it: Wherein I observe,

1. That the King is sole Judge of the Danger, and whether it be imminent.

2. Not only that the King may in such Danger Command his Subjects to defend the Kingdom in case of Necessity, but that the Charge of the Defence ought to be born by all the Realm in general; which Opinion was more independent than the rest; for that our Opinion before it, had relation to the Precedent of Maritime parts; but this was, That the Subject might be Charged absolutely: and this was delivered by him readily and cheerfully, without hesitation; he will not deny it: I speak not of this as of a thing whereby he ought to have been concluded; but that all the world should know, that his Majesties Regal and Legal Power go hand in hand together, and that his Princely Love and Affection to his Subjects is such, that he is willing to prevent all Mistakes: And I speak it also to this end, that when Judges singly deliver their Opinions to the King, not examining the Reasons

Anno 1637. Reasons that moved them unto it, we ought to see very good and pregnant reason to vary from that Opinion, though it be not binding.

This his Majesty required for his own private Satisfaction; and this I dare boldly say was so delivered by us, that no one Judge knew the Opinion of the rest.

When his Majesty found slackness in some of his Subjects, in contributing towards this Charge, and thinking that it proceeded rather from misunderstanding of the Law, than from want of Duty, as desirous of his Princely Love, to avoid all Mistakes, did upon the Second of February 1636. send a Letter to all us his Majesties Judges and Barons of the Exchequer, thereby requiring our several Opinions; about which we all conferred, and the Particulars wherein our Opinions was required, had been long considered of before, or else we were much to blame; for we had time enough to think upon it: And though our Answer was returned the 7th. of the same Month of February, yet we had it in our Considerations from June 1635. fifteen Months before the Answer returned; there was no Surprise, I will spare to name our Opinion then delivered; for it hath been repeated before; when we came to the Debate and Voting of this, we brake the Writ into several Parts and Questions. As,

First, When the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in Danger, whether it ought not to be defended at the Charge of the whole Kingdom? And agreed it was una voce, nullo contradicente, that it ought.

Secondly, Whether the Charge of the Defence might not be commanded by the King? Which was also agreed that it might.

Thirdly, Whether the King was not the sole Judge both of the Danger, and when and how it was to be prevented? wherein my Brothers (Hutton and Crooke) did agree it likewise, that he was sole Judge of the Danger: What their Opinions are now, and wherein they differ, I shall, with their good Leave examine, and their Reasons and Differences (though indeed of the Kings being the sole Judge.) In their Arguments, my Brother Crooke spake nothing of his Opinion therein, nor my Brother Hutton nothing against it; but we delivered not our Opinion upon the (By) nor was it so required by his Majesty. It was then also Declared by all of us, that we delivered not our Opinions, as binding Opinions, nor were they so required by his Majesty of all, which I dare boldly say, his Majesty was truly informed; and this was also soon after Published by his Command, and seconded by my Lord Keeper and Lord Privy Seal; the first of them using many Arguments and sound Collections, delivered it in Charge to his Majesties Judges, to deliver it in their Circuits; which might have satisfied any that respected not their own private Benefit; and Mr. Hampden, of all, I think hath the least Cause to complain, being Assessed but 20 s. A contemptible Sum, in respect of his Annual Revenues, to bring this Case to Judgment; yet his Majesties Clemency appears to be great herein, in that he would not debar any to question the Lawfulness of it; though he hath permitted Arcana Imperii, nay Imperium ipsum (I would to God I could not say, even too licentiously) to be debated at this Barr; yet I speak it not by way of Reprehension, but Admonition to the Council, who are to be commended, in that they have done their Duty faithfully for their Clients; yet I may say, such a Ravelling and Diving into the Kings Revenue, and secret Estate of Princes, and what succeeding Kings may be, or may do, it doth not well become these present times; it would not have been endured in the best preceding times.

It was not well done to doubt succeeding Posterity, that promise as much as any of their Predecessors have done before, for the Good of the Commonwealth.

It was not well to clogg the Cause with so many Precedents, impossible to be thoroughly observed; but our Example I hope shall be a Barr hereafter; and our Care shall be to prevent it, being a great hinderance to the Expedition of Justice, and Cause of great Expence to the Subjects long attendance about their Causes here, which may prove a greater Charge, than in providing Ships for Defence of the Realm.

I come now to the Case, as it stands in Judgment before us; wherein my Method shall be,

First, To examine what the Case is.

Secondly, I will give my Opinion of the Case, with the Reasons thereof.

Thirdly, I will Answer the Objections made against it.

Fourthly, I will speak to the Form and Quality of the Writ of 4 Augusti, the Certiorari, the Mittimus, and Scir. Fac. out of the Exchequer; and to all these with that Brevity I can: I will speak according to the weight of the Case, where variety of Opinions give just cause to ballance them; the Case must arise out of the Record, and must stand or fall upon that.

First, For the Cause it self; and therein,

1. I will shew what Danger there is, that is the Ground of the Charge.

2. What things there are to maintain it; as for other things they tend unto the destruction of the Case.

First, I am Opinion that the Danger of the whole Kingdom ought to be expressed clearly; for else the Ground-work faileth: for if no danger, no reason for the Charge. I am of opinion, that in the Writ 4 Aug. it ought to be expressed, and not in the Mittimus: Though as my Brother Jones observed, The Mittimus comes time enough to Mr. Hampden, to give him notice; yet he was not liable to the Charge, but by the Writ of 4 Augusti

1. It is Objected that the Danger is not clearly expressed; for it is not upon words of Certainty, but by way of Incertainty, Quod datum est nobis intelligi.

2. For the Causes of the Writ, that it hath not relation to the Danger of the Kingdom, but to defend the Sea-Coasts against Pyrates, &c. They are not worthy of a Royal Navy, as my Brother Crooke also observed.

But I hold, first, That the Danger is sufficiently expressed, Certum est sicut se res habet, Datum nobis est intelligi; a thing very ordinary with us, and in all former Writs ex Relatione, &c. quod vulgari opinio est, &c.

Although my Lord Chief Baron parallell'd this to the Case of Patents, ex certa scientia, which is nothing alike; for there, before the King pass away Land, he may be if informed he may do it; but I hold, as this Case is, the Danger will not permit it to be examined, whether there be just Cause of fear; for then it might receive ceive Delays, which are dangerous, and the Kingdom be lost while we are disputing.

And then for the Phrase it self, Datum est nobis intelligi; It is sufficient that the King knows there is a Danger; and therefore if it had been but only Intelligimus, none can deny but it had been sufficient. And what difference is there between Intelligimus, & datum est nobis intelligi? That sets forth the knowledge of the Danger, and this shews the Means whereby he does know it; ut datum est nobis intelligi: this goes further than Ex auditu Rumer est, &c. Therefore unless the King should go out of the Kingdom to see the Danger, can it be otherwise expressed?

Secondly, I hold that the Danger it self, with the Motives in the Writ, are sufficient also.

The Motives are great Depredations of the Subjects Goods and Lives; but it is not upon this Rest; for this hath relation to Pyrates leading divers Christians into Captivity: These are good Motives, and (as one of my Brothers said well) though these have Relation to Pyrates, yet Bellum Pirat. points at as much Terror as Hannibal ad portas.

I shall not much relie upon that, that the Enemies of Christendom and of this Nation did prepare, ad Mercatores nostros ulterius molestand. Nor ad Regnum gravandum, nisi citius remedium apponatur, &c. But this, Consideratis periculis quae undique his guerrinis temporibus imminetibus, ita quod nobis & subditis nostris defensionem Maris & Regni nostri omni festinatione qua poterimus convenit, &c. shews otherwise then for the Pirates, this Defence was requisite; therefore the next Clause is, Nos volentes defensionem Regni, tuitionem Maris, securitatem Subditorum nostrorum, &c. And therefore that salva conductione Navium & Merchandiarum, quae ad Regnum nostrum Angliae venerunt, & de eodem Regno ad partes externas transierunt, &c. take not away the former Words, or limit them.

As for the Clause in the Mittimus, I stand not upon it; nor that, Salus Regni & Populi nostri Angliae periclitabatur, &c.

3. Admit there had been no Preamble or Expressment of Danger, I hold the Commandment it self is sufficient setting forth of the Danger; which is, that the Ship be with other his Majesties Ships, and the Ships of other his Majesties Subjects, at Portsmouth, the first day of March next following. The Words of the Record be, Exinde cum Navibus nostris, & Navibus aliorum fidelium Subditorum nostrorum, pro tuitione Maris, & defensione nostrum & vestror. &c. And particularly to express the Danger, is not necessary: for the King, the sole Arbitrator both of Peace and War, best knows it: And it was the practice in former times, and so our Wisdom, for the King to express the Danger in particular, when Arms usually go before Heralds; nor is it the Use of Princes to complement, to tell the Enemy, that they will or intend to invade their Lands; and therefore I hold, though it might be more clear; yet satis est quod sufficit: I in my own Conscience am satisfied; the Danger is certain enough expressed in the Writ; and so I have done with the first Particular; The Danger: which was the Ground of this Writ. As to the Second Particular:

Secondly, What is alledged to be for the preventing of that Danger, my Brother Hutton and my Brother Crooke would have it to be raising of Money, by reason of the Clause in the Writ; for the Distribution of the Surplusage: But the Record is ad assidendum omnes homines, & ad contri- buendum Navem, vel partem, Naves non habentes, &c. Car. 13. which shews that it cannot be for Money; neither is there any Colour of Money; for it is to find a Ship; and if they have not of their own, they must build, or buy one with their Money: But there is a great deal of difference between payment of Money and finding of a Ship: As if my Brother Crooke be required to find a Light Horse, and Arms, he must buy one, or hire with his Money, if he have none; but yet the Charge is not only for Money, but that he find a Light Horse.

Obj. But my Brother Crooke's Objection is, If any Surplusage remain, it shall be divided; and so the Sheriff is to detain no part of it, but employ it for the publick Good, and not convert it to his own proper Benefit.

Ans. To this I Answer, That this shews the Equality of the Charge, which is fittest to be by payment of Money.

Obj. My Brother Crooke hath further Objected, That an In-land County cannot build a Ship: a great Trouble for the County of Buckingham, so far from the Sea, to build a Ship.

Ans. To this I Answer, That those of Buckinghamshire may hire a Ship, if they may not build one; and the Words are but (Parare) not for the Building, but Preparing a Ship. And it was not meant that they should build it there; but that they should contribute to the Building of a Ship in a most fit and convenient place.

Now in my Opinion, the King Knowing and Declaring the whole Kingdom to be in danger, and necessarily requiring his Subjects to defend, and provide for this Danger at Sea, the King may thereupon command all his Subjects to prepare Ships to joyn with his Navy Royal against the Enemy of the whole Realm, to defend the whole Realm; and it is clear in the Case, and was the Meaning of us all, that the King must joyn in the Charge; it being far from us to excuse the King his Rateable Part.

My Reasons that the King may thus Charge his Subjects to joyn with him in the Defence.

First, The Defence of the Kingdom must be at the Charge of the whole Kingdom in general.

Secondly, The Power of laying this Charge is by the Policy and Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom solely invested in the King.

Thirdly, The Law that hath given this Power to the King to do these things, hath given him Means to put these things in Execution.

In all these I shall ground my self upon Authorities in Law and Precedents in all Ages.

First, That the defence of the Kingdom must be at the charge of all the Kingdom, I shall prove from the Law of Nature, which is, that every thing in Nature ought to defend it self.

Secondly, From the Rule of Reason; for quod omni tangit ab omnibus supportari debet.

Thirdly, From the true use of all that we enjoy, which must be abused, if not employed to and for the good also of those that come after us, and necessary it is for our Posterity to have all sure and safe; a good Patient will spare some blood to preserve his own health, and a good Husband

Anno 1637. Husband will spare some piece of his best ground for Ditches and Fences to preserve the rest; and he is an ill Husband that finds not safety in what he doth.

Fourthly, From the Law of Property; as every one hath a particular property in his own goods, so every one hath a property in general in anothers goods for the common good; for the Commonwealth hath a property in every Subjects goods, not only in time of War, but also in time of necessity in Peace; therefore if one take away my goods without my consent, I have my Action, and recover Damages. Doctor and Student says both a Trespass of Lands and Goods is punishable by Indictment and Trespass at the Kings Suit, as well as the Subjects; and this is by reason of the Publick Interest that the King hath in every Subjects goods for the common good. Now the Rule and Maxim before, so clearly and fully put and agreed by all, is, that in case of necessity that is apparent, the Subject ought to defend the Kingdom; and my Brother Crooke agreed, in case of danger, so it be imminent, all men are bound in their Persons and Estates to defend the Land and the Kingdom; and he says they must, then exponere se & sua, I think he means a man that takes and goes a Journey may carry his money with him, se & sua, id est, omnia bona & Catalla sua; or else means, the King cannot command their money without their consent; of which I will speak in its proper place.

2. I come now to the second part of my Head gerall, which is the power of laying this Charge.

By the Fundamental Laws and Policy of this Kingdom, the Soyl, Interest, and Property of the Sea, &c. is in the King. I will not speak of the Original of this Monarchy; this is fit rather for Civilians, Historians, or the Pen of a Divine, than a Judge at Westminster Hall; nor will I speak of the division of Monarchies, the Poets say, that Saturn was the first Founder of Kingdoms; only this I will say, that for the excellency of the Government of this Kingdom, through Gods blessing, that none are more happy than we: Look and see in other Nations, and tell me if you can find out any place where they can, and do enjoy those mercies of Peace and plenty which we do; so as we may justly say, O Fortunatissimum, bona si sua norunt Britanni: Nor will I perplex myself with the Original of this Nation and Monarchy, some Stories are fabulous, and others doubtful; not any so clear, as to set it forth certainly, though they speak truly what is sufficient for us to know; nor is he the poorest man, qui non potest numerare Pecus, nor be one of the worst Gentlemen, that cannot shew the Original of his Pedigree; the Excellency of his Monarchy is sufficient that it is a Monarchy; and that is most true which Fortescue saith of the Excellency of our Laws: I agree Fortescue was a Lord Chief Justice in H. 6. time, but not Chancellor of England. Sea and Land make one Kingdom, and the King is Sponsus Regni: Magdalen Colledge Case, Sir John Davies Reports, Stat. 24 H. 8. 1 Eliz. & 1 Jac. the soyl of the Sea belongs to the King, who is Lord and sole Proprietor of them; and good reason why it should, as is well maintained by Mr. Selden, that worthy and learned Author; and I hope shall be by his Majesty, and maintained with the Sovereignty of the Sea, without whose Navy this Authority can do little good.

The King holds this Diadem of God only, all others hold their Lands of him, and he of none but of God: But this is but to light a Candle for others; from hence only I will observe, that none other can share with him in his absolute power.

A Parliament is an Honourable Court, and I confess it an excellent means of charging the Subject, and defending the Kingdom; but yet it is not the only means.

An Honour the last Parliament was pleased to bestow on me, which never any shall with more respect remember than my self, whom they were pleased to chuse for their Speaker.

And as my Brother Hutton said, I conceive it a fit way to charge the Subjects, and I wish that some for their private humour had not sowed the Tares of discontent in that Field of the Commonwealth; then might we have expected and found good fruit; but now the best way to redeem this lost Priviledge (for which we may give those thanks only) is to give all opportune appearance of obedience and dutiffulness unto his Majesties Command.

The two Houses of Parliament, without the King, cannot make a Law, nor without his Royal Consent declare it; he is not bound to call it but when he pleaseth, nor to continue it but at his pleasure: Certainly there was a King before a Parliament; for how could there else be an Assembly of the King, Lords, and Commons? and then what Sovereignty was there in the Kingdom but this? His power then was limited by the positive Law; then it cannot be denied, but Originally the King had the Sovereignty of the whole Kingdom both by Sea and Land, who hath a power of charging the whole Kingdom.

Thirdly, The Law that hath given that power, hath given means to the King by this Authority to put it in execution. It is a very true Rule, the Law commands nothing to be done, but it permits the ways and means how it may be done, else the Law should be imperfect, lame, and unjust: Therefore the Law that hath given the Interest and Sovereignty of defending and governing the Kingdom to the King, doth also give the King power to charge his Subjects for the necessary defence and good thereof.

And as the King is bound to defend, so the Subjects are bound to obey, and to come out of their own Counties, if occasion be, and to provide Horse and Arms in Forreign Wars; and such as are compellable now to find Guns instead of Bows and Arrows; so Munition, as Powder and Shot, &c. Then if the Sea and Land be but one entire Kingdom, and the King Lord of both, the Subject is bound as well for the defence of the Sea, as of the Land; and then all are bound to provide Ships, Men, Victuals, and necessaries for that defence; and for us Islanders, it is most necessary to defend our selves at Sea: Therefore it was the greatest Argument in 88. whether it was best to fight with the Royal and Invincible Navy or Armado of Spain at Sea, or suffer them to Land; and it was resolved clearly, that it was better to fight with them at Sea, though we lost the Battel, and our Ships then to suffer them to Land.

Obj. But then there was Hannibal ad Portas.

Ans. To this I shall answer afterwards, that here the Maritime Towns shall not help the Inland, but each of them bear their own charge, and defend themselves: But of this I shall speak hereafter; yet undoubtedly 'tis reasonable, that both both should joyn to defend the Kingdom, in case of necessity.

Anno 1637. Now I shall endeavour clearly to prove this by Authority in Law, and Precedents in all Ages. And first, it is a great Authority in Law, that there is no expresse Authority against it, though there have been some Books cited by my Brother Hutton, and my Brother Crooke, (which I shall answer in their due place, amongst other Objections) yet there is not one Authority or Opinion, much less resolution or judgment in necessary time of danger, that says the King may not charge the Subjects for the defence of the Kingdom.

Secondly, All these Authorities that prove the King is trusted with the defence of the Kingdom, and in divers Cases gives him Aids, Taxes, Subsidies, &c. prove that the Subject is bound in case of danger and necessity to pay them to the King for defence of the Kingdom.

Thirdly, All the Authorities of Murage, Pontage, Saltpeter, &c. shew, that for the good of the Publick the King is interested in the Estates of the Subjects, and may charge them; much more (if for the well-being then) where the being it self of the Commonwealth is at stake, and in danger.

Fourthly, The Authorities of commanding the Person of the Subject to come out of their own Counties proves it; the power of commanding the Person of the Subject into foreign parts is in the King, much more the Estates of men should be at his Command, in Case of necessary defence of the Kingdom.

Fifthly, All the Commissions of arraying men in E. 1. time, E. 3. E. 4. H. 7. and H. 8. time, &c. They are all grounded upon the same reason, and went out for the necessary defence of the Kingdom; these Writs are not to command the person, but a Ship only, juxta facultates suas, which are answerable in reason to the Ancient Precedents.

From Authorities I come to Precedents; Precedents though they be not Judgments, yet they shew the practice of the Law; and what better Book have we in the Law, than the Book of Precedents? or what is there of more Authority than that? for we have not the twelve Tables for our Common Law.

The Common Law is but the common usage of the Land; and therefore the Precedents alledged by the Kings Council are of good Authority to prove the Law in this Case; wherein I shall not name the particulars, they have been well remembered by Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Solicitor, but I will mention the substance of them.

The first Precedent was, before the Conquest, in the times of Edgar, Alfred, Ethelred, &c. the use was to defend the Kingdom at the charge of the whole Kingdom, by the Edict of the King.

A strong inference from the Precedent of the grant to the Clergy and Church of divers Privileges, with these Exceptions of Expediit Pontium, &c. in the time of Edgar, Alfred, and Ethelred, &c.

The Council of Enoch in Edgars time, about 606. 621. mentioned by the learned Antiquary Sir Henry Spelman, fo. 510. and after those follows, Ha sunt Constitutiones, &c. fo. 523. In which are excellent things good for Church and Commonwealth, Cap. 23. Navales expeditiones, if it be no Act of Parliament, yet nothing is more like an Act of Parliament: Take the phrase of those times, and certainly it was either an Act of Parliament, or a proof of the Kings power, that without Parliament he might charge the Subject for the defence of the Kingdom, in case of danger; and the word Expedition is used for War, and sometimes for an Army, as Cassiodorus giving the reason of the name says: In the third place, it shews the practice of the Kings of England to charge their Subjects for the defence of the Kingdom, in case of danger.

Now if this charge of Danegelt be not taken away by any of the Acts of Parliament, it remains still, says my Brother Hutton, and so I think it doth, or something in lieu of it, for it is not taken away by the Act of Parliament.

1. In these Precedents, observe first, that they are all upon the same common reason that this is.

Secondly, These Writs are not limited for their number or time; so that they prove the power was in the King to charge his Subjects.

Thirdly, In these Precedents, some were to Inland Counties, as Huntington, Bedford, Buckingham, Leicester, Oxford, Berks, &c. And though they went not generally to all Counties at one time, yet they went to them as occasion was; and if the danger had required, the King might, if he had pleased, have sent to all, as well as to some.

But because there never was any time when all the Munition in the Kingdom was drawn at one time to one place, may it not therefore be done? The commanding sometimes of one, sometimes of another, is an Argument they may all be commanded, as occasion requires.

I do not build my Opinion upon confused Notions, but on matters digested, on Precedents of weight, the chiefest in respect of time, and after the making of Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. 13 H. 3. m. 48. 18 H. 3. m. 7. & 13 E. 3. m. 77. 23 E. 3. m. 4. 28 E. 1. m. 23. and many other in E. 1. time; there is proving Contribution towards the maintenance of the Sea Coasts from Inlands, as 25 E. 1. m. 13. Abbot of Robertsbridge Case is a full Precedent, notwithstanding all that hath been said against it: So 9 E. 2. pars 1. 20 E. 2. m. 7. 2 E. 3. Scotch Roll. 7 E. 3. m. 9. 10 E. 3. n. 16, 17. 11 E. 3. 12 E. 3. 14, 15, 16. 18 E. 3. 46 E. 3. m. 34. 25 E. 3. Rot. Franc. m. 9. 29 E. 3. 1 R. 2. 1 H. 4. and yet H. 4. had as much reason to please the people as any King of England: So in H. 5. though busied in the glorious Conquest, or rather recovery of France, God forbid we should see those times: So in Ed. 4. H. 6. H. 7. H. 8. by way of Offensive War, Writs and Commissions to their Subjects to contribute towards it; so in Queen Elizabeths time, Commissions towards the maintenance of the Kingdom, 11 Eliz. 41 Eliz. Commission to the Earl of Nottingham, 88. Letters from the Lords of the Council, which Letters had the Queens Writ; but my Brother Crooke answered all these with this Rule of Law, Judicandum est legibus non Exemplis: To this I answer him, that Examples and Precedents are good Law; they are Authorities out of the Law, and declare what the Law is, and what of more certainty digest of Writs; these are Instar Oracula Legis.

Precedents drawn up by Clerks sometimes, though they pass sub silentio, yet are they good Authorities in the Law.

The Abbot of Robertsbridge Case is a Precedent of great Authority.

Ob. No Precedents goes to Inland Counties.

Ans. I answer, in truth the Precedents are quite Anno 1637. quite otherways for ordinary defence, they go to Maritime Coasts only, but where the danger is general to Inland Counties, and after another manner: For this I refer you to my Brother Westons Argument, these could not be so frequent; for first this danger was but seldome.

Secondly, Because we had then double hostility, one from France by Sea, and another by Land from Scotland; examine the Precedents therefore.

Ob. Third Objection that my Brother Crooke made is, that we are compellable by our Persons and Arms, but not with any sum of money.

Ans. I answer with my Brother Jones, Bona Corporis are above Bona Fortuna: But this power of liberties of the persons of his Subjects; he agrees is in the King; then, I say, more reason that their Estates should be in his power, in this Case of necessary defence.

Secondly, The Precedents warrant the quite contrary, and Wages have been paid to Souldiers by the Subject in this Case.

The third thing that I will observe in this Case is, the answering of all those Objections which have been made against it, which were three.

1. That Writ was against the Common Law.
2. That it was against the Statute Law.
3. Many inconveniences grow thereby.

Ob. First, It is against the Common Law, because it is without Precedent; this is the first of this kind since the Conquest, and where there is no Precedent, the Law will not bear it, Littleton fo. 32. My Lord Cooks Commentaries upon it, puts divers Cases to the same purpose.

Sol. I answer, there are Precedents for it, and the Law is so, that the King may charge his Subjects towards the defence of the Kingdom in this Case.

Ob. Second Objection is, that it is against the freedom of the Subject, that hath a true property in his Goods, which cannot be taken away without his actual or implied consent, Lambert fo. 294. Fortescue Magna Charta 17 K. John, Matth. Paris fo. 242. Fortescue 9. Chap. 13. &c. 13 H. 4. Chamberlain of Londons Case, Regist. fo. 127. Fitz. N. B. &c.

Ans. I answer, that that Authority of Lambert, rehearsing the Laws of the Conquerour, is voluntus & Concedimus ut omnes liberi homines totius Monarchia Regni nostri habeant & teneant terras suas et possessiones suas bene et in pace liberas ab omni exactione injusta et ab omni Tallagio, ita quod nihil exigatur vel capiatur nisi per Commune Concilium, &c. It cannot be construed that they should not be charged, but that they should be free from all unjust Taxes, the King is not concluded by the subsequent words, Omne Tallagium; this cannot be so general, but the King may impose just Charges towards the necessary defence of the whole Kingdom; for this is meant, as plainly by the word Tallage, it appears, Tallagium is derived from a French word, and is indeed a cutting word, and therefore injusta exactio, which shews that for the most part it is taken in the worst sense; and as my Brother Crooke said it, and the manner of expounding it must be from the Law.

Secondly, my Brother Crooke quite left out these words following; (that declare and expound the former) Videlicet statuimus et firmiter precipimus, ut omnes liberi homines totius Regni predicti sint fratres Conjurati ad Monarchiam nostram et ad Regnum nostrum pro viribus suis et facultatibus contra Inimicos pro posse suo defendendum et viriliter

servandum, &c. whereby it is apparent, first that the Kingdom is to be defended by the whole Kingdom, pro facultatibus with their goods, as well as viribus by their persons. Car. 13.

Secondly, It comes after the Chapter of Tenures and Services, by which they are bound to defend, Terras et honores suos, &c. which shews that he meant not to free any from the general charge of defending of the Kingdom, in case of necessity.

Ob. This Objection is the Charter of King John, Nullum Tallagium imponatur nisi per Commune Concilium.

Ans. I answer, the words are concerning the defence of his own person, and not the King; and therefore it is excepted, nisi ad redimend. Corpus nostrum, and in the Original Act these words are left out.

Scutage, Murage, and other Aids there mentioned, shew that only those were meant that were of private benefit, were not to be imposed by the King upon his Subjects without Parliament, but not to bar himself for the publick good.

Ob. The fourth Authority was Fortescue, which was most insisted upon by my Brother Crooke.

Before I come to the words themselves, note first the time when he wrote that Book; it was after all the Acts of Parliament that took away the Regal Power, yet it mentioneth not them; so as it must needs relate to the Common Law, it was writ when the Civil Wars were between the two Houses, and himself in Exile, no time was it then to displease the people.

Secondly, It shews the differences between Kingdoms, when a Monarch rules that challengeth all power over his Subjects, and between a Monarch that governs according to positive Laws.

The words that seem to be against this Charge are, 9 Cap. 26. Rex Anglia politice imperans genti sue, nec Legem ipse sine subditorum assensu mutare poterit, nec subiectum populum renitentem onerare impositionibus peregrinis, cap. 13. fo. 32. Rex Caput Corporis politici mutare non potest leges corporis illius, nec ejusdem populi substantias proprias subtrahere reclamantibus eis aut invitis, et cap. 36. fol. 84. which my Brother Crooke says is the express Authority: In hoc individuo; the words are, Rex Regno Anglia ibidem per se aut Ministros Tallagia, subsidia aut quavis onera alia imponit ligeis suis; aut leges eorum mutat, vel novas condidit sine Concessione vel Assensu totius Regni sui in Parlamento suo expresso, &c.

Ans. From them all, I take the true meaning of him to be; and I hold, first that the Kingdom ought to be governed by the positive Laws of the Land, and that the King cannot change nor make new Laws without a Parliament.

Secondly, The Subject hath an absolute property in his Goods, Possessions, and Estate, nor to his own use the King cannot take them.

Thirdly, Nor for his own use the King cannot lay any Burthen, Tallage, Tax, or Imposition, without the Subjects consent in Parliament.

Fourthly, For the benefit of Trades, the King may lay sitting Impositions, and may command that which is for necessary defence of the Kingdom, which is no Command of charge, but commanding of imploying.

Fifthly, I answer therefore to the great Objection, that Liberty of the Subject is lost, and the Property is drowned which they have in their Estates.

First,

First, I say all private Property must give way to the Publick; and therefore a trespass to private men, as punished by Indictment, because it is an offence of the Publick Weal; and though every man hath a property in his Goods, yet he must not use them to the detriment of the Common-Wealth; a man may give his Grass or Corn when it grows away, or when it is in his Barn; but if he will cut it unusefully, or burn or destroy his Corn, or if he throw his Goods into the Sea that it may perish, these are Crimes punishable by the Common Law; so transporting of Commodities against the Publick Good; therefore the direction of those Statutes for the restraint hereof are from the Common Law, and the reason of this is, because the Publick Property must take place; and if in petty business it may be, then much more in time of publick, and great necessity and danger; and it is rather an averment of the Subjects Property, that in case of necessity only they may be taken away, than contrary to it.

My Brother Hutton, and my Brother Crooke agree, that all are bound in case of necessity, Exponere se et sua totis viribus, to defend the Kingdom, and may he not command a part with more reason than all?

Ob. In the next place I shall remove a scandal that hath been put upon the King, how that his Majesty hath meant to make a private personal profit by it.

Ans. What he hath done is well known, and I dare confidently say, all hath been spent without any account to himself, and that his Majesty hath been at great charge besides towards the same purpose: And I heard it from his own Royal Mouth, he spake it to me and my Lord Bramston, that can testify as much, that he said it never entered into his heart to make such use of it; and therefore said he was bound in Conscience to convert it to that use it was received for, and none other; and that he would sooner eat the Money, than convert it to his own private use: Therefore he that thinks the King makes a Revenue of it, doth highly slander his Majesty: But let Kings be as David was, a Man after Gods own Heart, yet they will not want a Shimei to rail on them.

Ob. But though, blessed be God, his Majesty is so gracious and loving to his Subjects, and so just, that we need not fear that he will charge them but upon urgent necessity, yet we know not what succeeding Ages may do.

Ans. It is not well to blast succeeding Ages, and if they should hereafter charge unreasonably without cause, yet this Judgment warrants no such thing. Again, it is no Argument to condemn the true use, because it may be abused: And again, the Law implies as great trust in the King as this, the King may pardon all Offences, but if he should, then none could be safe; the King may make Peace and War at his pleasure; but yet should he make Peace, when Peace would ruin us, or War, when War would undo us, it would be worse than this; therefore it cannot be suspected that the King would do any thing against Law, and the publick good of the Kingdom: Therefore the Law says the King can do no wrong, for he is Sponsus Regni, as in Magdalen Colledge Case.

Ob. Clarke Case, the Chamberlain of Londons Case, &c.

Ans. These Cases are nothing against this, but rather for it.

Ob. The Record of 14 R. 2. R. 60. Livers Case in the Kings Bench, in an Action of Trespass, for taking away his goods without his consent, had Judgment to recover in Durham; but the Case was this, one Lever of the Town of Durham brought his Action against another, for entering into his House, and taking away his Goods, and 60 l. of Money; the Defendant pleaded not guilty, and the Jury found upon a Special Verdict, that the Defendant took away his Money but upon this occasion; the Scots had invaded the Realm, and were in Durham, and would not be gone without a certain sum of Money; whereupon the Inhabitants assembled, and amongst the rest the Plaintiff was one, and they made an Order to abide the Ordinance of the greater part, which was to give the Scots the Money desired; and because the Money was to be paid present down, therefore they made another Order to search in all mens houses, and to take away what Money they found, according to which the Defendant searched the Plaintiffs house, and took away 60 l. and because it was without consent, the Plaintiff had Judgment to recover in Durham; but upon Special Verdict it was reversed in the Kings Bench, because with his consent: Indeed the reasons were, because he had sufficient remedy against the Commonalty.
2. He did it as a servant.

Ans. But I answer first, that though the Ordinance was good by consent, yet it followed not that it was void without consent; the question is there only, whether good by consent?

Secondly, It follows not, but that all men without consent, are bound to contribute towards general charge for necessary defence.

Ob. Another Objection made by my Brother Crooke was, 2 R. 2. pars 1. where all the Lords and Sages met together after Parliament, and it was agreed by the Lords, that they could not charge without Parliament: This was a Declaration of the Law in Parliament, and an Act of Parliament, &c.

Ans. I answer, that it was no Act, but a Declaration in Parliament of the Law; and indeed no Declaration, but a Relation by the Chancellor.

Secondly, If it had been a Declaration, yet it had not been binding without the King.

Thirdly, It is no Precedent of a good Book, it was when the King was young, and the Parliament had the Regency; Councillors, Treasurers, and all his Officers about his person were chose by Parliament, and therefore no wonder they endeavoured to please the Parliament.

Fourthly, It is a Precedent that they (id est) the Lords could not charge the Commons by themselves.

Again, the Case was not for the defence of the Kingdom, but Wars in France, Scotland, and Ireland; these were the many Wars.

Though Subjects may be charged for necessary defence of the Kingdom, yet if Forreign Wars be together with them, it is otherwise; and therefore in the Parliament before they said, such charge belongs not unto them, and therefore they hold they ought not to bear it; and so that Rule of Gascoigne, 24 H. 4. fo. 4. that no man shall be charged without Parliament where Bullwarks were built, &c. it proves not, though it implies, that if it had concerned the Kingdom it had been otherwise.

Ob. The next Objection was, the great inconvenience that would hereupon ensue; if such a g g g g 2 Charge

Anno 1637. Charge may be, then none knows what his Charge will be, for the King may command it as often as he pleases; an example hereof they put of Danegelt, that in eleven years grew from 12000 l. to 48000 l. therefore the Law hath provided against that incertainty, and limited it to a Parliament.

Ans. I answer to this, that if danger encrease again, the King may command all persons when necessity, and as often as he pleases he may do it; is not this as great an inconvenience as in this Case, and yet that abates not the Writ? My Brother Crooke shewed how Subsidies increased, and yet no inconvenience in that he conceived; and indeed, this shews the provision of charge must be according to the danger.

Secondly, No abuse of any thing must take away the true use thereof.

Thirdly, We cannot suspect that there will be such abuse, Ubi confidet Deus et Lex, et nos etiam confidemus; God and the Law hath trusted his Majesty, and we should not distrust him; in time of imminent danger, tempore Belli, any thing, and by any man may be done, Murder cannot be punished; yet says my Brother Crooke, the King cannot charge his Subjects in no case without Parliament, no not when the Kingdom is invaded actually by the Enemy; but truly, I think, as he was the first, so I think he will be the last of that Opinion, especially having delivered that the King is sole Judge of the danger before, as indeed he is; and that the King is sole Judge of the danger, not any have denied it, and therefore else it should be no danger; but when every one should say, you shall judge that the Kingdom is in danger.

Secondly, There hath and may be as great danger when the Enemy is not discerned, as when in Arms, and on the Land.

In time of War, when the course of Law is stopped, when Judges have no power or place, when the Courts of Justice may send out no Process, in this case the King may charge his Subjects; you grant, mark what you grant, when there is such a confusion as no Law, then the King may do it, when there is no Law to do it; duo uno absurdo infinita sequuntur.

2. There may be time of War in one part of the Kingdom, and the Courts of Justice may sit, as in 14. H. 3. R. 2. H. 7. time, War was in some parts of the Land, yet the Judges sat at Westminster-Hall.

1. Now whether a danger be to all the Kingdom, or to a part, they are alike perillous, and all ought to be charged.

2. The King may charge the Subjects for the defence of the Land; now the Land and the Sea makes but one entire Kingdom, and there is but one Lord of both, and the King bound to defend both.

3. Expectancy of danger I hold is sufficient ground for the King to charge his Subjects; for if we stay till the danger come, it will then be too late it may be.

4. And his averment of the danger is not traversable, it must be binding, when he perceives, and says there is a danger; as in 88 the Enemy had been upon us, if it had not been foreseen and provided for before it came: But I will not determine the danger now; do we not see our Potent Neighbours, and our Great Enemies heretofore, were they not prepared for War? and was there not another Navy floated upon the Sea? and was not the Dominion of the Sea threatned to be taken away? as long as this danger remains, I shall bless God for such a King as will provide for the defence of the Kingdom timely, and rejoyce to see such a Navy as other Nations must vail to, and we are not in case without it, and should loose our glory besides.

Ob. The next Objection of my Brother Crooke was, that there is a means provided by Parliament which will not withhold Aid for the defence of the Kingdom, and it were a sin to deny it in case of necessity.

And in E. 1. time, E. 2. et 4 E. 3. a Parliament was to be held every year for the defence of the Kingdom, Et propter ardua Regni.

Ans. I answer, that might well be; but then in the time of E. 1. E. 2. and E. 3. there was Pleas in Parliament, but those are now laid aside, and that the Subjects ought to give the King Subsidies, I will not say, that inferring that they will not do it, nor am I apt to believe it; but I hold Parliaments are the excellent means for the defence of the Kingdom, and yet they are not the only means, for then the Parliament and not the King should be the sole Judge, and have the defence of the Realm, or else it should give the King a charge of defence without power and means.

The Objection of the Kings Revenues, Tenures and Prerogative, they have been unjustly remembered, they have been fully answered.

The Statute of Tunnage and Poundage given to the King, for and towards the defence of the Seas, and the other Acts of Parliament that restrain the Kings power, so that now he cannot charge the Subject without his consent in Parliament, I shall answer in the next place; and before I come to the particular Acts, I will shew you what in my Opinion they may do.

Acts of Parliament may take away Flowers and Ornaments of the Crown, but not the Crown it self; they cannot bar a Succession, nor can they be Attainted by them, and Acts that bar them of possession are void.

Secondly, No Act of Parliament can bar a King of his Regality, as that no Lands should hold of him, or bar him of the Allegiance of his Subjects, or the Relative on his part, as trust and power to defend his people; therefore Acts of Parliament to take away his Royal Power in the defence of his Kingdoms are void (as my Lord Chief Baron said) they are void, Acts of Parliament to bind the King not to command the Subjects, their persons and goods, and I say their money too, for no Acts of Parliament makes any difference: Now to the particular Statutes objected.

First, 25 E. 1. cap. 5. Confirmatio Chartar. The words are these, Aids or Taxes granted to the King shall not be taken for a Custom or Precedent: And cap. 6. Moreover, we have granted for us and our Heirs, that for no business from henceforth we shall take such manner of Aids, Taxes, nor Prizes, due and accustomed; and cap. 7. a Release of Toll upon every Sack of Wooll, and grant that we will not take such things without their common assent and good will, saving to us and our Heirs the Customs granted by the Commons aforesaid.

As to the other Statutes de Tallagio non concedendo, cap. 1. Nullum Tallagium imponetur nisi per commune Concilium Regni nostri, cap. 2, 3, 4, 5. &c.

First, These words must have relation to the Aids before, and there be divers Aids, as some by by Talliage, some by way of Prize upon Goods, and Ransom of his Majesties Person, &c. the King thereupon makes this Grant, which hath relation to such Aids as were granted voluntarily. Secondly, Ancient Aids are there reserved, as redeeming the Kings Body, pur faire fitz Chevalire, & pur Marrier son file Eigne; and to all other Ancient Aids which are to be understood with an ad redimendum Corpus, &c.

And to the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo, in some Books it is not in print, but mentioned in Magna Charta, Rastel, and Petition of Right, 3 Car. 1628. to be in 24. or 25. E. 1. And therefore I answer, first it is not in the Parliament Roll, and there is variance about it; and therefore it is but an abstract, and no substantial Statute.

But since it hath passed for a Statute, and it's possible it may be so, I agree with all the rest of my Brothers, that it is a Statute; and then I answer first, that nullum Tallagium imponetur, &c. that is, no unlawful Talliage shall be imposed upon the Subject without his consent, or else Aid pur faire fitz Chevalire et pur Marrier eigne file should not have been excepted.

Secondly, No Aid shall be imposed but by the Contribution of the King and people, and here the King is taxed as well as they.

Thirdly, An Act of Parliament can by no means take it away, much less by those general words.

Ob. In the 14 E. 3. cap. 1. No man from henceforth shall be chargeable, but by common consent in Parliament.

Ans. That though it be but Temporary in some parts, yet it is binding only secundum subject. materiam; and the words are general, as in the other Statute de Tallagio, besides the practice in that Kings time and after, best interpret it.

Ob. 25 E. 3. cap. 8. No finding of Men at Arms, unless by consent, much less finding of Ships.

Ans. This takes not away any former Law; and therefore the Precedents following 4 H. 4. shew, that it reacheth not to this Case.

Ob. 2 H. 4. m. 2. Which is absolute in the point, saith my Brother Crooke, where a Commission went forth for the defence of the Sea, whereof complaint was made in Parliament, with desire that it might be repealed, and it was so.

I am of the contrary Opinion, for the Petition was that it might be released, and the Answer was but this, that it should, but the King would treat with his Council about it; and it was but a Repeal of his Commission then only.

Ob. 1 R. 3. cap. 2. Where the King grants that he would not hereafter charge them by Benevolence, or any such Charge, but that they should be dampned by the Law by no such Charge or Imposition; (id est) by no such Charge of Money.

Ans. That Statute is only against Benevolences, and made by a King that had reason, as we all know, to please the people for his own ends.

Ob. The Statute of Tunnage and Poundage granted for the defence of the Sea, the words are, that no Talliage or Aid shall be without Act of Parliament: Secondly, that the King hath means to defend the Realm, with a Protestation not to draw it into example, 4 H. 4. 13 H. 4. Parl. Roll. n. 10.

Ans. I will not argue whether Tunnage and Poundage was before this Act of Parliament, nor that time out of mind they were granted to the King; but my Answer is, that they are only for the ordinary defence of the Sea; and the Protestation of 4 H. 4. is a Protestation of the Commons only, and this Charge is not taken away thereby, and Tunnage and Poundage is for and towards the defence of the Sea; so all the Acts are, and so I agree, but for extraordinaries, and but solely, in case of danger of the whole Kingdom, that they should not be granted, cannot be collected out of these grants.

Ob. The seventh Objection is the Petition of Right, 3 Car. That no Charge shall be imposed upon the Subject, but by Parliament.

Ans. I was then Speaker of the Lower House, and I have reason to remember what then was made; and I say first, that there is no mention of this Case; secondly, there was no new thing granted, but only the Ancient Liberties confirmed, taking notice of the Protestation of the Commons not to bind the King from his Ancient Right.

Thirdly, Look upon the Prayer what is desired, and the main scope was; first, generally against Loan, and this could not be included in these words; secondly, imprisonment without shewing Cause; thirdly, Billeting of Souldiers; fourthly, Marriners lying within the Land.

I have now done with my third general Head, I come to the fourth and last, touching the form and legality of the Writ.

First, For the legality of the Writ, and the Objections touching the necessity, I have answered before; the main Objection is to the Body of the Writ.

First, The Command to charge the Sheriff to levy and assess Money according to his discretion, which is not legal, for that the Sheriff should make it per Sacramentum by the Oath of a Jury, as in the Writs of Partition, distribution pro rata, &c.

Ob. The Assessment of the Sheriff is not warranted by the Precedents, they do it not upon their knowledge, but presumption of mens Estates; and from thence they speak against the too vast power given to the Sheriff to inhan-
Per Ch. Baron, & Crooke.

Secondly, The inconvenience is great hereby; for there is by this means a great inequality in the Assessment.

Ans. I answer first to the Assessment per Sacramentum, no reason why it should be here, for it is not done in the Commissions to levy Subsidies, much less should it be done here for a matter of great hast; and besides the Sheriff is trusted with more, for he hath the trust of the whole County, and takes an Oath to execute his Office justly, whereof this is one part.

As to that they say there is no Precedent for it; First, I say, That there is no Precedent that it hath been done by Jury, but always by the Sheriff, or such whom the King was pleased to trust; and since one must be trusted, none more fit than he.

Secondly, By example we see he speeds all, and is most ready for it.

Thirdly, I say, the Writ leads not the Assessment, it commands the Ship to be provided; so if that be done there is no necessity of Assessment: And if the Towns and Counties say they will

Car. 1.
Anno 1637. Obj. 1 E. 3. m. 14. None compelled to go out of their County without Wages paid. 18 E. 3. m. 6. 7. That none should go out of their Counties; and not only those that had Offices and Patents to serve the King, but all with this proviso, that the King should pay them their Wages.

Ans. 1 E. 3. It is clear, and hath the Exception in case of Necessity, and to be done as in times past.

18 E. 3. It is expressed in the Act when they go to the Kings Wars out of the Kingdom: So 19 H. 7. &c. These are all but declarative to the Common Law, Corbets Case; the reason is, because the Ligance of the Subject is not natural but local.

But that the King shall give Wages within his Kingdom, there is no Act of Parliament for it: Now it was resolved in the Exchequer, that the Sea and Land made but one entire Kingdom, and so no going out of the Kingdom here; and consequently the payment of the Souldiers wages within the Kingdom is not against Law.

Obj. The last Objection is, That the Writ is illegal, because contrary to Magna Charta, Nullus liber homo imprisonetur.

Ans. As touching the Objection of the Nobility, that they are privileged from Imprisonment, it might well have been spared, and I know not wherefore it was spoken of, unless to make them think they were more interested than the rest of His Majesties Subjects in this Case.

Obj. But yet I say Noblemen may be imprisoned upon contempt, as my Brother Crooke knows well; and it was resolved in the Earl of Lincoln's Case in the Star Chamber: It is true that upon Ordinary Process they are not to be brought to Tryal or Imprisoned.

Ans. Now I answer, There is no Imprisonment in question, but the Assessment only, Why he should not pay the Money assessed, or to shew cause to the contrary.

Secondly, Were the Writ illegal for Form and Circumstance, yet this makes not the Command it self illegal for substance.

The CERTIORARI.

Exceptions to the Certiorari, are these.

Obj. 1. The Direction of it to two Sheriffs, one out of his Office, whenas the Sheriff being, ought only to return it.

Ans. Of this there is little doubt, nothing more frequent for the Certiorari to issue out of the Chancery to two parties, as to the Executors, or the Judge that took the Fine, and is removed: And so upon Commission to take a Fine by dedimus possessionem, in this Case the Writ is inter brevia re-tornabilia; and this must remain with the Old Sheriff, and are never delivered over by the Jury to the New Sheriff.

In Hoberts Case in the Kings Bench, being convicted of Heresie before Sir Julius Cesar Judge of the Admiralty, Certificate to him after Master of the Rolls, and directed to him; so in Case of my Lord Paget.

Obj. The Writ is without return, saith my Lord Chief Baron; and the Certiorari, which is a year and an half after, cannot renew it.

Ans. I answer, That shall not be the Determining of it only; for the time limited expiring, shall not deprive one of his just debt.

It is not sufficient, because it appears not that Mr. Hampden was Tenant or Terretenant, or that Stoake Mandevile was within the County of Buckingham.

Secondly, It appeareth not that there was any Munition or Ship preparing.

I answer, It doth sufficiently appear that Mr. Hampden was Terretenant, for that the Certiorari is to the Sheriff, who certifieth that he was Tenant, for it was in pursuance of the Writ; the words are, Virtute brevis Domini Regis huius Schedulæ annexæ certifico, quod virtute & secundum exigentiam ipsius, &c. Assessam Anglice, have allested super separales homines & terra Tenentes Comitatus Bucks. prædicti quorum nomina subscribuntur, &c. It relates to the Place there, Tenants in the County of Buckingham, and makes Mr. Hampden one; and this in the business of Knightwood was done, and in no other manner.

Obj. Secondly, It appears not that the Ship was prepared.

Ans. To this I answer, That the Ship was done according to the Command of the Writ.

2. It was prepared.

3. If none had been prepared, the fault was for that they paid not their Money.

For the Exceptions to the Mittimus I say nothing, because I told you the case rests not upon these words, Ut Salus Regni periclitabatur, and which is only but to bring it to Issue.

The SCIRE FACIAS.

Obj. Exceptions to the Scire fac; As first, That the King is not intituled to bring the Scire fac; so there is a cui oneretur, to whom he should pay the Money, for whose good or benefit Mr. Hampden should satisfy the Money assessed.

Ans. I answer, The King is interested in all Actions of publick good, and shall recover accordingly: As in cases of Highway, Pontage, Murage, &c. much more when it is for the general defence of the Realm. 1. In Quare impedit, between two common persons, though the King be neither Plaintiff nor Defendant, yet the King shall recover therein many times: In case of a common Informer the King recovers the one Moyety, though not Party; so it was in the case of Knightwood, though no Sute was depending. Again, all Writs in the Kingdom are the Kings Writs, though no Fine, much more here for the Defence of the Realm. And it is usual for the Kings Attorney to compel men to perform Charitable Uses, and the King may question any one for them, in the Case of Cam. Regiam by Process out of the Exchequer. Again, where it is said, Quare ipse de prædicta summa ipsum assesse & non solus in Schedulæ prædictæ specificat onerare & inde satisfaci debeat prout ulterius sibi præceptum, &c. For though the Writ be in the Kings Name, yet it is but for the performance of the work and charge; and though it appears not who were Collectors or Assessors, yet it appears it was done.

Upon publick Service Process goes forth in the Kings Name, but it is not then so fit it should be expressed in particular for the King, whenas it is for the general Good only.

Was not the Object. made by my Brother Denham, though none more constantly or chearfully did subscribe to His Majesties Letter: Neither was this Scire fac. without His Advice, being the aptest Course, and better than Trespas: But the Objection that he made was, That the King cannot do any wrong, nor take without Record, as is in Seisure upon Outlary, Attainder, or the like;

like; and in this case there is no Record upon the

Ans. I answer, This Scir' fac' is not annexed to the Writ, and is a new Action, That Mr. Hampden, Oncetur & inde satisfacet; and after that Judgment upon the Writ, and upon his saying nothing why revocetur, there shall be a good Record upon which he shall be charged, 3 Queen Elizabeth L. Dyer 156. Ignoramus is sufficient Title for the King, and ground for a Melius inquirendum.

Obj. No Scir' fac' lies upon the Tenor of a Writ, 39 H. 6. fo. 34. 21 Eliz. L. Dy. fo. 205.

Ans. I answer, A scir. fac. upon a Recognizance will lie in Chancery, but upon the Record there; yet in a Debt an Action of Debt lies upon the Tenor of a Record, 39 H. 6. the doubt was, because the Party might be subject to a double Execution, one upon the Record there, and another upon the Tenor of the Record in another Court, 33 E. 3. Title Tenure by Transcript, 8 H. 5. F. H. Error Scir. facias Register fo. 51. Record was before the Justices of the Kings Bench: The Tenor was out of the Treasury to the Barons of the Exchequer; and it is the usual Order if Recognizance be forfeited to certify the Tenor of the Recognizance, so of a Fine of Amercement, &c. to certify the Transcript thereof: So the Transcript was sent from Ireland upon an Act of Parliament; a Scir' fac' thereupon went against Hebeon Baron in England; so in Debt upon the Transcript of a Record from Ireland, a Scir' fac' here went forth.

Obj. Objected it was in the last place by my Lord Chief Baron, that Judgment in this Case would be fruitless, and none should take benefit by it upon this Record; and he puts divers Cases wherein Judgment in such Cases ought not to pass.

Ans. I answer, My Lord Chief Baron with a Judgment of his own in case of Knightwood, resolved here in this Court; the Case was this: The King by Writ 5 Januarii, 1 of the Kings Majesties Reign, commanded the Sheriff of Berk-shire that all that had 40 l. per Annum should be in the Chancery 31 January following, to take upon them the Order of Knightwood: Sir John Darrel Sheriff of Berk-shire made his Return, (as the Sheriff of Buckingham here) All that are not Knights under the Name of Illorum, and sets down their Names; Mittimus thereupon went out of the Chancery, reciting the substance of the former Writ, Vobis Mittimus presentibus, &c. with a Clause to enquire after such as were not returned, and to Fine them; and upon this Writ of Distingas to the Sheriff: My Lord Chief Baron and my Brother Denham know what Judgment was given, wherein I observe first not the Record, but the Tenor of the Record was sent into the Exchequer, yet returnable in the Chancery.

2. For the Returning of the Names of the Defaulters done there as here.

3. Upon the Distingas thereupon was had Execution, much more then here, upon the Scir' fac'

4. There was no more Judgment of Record to warrant it, than here in this.

Now I come to conclude, I have been somewhat too bold in taking more time than is usual, but I did it to satisfy my own Heart, according to which I must give my Judgment: what I have omitted, I refer to the rest of my Brethren that went before me, and to my Lord Chief Justice that comes after me. The Reasons I shewed you whereupon I conceive by the Common Law, and Fundamental Policies of this Kingdom, That the King may charge His Subjects for the Defence of this Kingdom, and that the King may charge His Subjects to contribute towards the Defence thereof, when it is in danger; and I hold that the King is Sole Judge of the Danger, and ought to direct the Means of Defence: And therefore this Writ of Scir' Fac', and all the Proceedings in this Case, are well grounded according to Law. My Opinion therefore is, that Mr. Hampden shall be charged with the 20 s. Assessed, and that my Lord Chief Baron ought to give Judgment accordingly.

Finis Argumenti Sir John Finch.

The Argument of Sir John Bramston Knight, Lord Chief Justice of the
 4 Junii, 1638.

Quarto Augusti 11 Car. A Writ issued out of the Chancery, being directed to all Counties of the Realm of England, both Inland and Maritime; and amongst the rest it was directed to the Sheriff of Buckingham-shire, for the making and building of a Ship of 450 Tun, and to provide a certain number of Men, with Munition and Victual, to be brought to Portsmouth, and from thence to be employed in His Majesties Service for Defence of the Realm and of the Sea.

Mr. Hampden in the County of Buckingham was Assessed at 20 s. for his Mannor of Stoake Mandevile, who refused to pay the same; whereupon a Certiorari issued to the Sheriff of Buckingham to return the Defaulters, amongst whom Mr. Hampden was returned to make default of payment of the 20 s. assessed upon him; whereupon it was by Mittimus sent into the Exchequer: And a Scir. Fac. hereupon issued out of the Exchequer against Mr. Hampden, to shew cause why he made default of payment of the said 20 s. Whereupon Mr. Hampden appeared in Person and demanded Oyer of the Writs, and Returns thereof, and Demurred in Law, with whom Mr. Attorney joyned in Demurrer.

Now three Points have been already debated at large in this Matter, viz.

1. Whether the King may command this General Charge of His Subjects by Law, or no? without consent in Parliament.

2. Whether this kind of Assessment is warranted by Law, or not?

3. Whether the Scire Facias did well issue, or not?

In all these Matters so much hath been already spoken, that if I should not say what hath already been spoken, I should say little to purpose.

I will not be long, for if I had intended it, my Lord Finch hath prevented me in it, for he hath taken from me very much that I should have said, and insisted upon that which this Case resteth upon in my Opinion: The Vote of the Court hath passed already by the greater number of Voyces, that mine will do nothing which way soever I go; yet being to deliver my Opinion, I shall shew my Reasons, and that I shall do without any other defence concerning the first point, viz.

Whether

Whether His Majesty may impose that General Charge upon His Subjects by Law, or no?

Anno 1637. I am of Opinion, That whensoever the whole Kingdom is in danger, His Majesty may Command all His Subjects to joyn with Him in this Case for the defence of the Kingdom.

My Brother Finch hath justified so fully upon this Matter, that I shall need to say but little, but yet something I must say as well as my Brothers that have spoken before me, to discharge my Conscience.

And for that which I shall say, my intent is, to insist upon some few of the Principal Statutes, which have been already recited.

For this point, in my Opinion, will rest upon the several Statutes and Acts of Parliament that concern this Case; and I take it these Statutes to be merely Declarations in Affirmance of the Common Law. And I shall begin with the Statute of 1 E. 3. cap. 5. and I shall not go far from the Intent of the Statute; I shall scarce make use of any Precedents though many have been used, but only so far as they may seem to expound and declare the true meaning of those Statutes.

Obj. And whereas it is objected from the Statute of 1 E. 3. That no Man shall be compelled to go out of his County wherein he liveth, except in case of Invasion, and necessity requireth, and shall be done as in times past.

Resp. I answer, That this is merely declarative, and spoken in Affirmance of the Common Laws, and this use is declared by this Statute to be the Ancient Law of this Realm: Now what use that was will be a very great Question in this Case; indeed it hath been much insisted upon both by Mr. Hampdens Counsel, and my Brother Crooke, that the Subjects going forth of the Shire, shall be at the Kings Charge, which they have affirmed by divers Statutes; but that which will go far in this Case (as my Brother Berkley well observed) is out of the Precedents of E. 1. E. 2. and H. 3. time; and in them you shall find it to be for Foreign Wars, or else for ordinary Defence, as for pillaging of Borroughs or private Towns by Pirates, when the Subjects have not given their Aids in such Cases: And there is no doubt but the King hath paid the Charge in such a Case for the Defence of the Realm; but the Subjects gave the King Subsidies to do it herewith.

Quest. But the Question in this case is, What the Subjects may in this case secundum legem Angli be compelled unto in case of Necessity for defence of the Realm?

Ans. I answer, They may be compelled to this Charge (sumptibus propriis) for the Souldiers Wages, but to go out of the Realm or Shire must be at the Kings pay, according to the Common Law of England: But in time of sudden Defence there is no time to stand upon Wages. It appears both in Fitz Herbert Nat. Brevium 28. and also in my Lord Cooke in Calvins Case. The King may command His Subjects upon their Allegiance to go with the King as well in Wars without the Realm, as in His Wars within, and with him and without him in the Kings Service.

By the Statute of 18 E. 3. 11 E. 3. Men of Arms, as Hoblers, Archers, are to go in the Kings Service as in England, so out of England was the matter of this Law. And my Lord Finch said, this was the very Common Law of England; so that it is clear these two Statutes are declaratory Laws in affirmance of the Common Law. Car. 13.

In the 7 H. 4. Title Tenure 44 there it is said, A Man is not to go with the King in his Wars out of the Realm without Wages.

And so in the 7 H. 4. Title Tenure 73. The Subjects of England are not to go with the King beyond the Seas without their Wages, but in the Realm they are at his Command, and there is no Wages to be given.

So it is in going out of England when they are at the Kings Charges, but within at their own: And if the going forth of the County be at their own Charge, I know not but that should put an end to the Case; That the Defence of the Realm must be at the Subjects Charge. It is of dangerous consequence for Judges in their Judgment to rely too much upon Precedents, that perhaps went forth to the Necessity of the present times, but that is not our Case here; we are here directed to know what was used in times past in this Case before the making of this Statute: So that in this Case we take the usage not to declare or prove a Law. But that Use is declared by this Statute to be a Law; therefore we must now know what the Use was. Now that the Use was, That the Subjects of this Realm ought to be charged in time of Common Danger appears by multitudes of Precedents, applied rightly to the Statute of E. 3. do declare the Law upon the Statute.

And to shew what the Use was, I shall rely chiefly upon those Precedents that are most Judicial; First, that of 25 E. 1. in Termino Michaelis Rot. 72. In the Abbot of Roberts-bridge Case in Banco Regis, compare that and this together, and I know not what more can be answered, than that this Use for the Subject to maintain their Peace was an Usage Law, and Custom of the Realm.

10 E. 3. m. 2. do. The King by His Writ sent a Command to send to Portsmouth one hundred Foot and twenty Horsemen to Guard the Sea: They refused to do that Service, and would not go without Wages. The King sent Answer in these very words, That no Wages were due, by reason it was a Publick Danger.

And so in 25 E. 3. cap. 8. it is generally Assented to by Parliament.

But there we have a General Law in the First Statute of 1 E. 3. which was grounded merely on the Common Law; and so was the Statute of 25 E. 3. and the rest to the same purpose, because it was against the Right of the Realm. And this Statute of 25 E. 3. was merely grounded upon the Petition of the Commons; then certainly this finding of Arms was intended by that Statute to be against the Right of the Realm.

Besides all this, to keep our selves to that which is Legal and Authentical; so the Parliament Roll 13 E. 3. n. 9. & 11. It is there apparent that it is not against the Right of the Land to charge the Subject, then how cometh it to be against the Right of the Realm, 25 E. 3. for then there was no Statute.

Now to bring it down to our times; In the 26 E. 3. n. 44. Every Maritime Town was charged to keep Anno 1637. keep a petty Watch, (there being some eminent danger) therefore they pray (not to be discharged) but that it might be reduced to a lesser Charge, being it was but a Petty Watch to Guard the Seas, much less then is there cause for the Subject to seek to be discharged when the Enemy is approaching.

In 5 E. 4. there was a Commission issued out to distrain every one secundum potestatem suam in matters of Array: Here is now the Judgment of the whole House of Parliament, That men according to their Ability are to be charged to joyn in Charge with the King to defend the Realm sumptibus propriis.

Thus much for Defence upon the Land; now for Defence upon the Sea.

In the Statute 18 E. 3. cap. 7. That they that serve the King out of the Kingdom, serve for Wages; but in case of Necessity without the Realm in times past, by no Precedents (saith my Brother Crooke) can it be proved that it was done before.

I answer, That the Sea is within the Kingdom, see the 2 E. 3. cap. 10. protest. 46. Bract. lib. 2. fol. 365. n. 3. There the Sea is made part of the Kingdom, and also in Dottor and Student, cap. 51. It is the Ancient Custom of England, That the King is Lord of the Narrow Seas.

But that which I rely most upon, is from the Statute of 1 and 18 E. 3. for they both meet in one, which is according to the Common Law; for all the difference is thereof, the Subject to go out of his own County to defend the Land or the Sea.

Obj. In the Statute of 1 E. 3. it is objected that there is no Precedent for Inland Counties.

Ans. But I answer, If not from Inland Counties, yet there is for Maritime; as in 14 E. 3. Termino Michaelis: But I reply not upon Precedents for either, but only upon these Precedents that went out to the Ports and Maritime Towns: For it was well observed by the Kings Council, that they were not grounded upon any Precedents or Charters, but only upon Ancient Customs. But if the Precedents to the Maritime Towns were directed in case of necessity, then I see no reason but that it may be done now, which was indeed intended by the Statute of 1 E. 3. as the Precedents do plainly declare; and they were then more common than Writs of this nature issuing forth in this Case. And the Commons were then bound to Land-service, and the Mariners to Sea-service, and they were compelled unto it at their own Charge, meerly upon their Allegiance, both in Bedford, Bucks, Lincoln, with many other Shires.

If then they may be compelled to go out of their own proper Counties to defend that part of the Realm that they live near unto, why may they not also be compelled to go to defend the Sea Coasts. The Seamen were willing to bear some Charge for the Defence of the Sea, because the Inland Counties did bear their charges for the Land-service, and of the Ports.

And if they may be compelled in the Inland Counties to defend their Inland Counties, and the Seamen to defend the Sea-Coasts, then I know no reason but that they may be compelled all in general to bear a publick Charge in case of Necessity Cay. 13.

I am yet upon the Statute of 1 E. 3. wherein I find Mr. Selden in his Mare Clausum fol. saith, That it was an ancient use to charge the Inland and Maritime Counties in case of Necessity; and therefore in my understanding I hold it to be Secundum Legem Anglicanam.

Obj. But here my Brother Crooke objects, That there is no Statute or Precedent to shew that any Inland Counties were charged.

Resp. I answer, That Statutes and Precedents do not extend to our Case, for this was in use many years before the making of Statutes; see the Stat. of 1 E. 3. and 1 E. 1. They cannot cross one another, for then could not the Statute of E. 1. be confirmed by the Statute of E. 3.

Again, Concerning the Statute of finding of Men and Arms; it is true, it is meerly the Common Law of England, and that meerly without common consent in Parliament, as my Brother Barkley saith. That the Statute 9 H. 3. and 25 E. 3. cap. 11. are the great Charters rather than Statute: And in King John's Time it was not taken for a Statute, but only for a Declaration: and so likewise it was taken in the Time of H. 1.

But now, If concerning the Charging of the County, the said Statutes were nothing but only according to the Common Law of England, I cannot see how they should cross one another now; for there is no difference, but only in such things as are given, as a Benevolence to the King; as in 1 E. 3. cap. 5, & 6.

As for the Statute De Tallagio non Concedendo, we deny it not; but the Difference is in the Occasion of the Statute of 15 E. 3. There was a pretty Case put by Mr. Holborn, about the Office of Aulnage, where there was but a Fee to be paid out of it, and held a Talliage; but there is great difference between the Talliage, and this Service, which every Subject is bound to do by his Allegiance to his Sovereign Lord.

Fitz. 103. The King may impose this Charge upon the Subject in this Case of Necessity, pro Bono publico; and it is nothing but what every Subject owes to a Commonwealth in a time of Common Danger.

And from K. Edw. the Confessor, it was ordered by several Statutes, Let every one have their own Goods and Lands de Tallagio, and let nothing be taken from them.

But in this Case of Necessity in common Danger, is another thing; the King may then compell his Subjects to this Charge: And I may add the Reasons strongly insisted upon by the King's Council. My L. Crooke said, it could never be the Meaning of the Great Charter of the Liberty of the Subjects by this Stat. to take away the Power of the Kings Prerogative, and so to exempt themselves from this Charge of Defence; for there is the Kings Prerogative, and so to exempt themselves from this Charge of Defence; for there is a difference between a Tallage upon the People, and a Service in case of Necessity, which they may be compelled unto.

My Brother Jones cited a most excellent Case, & far. upon the Opinion of Cooke and Popham; That the Tallage-Statute taketh not away; and shall it take away this Royal Power of the King, so inherent in the Crown, the Protection and Preservation of his Kingdom?

From this Statute of 1 E. 6. Mr. St. John produceth this Objection: Here is seven Months from the Date of the Writ unto the time that the Ship was to be brought to Portsmouth, in which time there might have been a Parliament; therefore it ought to have been done in a Parliamentary way.

But this will not admit the Calling of a Parliament; but if the Danger be not sudden, you must have it by a Parliamentary way.

My Lord Finch gave a full Answer to this; There must be a Preparation before the Enemy come, else the Defence is too late; there is a necessity to prevent a Necessity; and who shall give warning in such a Case, but the King? (saith Littleton) who gives warning? not the Tenant by Castleguard, but the Lord: and so consequently in this Case, our Sovereign Lord the King: And therefore in such a Case, the Subject is bound by his Allegiance to the King, to assist in case of publick Danger.

My Lord Cooke tells us the reason of the Warning, he saith, there must in that Case be a preparation beforehand, lest your Defence come too late. Enemies are more easily kept out, than overcome when they are got in.

By the Statute of 8 E. 4. There Bulwarks may be made in another Mans Ground, but this Preparation not without warning; and none can give the warning but the King; and the Subjects are to be at his Command, and none other; for there must be a preparation of the Subject in the Realm, to meet the Enemy before they enter the Land.

No Subjects can take upon them to build Bulwarks, &c. It is an assuming of the Royal Power; for it must be done juxta Præceptum Domini Regis.

Now I come to the Second Part; Whether this Assessement be warranted by Law or not?

The Writ was Dated 4 Augusti, to prepare a Ship against Marr. 1. therefore we see it is not against the great Laws concerning the Subjects Liberty, because it is no Tallage, but a Service: for howsoever it must be granted, it must be a general Danger that causeth a general Defence; and there must be Matter in the Body of the Record to satisfy therein: There must be I say a publick danger, and then it is secundum Legem & Consuetudinem Regni Angl. as appears 20 E. 3. c. 21. and also in Doctor and Student, cited before, That when Necessity doth require, the King may compel his Subjects to this publick Charge, though the King be the sole Judge, and his Certificate is not traversable, and cannot be denied; yet there must be Matter Appar. within the Record, to satisfy the Conscience of the Court, or else we cannot be Judges of the Case at all. If the Danger be general, the Defence must be general; but if ordinary Danger, as Robbing of Merchants by Pyrates, &c. it must be at the Kings Charge; and we do see by the Petition of the Commons in many Parliaments, that they never conceived themselves subject to the Charge of ordinary Defence.

Now upon all that which hath been observed by my Brothers, there is enough in the Record to satisfy them fully (as if the King were not sole Judge) that it was a publick Danger, being pro Defensione Regni, Tutitione Maris, &c. it did issue to all the Kings Subjects as a general Charge, and not to the County of Buckingham alone; therefore I may conclude, when the whole Kingdom is in danger, the King may compel his Subjects to Assist in such publick Danger.

Then for the Assessement, many Exceptions taken unto it, and to the Record and Scire fac. I had provided my self to have given a full Answer thereunto; but my Lord Finch hath prevented me, and hath cited the very Authorities which I my self did reply upon.

Obj. But for the Assessement it self to the Sheriff, I do not say that I do find he hath like power in any other Case of Law, Commission of Sewers may be directed to the Sheriff, but not to give power to Asses Mens Goods.

Resp. I Answer, That this is in case of Necessity; for the very main Case is but a Case of Necessity; the ordinary and usual way is per Sacramentum.

My Lord Finch gave an excellent Answer to that, and warranted it by Law, That the Sheriff hath no such unlimited power granted him, he is not made Judge of the Estates of Men, but only to pursue the Direction of the Writ, to Asses them as he is commanded, and not secundum discretionem suam, but as my Lord Crooke, 5 Rep. 99. he must do it secundum Legem, & secundum Arbitrium: That is to say, according to Law and Reason; but it is impossible in such a Case of Necessity, to put it into such an Equality, to make it without exception: but in as much as in him lieth, he ought to order it proportionably; his Power is not unlimited; for by his Discretion he is to discern Right and Wrong, between Substance and Shadow; and he must do within the Bonds of Law and Right.

In the Chamberlain of London's Case, They might Rule and Asses in Bono publico; as in making of a High-way, to a Church, or the like, wherein the Subject is brought to no Distress or Inconvenience; so as the greater part in such a Case as this, shall ever bind the lesser part; being it is pro Bono publico; yet this Assessement cannot make a Law a Debt or a Duty, but is only a Means to bring this Duty to a Certainty, and so make it a Duty, so that he be Rated in an equal proportion.

Hath M. the Sheriff Rated Mr. Hampden disproportionably according to his Estate and Degree? If he have let him tell: If the Sheriff have followed his own Will, and done corruptly, then he hath done contrary to the Intent of the Writ; it turneth upon the Sheriff himself; and a great Offence it is for a publick Minister of Justice to abuse himself in such a place of Justice.

The Sheriff returns, he hath Assessed 20 s. which is no great Sum; and also confesseth upon the Record, that it is an equal Assessement.

When

When Mr. Hampden appeared upon the Scire Fac. he demanded Oyer of the Writs, and so Demurred in Law, which is upon the Matter (being a general Demurrer) a Confession.

And as for the Scire Fac. my Lord Finch hath handled it fully, and hath cited the same Books and Authorities that I intended to have cited; and so hath prevented me in that; and also in Bodman's Case in Cornwal, and upon the Exceptions super Tenorem Recordi in 9 H. 6. fol. 23.

And the Reason why he should not have Execution super Tenorem Recordi, is, because otherwise the Subject might be Charged double, and divers Cases were put upon suing forth Execution upon the Tenor of the Record, and yet no Execution can go out of the Chancery at the first, because it is not returnable by the Sheriff; but it is sent out of the Chancery by Mittimus into the Exchequer, 24 H. 6. 4 H. 6.

But it is true, That it doth concern every one to be satisfied in the Truth of the Case; for if the Sheriff should not Assess per Sacramentum, it might be made another way.

And as for the Certiorari, my Lord Finch hath also cited the said Books and Authorities which I also intended; therefore I forbear to insist upon that.

There is another Exception to the Record, quod oneretur, and not know to whom it should be; nor Money demanded to the King by the first Writ, no nor by the second Writ, therefore can give no Judgment, quod satisfaceret Domino Regi: Then if Judgment shall not be given for the King, then for whom? Non constat; it doth not appear to whom it is due, for any thing I can see in this Record.

Truly for my own part, of all the Exceptions that I have heard, none sticketh with me, but this Exception; for I do not know any Precedent, that a Judgment was given, and not say to whom: This Scruple (I confess) still remaineth with me: I must needs say, That in my Opinion, I do rather incline (as far as I am well satisfied) that this is a good Exception, according, and upon those Reasons that my Lord Chief Baron gave; and yet I am not so far satisfied that it is Law.

I must rather incline as my Opinion inclines; that against the Inclination of my own Opinion, as I have gone through all the rest with the War-rant of my own Conscience, I cannot go upon any string in the Thing of the least weight, but I must deliver my Opinion as it inclines: and therefore upon these Reasons that I have heard, and upon consideration taken with my self, I do rather incline to the Opinion of my Lord Chief Baron, and upon his Reasons, which I think was in that, with the lesser Number; but for my Opinion in all other Points, I agree with the General Vote of the Court.

F I N I S.

Upon the 12th. of June, 14 Caroli, Mr. Attorney moved the Court of Exchequer for Judgment against M. Hampden, and after he had opened the Record, he said,

Your Lordship and the Court, in respect of the Greatness of the Cause, did Adjourn it into the Exchequer-Chamber; That your Lordship and the Court might receive Advice of all the Judges; whose Advice and Opinion your Lordship hath already received; and the Plurality of their Voyces is, That Judgment should be given against Mr. Hampden, and accordingly I do pray Judgment.

To which my Lord Chief Baron Answered;

It is very true; It was Referred from hence to the Exchequer-Chamber, to receive the Advice of all the Judges of the Land; VVe do not take them to assist only by way of Advice; but for a Judicial Direction. For admitting we four were of one Opinion, and the rest of the Judges of another (though the Cause properly depend in this Court) yet we must apply our selves to their Resolution, and our four voyces are involved in theirs; and therefore accordingly secundum Legem, &c. Oneretur Johannes Hampden.

The

Anno 1637. Concerning the Original of the Scotch Com-motions, which began the 23 of July, 1637. and continued encreasing by fits, as the Archbishop of Canterbury hath observed; and that they held correspondents with the Presbyterians here in England, no wise man can ever doubt of; especially, when he considers the Answer of one of the Com-mons in Parliament in the year 1640. who openly said, There were no such fears from the Scots (who were then in the Bishoprick of Durham, ready to enter the County of York) as from Arbitrary Government, &c. at home; I say, about the Original of these troubles, take what follows, being the Observations of a Person then conversant in the Court, and very knowing of those times.

King James had a design not once, but alwaies after his coming into England, to Reform the deformity of the Kirk of Scotland into as decent a Discipline as in the Church of England, which received opposition and intermissions, till the year 1616. when at Aberdine, their general Assembly of Clergy made an Act, Authorizing some of their Bishops to compile a form of Liturgy or Book of Common-Prayer; First, for the King to approve, which was so considerately there revised and returned, for that Kingdom to practise; which same Service-Book was now sent for by the King, and committed to some Bishops here of their own to review; and finding the difference not much from the English, he gave command in Scotland, to be read twice a day in the King's Chapel at Holy-rood House at Edenburgh; that Communion should be administred in that form, and taking it on their knees once a Month, the Bishop to wear his Rocket, the Minister his Surplice, and so to enure the People by President of his own Chapel there first; and afterward in all parts for the Publick, the Scottish Bishops liked it reasonably well for the matter, but the manner of imposing it from hence upon them, was conceived somewhat too much dependance of theirs on our English Church, and therefore excepting against the Psalms, Epistles, and Gospels, and other Sentences of Scriptures in the English Book, being of a different Translation from that of King James, they desired a Liturgy of their own, and to alter the English answerable to that, and so peculiar to the Church of Scotland, which indeed was more liker that of King Edward the Sixth, which the Papists better approved, and so was the rather permitted by the King, as to win them better to our Church; and so had it been accustomed to the Scottish several Churches for some years, without any great regret, and now particularly Proclaimed to be used in all Churches, and to begin at Easter-Sunday, which was respited to Sunday the three and twentieth of July, being then to be countenanced at Edenburgh by the Lords of Session then sitting, as it had been before commended in publick Sermons to the People by divers Ministers; by Rollock the Covenanter afterwards, and others of the same; and accordingly in St. Giles's Church, the chief of Edenburgh, the Dean in presence of the Council, Bishops, Lords, and Magistrates, beginning to Read, the women first and meaner men, began the Mutiny, Clapping their hands, and Curling with their Tongues, raising such a Hubbub that none could be heard but themselves; the Bishop designed for the Sermon, stepped into the Pulpit, to interpose in this their madness, and minding them of their irreverence and horrible prophanation of the Sacred place, which incensed them into fury, flinging what came to hand, Stones, Seats, Stools, and Cudgels, almost to his murder; then the Archbishop of St. Andrews, Lord Chancellor, and others, offering to a peace, were no better handled until the Provost, Bailiffs, and Civil Magistrates, were forced to shut the Multitude out of the Church: and so the Service-Book was read throughout, though with the rage of the People, hollowing, knocking, and battering of the Windows without, with Staves and Stones; and watching for the Preacher the Bishop, he was incompassed with the Commonalty of the baser sort, and hardly escaped their intent to smother him to death. And so in sundry other Churches in the City, with the like clamour and disorder: Which moved the Council further to Assemble at the Chancellors, and there to command the Lord Revall, and Officers, to order the People into a more quiet behaviour, for the afternoon, which was done with some moderation in the Churches; but after Sermon endangering the Earl of Roxborough, Lord Privy-Seal, to be the first Martyr St. Stephen; for but having the Bishop of Edenburgh put in the Coach with him; and in outward shew, the Magistrates dissembled their resentment of those disorders, and pronounced an Order of the Council amongst themselves, to advise upon an obligatory Act of Security to the Ministers persons that did, or hereafter should undertake to read the Book, and maintenance also for them; and afterwards (in shew) some of the most unruly were slightly punished, as being therefore encouraged to do so again; for which at first, had they been Hanged, the Example might have discourag'd all others from falling into the like folly; the King then having force enough at Sea to have blocked up their Haven, he might soon have brought the Edenburghers to obedience, and after them the whole Nation; but by his suffering of them then, and of such like following after, he was come to that misery (as one saies well) Cum vel excedenda sit natura vel imminuenda dignitas, either to out-go his own nature, or fore-goe his own Authority, and the Scots were so well assured of the King's lenity, as that with a couple of Letters from them to the Archbishop of Canterbury to palliate the practice, and to promise their pains to the compleat effecting of his Majesties desire in the Service-Book, and so signed by all the Bailiffs, these proved afterwards the only Actors in the like Mutiny; the Stage indeed became afterwards better hanged, and the Schemes better set out their intended Tragedy with a specious title of Piety and Religion.

And a further Confirmation of the irregularity and Seditious practices, whereby the Scots were then carried in that their Rebellion (for so it was, neither better nor worse) and for the satisfaction of all his true-hearted and loyal Subjects, his Majesty did cause an unquestionable Narrative to be made thereof by way of Historical deduction, wherein the true passages of all that business were set down, that the World might see (as his Majesty saith) under one view and aspect his gracious and clement comportment towards them, and the depraved and froward deportment of those Scots to his Majesty their Liege and Sovereign, these Three Points were placed beyond contradiction.

First, That the first contrivers, and since pursuers of their late wicked Covenant, or pretended holy League (a name which all good men did abhor in them of France) though following the

Anno 1637. pattern of all other Seditions, they did and do pretend Religion, yet nothing was or is less intended by them, but that they having received from Us full satisfaction to all their desires, expressed in any of their Petitions, Remonstrances, or Declarations, yet their persisting in their Tumultuous and Rebellious courses, doth demonstrate to the World their weariness of being governed by Us and Our Laws, by our Council and other Officers put in Authority by and under Us, and an itching humour of having that Our Kingdom governed by a Table of their own devising, consisting of Persons of their own chusing: A Plot of which they are very fond, being an Abortion of their own brain, but which indeed is such a monstrous birth, as the like hath not yet been born or bred in any Kingdom Jewish, Christian, or Pagan.

Secondly, That our promises expressed in Our several Proclamations and Declarations to Our People, were not (as the wicked contrivers of that Covenant have ever gone about to make Our Subjects believe) only verbal, but sincere and real, and such as We do profess to the whole World in the word of a just and true Prince, We do resolve to make good to all Our Subjects of that our Kingdom: As holding it beneath the greatness and goodness of a just King, that the unjust actions of his Subjects should occasion in their Sovereign the least suspicion of breach of promises made by him to them, especially when the performance of them shall conduce to the settling of Religion and Peace.

Thirdly, That these men who give themselves out to be the only Reformers of Religion, have taken such a course to undermine and blow up the Religion Reformed, by the scandal of Rebellion and Disobedience, which, so far as in them lieth, they have gone about to cast upon it, that if the Conclave of Rome, the several Colledges or Congregations perpetually sitting at Rome for contriving and effecting the means of reducing to the Roman obedience all those Kingdoms and Provinces which have justly departed from them, nay, and if with both these, all the Jesuites and others, the most especially combined and sworn Enemies to Our Profession, were all assembled in one place, and had all their wits and devices concentrated into one conclusion and resolution; they could hardly have fallen upon such a way, as these pretended Reformers have fallen upon, for turning all men out of the paths of the Reformed Religion, or have settled upon such courses, which can bespeak no other event, but the undoubted overthrow of it, at least in that Kingdom, unless God himself from Heaven (which we hope) shall have all their Cobweb contextures in derision: For by their particular proceedings, truly set down in this Our Narration, it will plainly appear, that their Maxims are the same with the Jesuites, their Preachers Sermons have been delivered in the very phrase and stile of Becanus, Scippus, and Eudemon Johannes, their poor Arguments, which they have delivered in their Seditious Pamphlets, Printed or Written, are taken almost verbatim out of Bellarmino and Suarez, as appeareth to Us by Our Royal Letter his Monitory Preface to all Christian Kings and Princes, and his Apology for the Oath of Allegiance, and in the Books writ by others in defence of them both; in all which these Arguments are fully answered: And that the means which they have used to induce a credit of their conclusions with their Profelytes, are purely and meerly Jesuitical Fables, false Reports, false Prophecies, pretended Inspirations and Divinations of the weaker Sex; as if now Herod and Pilate were once again reconciled for the ruin of Christ, and his true Religion and Worship.

Which particulars (saith his Majesty) if any unprejudiced Reader, either of his own Subjects, or Forreigner do grant, it will most necessarily follow,

First, That these proceedings of some of Our Subjects (whom, though they would be accounted the purest Protestants, yet by their wicked Protestations, you will find to be the most froward and perverse Protesters that ever did contest with their Sovereign and his Laws) may not induce an undeserved scandal upon that Religion which We profess: For since their conclusions are quite contrary to the Confessions of the several Reformed Churches, in their particular Articles both of the Church and of the Civil Magistrate, as appeareth by the Helvetian, French, Belgick, Polonian, Argentine, Palatine, Genevian, Our English and Irish; nay, and their own Scottish positive Confession, Printed amongst the Acts of Parliament of that Our Kingdom; and besides, the Augustane and all other particular Protestant Confessions of the Lutherans: And all the weapons wherewith they now fight against these Protestant conclusions, are stolen or borrowed, not only out of the Roman (for many of the Romanists fight with Us against them) but out of the most rigid Jesuites Magazines, why should they not in this Quarrel be accounted not as our Friends, but as Our Foes; not Protestants, but the most rigid of Papists, Jesuites? And so being without in this point, not bring any scandal upon Us who are within; especially considering that though these men have gone about to wound the Reformed Religion through Our sides, and by opposing Us whom God hath honoured with this special favour (for no less We account it) of being the chief Prince whom he hath made choice of for the Protector and Defender of it: Though, We say, these men have done what they can to weaken this Our Religion, by striking at the Authority of the principal prop and stay of it upon earth under God; yet We, by the grace of God, are fully resolved to wipe away that aspersions, and remove that scandal from Our Profession and Religion, by Our Constant not only adherence to it, but maintenance and defence of it, with the uttermost of that power which God hath put in Our hands, notwithstanding all those scandals which these men by their wicked practices and worse positions have laid upon it.

Secondly, We hope that all men will do Us so much right, as to believe, that whatsoever course We shall hereafter take for the Asserting of the Reformed Religion, and repressing the insolencies of such of Our Subjects as do oppose it and Us in the just and undoubted right of Our Regality, while they pretend Religion, shall not be thought to be by way of a War, but by way of a Prince, the Father of his Country, his chastising his unruly Children, which is never in anger, but in love, and for their good. And if by their stubbornness they shall force Us to a severity displeasing to Us, and unwelcome to them, We call Him by whom We Reign to witness, and heaven and earth and all the World to record, that they with their own hands do unsheath Our just sword, which We cannot but use as the Minister of God, unless We will betray that trust which the King of Kings hath reposed in Us for the maintenance of Religion and Justice amongst all His people whom He hath committed to Our Charge: And if God will have it so, that for their resisting Him and Us, His Anointed servant and their Sovereign, He will have some of their bad blood shed, We shall ever make account that that blood is let out of Our own veins; nor shall We draw any drop of it in any other case, than a faithful Physician will and must do for the preservation of the whole body.

His Majesties Narrative of the Scotch Tumults.

THAT Religion is only pretended and used by them as a cloak to palliate their intended Rebellion, is demonstrative by this, That the seeds of this Sedition were sown by the plotters of their Covenant, made under the pretence of Religion, long before any of the grievances or pretended innovations in Religion complained of by them, were ever heard of amongst them.

For the truth is, that some years after Our coming to the Crown, by the advice both of some of Our principal Counsellors and Officers of State there, as also by the advice of Our learnedest Advocates and Counsellors at Law, according to the example of many of Our Royal Progenitors of happy memory, Kings and Queens of that Our Kingdom, We did make a legal revocation of such things as had been passed away in prejudice of the Crown, especially by some of Our late Royal Progenitors in their minorities; a course warranted by the Laws and many years practice of that Our Kingdom: With this course, some of the principal Contrivers of this their present Covenant found themselves much aggrieved, and much of their Estates brought within the compass and danger of Our Laws, which made them presently begin to grumble and repine, and privately, as much as they durst, and as in them lay, to work underhand in Our Subjects minds a distaste of Our Government: Which We made account We had quickly rectified, by shewing to all Our Subjects interested in that Revocation, Our gracious clemency in waving all the advantages which Our Laws gave Us in many of their Estates: So that after We had made it apparent to our Subjects, how obnoxious many of them and their Estates were unto Us & Our Laws, We likewise did make as apparent unto them, Our singular grace and goodness by remitting not only the rigour, but even the equity of our Laws; insomuch that none of all Our Subjects could then, or can now say that they were damnified in their Persons or Estates by that Our Revocation, or any thing which ensued upon it: Yet for all this, the principal present Malecontents did then begin to perswade with such as they thought they might be boldest with, a disaffection to Our Government: And not seeing how they could easily obtrude upon them, the old and usual pretence of discontent, viz. Religion, by a strained and far-fetched inference they did not stick to lay the envy of the procuring that harmless Revocation, by which no man suffered, upon the present Prelates, who in this were as innocent as the thing it self was: Only because they hoped that the very name of Church-men, or Religious persons, should in the point of Faction have that operation with their followers, which they conceived the Church or Religion it self might have had, if they could have seen how to have persuaded them, that by this Revocation either of them had been endangered.

A second Symptom of their discontent appeared not long after this, upon this occasion: We having daily heard the grievous complaints of many of Our Subjects of that Kingdom of all sorts, especially of the Gentry and their Farmers, who paid their Tithes to the Nobility, or such others whom they in that Kingdom call Lords of the Erection, or Laick Patrons, here in England we call Impropiators, how that in the leading or gathering of their Tithes, these Lords and Laick Patrons did use and practise the uttermost of that severity which the Law alloweth them, how they would not gather their Tithes when the owners of the Corn desired them, but when it pleased themselves; by which means the owners, by the unseasonableness of the weather, were many times damnified to the loss of their whole stock, or most part of it (the Law of that Kingdom being in that point so strict, as no owner may carry away his nine parts, or any part of them, until the proprietary of the Tithes have set out his tenth part:) As likewise understanding at the same time, the deplorable estate of the Ministers of that Our Kingdom in the point of maintenance, how that they received no Tithes in their Parishes, but some poor pittance, either by way of a stipendiary benevolence, or else some mean allowance from these Lords of Erections or Laick Patrons, unworthy of the Ministers of the Gospel, and which exposed them to all manner of contempt, and a base dependance upon their Patrons: We, at the instance and humble Petition not of a few, but of the whole Clergy, and with them, of the whole payers of Tithes of that Kingdom, begun to take three things into our serious consideration.

First, The wretched estate of the Clergy for want of maintenance: Next, The hard usage and great oppression of all the Laity that paid Tithes, from the owners of them. Thirdly, A very important point of State, viz. That it was not fit, that such a considerable part of Our Subjects, as all the Ministers who have power over the consciences of the rest, and all the Payers of Tithes, who are the far greatest part of the Kingdom, should have their dependance upon the Nobility, or other Laick Patrons, the one for their livelihood and maintenance, the other not only for fear of having their Corns lost or endangered, for not carrying them in due season, which was by the Law in the power of these owners of the Tithes, which power they were sure they would exercise upon them if they should at any time displease them, or not adhere to them upon all occasions good or bad; But likewise because these Lords, owners of the Tithes, and also of Abbey-lands, were likewise, for the most part, Superiours to those who paid them, but were so altogether to those who held the Abbey-lands of them by way of Vassalage, and so by their very Tenures were to perform all service and attendance to these Lords, their Superiors, whenever they should require it of them.

Which important considerations moved Us, by the advice of the Learnedest Lawyers there, to grant out a Commission under Our Great Seal for that Kingdom, not to a few, but to divers hundreds, and those of the prime of all Estates and Degrees, (out of which number the Lords of the Erections and Laick Patrons were not omitted) for relieving, if they should see cause, both the Ministers and Owners of Corn, as also for taking into their consideration the point of Superiority and dependance. These Commissioners, after their sitting in great frequency some years, and after full hearing of all parties interested, and mature deliberation, did set a rate of the value of the Tithes, ordered that the owners of the Grounds 1637. should severally purchase them at so many years purchase, as was then agreed upon by all both Buyers and Sellers, taking the same course for the Rating of Superiorities in regard of the Abbeylands, which was likewise accorded unto by all parties; and ordered, that every Ministers means should be augmented, in such a certain proportion set down and accorded unto, as the Incumbent should not be enforced any more to be a slave to his Patron.

With the conclusions and determinations of this Commission, called the Commission of Surrenders of Superiorities and Tithes, the owners of Lands, and the Ministers, were indeed so really satisfied, that the former with all thankfulness acknowledged Us for their deliverer from an intolerable bondage, under which they and their Ancestors ever since the Reformation of Religion had grievously groaned; The latter with infinite expressions of joy and gratitude did celebrate Us as the very Father and Founder of their several Churches: We gave Our Royal assent to all agreed upon in that Commission, being glad that Our Subjects were relieved, the maintenance of Our Clergy improved, and both our Clergy and Laity freed from a dangerous dependance upon Subjects; and for that freedom obliged to a thankful, hearty, and loyal dependance upon Us, to whom alone by all Laws of God and men it is due. The Nobility and other Lay Patrons seemed herewith likewise fully to rest satisfied; and so indeed they were in point of profit, for, according to the rates of purchasing in that Our Kingdom, for their Tithes they were satisfied to the uttermost farthing: but they fretted privately amongst themselves, for being robbed, as they conceived, of the clientele and dependance of the Clergy and Laity, and of that Power, Command, and Superiority over them, which by that tie of Tithes they had enjoyed: Yet, not being able to make Religion it self a fair pretence for this their discontent (for who could imagine that every man his gathering of his own Tithes, or the augmentation of Ministers maintenance, could be an affronting or weakening of Religion?) they had recourse to their former fetch, and not without bewraying much heart-burning, gave it out, that this Commission (which indeed was obtained by the humble importunity both of Clergy and Laity) was procured only by the Bishops, who meant no good to Religion; and so from an unnecessary jealousy of their persons and power, they begun to pretend and suborn a necessary jealousy of Religion it self.

A third bewraying of their factious humour, appeared clearly at Our last being in that Our Kingdom, and immediately after Our departure from thence: For some six years ago, having a great desire to visit that Our native Kingdom, and being willing to cheer and comfort Our Subjects there with Our presence, and honour them with Our personal Coronation, all which they did most humbly and heartily sollicite Us for by their earnest and affectionate supplications; We undertook a Journey to them, and according to Our expectation were most joyfully received by them: But immediately before, and at the sitting down of Our Parliament there, We quickly found that the very same persons who since were the Contrivers of, and still continue the sticklers for their now pretended Covenant, begun to have secret Meetings, and in their private Consultations did vent their dislike of Our innocent Revocation, and Our most beneficial Commission of Surrenders: But knowing that these two could gain them no party, then they begun to suggest great fears, that many and dangerous innovations of Religion were to be attempted in this Parliament: Not that they themselves thought so, but because they knew that either that, or nothing would soyl with suspicious jealousy, or interrupt and relax the present joy and contentment which did overflow in Our Subjects hearts, and appeared in their hearty expressions for Our presence amongst them.

But We readily confuted all these suspicious surmises; for, except an Act which gave Us power to appoint such Vestures for Church-men which We should hold to be most decent, nothing concerning Religion was either propounded or passed in that Parliament, but that which every King doth usually in that, and all other Christian Kingdoms, pass at their first Parliament, viz. An Act of Ratification of all other Acts heretofore made, and then standing in force concerning the Religion presently professed and established, and concerning the Church her Liberties and Privileges: Which Act being an Act of course, though it passed by most voices, yet was it disaffected from, to Our great admiration, by the voices of many of those who are now the principal pillars of their Covenant; which made all men then begin to suspect, that sure there was some great distemper of heat at the heart, when it boyled so over at their lips, by their unnecessary and unprofitable denying of assent to the Laws, concerning the Religion and Church, already established; This first Act passing more for form and the honour of Religion, than for any use or necessity of it, all the former Laws still standing in force and vigour without the need of any new Ratification.

At this time many of Our Subjects of greatest Quality were suitors to Us for new Titles of Honour, Gentlemen to be Lords, Lords to be Earls: Impossible it was for Us to satisfy all suitors in that kind, without the prostitution of Honour to a just and open contempt, and therefore being put upon a choice and selection, We held it fitter in the point both of Honour and Justice, to pass by such as both privately in their secret Meetings, and openly in the Parliament House, had shewed their disrespect to Us and Our just proceedings, than those who had carried themselves not only loyally and dutifully, but affectionately and heartily to Us and Our service. Upon this occasion many of those who were then passed by, and are now principal Covenanters, seeing others advanced to degrees of Honour above themselves, begun then presently to mutter, but not to mutiny until We were gone from thence.

But scarcely were We well returned into England, when the discontent of these men resolved it self into a plain Sedition: For then they had the impudence to give it out, that voices were bought and packed in the late Parliament; nay, that the voices were not truly numbred, but that some Acts were past without Plurality of suffrages: A calumny so foul and black, as that they themselves did know it to be most false: For had there been the least suspicion of truth in it, they might have made tryal thereof, by surveying their own Papers, and the Papers of many hundreds present, who took notes of the number of voices which were given, either by assenting to, or disaffenting from the several Acts read and proposed; by which Papers if they had found but the weakest ground for this their strong, but false Report, We have no reason to think that either their mercy or modesty was such, that they would have forbore the calling of the Clerk

1637. Clerk of Our Register in question for it; it being as our Chancellors Office to ask the voices, so Our Clerk of Registers Office to take them and Record them, and according to his own and his Clerks notes who assist him, to pronounce the Act passed or stop: In which it is impossible he should deal but with sincerity, for else the Notes taken by most of the Auditors, being a present and powerful conviction of his false dealing, must presently transmit him to highest Censure and Punishment.

But knowing that in a Publick and Judieial way they must needs fail in their proof of this Calumny, they betook themselves to the secret and seditious way of Malecontents: For first they used clanculary Surmises, then they sent about from hand to hand a clandestine infamous Libel, and by it they imployed the hearts of many of Our good Subjects with a suspicion of obliquity in Our proceedings at the late Parliament. This infamous Libel coming to the knowledge of Our Privy Council there, first they of themselves, then afterwards, having made Us acquainted with it, by Our commandment entred into an inquiry both of the Authors and Abettors of that Seditious Libel; Who found that the Author upon whom it was shifted and fathered, was one Hagge, then, and still fugitive, but that the Abettors, Countenancers, and Dispersers of it were many, and some of them of greatest Quality, and now principal Covenanters: We, out of Our innate and usual Clemency, were graciously pleased (that the fear and example might reach to all, but the punishment only to one of them) to pass by many, who undoubtedly had been concluded and involved by Our Laws in the same Sentence, if We had proceeded against them, and to single out one of that Rank, who was most obliged to Us and Our Crown, and therefore both for his Ingratitude and Crime, had no reason to expect any thing from Us but the Justice of Our Laws.

This one was the Lord Balmerino, his Father was Principal Secretary of State for that Our Kingdom, to our Father of happy memory, to whom he was beholden both for the honour of his Barony, and for his whole Fortune and Estate which he got in his Service: But he was since Our Royal Father his coming to the Crown of England, Arraigned for, and Attainted of High Treason in Scotland, found guilty of it by his Peers, and accordingly received Sentence to be hanged, drawn, and quartered, his Blood tainted, his whole Estate forfeited to the Crown: Yet such was the gracious Clemency of Our Royal Father, that He, only for a little time, continued this condemned and forfeited Lord in Prison, afterward confined him, but to a large Circuit, and then restored not only the Blood of himself and his Children, but also their Honour and whole Estate: Now this present Lord Balmerino, being so extraordinarily obliged to Our Royal Father and Our Crown, for the life of his Father, his own Honour and whole Fortunes, and so being one from whom We, the Son of that Royal and Gracious Father to him and his whole Family, had no reason to expect perfidiousness and ingratitude, he could not have the least shew of reason to expect any favour from Us, but the favour of a fair and legal Trial, which We granted him: At that Trial and Arraignment, he was by his Peers found guilty of abetting and dispersing that infamous Libel made against Us, and accordingly was to receive Sentence of Death for it; which our Chief Justice respited only until Our pleasure might be known. Then indeed they who afterwards proved the Contrivers of the late Covenant, and their Adherents, begun to complain of the hard measure which was offered to this Lord, and to lay false and wicked aspersions upon his Peers who found him guilty; but finding that all the proceedings were usual and legal, they could not but have acquit the Judge if he should have condemned him, nor could they have found the least blemish in Our Justice, if We should have given Warrant both for his Sentence and Execution, whose Life was now legally devolved into Our hands; and therefore this convicted Lord betook himself only to Our Mercy, which We shewed to him in that height as We are confident it is hardly to be pattern'd by any President.

For notwithstanding the Head of this Family, which was first raised by Our Father, and then being fallen, yet raised by Him again, and now relapsed, was once again brought under Our Axe, as it had been before brought under the Axe of Our Royal Father: We, desirous to shew Our self the true Heir of none of Our blessed Fathers Vertues, more than of his Mercy and Clemency, were contented, upon his deep Protestations of Loyalty for the time to come, to grant him under Our Great Seal for that Our Kingdom, not only a Pardon of that Crime of which he stood convicted, but also his full Liberty and Enlargement: Which gracious Pardon of Ours, when it was delivered to him by Our Council, who sent for him, being then Prisoner in the Castle of Edinburgh, he did before that Table receive on his Knees, with the highest magnifying of Our Mercy, with the humblest acknowledgments of those infinite Obligations by which he and his Family stood for ever engaged in the Service of Us and Our Crown, with the deepest Protestations of all loyal, quiet, and peaceable deportment of himself ever hereafter, and of bending all his endeavours to attend upon all Our Royal courses and commandments, so that Our Council remonstrated unto Us, that We had bestowed Our Mercy and Grace upon a man, of whom there could not be the least suspicion of his averiness from Our Service at any time hereafter, but of whom they might safely promise all forwardness and alacrity in all Our just courses, whensoever it should please Us to use him: And now this same pardoned Lord Balmerino, being one of the chief Contrivers, and most malicious Prosecutors of this wicked Covenant made against Us and Our Authority, how he can be able to answer it to God, Us, and Our Crown, his own Conscience, or to the World, even in the point of Honour and Reputation, it must be left to the World to judge.

By this now which hath been said, We suppose it is plain that before either the Service-Book, or Book of Canons, so tragically now exclaimed against, were thought on, the Seeds of Sedition and Discontent were sown by the Contrivers of the late Covenant, first upon the occasion of our Revocation, next upon occasion of Our Commission of Surrenders, and lastly, upon the occasion of Our denying Honours to some of them at Our last being in that Kingdom, which caused first their traducing of Our proceedings in our last Parliament held there, and then produced that infamous Libel.

And now by this time Sedition was grown so ripe, and ready to Seed, that it wanted nothing to thrust it out, and make it shoot forth into an open Rebellion, but some fair and specious pretence: They could not yet compass the Cloak of Religion, whereby to siele the eyes, and muffle the face face of the Multitude, for by none of all the three former occasions could they so much as pretend that Religion was endangered or impeached: But so soon as they got but the least hint of any thing, which they thought might admit a mis-construction that way, they lost no time, but took Occasion by the forelock, knowing that either that, or nothing would first facilitate, and then perfect their designs. Now the occasion they took of fetching Religion within the reach of their pretences, was this:

Our Father of blessed memory immediately after his coming into England, comparing the decency and uniformity of Gods Worship here, especially in the Liturgy of the Church, with that diversitie, nay, deformity which was used in Scotland, where no Set or Publick Form of Prayer was used, but Preachers, or Readers, and ignorant Schoolmasters, prayed in the Church, sometimes so ignorantly as it was a shame to all Religion to have the Majesty of God so barbarously spoken unto; sometimes so seditiously, that their Prayers were plain Libels, girding at Sovereignty and Authority; or Lyes, being stuffed with all the false Reports in the Kingdom: He did immediately, as became a Religious Prince, bethink himself seriously how His first Reformation in that Kingdom might begin at the Publick Worship of God, which He most truly conceived could never be happily effected, until such time as there should be an unity and uniformity in the Publick Prayers, Liturgy, and Service of the Church, established throughout the whole Kingdom. Concerning this His Royal and Religious Design, divers Consultations, for many years, were had with the Bishops and others of the Clergy of most eminent note in that Kingdom.

But these Deliberations (as it happeneth many times in business of so pious and ponderous importance) received some opposition, and many intermissions, until the Year 1616. in a General Assembly (which is answerable to the Convocation of the Clergy here in England) held at Aberdeen in August, Our Royal Father by His Letters, and the vehement instance of His Commissioners then and there present, easily made apparent to that whole Assembly, not only the convenience, but indeed the necessity of a Publick Liturgy to be settled throughout the whole Land: Which moved that Assembly to pass an Act, whereby they authorised some of the present Bishops, and divers others, to compile and frame a Publick Form of Liturgy, or Book of Common Prayer, which should first be presented to Our Royal Father, and after His approbation should be universally received throughout the Kingdom. This Book in pursuance of that Act of Assembly, being by those who were deputed for that purpose framed, was by the Lord Archbishop of Saint Andrews that now liveth, sent up to Our Royal Father, who not only carefully and punctually perused every particular passage of it himself, but had it also considerably advised with, and revised by some of that Kingdom here in England, in whose Judgment he reposed singular trust and confidence; and after all His own and their Observations, Additions, Expunctions, Mutations, Accommodations, He sent it back to those from whom He had received it, to be commended to that whole Church, being a Service-Book in substance, frame, and composition, much about one with this very Service-Book which We of late commended to them, and which undoubtedly then had been received in that Church, if it had not pleased Almighty God, that while these things were in doing, and before they could receive their much wished and desired period and consummation, to the invaluable loss, as of the whole Church of God, so particularly of that Church of Scotland, to translate Our blessed Father from his Temporal Kingdoms to that which is Eternal.

We, by the Grace of God, succeeding to Our Royal Father, were desirous to make it known to the World, that We did not hold it a greater Honour to succeed Him in His Crowns, than to be His Successour in his Princely Vertues, and especially in that in which He was most eminent, His singular Piety and religious care of the Publick Service of God; which finding here in this Kingdom of England, by His singular wisdom and vigilancy, settled even to the admiration, if not envy, of all other Churches, We resolved by the Grace of God to pursue that His Pious and Princely Design, for settling a Publick Liturgy in that Our Kingdom of Scotland, it having been so happily achieved, facilitated, and almost perfected by Him: To which purpose We caused the same Service-Book, transmitted by Him to that Church, to be remitted and sent back to Us, that after Our perusal and alterations, if any should be found, either necessary, or convenient, it might likewise receive Our Royal Authority and Approbation: We having received that Book, and after many serious Consultations had with divers of Our Bishops and Clergy of that Kingdom then here present with Us, and after Our advices by Our Letters and Instructions to the rest at home, and after many humble Advertisements and Remonstrances made from them to Us of the Reasons of some Alterations, which they did conceive would remove divers difficulties, which otherwise they feared this Book would encounter with; We were contented that the Service-Book should come out as now it is printed, being fully liked by them, and signed with their hands, and perused, approved, and published by Our Royal Command and Authority.

In the perusal and approbation whereof, We took special care, that the small Alterations of it in which it differeth from the English Service-Book, should be such, as We had reason to think would best comply with the minds and dispositions of Our Subjects of that Kingdom: For we supposing that they might have taken some offence, if We should have tendered them the English Service-Book veridem verbi; and that some factious Spirits would have endeavoured to have mis-construed it as a Badge of Dependence of that Church upon this of England, which We had put upon them to the prejudice of their Laws and Liberties; We held it fitter that a new Book should be composed by their own Bishops, in Substance not differing from this of England, that so the Roman Party might not upbraid Us with any weighty or material differences in Our Liturgies; and yet in some few insensible Alterations differing from it, that it might truly and justly be reputed a Book of that Churches own composing, and established by Our Royal Authority, as King of Scotland. And thus conceiving We had discharged the Duty of a religious King towards God, and of a gracious Prince in accommodating this Book so, that Our Subjects of that Kingdom should have no cause to have the least suspicion of any intended dependancy of that Church upon this, We sent home the Book to the Lords of Our Privy Council: After their receipt and consideration of it, We, by their advice, and they, by Our Authority, Anno 1637. ty, commanded by publick Proclamation that the said Book should be publickly read and received in all the Churches of that our Kingdom, and should begin to be practised upon Easter next, 1637.

Disobedience to this Our Proclamation We had little reason to expect, because this Service-Book was no new thing unto them: For it not differing from the English Service-Book in any material Point, and We supposing that the English Liturgy neither was nor could be displeasing to them, did likewise conceive that this Book should be as little disliked by them: Now the reasons inducing Us to a belief of their not misliking the English Liturgy, were these.

First, Many of Our Subjects of that Kingdom of all sorts daily resorting to Our Court and the City of London, did much frequent our Chapel, many other Churches in or about the City, and many Churches, during their stay here at the several places of our Residence, and many other Churches within this Kingdom upon their way, both hither and homeward; in all which Churches they did behave themselves, during the time of Divine Service, with that reverence as others of Our Subjects of this Kingdom did, without any dislike of it, or quarrelling against it. Now these who resorted hither, being for quantity and number very considerable, and for quality (for the most part) of the very best, gave Us more than a probable assurance, that at home they would never accompt that absolutely in it self unlawful and Antichristian (as many of them have since professed,) unto which they had here of their own accord by their practice yielded obedience: For neither municipal Law, nor variation of time or place, nor any other circumstance, can allow Us to practise that which we hold in it self to be simply unlawful, Antichristian, and against the Word of God.

Secondly, In Our own Chapel at Holy-rude-house, ever since the Year of Our Lord 1617. the English Liturgy hath been read, and according to it Divine Service sung and said, as it is here said and sung in Our Chapels in England, not only without dislike, but with frequent Assemblies of Our Council, Nobility, Bishops, and other Clergy of all sorts, Judges, Gentry, Burgesses, Women of all Ranks. The Bishops, or some of them, never gave Orders (which they did frequently) but they used the English Service-Book, and in some Cathedral Churches of that Kingdom, as also in the new Colledge of the University of St. Andrews, for some years of late it was publickly read without any distaste, much less disturbance; for divers years it was used in many Families, and at Our last being in that Kingdom it was read publickly in all Churches to which We resorted, in which great numbers of all sorts of People were present. All which gave us good reason to conceive, that the commanding of this Book by our Authority, could not in any true sense be called or accounted an Innovation, all sorts of people, and very many of those of all Ranks, who now inveigh most bitterly against it, having been so accustomed to it, and acquainted with it, and that without any dislike of it, or complaint against it.

Thirdly, We confess that one of the chiefest reasons moving Us to believe, That that Service-Book (being in Substance all one with this of England) could not be held by them to contain any thing tending to Idolatry, Popery, or Superstition (as since they have pretended) was this;

We did foresee that all Objections bending that way must needs strike at the English Service-Book, as well as at that, (and indeed all of them which they have preached or published against that Book, do so;) but We did then, and do still take it as granted, that no man, who hath his wits about him, can charge the least suspicion of these things objected, upon the English Service-Book: For since it is well known to the whole Christian world, that the Composers and Framers of the English Service-Book, were those very famous Bishops and others, who in Queen Mary her days delivered up their living Bodies to the Fire, or escaping the Fire endured Banishment, and only because they would not yield to Popery and Superstition: How these men now, whom in their own judgment they hold to be ranked amongst the most glorious Martyrs of the Church, for resisting even to Blood, Idolatry, Popery, and Superstition, can with any conscience or honesty be charged by these men with compiling of a Book stuffed full with Idolatry, Popery, and Superstition, it requireth more than an ordinary understanding to apprehend. And besides, it will be made good, that more of the Bishops and learned Clergy of England, both for number and weight, have opposed Superstition and Popery, than can be found in all the Reformed Churches besides, who all of them have lived in the practice of the English Liturgy, and defended the same; which they would never have done if they had supposed it to contain Idolatry or Superstition.

These now were the Grounds which inclined Us to conceive that the Service-Book, authorized by Us for that Kingdom, was not like to receive any publick or considerable opposition, though We did never expect it should misse to meet with that misfortune which attendeth all other Books of this kind, and which hath waited upon the English Service-Book here, viz. to be disliked and defamed by some, whose Judgments either being weak, are not capable of satisfaction, or being distempered with the humours of singularity, are resolved never to receive, or at least never to seem to receive any satisfaction.

And yet, even those men too, especially they of the first sort, men of weaker judgment, before, and at the time of the publishing of this Book, were not cast without the compass of Our care and clemency: For We did with that Book send home certain Instructions and Directions to our Bishops of that Kingdom, signed with Our own hand, amongst which this was one: That notwithstanding We had now established this Book by Our Authority, yet they should proceed with all moderation, and dispense with such for the practice of some things contained in the Book, as they should find either not well perswaded of them, or willing to be informed concerning them, or did hope that time and reason might gain to a better belief of them: Nay yet more, to foresee what probable opposition this Book might be like to receive, We caused Our Council by Proclamation to publish a set day for the reading of it in all Churches, which was the Easter day following, 1637. All which time, though no symptoms of any considerable opposition did appear, yet upon good considerations, and for the further trial of mens minds, the first reading of it was delayed until the Three and twentieth of July next ensuing, to the end that the Lords of the Session, and others who had any Law-business, might see the success of it before the rising of the Session, which always endeth on the first of August.

August, and that so upon their return to their several Countries, they might report the receiving of this Book at Edinburgh; it being ordered, that on that Sunday the Book should be read only in the Churches of Edinburgh, and those which were next adjacent: And because it should not be read that day neither unexpectedly, warning was first printed, and then published in all these several Pulpits the Sunday immediately before, that the next Sunday the new Service-Book was to be read. After all which premonitions made only to try how the People stood affected, and no fear of tumult appearing: Nay, the Service-Book, which was to be read, having been in publick Sermons commended by many Preachers, without any apparent disgust of the Book, or disgrace offered to the Preachers persons: Nay, having been commended in Sermons by some of their now principal Covenanting Ministers, who since have been the greatest Railers against it, by none more than one Rollock a Minister of Edinburgh, who, both in a Sermon preached by him at a Synod held at Edinburgh before the Bishop of that Diocese, and in his Sermon on the Sunday of intimation of the reading of the Service-Book the next Sunday, did highly magnifie the said Book: And so the tending of this Book being thus prepared and sweetened with these gracious considerations of time, and expectation of the discovery of mens affections, which, for any thing appeared to the contrary, were very calm and composed, who could have imagined that the first reading of it should have been attended with such a barbarous Tumult and Insurrection, as was raised in the Churches and Streets of Edinburgh the Sunday following? The true Relation of which Tumult, as it was sent up to Us, doth here follow.

On the Twenty third day of July, 1637. being Sunday, according to the publick warning given the Sunday before, the Service-Book was begun to be read in Edinburgh in St. Giles's Church, commonly called the Great Church; where were present (as usually they are) many of Our Council, both the Archbishops and divers other Bishops, the Lords of the Session, the Magistrates of Edinburgh, and a very great Auditory of all sorts of People. Amongst this great Multitude there appeared no sign of trouble: But, no sooner was the Book opened by the Dean of Edinburgh, but a number of the meaner sort, who used to keep places for the better sort, most of them Women, with clapping of their hands, cursings, and outcries, raised such a barbarous hubbub in that sacred place, that not any one could either hear or be heard. The Bishop of Edinburgh, who was to preach, stepped into the Pulpit, which is immediately above the place where the Dean was to read, intending to appease the Tumult, by putting them in mind that the place, in which they then were, was holy ground, and by intreating them to desist from that fearful and horrible profanation of it: But he was entertained with as much irreverence as the Dean, and with more violence; in so much, that if a Stool, aimed to be thrown at him, had not by the Providence of God been diverted by the hand of one present, the life of that Reverend Bishop, in that holy place, and in the Pulpit, had been endangered, if not lost. The Archbishop of St. Andrews, Lord Chancellor, and divers others offering to appease the Multitude, were entertained with such bitter Curfes and Imprecations, as they not being able to prevail with the People, the Provost, Bailiffs, and divers others of the Council of that City, were forced to come down from the Gallery in which they do usually sit, and with much ado, in a very great Tumult and Confusion, thrust out of the Church these disorderly People, making fast the Church doors. After all which, the Dean devoutly read Service, assisted by Our Chancellors, Bishops, and many other Persons of Quality there present: Yet the out-cries, rapping at the Church doors, throwing of Stones at the Church-windows by the tumultuous Multitude without, was so great as the Bailiffs of the City were once more put to forsake their places, and use their best indeavours for the appeasing the rage and fury of those who were without. Service being ended, the Bishop preached, after which the Congregation was dismissed: The Bishop of Edinburgh retiring himself to a Lodging distant not many paces from the Church, was so invironed with a multitude of the meaner sort of People, cursing and crowding him, that he was near being trode to death; and in all probability had been so, if he had not recovered the Stairs of his Lodging, which he no sooner began to go up, but he was so pulled by the sleeve of his Gown by some of that rude Rout, that he had like to have tumbled backward down the Stairs, to the indangering of his Life, yet with much ado getting up the Stairs he found the Door, at which he should have entred, shut against him, and so being put to a stand, he had certainly been oppressed with the press and violence of that Rabble, if the Earl of Weems from his next Lodging, seeing the Bishop's life in danger, had not sent his Servants to rescue him, who got the Bishop almost breathless into his Lodging. The same Morning the Service-Book was read in the next Church to St. Giles's Church, not without noise and tumult, yet the fury was not so great as in the other Church. In the Gray Friars Church the Elect Bishop of Argyle (being Colleague to Master Ramsay, who refused to read it) began to read the Book, but he was so cursed and exclaimed against, and threatened to be pulled down, that after the reading of the Confession and Absolution, he was forced to give over. In the Colledge Church, Rollock, one of the Preachers there, who the Sunday before, at the intimation of the reading of it, had so much commended the Book, and had undertaken this day to read it, though he had the Book ready to be carried to the Church with him, yet, very wisely, resolved to halt a little, until he might know how it was entertained at St. Giles's Church, that so his Conscience might comply with the carriage of the multitude, whose rudeness being reported to him, he (notwithstanding his commendations of the Book, and his faithful promise to read it) thought it the safer course to leave himself to the censure of all men for his levity and breach of promise, than offend the Multitude, whose favour is the only Air in which he taketh delight to breathe and live: And thus that Morning passed.

Between the two Sermons, such of Our Council as were in the Town, assembled at the Lord Chancellour his Lodging, where the Lord Provost and Bailiffs of Edinburgh being called, undertook to do their uttermost endeavours for the quiet and peaceable reading of the Service-Book in the Afternoon, which accordingly they did, and so the Service-Book in St. Giles's and some other Churches, that Afternoon was read, without any such Tumult or Insurrection as it encountered with in the Morning; yet the furious Multitude, who stayed in the Streets, and little regarded the Service of God in the Churches, intermitted nothing of their their madness: For the Lord Privy Seal, Earl of Roxborough, returning home to his Lodging, and having with him in his Coach the Bishop of Edenburgh, was near suffering the death of the first Martyr St. Stephen, his Coach and Coach-man, for having the Bishop in it, being so pelted with stones, and hooted at with execrations, and pressed upon by the eager and mad Multitude, that if the Lord Privy Seal his Foot-men had not with their Swords kept them off, they in the Coach had been brought in danger of their lives, having after long and continual bickerings much ado to recover their Lodgings.

And now We desire all men to consider what blessing and success from Heaven may be expected upon this grand and important Reformation of Religion, as they call it, the begetter and beginner whereof was the horrible profanation of the Lords own Day, and that in the Lord's own Houses and Temples, and all this attended with the contempt and treading under foot the Sacred Authority and Laws of Us the Lord's Anointed, as also with the violation of the Persons of the Lord's Priests and Prophets, his Bishops and Ministers, and all these practised by a base Multitude, disavowed and disclaimed at that time by all Magistrates and Persons put in Authority, and all others of any Rank or Quality, who branded that Multitude with the Names of the Scum and Froth of the People, and offered themselves, to the uttermost of their diligence & assistance, for the finding of them out, and bringing them to highest and condign Punishment, as shall presently appear by the Demeanour of the Magistrates when they were called before our Council for that purpose.

For the next day, being the 24th of July, 1637. Our Council assembled, and sent forth a Proclamation in detestation of the Uproar and Tumult the day before, and discharged all concourses of People and tumultuous Meetings in Edenburgh under pain of death; at which time the Magistrates of Edenburgh being then present at Our Council Table, professed their utter abhorring and detesting of the last Tumult, and apprehended some suspected to be most forward in it, and thereupon were commanded and ordered by an Act of Our Council of the 26th of July, to assemble the Council of the City next Morning by eight of the Clock, and then and there to resolve what course they thought fittest to be held for the finding out of the Movers of, and chief Actors in the late seditious Uproar, and immediately after to report their diligence and resolutions herein: Which report they accordingly made to Our Council, not only with a detestation of that Tumult, and promises of their best diligence for finding out the Authors and Abettors of it, but also with large proffers of their best Assistance for the quiet and peaceable establishing and reading of the Service-Book in all their Churches.

But the Ministers of that City being loath to undertake the reading of it, without some security given for the safety of their Persons, the Lords of Our Council by their Act of the 28th of July, 1637. ordered the Provost, Bailiffs, and Council of Edenburgh to advise amongst themselves concerning some obligatory Act to be made by them, for a real performance of what they had undertaken, and should further undertake for the peaceable exercise of the Service-Book, which they accorded unto, and promised, that since the former Readers in their several Churches, had refused to read the Book, if in the mean time the Ministers themselves would read it, they would take order for their safety, and when new Readers should be provided, they would take order both for their security and settled Maintenance and Allowance: In pursuance whereof, an obligatory Act was drawn up by Our Advocate, and read before Our Council to the Magistrates of Edenburgh the sixth of August 1637. to which they humbly consented, and on the Tenth of the same Month, the said Act of Indemnity being exhibited before Our Council, was allowed by them, and accordingly passed and entered in Our Council-Book as an Act of Council. And so now this late Tumult in all appearance being settled, and not only fathered upon the Scum and Dregs of the People, but cried down by all men either of place or quality, and by none more than by the Magistrates and Ministers of Edenburgh. Our Council not fearing any new Outrage, proceeded to these two things.

First, To the exemplary punishing of such of the Heads of the late Tumult as they should discover: And next, to the settling of the practice of the Service-Book, and appointing a new day for renewing the exercise of it; to which the Bishops, Magistrates and Ministers of Edenburgh agreed: And this their forwardness the Magistrates of that City were not only contented to express before Our Council, both by their verbal Promises and Protestations, as also their obligatory Act remaining upon record, and registred in Our Books of Council, but likewise by two particular Letters sent by them into England unto the Lord Archbishop of Camberbury, in which they desired him to recommend unto Us, their care of, and fidelity to Our Service, and to undertake for them to Us their zeal and forwardness, for settling the peaceable practice of the Service-Book: Which Letters We here have caused to be inserted, that the Reader may see what names of simplicity and ignorance they bestow upon that Multitude, which made the first opposition, and withal take notice of the Names of the Magistrates subscribers to these Letters; for some of them (which hardly could be expected from reasonable men) will be found to be very forward, if not Leaders in the next succeeding Sedition, and so of the rest which have followed since. The Letters are these:

Most Reverend Father in God, and our very good Lord,

WE regret from our hearts that Tumult which did fall out in our Churches that day of the bringing of the Service-Book, wherein now these of his Majesties Council, who have laboured the trial thereof, will give testimony of our Innocency: Since that time and the rising of his Majesties Council in this serial time, we have daily concurred with our Ordinary, and our Ministry for settling of that Service-Book, as the Right Honourable the Earl of Traquair Lord Treasurer, with the Bishops of Galloway and Dunblane will bear witness; who have spared neither pains nor attendance to bring that purpose to a good conclusion: And although the poverty of this City be great, being almost exhausted with publick and common Works, yet we have not been lacking to offer good means, above our Power, to such as should undertake that Service; and in all things wherein we have been required, we have ever been ready really to approve our selves obedient and loyal Subjects to his Majesty, in all his Royal Commandments, which we have vowed ever to second to our lives end. And we being infinitely obliged to your Grace's favours, we now presumed by these lines to give your Grace that assurance of obedience upon our part, in this purpose and in all other purposes wherein Anno 1637. we may contribute to the advancement of his Majesties Service, or can be expected of good Subjects: Whereof if his Majesty by your Grace shall be pleased to rest assured, whatsoever any other shall suggest, we will accept it from you as a great accumulation of favour; for all which your Grace shall ever find us most thankful Remembrancers, and most ready really to express our thankfulness, whenever we shall be made so happy as that your Grace shall have occasion to use our Service. Thus from our hearts wishing you all happiness, we kiss your Graces hands.

The Second Letter.

Most Reverend Father in God, and our very good Lord;

WE did receive your Graces kind Letter, and from our hearts we do render your Grace most hearty thanks; and as we have hitherto found your special favour in this matter, concerning the lately imprinted Service-Book, whereanent we did write to your Grace formerly, shewing our dutiful and obedient resolution, not only in our selves, but in the greatest and best part of our Inhabitants, of whom from time to time we had most confident assurance; so now we must again become new Suiters at your Graces hands to receive from us a true information of the difference of the present time, and of that when we did presume to write the occasions thereof, which is, that since our last there hath been such an innumerable confluence of People from all the corners of this Kingdom, both of Clergy and Laity, and of all degrees by occasion of two Council-days, and such things suggested to our poor ignorant People, that they have razed, what we by great and continual pains had imprinted in their minds, and have diverted them altogether from their former resolutions, so that now when we were inged by our selves alone, we could not adventure, but were forced to supplicate the Lords of Council to continue us in the state they had done the rest of this Kingdom; having hitherto forbore either to combine with them, or to countenance them in their supplications, yet we will not forbear to do our Masters service to our power, but shall study to imprint in their minds what hath been taken away, in the interim we will humbly beg your Graces favour and intercession with his Majesty, that we may be kept still in his favour, which we do esteem our greatest earthly felicity, and that what course shall be taken with the rest of this Kingdom in that matter, who have presented many Supplications, and with whom we have in no ways combined, that the same and no other way may be taken with us, wherein we are confident to prevail as much as any other within the Kingdom, and in all things shall endeavour nothing more, than that we may approve our selves most dutiful and obedient Subjects. Thus relying upon your Graces favour, as our most assured Refuge, we kiss your Grace's hands, and rests,

These indeed were fair words, and specious promises, but nothing more; for these very men, the Subscribers of these Letters, did underhand abett the Tumults, and did afterwards (as we shall find by the sequel of this story) become prime Covenanters themselves; and his Majesties Remark hereupon is very remarkable, That this first Tumult was owned by none, condemned and cried down by all, the Authors of it, and Actors in it, called by all sorts by no better names than Rogues, and the base Multitude. What will you then think, if that within very few days you shall see the very same liberal bestowers of these names entring upon the same Stage, repeating and acting over again the parts of that mad Multitude; Only the Stage you shall see a little better hanged, and the Scenes better set out, and the Play having a more specious Name of Piety and Religion? For soon after, these base and unruly People, who were so much out in their first Act of Rebellion, (as Actors at the first are not commonly perfect) were in the Pulpits, even for that their first and foul Act, so much of late hissed at and decried, afterwards magnified for the most Heroical Sparks that ever God inspired and raised up in this last Age of the World; and though they were but Asses, yet they were cried up for having their mouths opened immediately by God, as the mouth of Balaam's Ass was, to the upbraiding of all the rest of the Land, who held their peace when they should have cried and braied as they did: Their happy mouths and hands, which God was pleased to honour that day with the beginning of their new blessed Reformation, and occasioning their Celestial Covenant (as they called it) were so highly extolled by their Preachers, that they assured their Auditors that their Memorials should be eternal, whom before they had called the Scum of the People, and the base Multitude, and that all succeeding Generations should call them blessed. These high flown speeches, and many others of the like extravagant strain, both in the Pulpits and out of them, immediately after the first Tumult, and ever since, have been bestowed, and that not sparingly, upon that Multitude, which not long before they called base and rascal: But no wonder, for many of the better sort having succeeded that Multitude in the same madness, they must needs now give them new, high, and Heroical Titles, such as they would have given to themselves now acting their parts; for now their own Actions come next upon the Stage to be viewed and judged.

The Harvest approaching, calls the Rabble and Gentry too into the Country, and in the interval the Bailiffs of Edinburgh Petition the Council, That the Service-Book (notwithstanding their former Undertakings to the Archbishop of Canterbury) might not be preist upon them; but no sooner was Harvest over, but the Conflux of the disaffected were so great at Edinburgh, that a present Rebellion was much feared: Hereupon the Council emit three several Proclamations following.

Anno 1637. Apud Edinburgh 17. Octob. 1637.

FOrasmuch as it hath pleased the King's Majesty, upon divers good respects and considerations, to give warrant and direction to the Lords of his Majesties Privy Council, for dissolving the meeting of this Council-day, in so far as concerneth matters of the Church: And that every one that hath come to attend this business, repair to their own dwellings, except such persons as shall make known to the said Lords of Council just cause of stay for their particular affairs; Therefore the said Lords, according to his Majesties special warrant and direction sent unto them, have dissolved, and by the tenour hereof do dissolve the meeting of this Council-day, in so far as concerns the business above written; And ordains a Maissar of Council to pass to the Mercate Cross of Edinburgh, and to make publication hereof; And to command every one that hath come hither to attend this business, to repair home to their own dwellings within 24 hours after the publication hereof, except such persons as shall make known to the said Lords just cause of their further particular affairs in manner aforesaid, under the pain of Rebellion, and putting them off to the Horn; with certification to them, that if they fail they shall be denounced Rebels, and put to the Horn, and all their moveable Goods escheat to his Majesties use.

Apud Edinburgh 17. Octob. 1637.

FOrasmuch as it hath pleased the King's Majesty upon divers great and good considerations known to his Majesty, to remove his Council and Session from the City of Edinburgh to the Burgh of Dundie: And whereas it is inconvenient at this time to remove it so far, his Majesty is graciously pleased that this next Session shall be holden at the Burgh of Linlithgow, and the next after the ordinary vacants at the Burgh of Dundie, and there to remain during his Majesties pleasure: And therefore the said Lords, according to his Majesties special direction, ordains Maissars or Officers of Arms to pass and make publication hereof to all his Majesties good Subjects by open Proclamation at all places needful, whereby they can pretend no ignorance thereof, but may prepare themselves to attend at Linlithgow and Dundie accordingly.

Apud Edinburgh Octob. 17. 1637.

FOrasmuch as the Kings Majesty is credibly informed, that there is a certain Book, intituled, A Dispute against the English Popish Ceremonies, obtruded upon the Kirk of Scotland, and hath been sent abroad and dispersed in this Kingdom, purposely to stir the hearts and affections of the Subjects from their due obedience and allegiance: And therefore it hath pleased his Majesty to give order and direction to his Council, that diligent inquiry and search be made for the said Book; And for this effect the said Lords ordains Letters to be directed to make intimation and publication to all his Majesties Subjects, that such of them as have any of the said Books, bring in the same to the Lords of his Majesties Privy Council betwixt the date of this Proclamation and the day of And the said Books being brought in, that the same be publicly burnt, certifying all his Majesties Subjects, if any of these Books shall be found or known to have been with any of them after the time aforesaid, that they shall incur the like censure and punishment as the Author may be found to deserve for any thing contained in that Book.

But what effect had these Edicts? Truly no other than an open Insurrection, which happened the day after the date of the last Proclamation, which was in this manner as we see.

On the eighteenth of October 1637. the Bishop of Galloway, and Sir William Elphinston, Lord Chief Justice of that our Kingdom, being appointed by the Lords of our Council to examine Witnesses in a Cause depending before them, between Francis Stuart, Son to the late Earl of Bothwell, and divers others, the Bishop was peaceably passing along the Street towards the Council-house where the Examinations were to be taken: But suddenly an enraged Multitude surrounded him, and followed him with fearful curlings and exclamations close to the Council-house door, where he was again encountered afresh with a new troop, who watched, and lay in wait for his coming thither, and whose fury exceeded words; for in all probability the Bishop had been pulled in pieces by them, if by Divine Providence he had not been defended by the said Francis Stuart, who with much ado got the Bishop within the doors of the Council-house, where our Lord Chief Justice stayed for him: But when he was there, that place of highest Reverence within that our Kingdom, was no Sanctuary for him; for they continued demanding his person, and threatening him with death. The report hereof, and the danger of their Lords life, was brought by some of the Bishop's Servants presently to the Earl of Traquair, our Lord Treasurer, and the Earl of Wigton, one of the Lords of our Council, who were then at a Lodging not far from thence: They came presently with their followers to the relief of the Bishop, but very hardly, for the croud of the Mutineers, could approach the Council-house where he was; at last, when with much ado they got entrance, they found themselves in no better case than the Bishop was, for the Peoples fury meeting with no proportionable resistance, increased the more. The Lords thus beset in our Council-house, sent privately to the Lord Provost, Bailiffs, and Council of Edinburgh, who were then assembled in their own Council-house, requiring them to come to their rescue, and to take some present order for their safety: They, by one Sir Thomas Thompson, who indeed was an Eye-witness of the truth of it, returned this answer; That they were in the same, if not a worse case themselves, if the Lords without did not presently pacifie the enraged Multitude; that the whole Streets were pestred with disorderly People; that their Council-house was beset without, and thronged within, with their own threatening Citizens, who had vowed to kill all within their House, unless they did presently subscribe to a Paper presented to them, which for fear of their lives they were forced to do: Which Paper contained these three particulars; First, That they should joyn with them in opposition to the Service-Book, and in petitioning Us for that purpose. Secondly, That by their Authority they should presently restore unto their Pulpits and Places Master Ramsay and Rollock, their two silenced Ministers. Thirdly, That they should restore unto his place one Henderson a silenced Reader: No doubt three most important grounds for such a fearful Sedition. No better answer being returned, the Lord Treasurer and the Earl of Wigton, with their Followers, resolved to go up to the Town Council-house, and to use the uttermost of their Authority, or (if that found no respect) their best perswasions for settling the present Sedition: When they came thither, they found the Magistrates were much discomposed, and greatly perplexed, as much doubting whether they should ever escape from the place with their lives; yet they presently entred into Consultation with them about what was fittest to be done in such an exigent; and finding now that the publick divulging of that Paper which the Magistrates and Council of the City had subscribed, and that the open Proclamation of it throughout all their turbulent Troops, and at the Cross, had a little aswaged their furious rage, the Lords begun to advise with the Magistrates what was best to be done for the safety of the Bishop of Galloway, whom they had left besieged in the Council-house: It was thought fit by all, that the Lords should return to Our Council-house, and contain themselves therein, till the Magistrates might try what they could do for calming the Commotion in the Streets: But no sooner had the Lords presented themselves to the Streets, but they were received with such violence as they were forced to retire, until such time as two of the Bailiffs, with their Serjeants and Officers, and such others as they got to attend them, accompanying the Lords, and repeating to the Multitude what had been yielded to in the Paper exhibited to them, a little way was made at first; But presently when they entred upon the great Street, the barbarous Multitude run most enragedly upon them: Their out-cries were horrible and confused, but were (as much as in such a confusion could be distinguished,) God defend all those who will defend God's Cause, and God confound the Service-Book, and all the Maintainers of it. The Lords being in present and imminent danger, assured the People that they would represent their Grievances to Us; And when they perceived that the People refused to obey any Commandment which was laid upon them in Our Name, and that they slighted their requiring of them to retire unto their own Houses, and to behave themselves as quiet and good Subjects, under pain of Our highest displeasure, they were glad then to betake themselves to intreaties and plausible persuasions; but all in vain: For the People still increased their fury, and that to such a height, as that the L. Treasurer was thrown down, his Hat, Cloak, & white Staff pulled from him, so that if by the strength of some about him, he had not been presently pulled up again upon his feet, he had undoubtedly been trode to death, and in that posture, without Hat or Cloak, like a notorious Malefactor, was he carried by the Croud to our Council-house door, where the Bishop of Galloway and others of our Council were imprisoned, in great fear, and expecting the Lords return for their relief. Not long after the Provost and Bailiffs came thither to them, told them they had used their uttermost power and persuasions with the best, ablest, and of the prime esteem of all their Citizens, for the appeasing of the present Tumult, and securing their Lordships persons, but could find no concurrence nor obedience: Whereupon the Lords resolved to send for some of the Noblemen, and Gentry, and others who were now frequently assembled for assisting the Petition against the Service-Book, to try what help they would or could contribute for quieting the enraged People, and what assistance they might expect from them in freeing them from the present danger: They, being sent for, came to the Lords and declared unto them how much they were unsatisfied with the present Mutiny, offered their Persons and Power for securing them from all violence; which the Lords in our Council-house accepting of, with much ado (being guarded by them whom the People would not offend) the Lord Treasurer got to our Palace at Haly-rud-house, and the Bishop of Galloway to his Lodging: But the Lord Provost was again set upon as he was entering his own House, and was so pressed upon by the Multitude, that they crouded with him into his own Yard, railing upon him, and throwing Stones at his Windows, until some of his Servants discharging a Peece which had nothing but Powder in it, they retired for fear. In this Tumult none were more forward and inexorable, than two who were Bailiffs the Year before, and who had subscribed the two Letters to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Tumult being a little appeased, the Council met at Haly-rud-house, and command the Proclamation following to be made at the Market-Cross of Edinburgh, in hæc verba.

At Haly-rud-house the 18 of Oct. 1637.

Forasmuch as a number of the Lords of his Majesties Privy Council, as likewise the Town Council of Edinburgh, being this day convened in their several Judicatories for his Majesties special Affairs and Service, they were most rudely interrupted in the course of their proceedings, by a tumultuous gathering of the promiscuous and vulgar multitude, by whom his Majesties Council and Servants in an open way was shamefully environed: Which being a matter very disgraceful to his Majesties Authority and lawful Government, and which in the consequence thereof, may produce dangerous effects, if the like be not prevented in the time to come; Therefore the Lords of secret Council, according to the duty of their place and charge incumbent unto them, Ordains a Maiflar of Council to the Mercate Cross of Edinburgh, and there by open Proclamation to discharge all publick Gatherings and Convocations of his Majesties Subjects within the City of Edinburgh, and upon the Streets thereof; as likewise all private Meetings tending to faction and tumult: And in his Majesties Name and Authority, to command and charge all his Majesties lieges and inhabitants within the said City, to contain themselves in peace and quietness; and for that effect to keep their Houses, except when their lawful business doth otherwise call them, Under all highest pain and charge that by rigour of Law can be inflicted upon the Contraveners of the Premises in manner above expressed.

The Proclamation prevailed not at all on those of Edinburgh, yea rather, notwithstanding the insolencies already committed, the next Council day they had the impudence to send their Commissioners to the Council, requiring that their own Ministers and Readers might be restored to them, and Security be given for what their Magistrates had promised them at their last Tumults, and before the pacification thereof. And from these relations it will easily appear, whether (as his late Majesty said) this their intended glorious Reformation, which, according to their religious Intentions and ardent Prayers, they say, God, even to a Miracle, hath so graciously prospered in their hands, be like to proceed from God, the first act whereof was begun in the Church, with contempt of God and profanation of the House where his Honour dwelleth, and the violation of those persons who serve at his Altar; and the second Act whereof, was presented on the Streets of the capital City of the Kingdom, with the contempt of the highest Authority under God, viz. Us and Our Laws, and offering violence to the persons of our Counsellors and chief Officers of State, not forbearing the Anno 1637. the very Houses and Places where our Council for that Kingdom, and Our Magistrates of that City do usually sit, and were then sitting; which places have alwaies been accounted Sacred, and have duely challenged all respect and reverence.

So that it is observable by what degrees this Rebellion hath risen, as if it had been before-hand well studied and contrived, every rank entering upon the Stage in their due turns, in which they served and answered one another: The first Tumult was begun by the basest sort of that City, whom the Authors of this second Insurrection did then, even for that first Tumult, condemn by the name of Rascals and Scum of the People. The second Uproar, far more Seditious and dangerous than the former, was made by the best sort of Citizens, excepting only the Magistrates, and some few others, yet disavowed and disliked (at least in shew) by the Nobility, Gentry, and the Magistrates of the City; but these last Mutiners were not so cried down by them as the former, nor did they put such vile names of Rebels and Rascals upon them, nor did they shew any signification of their desire to have them questioned or punished for that Tumult, because now the quality of these last Mutiners persons gave some good countenance to the designs which they themselves had in hand: For these Noble-men, Gentry, and Magistrates being themselves to perform the third Act of that Tragedy, at the first whereof they had hissed, and seemed to dislike the second, held it not fit to be too severe in condemning of that which it seems they meant shortly after to act themselves, and in a more dangerous way: For first, their Protestation against Our Proclamation, and then their Covenant against Us and Our Authority, were next to come upon the Stage; which though they were of the same Plot and piece with the two other former Insurrections; yet because they were to be better acted, and the Actors, men of greater eminency, they hoped their parts should not find such foul names as the former had found: As if the things being the same, the names of Protestation or Covenant could alter the nature of Insurrection and Rebellion; like those of that Bloody League in France, who hoped that the very name of the HOLY LEAGUE would cause in the World a mistake of their meaning, and palliate their most wicked and unnatural Treasons, for rooting out their lawful Sovereign and true Religion. And now this highest and worst part cometh next to be related.

Presently after these Tumults, they present to the Chancellor two Petitions; the first against the Service-Book, in the name of all the Men, Women, and Children, and Servants of the City of Edinburgh; the other was from the Nobility, Gentry, Ministers, and Burgesses against both the Service-Book and Canons. The Tenor of the First was as followeth:

My Lord Chancellor,

† Observe that the Children as well as the rest considered this. Unto your Lordship humbly shews, we Men, Women, and Children, and Servants, In-dwellers within the Burgh of Edinburgh: That whereas we being urged with this Book of Service, and having considered the same, We find many things therein so far different from the form of God's Publick Worship Universally received and professed within this Kingdom. And we Burgesses, being at our entry and admission deeply sworn for the maintenance thereof, that now makes our Hearts to tremble, and our weak Con-sciences will not suffer us to embrace and practise this urged Service. We have this long time past, winked at some former alterations, being put in hope that no further Novations should follow. But now we being oppressed, with our just fears to see our selves deprived of that liberty in serving God which ever hath been approved by Church and Kingdom: In place whereof we are now like to be constrained to embrace another, which hath neither been agitated nor received either by general Assembly or Parliament: In such extremity we are most humbly to supplicate your Lordship to consider our present estate, and that this business is a matter of so great weight and consequence, as should not appear to be a needless noise of simple Women, but it is the absolute desire of all our Hearts for preservation of true Religion amongst us, which is dearer to us than either Estate or Life: And therefore we do humbly crave, that as the rest of the Kingdom, so we may have a time to advise, and that your Lordship may find out some way whereby we may be delivered from the fear of this and all other Innovations of this kind, and have the happiness to enjoy the true Religion, as it hath been by the great mercy of God reformed in this Land, and authorized by his Majesty, who may long and prosperously Reign over us: And your Lordships answer.

The Tenour of the Second was as followeth:

My Lords of Secret Council,

Unto your Lordships humbly shews; We Noble-men, Barons, Ministers, Burgesses, and Commons; That whereas we were in humble and quiet manner attending a gracious answer of our former supplications against the Service-Book imposed upon us, and ready to shew the great inconveniences which upon the Introduction thereof must ensue, we are, without any known desert, far by our expectation, surprized and charged by publick Proclamation to depart out of the Town within twenty four hours thereafter, under pain of Rebellion; by which peremptory and unusual charge, our fears of a more severe and strict course of proceeding are augmented, and course of our supplication interrupted: wherefore we are constrained, out of the deep grief of our hearts, humbly to remonstrate, that whereas the Archbishops and Bishops of this Realm, being intrusted by his Majesty with the Government of the Affairs of the Church of Scotland, have drawn up and set forth, and caused to be drawn up and set forth, and enjoined upon the Subjects two Books; In the one whereof, called the Book of Common-Prayer, not only a sown the seeds of divers Superstitions, Idolatry, and false Doctrine, contrary to the true Religion established within this Realm, by divers Acts of Parliament; But also the Service-Book of England is abused, especially in the matter of Communion, by additions, subtractions, interchanging of words and sentences, falsifying of Titles, and misplacing of Collects, to the disadvantage of Reformation, as the Romish Mass is, in the more substantial points, made up therein, as we offer to instruct in time and place convenient, quite contrary unto and for reversing the gracious intention of the blessed Reformers of Religion in England. In the other Book called Canons and Constitutions for the government of the Church of Scotland, they have ordained, That whosoever shall affirm that the form of Worship imposed in the Book of Common-Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, whereof heretofore and now we most justly complain, doth

Anno 1637. contain any thing repugnant to the Scriptures, or are corrupt, superstitious, or unlawful in the Service and Worship of God, shall be Excommunicated, and not be restored but by the Bishop of the place, or Archbishop of the Province, after his repentance and publick revocation of this his wicked error, and to the overthrow of our Church Discipline established by Acts of Parliament, opening a door for what further invention of Religion they please to make, and stopping the way which Law before did allow unto us for suppressing of error and superstition; And ordaining, That where in any of the Canons there is no Penalty expressly set down, the punishment shall be Arbitrary as the Bishop shall think fittest: All which Canons were never seen nor allowed in any General Assembly, but are imposed contrary to order of Law, appointed in this Realm for establishing Constitutions Ecclesiastical; unto which two Books, the foresaid Prelates have under trust procured his Majesties Royal hand and Letters Patents, for pressing the same upon his Loyal Subjects, and are the Contrivers and Devisers of the same, as doth clearly appear by the Frontispiece of the Book of Common-Prayer, and have begun to urge the acceptance of the same, not only by injunctions given in Provincial Assemblies, but also by open Proclamation and charge of Homing, whereby we are driven in such straits as we must either by Process of Excommunication and Homing suffer the ruin of our Estates and Fortunes, or else by breach of our Covenant with God, and forsaking the way of true Religion, fall under the wrath of God, which unto us is more grievous than death. Wherefore we being perswaded that these their proceedings are contrary to our gracious Sovereign his pious intention, who out of his zeal and Princely care of the preservation of true Religion established in this his ancient Kingdom, hath ratified the same in his Highness Parliament, 1633. And so his Majesty to be highly wronged by the said Prelates, who have so far abused their credit with so good a King, as thus to insnare his Subjects, rend our Church, undermine Religion in Doctrine, Sacraments, and Discipline, move discontent between the King and his Subjects, and discord between Subject and Subject, contrary to several Acts of Parliament: We out of bound duty to God, our King and native Country, complain of the foresaid Prelates, humbly craving, that this matter may be put to trial, and these our parties taken order with according to the Laws of the Realm; And that they be not suffered to sit any more as Judges, until the cause be tried and decided according to Justice. And if this shall seem to be to you a matter of higher importance than you will condescend unto, before his Majesty be acquainted therewith, Then we humbly supplicate, that this our grievance and complaint may be fully represented to his Majesty, That from the influence of his Gracious Sovereignty and Justice these wrongs may be redressed, and we have the happiness to enjoy the Religion, as it hath been reformed in this Land.

A more exact account of these Petitions, and of the Exorbitancy of the Scots in this their Rebellion, we cannot better give you, than from his Majesties larger Declaration, where they are in their proper and fit colours shewn to the World. The King's words are these:

IN this Petition, saith his Majesty, it may be worthy the observing, That they complain of the mangling of the English Service-Book, and of the abuses offered unto it, and the wronging of the intentions of the blessed Reformers of Religion here in this Kingdom, whereas in their Sermons and ordinary discourse, they do usually inveigh against the Service-Book here, for being stuffed with Superstition and Popery, and that the first Reformers of this Church never departed fully from Rome: And in this last Petition they begin to make their Grievances swell, adding their dislike of the Book of Canons to their former distaste of the Service-Book; the occasion of Our Authorizing of which Book of Canons, was this.

As We were desirous to settle one uniform Form of Publick Prayer and Divine Service throughout that Our Kingdom, and for that purpose authorized the Service-Book, so We conceived that it was not only expedient, but necessary that there should be one uniform Form of Church Government throughout the same; and because there was no Book extant containing any Rules of such Government, so that neither the Clergy nor Laity had any certain rule either of the ones power, or of the others practice and obedience, and considering that the Acts of their general Assemblies were but written, and not Printed, and so large and voluminous, as it is impossible that so many Copies of them should be transcribed, as that they may come to the use and knowledge of many, and so Apocryphal, as that few or none of themselves can tell which of them are authentical, and so unsafely and uncertainly kept, that they do not know whether to address themselves for finding of them; We could not imagine but that it should have been acknowledged, and received with all thankfulness, that We had reduced their numerous Acts, and those not known to them, to such a paucity of Canons, and those published, that none could be insnared through ignorance, nor complain that they were over-charged with the multiplicity of them: For it may be averred with unquestionable certainty, that not one in that Our Kingdom did either live under the obedience of the Acts of the general Assemblies, or did know what they were, or where certainly to have them: And yet these men have interpreted Our furthering their knowledge and facilitating and conveniencing their obedience for one of the most grievous burthens was ever laid upon them: But no wonder it is, if, when mens minds are once out of taste with Government, nothing tending to order relisheth well with them.

Their Petition was sent up to Us by Our Council: But We seeing no sign of Repentance for, or disavowing of their late Tumults, until some order might be taken for the finding out and punishment of the Authors of them, resolved to delay the answering of their Petition, but in the mean time commanded Our Council to signify to all our good Subjects Our averfeness from Popery, and detestation of Superstition, the contrary suggestions whereof We found the Heads of this Rebellion had used for abusing of Our loyal Subjects, and so accordingly Our Council caused a Proclamation to be made at Lithgow, which was this:

FOr as much as the King's Majesty, having seen the Petition presented to the Lords of his Majesties Privy Council, and by them sent up to his Majesty concerning the Service-Book, determined to have taken the same into his Royal consideration, and so have given his Gracious Answer thereanent with all conveniency: Like as his Majesty by his Letters to his Council of the date of the Ninth of October last, did signify his gracious resolution to the effect aforesaid.

But

Anno 1637. But since that time, his Majesty finding (far contrary to his expectation) that such disorderly, tumultuous and barbarous insolences have been committed within the City of Edinburgh upon the eighteenth of October last, to the great contempt of his Majesties Royal Authority, by abusing his Majesties Councillors and Officers of State, with others bearing charge and authority under his Majesty within the said City: His Majesty in a just resentment of that foul indignity, (wherein his Majesties Honour did so much suffer) hath been moved to delay the signification of his Majesties gracious intention, in giving to his Subjects such satisfactory answers to their Petitions as in equity might have been expected from so just and religious a Prince; But yet his Majesty being unwilling that his Loyal and faithful Subjects should be possessed with groundless and unnecessary doubts and fears, His Majesty is pleased out of his goodness to declare, like as by these presents he declareth, That as he abhorreth all Superstition of Popery, so he will be most careful that nothing be allowed within his Majesties Dominions, but that which shall tend to the advancement of the true Religion, as it is presently professed within his most ancient Kingdom of Scotland: And that nothing is or was intended to be done therein against the laudable Laws of this his Majesties native Kingdom. And ordaineth publication to be made hereof in form as aforesaid.

At this time We sent into Scotland the Earl of Roxburgh Lord Privy Seal, with certain instructions to Our Council for ordering these disordered affairs; according to which they appointed the Council to sit at Dalkeith, being not above four miles from Edinburgh, that so they might the more easily know what passed in that place, now become the seat of the Rebellion; and they removed the Session or Term from Lishgow to Sterling, a place of twenty four miles distance from Edinburgh, that so the huge disorderly Multitudes there assembled, might be dispersed, by the necessity of the attendance of such as had any Law-busines: At the same time the Earl of Traquair, Lord Treasurer of that Kingdom, whom We had sent for hither, was returned back with directions from Us: He, with Our Lord Privy Seal, and other principal Counsellours, repaired to Sterling, where by Our Commandment they caused a Proclamation to be made for the dispersing of the huge and dangerous Multitudes there assembled, and the assuring of Our Subjects of Our sincerity towards the Religion established in that our Kingdom. And there, first, the Nobility, Gentry, Ministers, and Burgessees did the same thing which they themselves called the Up-roar of Rascals at the first reading of the Service-Book in the Churches of Edinburgh, and which they condemned, but in milder terms, by the name of an unjustifiable act, in that great Sedition at Edinburgh on the eighteenth of October, 1637. For by them, first at Sterling, then at Lishgow, and last at Edinburgh, was made the first avowed affront to Us, our Authority and Laws: For at Sterling, our Proclamation being made, the Earl of Hume, and the Lord Lindsey, assisted with many others of all ranks, made a Protestation against the same; which Protestation was afterward repeated at Lishgow, and last at Edinburgh, where, when upon the Cross, our Proclamation was made by our Officers with sound of Trumpets, and assisted with our Heralds, with our Coats of Arms upon their backs, it was received, while it was in reading, with jeering and laughing, and after it was ended with a Protestation against it, made by many Earls Lords, Ministers, and Burgessees, and the conflux of all other sorts of people, who were all of them so malapert as not to suffer our Heralds and Officers to come off the Cross, but forced them to stay and hear their Protestation against our Proclamation, as if both had been made by the same Authority. And if this now were not a higher act of Rebellion than either the first Tumult raised in the Churches, against which they so much declaimed; or the second Insurrection at Edinburgh, which they so much disclaimed, we leave it to the World to judge. The Copies both of our Proclamation and their Protestation We have here inserted, that themselves, as well as others, may see that We wrong not the truth.

CHARLES by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To our Lovets, &c.

Our Sheriffs in that part conjunctly and severally, specially constituted, greeting. For as much as We, out of Our Princely care of maintenance of the true Religion already professed, and for beating down of all Superstition, having ordained a Book of Common-Prayer to be compiled for the general use and edification of Our Subjects within Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, the same was accordingly done. In the performing whereof, We took great care and pains; So as nothing past therein but what was seen and approved by Us, before the same was either divulged or Printed, assuring all our loving Subjects, that not only Our intention is, but even the very Book will be a ready means to maintain the true Religion already professed, and beat out all Superstition; Of which We in Our own time do not doubt but in a fair course to satisfy Our good Subjects. But having seen and considered some Petitions and Declarations given in to Our Council against the said Book and late Canons of the Church, We find Our Royal Authority much injured thereby, both in the matter and in the carriage thereof; whereby we conceive these of Our Nobility, Gentry, Burroughs, Ministers and others, who kept and assisted these Meetings and Convocations for contriving and forming the said Petitions, or who have subscribed the same, to deserve and be liable to Our high censure, both in their persons and fortunes, as having convened themselves without either Our consent or authority; Yet because We believe that what they have done herein is out of a preposterous zeal, and not out of any disloyalty or disaffection to Sovereignty, We are graciously pleased in so far as concerns these Meetings for consulting or subscribing of these Petitions, or presenting the same to any Judge or Judges in Our said Kingdom, to dispense therewith, and with what may be their fault or error therein, to all such as upon signification or declaration of Our pleasure shall retire themselves as becometh good and dutiful Subjects: To which purpose Our will is, and We charge you straightly, and command, that incontinent these Letters seen, you pass, and in Our name and authority make intimation hereof, to all Our Lieges and Subjects, by open Proclamation at all places needful, wherethrough none pretend ignorance thereof; And therewith also, That you in Our name and authority discharge all such Convocations and Meeting in time coming, under the pain of Treason: And also that you command, and charge, and inhibit all Our Lieges and Subjects, that none of them presume nor take in hand to resort nor repair to Our Burgh of Sterling, nor to no other Burgh, where Our Council and Session sit, till first they declare their cause of coming to Our Council, and procure their Warrant to that effect.

And

1637.

And further, that you command and charge all and sundry Provosts, Bailiffs, and Magistrates within Burgh, That they and every one of them have a special care and regard to see this Our Royal will and pleasure really and dutifully obeyed in all points; And that no violation thereof be suffered within their bounds, under all highest pain, crime, and offence that they may commit against Us in that behalf: As also that you command and charge all and sundry Noble-men, Barons, Ministers and Burroughs, who are not actual In-dwellers within this Our Burgh, and are not of the number of the Lords of our Privy Council and Session, and members thereof, and are already within this Our Burgh, that they, and every one of them, remove themselves, and depart and pass forth of our said Burgh, and return not again, without the Warrant aforesaid, within six hours after the publication hereof, under the said pain of Treason. And as concerning any Petitions that hereafter shall be given unto Us, upon this or any other Subject, We are likewise pleased to declare, that We will not shut Our ears therefrom; so that neither the matter nor form be prejudicial to our Regal Authority. The which to do We commit to you, conjunctly and severally, our full power by these our Letters, delivering the same by you duly execute and indorsed again to the bearer. Given under our Signet at Sterling the nineteenth day of February: And of our Reign the thirteenth year, 1638.

Per auctum Secreti Concilii.

Here followeth their Protestation.

For God and the King.

WE Noble-men, Barons, Ministers, Burroughs, appointed to attend his Majesties Answer to our humble Petition and complaint, and to prefer new Grievances, and to do what else may lawfully conduce to our humble desires; That whereupon the 23 of September last, we presented a Supplication to your Lordships, and another upon the 18 of October last, and also a new Bill relative to the former upon the 19 of December last, and did therein humbly remonstrate our just exceptions against the Service-Book, and Book of Canons; and also against the Archbishops and Bishops of this Kingdom, as the Contrivers, Maintainers, and wagers thereof, and against their sitting as our Judges until the cause be decided; earnestly supplicating withal to be freed and delivered from these and all other innovations of that kind, introduced against the laudable Laws of this Kingdom; as that of the High Commission, and other evils particularly mentioned, and generally contained in our aforesaid Supplications and Complaints, and that this our party delinquent against our Religion and Laws may be taken order with, and these pressing grievances may be taken order with and redressed according to the Laws of this Kingdom, as by our said Supplications and Complaints more largely doth appear: With the which on the 19 of December last, we gave in a Declinator against the Archbishops and Bishops as our Parties, who by consequence could not be our Judges; whereupon your Lordships declared by your Act at Dalkeith the said 19 of December, that you would present our Petitions to his Majesties Royal consideration, and that without prejudice of the Declinator given in by us the said Supplicants; whereupon we should be heard at place and time convenient. And in the mean time should receive no prejudice, as the said Act in it self beareth. And whereas we your Lordships Supplicants with a great deal of patience, and hope also, grounded on sundry promises, were expecting an answer to these our humble desires, and having learned that upon some directions of his Majesties anent our Supplications and Complaint unto your Lordships of the Secret Council, your Lordships admits to the consulting and judging anent our Supplications, and His Majesties Answer thereunto, the Archbishops and Bishops our direct Parties, contrary to our Declinator first propounded at Dalkeith, and now renewed at Sterling; and contrary to your Lordships Act aforesaid at Dalkeith, and contrary to our Religion, and Laws, and humble Supplications. Therefore, lest our silence be prejudicial to this so important a cause, as concerns God's Glory and Worship, our Religion, Salvation, the Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom, or derogatory to the former Supplications and Complaints, or unanswerable to the trust of our Commission; out of our bound Duty to our God, our King and native Country, we are forced to take instruments in Notaries hands, of your Lordships refusal to admit our Declinator, or remove these our Parties, and to protest in manner following: First, That we may have our immediate recourse to our Sacred Sovereign, to present our grievances, and in a legal way to prosecute the same before the ordinary competent Judges, Civil or Ecclesiastical, without any offence offered by us, or taken by your Lordships. Secondly, We protest that the said Archbishops and Bishops, our Parties complained upon, cannot be reputed or esteemed lawful Judges to sit in any Judicatory in this Kingdom, Civil or Ecclesiastical, upon any of the Supplicants, until after lawful trial judicially they purge themselves of such crimes as we have already laid to their charge, offering to prove the same whensoever his sacred Majesty shall please to give us audience. Thirdly, We protest that no Act nor Proclamation to follow thereupon, past, or to be past in Council or out of Council, in presence of the Archbishops and Bishops, whom we have already declined to be our Judges, shall anywaies be prejudicial to us the Supplicants, our persons, estates, lawful meetings, proceedings, or pursuits. Fourthly, We protest that neither we nor any whose heart the Lord moveth to join with us in these our Supplications, against the aforesaid Innovations, shall incur any danger in Life, Lands, or any Political or Ecclesiastical pains, for not observing such Acts, Books, Canons, Rites, Judicatories, Proclamations, introduced without or against the Acts of General Assemblies, or Acts of Parliament, the Statutes of this Kingdom; But that it shall be lawful to us or them to use our selves in matters of Religion of the external Worship of God and Policy of the Church, according to the Word of God, and laudable Constitutions of this Church and Kingdom, conform to His Majesties Declaration the ninth of December last. Fifthly, seeing by the legal and submissive way of our former Supplications, all who takes these Innovations to heart, have been kept calm and carried themselves in a quiet manner, in hope of redress; We protest that if any inconvenience shall happen to fall out (which we pray the Lord to prevent) upon the pressing of any of the foresaid Innovations or evils, especially or generally contained in our former Supplications and Complaints, and upon your Lordships refusal to take order thereanent, the same be not imputed to us, who most humbly seeks all things to be reformed by an Order. Sixthly, we protest that these our requests, proceeding from Conscience and a due respect to his Majesties Honour, do tend to no other end, but to the preservation of the true reformed Religion, the Laws and Liberties of this His Majesties most ancient Kingdom, and satisfaction of our most humble desires contained in our Supplication and Complaint, according to his Majesties accustomed Goodness and Justice, from which we do certainly expect that His Sacred Majesty will provide and grant such remedy to our

Car. 13.

† It is not so: for the Council never promised that the Bishops should be removed from the Table, but only that they would make us acquainted with their Petition.

just Petitions and Complaints, as may be expected from so gracious a King toward most loyal and dutiful Subjects, calling for redress of so pressing grievances, and praying to God that his Majesty may long and prosperously Reign over us.

Against which Protestation We shall now say nothing, because it is contained and repeated in another larger Protestation of theirs, which shall be inserted hereafter, and there it shall receive a full answer: Only We desire the Reader to observe these two things in it; First, the iniquity and injustice of their demanding some of our Bishops to be removed from our Council; nay, and (which we think never was heard before) their protesting against all Acts to be done and passed in our Council at which any of them shall be present, alledging that this their Protestation against them, and Declinator of them, maketh them to be Parties, and so they cannot be Judges; and withal they require them first to be removed, and then promise they will make proof of such crimes against them as shall declare the justice of their removal; which is all one as to intreat them first to condemn a man, and then to try him: And if a Protestation against their sitting in Council, and a Declinator of our Councils authority (neither of them admitted by our Council) shall make some Councillors to be Parties, and invalidate all Acts of Council so long as these Councillors, whom they have fancied to be Parties, sit there; how their last pretended general Assembly, against which there were so many Protestations made both by the Bishops and others, and which by all these Protesters was declined as Judge, because the members of it had all made themselves Parties, can be counted a lawful general Assembly, or the members of it lawful Judges, We leave it to themselves to reconcile: And if they should say, that these Protestations and Declinators against the Assembly were repelled by the Assembly, who was the sole Judge of them, let them remember, that their Protestation against the Bishops, and their Declinator against our Councils authority, if they should not eject them, were both of them likewise repelled and rejected by Our Council, who was the only true Judge of them, their last pretended Assembly being no true but only a pretended Judge of the others, after the Assembly was dissolved by our Authority. And Secondly, We shall desire the Reader to observe, that their demands in this Protestation are very far short of those which are made by them in their succeeding Protestations, which swell with far more bold and insolent demands than this doth, although this be bold and insolent enough:

But it is an usual course with the Heads of all Rebellions, to draw in that Party, by whose power they intend to make good their wicked plots, with small things at the first, concealing from them the depth of their intentions, until they have engaged them so far, as they can make them believe that there is no safety in retreating, when their crimes are past hope of Pardon.

And now after this their first Protestation, began the most unnatural, causeless, and horrible Rebellion that this or perhaps any other Age in the World hath been acquainted with: For now these Protesters begin to invest themselves with the supreme Ensigns and Marks of Majesty and Sovereignty, by erecting publick Tables of advice and Council, for ordering the Affairs of the Kingdom, without our authority, and in contempt of us and our Council established by us there, and by entering into a Covenant and most wicked Band & combination against all that shall oppose them, not excepting our own Person, directly against the Law of God, the Law of Nations, and the municipal Laws of that our Kingdom: So that after this their Protestation, they perfected that which they had before begun confusedly, and as it were in a ruder draught: For then, contrary to our express commandment and authority expressed in our last Proclamations, and repeated unto them by our Council, they did erect a great number of Tables (as they called them) in Edenburgh: Four principal, One of the Nobility, another of the Gentry, a third of the Burroughs, a fourth of Ministers; and the Gentry had many subordinate Tables, according to their several Shires: These several Tables did consult of what they thought fit to be propounded at the general Table, which consisteth of several Commissioners chosen from the other four Tables; and what they of the general Table resolved on, was to be put in practice with a blind and Jesuitical obedience: A rare and unheard form of Government in a Kingdom whose Government ever was Monarchical, and which they themselves still say continueth to be so: Sure these Meetings by wise men have been accounted rather Stables of unruly Horses, broken loose and pulling down all they can reach, than Tables for the consultations of wise and rational men. Now the first dung which from these Stables was thrown upon the face of Authority and Government, was that lewd Covenant, and Seditious Band annexed unto it, which We here subjoin, because We are confident that by the very recital and perusal of it, every religious and wise man may run and read that sentence of condemnation which it carrieth in its own front.

Confession of Faith OF THE
KIRK of SCOTLAND, SUBSCRIBED

By the King's Majesty and his Household in the year of God, 1580. With a Designation of such Acts of Parliament as are expedient for justifying the Union after mentioned; And Subscribed by the Nobles, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgeses, Ministers, and Commons, in the year of God, 1638.

So Joshua made a Covenant with the people the same day, and gave them an Ordinance and Law in Sichem, Josh. xxiv. 25.

And Jehoiada made a Covenant between the Lord and the King, and the People, that they should be the Lord's People; likewise between the King and the People, 2 King. xi. 17.

One shall say, I am the Lord: another shall be called by the name of Jacob: and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, &c. Isa. xlv. 5.

The King's Majesties Charge, to all Commissioners and Ministers within this Realm, in the year of God, 1580.

Seeing that We and Our Household have Subscribed and given this publick Confession of Our Faith, to the good example of Our Subjects, We command and charge all Commissioners and Ministers, to crave the same Confession of their Parochianars, and proceed against the refusers, according to Our Laws and Order of the Kirk, delivering their names and lawful process to the Ministers of Our House, with all haste and diligence, under the pain of forty pounds to be taken from their stipend, that We, with the advice of Our Council, may take order with such proud contemners of God and Our Laws.

Subscribed with Our Hand, at Haly-rud-house, 1580. the 2 day of March, the 14 year of our Reign.

The Confession of Faith, subscribed at first by the King's Majesty and his Household, in the year of God, 1580. Thereafter, by Persons of all Ranks, in the year 1581. by Ordinance of the Lords of the Secret Council, and Acts of the General Assembly. Subscribed again by all sorts of Persons in the year 1590. by a new Ordinance of Council, at the desire of the General Assembly: With a general Band for maintenance of the true Religion and the King's Person. And now subscribed in the year 1638. by us, Noble-men, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgeses, Ministers, and Commons under subscribing: Together with our resolution and promises, for the causes after specified; To maintain the said true Religion, and the King's Majesty, according to the Confession aforesaid, and Acts of Parliament. The Tenor wherof here followeth:

WE All, and every one of us underwritten, Protest, That after long and due examination of our own Consciences, in matters of true and false Religion, are now thoroughly resolved of the Truth, by the Word and Spirit of God, and therefore we believe with our hearts, confess with our mouths, subscribe with our hands, and constantly affirm before God and the whole World;

that this only is the true Christian Faith and Religion, pleasing God, and bringing Salvation to man, which now is by the mercy of God revealed to the World, by the Preaching of the blessed Evangel.

And received, believed, and defended, by many and sundry notable Kirks and Realms, but chiefly by the Kirk of Scotland, the King's Majesty, and three Estates of this Realm, as God's Eternal Truth, and

only ground of our Salvation: as more particularly is expressed in the Confession of our Faith, established, and publickly confirmed by sundry Acts of Parliament, and now of a long time hath been openly professed by the King's Majesty, and whole Body of this Realm, both in Burgh and Land. To the which Confession and form of Religion, we willingly agree in our Consciences in all points, as unto God's undoubted Truth and Verity, grounded only upon his written Word. And therefore, We abhor and detest all contrary Religion, and Doctrine: But chiefly, all kind of Papistry, in general and particular heads, even as they are now damned and confuted by the Word of God, and Kirk of Scotland: but in special we detest and refuse the usurped authority of that Roman Antichrist, upon the Scriptures of God, upon the Kirk, the Civil Magistrate, and Consciences of men. All his tyrannous Laws made upon indifferent things against our Christian Liberty. His erroneous Doctrine, against the sufficiency of the written Word, the perfection of the Law, the office of Christ and his blessed Evangel. His corrupted Doctrine concerning original sin, our natural inability and Rebellion to God's Law, our justification by Faith only, our imperfect sanctification and obedience to the Law, the nature, number, and use of the holy Sacraments. His five bastard Sacraments, with all his Rites, Ceremonies, and false Doctrine, added to the Ministration of the true Sacraments without the Word of God. His cruel judgment against Infants, departing without the Sacrament: his absolute necessity of Baptism: his blasphemous opinion of Transubstantiation, or real presence of Christ's Body in the Elements, and receiving of the same by the wicked, or bodies of men. His dispensations with solemn Oaths, Perjuries, and degrees of Marriage forbidden in the Word: his cruelty against the innocent divorced: his devilish Mass: his blasphemous Priesthood: his profane Sacrifice for the sins of the dead and the quick: his Canonization of men, calling upon Angels or Saints departed, worshipping of Imagery, Relicks, and Crosses, dedicating of Kirks, Altars, Daies, Vows to creatures; his Purgatory, prayers for the dead, praying or speaking in a strange Language, with his Processions and blasphemous Letany, and multitude of Advocates or Mediators: his manifold Orders, Auricular Confession: his desperate and uncertain repentance; his general and doubtful faith; his satisfactions of men for their sins: his justification by works, opus operatum, works of supererogation, Merits, Pardons, Peregrinations, and Stations: his holy Water, baptising of Bells, conjuring of Spirits, crossing, anointing, conjuring, hallowing of God's good creatures, with the superstitious opinion joined therewith: his worldly Monarchy, and wicked Hierarchy: his three solemn vows, with all his shavelings of sundry sorts, his erroneous and bloody Decrees made at Trent, with all the subscribers and approvers of that cruel and bloody Band, conjured against the Kirk of God: and finally, we detest all his vain Allegories, Rites, Signs, and Traditions, brought in the Kirk, without or against the Word of God, and Doctrine of this true reformed Kirk; to the which we join our selves willingly, in Doctrine, Faith, Religion, Discipline, and use of the holy Sacraments, as lively members of the same, in Christ our Head: promising, and swearing by the Great Name of the Lord our God, that we shall continue in the obedience of the Doctrine and Discipline of this Kirk, and shall defend the same according to our vocation and power, all the daies of our lives, under the pains contained in the Law, and danger both of body and soul in the day of God's fearful Judgment: and seeing that many are stirred up by Satan and that Roman Antichrist to promise, swear, subscribe, and for a time use the Holy Sacraments in the Kirk deceitfully, against their own Consciences, minding thereby, first, under the external cloak of Religion, to corrupt and subvert secretly God's true Religion within the Kirk, and afterward, when time may serve, to become open enemies and persecutors of the same, under vain hope of the Popes dispensation, devised against the Word of God, to his greater confusion, and their double condemnation in the day of the Lord Jesus.

We therefore, willing to take away all suspicion of hypocrisy, and of such double dealing with God and his Kirk, Protest, and call The searcher of all hearts for witness, that our minds and hearts do fully agree with this our Confession, Promise, Oath and Subscription; so that we are not moved for any worldly respect, but are persuaded only in our Consciences through the knowledge and love of God's true Religion, printed in our hearts by the holy Spirit, as we shall answer to Him in the day when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed. And because we perceive that the quietness and stability of our Religion and Kirk doth depend upon the safety and good behaviour of the King's Majesty, as upon a comfortable instrument of God's mercy granted to this Country for the maintaining of His Kirk, and ministration of Justice amongst us, we protest and promise with our hearts under the same Oath, Hand-writ, and pains, that we shall defend His Person and Authority, with our Goods, Bodies, and Lives, in the defence of Christ his Evangel, liberties of our Country, ministration of Justice, and punishment of iniquity, against all enemies within this Realm, or without, as we desire our God to be a strong and merciful Defender to us in the day of our death, and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ: To whom, with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be all honour and glory eternally.

Like as many Acts of Parliament not only in general do abrogate, annul, and rescind all Laws, Statutes, Acts, Constitutions, Canons Civil or Municipal, with all other Ordinances and practick penalties whatsoever, made in prejudice of the true Religion and Professours thereof: Or, of the true Kirk Discipline, Jurisdiction and freedom thereof: Or, in favours of Idolatry and Superstition: Or, of the Papistical Kirk: As, Act. 3. Act. 31. Parl. 1. Act. 23. Parl. 11. Act. 114. Parl. 12. of King James the sixth, That Papistry and Superstition may be utterly suppressed, according to the intention of the Acts of Parliament reported in Act. 5. Parl. 20. K. James 6: And to that end they ordain all Papists and Priests to be punished by manifold Civil and Ecclesiastical pains, as Adversaries to God's true Religion, Preached and by Law established within this Realm, Act. 24. Parl. 11. K. James 6. as common enemies to all Christian Government, Act. 18. Parl. 16. K. James 6. as Rebels and Gainstanders of our Sovereign Lords authority, Act. 47. Parl. 3. K. James 6. and as Idolaters, Act. 104. Parl. 7. K. James 6. but also in particular (by and attour the Confession of Faith) do abolish and condemn the Popes Authority and Jurisdiction out of this Land, and ordains the maintainers thereof to be punished, Act. 2. Parl. 1. Act. 51. Parl. 3. Act. 106. Parl. 7. Act. 114. Parl. 12. K. James 6. do condemn the Pope's erroneous Doctrine, or any other erroneous Doctrine repugnant to any of the Articles of the true and Christian Religion publicly Preached, and by Law established in this Realm: And ordains the spreaders and makers of Books or Libels, or Letters, or Writs of that nature to be punished, Act. 46. Parl. 3. Act. 106. Parl. 7. Act. 24. Parl. 11. K. James 6. do condemn all Baptism conform to the Pope's Kirk and the Idolatry of the Mass, and ordains all sayers, wilful hearers, and concealers of the Mass, the maintainers and referrers of the Priests, Jesuites, trafficking Papists, to be punished without any exception or restriction, Act. 5. Parl. 1. Act. 120. Parl. 12. Act. 164. Parl. 13. Act. 193. Parl. 14. Act.

Act. 1. Parl. 19. Act. 5. Parl. 20. K. James 6. Anno 1638. do condemn all erroneous Books and Writs containing erroneous Doctrine against the Religion presently professed, or containing superstitious Rites and Ceremonies Papistical, whereby the people are greatly abused, and ordains the home-bringers of them to be punished, Act. 23. Parl. 11. K. James 6. do condemn the monuments and dregs of by-gone Idolatry, as, going to Crosses, observing the Festival daies of Saints, and such other superstitions and Papistical Rites, to the dishonour of God, contempt of true Religion, and fostering of great error among the people, and ordains the users of them to be punished for the second fault as Idolaters, Act. 104. Parl. 7. King James 6.

Like as many Acts of Parliament are conceived for maintenance of God's true and Christian Religion, and the purity thereof in Doctrine and Sacraments of the true Church of God, the liberty and freedom there, of, in her National, Synodal Assemblies, Presbyteries, Sessions, Policy, Discipline and Jurisdiction thereof, as that purity of Religion and liberty of the Church was used, professed, exercised, Preached, and confessed according to the Reformation of Religion in this Realm. As for instance, Act. 99. Parl. 7. Act. 23. Parl. 11. Act. 114. Parl. 12. Act. 160. Parl. 13. K. James 6. ratified by Act. 4. K. Charles. So that Act. 6. Parl. 1. and Act. 68. Parl. 6. of K. James 6. in the year of God 1579. declares the Ministers of the blessed Evangel, whom God of his mercy had raised up, or hereafter should raise, agreeing with them that then lived in Doctrine and Administration of the Sacraments, and the people that professed Christ, as he was then offered in the Evangel, and doth communicate with the holy Sacraments (as in the reformed Kirkes of this Realm they were presently administrate) according to the Confession of Faith, to be the true and holy Kirk of Christ Jesus within this Realm, and decerns and declares all and sundry, who either Gain-saies the Word of the Evangel, received and approved as the Heads of the Confession of Faith, professed in Parliament, in the year of God, 1560. specified also in the first Parliament of King James 6. and ratified in this present Parliament, more particularly do specify; or that refuses the Administration of the holy Sacraments, as they were then ministrated, to be no members of the said Kirk within this Realm, and true Religion presently professed, so long as they keep themselves so divided from the Society of Christ's body: And the subsequent Act. 69. Parl. 6. K. James 6. declares, That there is no other face of Kirk, nor other face of Religion, than was presently at that time, by the favour of God, established within this Realm, which therefore is ever stiled God's true Religion, Christ's true Religion, the true and Christian Religion, and a perfect Religion. Which, by manifold Acts of Parliament, all within this Realm, are bound to profess to subscribe the Articles thereof, the Confession of Faith, to recant all Doctrine and errors repugnant to any of the said Articles, Act. 4. and 9. Parl. 1. Act. 45, 46, 47. Parl. 3. Act. 71. Parl. 6. Act. 106. Parl. 7. Act. 24. Parl. 11. Act. 123. Parl. 12. Act. 194. and 197. Parl. 14. of K. James 6. And all Magistrates, Sheriffs, &c. on the one part, are ordained to search, apprehend, and punish all contraveners: for instance, Act. 5. Parl. 1. Act. 104. Parl. 7. Act. 25. Parl. 11. King James 6. And that, notwithstanding of the King's Majesties Licences on the contrary, which are discharged and declared to be of no force, in so far as they tend in any waies to the prejudice and hinder of the execution of the Acts of Parliament against Papists, and Adversaries of true Religion, Act. 106. Parl. 7. King James 6. on the other part, in the 47. Act. Parl.

3. King James 6. it is declared and ordained, seeing the cause of God's true Religion and his Majesty's Authority are so joyned, as the hurt of the one is common to both; and that none shall be reputed as Loyal and Faithful Subjects to our Sovereign Lord, or his Authority, but be punishable as Rebels and Gain-standers of the same, who shall not give their Confession, and make their profession of the said true Religion; and that they who after defection shall give the Confession of their Faith of new, they shall promise to continue therein in time coming, to maintain our Sovereign Lord's Authority, and at the uttermost of their power to fortifie, assist, and maintain the true Preachers and Professours of Christ's Religion, against whatsoever Enemies and Gain-standers of the same: and Namely, against all such of whatsoever Nation, Estate, or Degree they be of, that have joined and bound themselves, or have assisted or assisted, to set forward and execute the cruel Decrees of Trent, contrary to the Preachers and true Professours of the Word of God, which is repeated word by word in the Articles of Pacification at Pearth the twenty third of February 1572. approved by Parliament the last of April 1573. ratified in Parliament 1578. And related, Act. 123. Parl. 12. of King James 6. with this addition, That they are bound to resist all Treasonable Uproars and Hostilities raised against the true Religion, the King's Majesty, and the true Professours.

Like as all Lieges are bound to maintain the King's Majesties Royal Person and Authority, the Authority of Parliaments, without the which neither any Laws or lawful Judicatories can be established, Act. 130. Act. 131. Parl. 8. King James 6. and the Subjects Liberties, who ought only to live and be Governed by the Kings Laws, the Common Laws of this Realm allannerly, Act. 48. Parl. 3. K. James 1. Act. 79. Parl. 6. King James 4. repeated in Act. 131. Parl. 8. King James 6. Which if they be innovated or prejudged, the Commission against the union of the two Kingdoms of Scotland and England, which is the sole Act of the 17. Parl. of King James 6. declares, such confusion would ensue, as this Realm could be no more a free Monarchy, because by the fundamental Laws, ancient Privileges, Offices and Liberties of this Kingdom, not only the Princely Authority of his Majesties Royal descent hath been these many Ages maintained, but also the Peoples security of their Lands, Livings, Rights, Offices, Liberties and Dignities preserved; and therefore for the Preservation of the said true Religion, Laws, and Liberties of this Kingdom, it is Statute by Act. 8. Parl. 1. repeated in Act. 99. Parl. 7. ratified in Act. 23. Parl. 11. and 114. Act. of King James 6. and 4. Act. of King Charles, That all King's and Princes at their Coronation and reception of their Princely Authority, shall make their faithful promise by their solemn Oath in the presence of the Eternal God, that enduring the whole time of their Lives, they shall serve the same Eternal God, to the uttermost of their power, according as he hath required in his most Holy Word, contained in the Old and New Testaments. And according to the same Word, shall maintain the true Religion of Christ Jesus, the Preaching of his holy Word, the due and right ministrations of the Sacraments, now received and Preached within this Realm (according to the Confession of Faith immediately preceding) and shall abolish and Gain-stand all false Religion, contrary to the same, and shall rule the people committed to their charge, according to the will and command of God revealed in his foresaid Word, and according to the lawable Laws and Anno 1638. and considerations received in this Realm, no ways repugnant to the said will of the eternal God, and shall procure, to the uttermost of their power, to the Kirk of God, and whole Christian people, true and perfect peace in all time coming; and that they shall be careful to root out of their Empire all Hereticks, and enemies to the true worship of God, who shall be convicted by the true Kirk of God of the foresaid Crimes; which was also observed by his Majesty at his Coronation in Edinburgh 1633. as may be seen in the order of the Coronation.

In obedience to the commandment of God, conform to the practice of the godly in former times, and according to the laudable example of our worthy and religious Progenitors, and of many yet living amongst us, which was warranted also by Act of Council, commanding a general Band to be made and subscribed by his Majesties Subjects of all ranks, for two causes: One was, for defending the true Religion, as it was then reformed, and is expressed in the Confession of Faith above written, and a former large Confession established by sundry Acts of lawful General Assemblies, and of Parliament, unto which it hath relation, set down in publick Catechisms, and which had been for many years with a blessing from Heaven, preached, and professed in this Kirk and Kingdom, as God's undoubted truth, grounded only upon his written Word: The other cause was, for maintaining the Kings Majesty, his Person and Estate; the true Worship of God, and the King's Authority being so straightly joyned, as that they had the same Friends and common Enemies, and did stand and fall together. And finally, being convinced in our minds, and confessing with our mouths, that the present and succeeding Generations in this Land, are bound to keep the foresaid national Oath and subscription inviolable, We Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgeses, Ministers, and Commons under subscribing, considering divers times before, and especially at this time, the danger of the true Reformed Religion, of the King's honour, and of the publick Peace of the Kingdom, by the manifold innovations and evils generally contained and particularly mentioned in our late supplications, complaints, and protestations, do hereby profess, and before God, his Angels, and the World solemnly declare, That, with our whole hearts we agree and resolve all the daies of our life constantly to adhere unto, and to defend the foresaid true Religion, and forbearing the practice of all novations, already introduced in the matters of the worship of God, or approbation of the corruptions of the publick Government of the Kirk, or civil places and power of Kirk-men, till they be tried and allowed in free Assemblies, and in Parliaments, to labour by all means lawful to recover the purity and liberty of the Gospel, as it was established and professed before the foresaid novations, And because, after due examination, we plainly perceive, and undoubtedly believe, that the innovations and evils contained in our Supplications, Complaints, and Protestations have no warrant of the Word of God, are contrary to the Articles of the foresaid Confessions, to the intention and meaning of the blessed Reformers of Religion in this Land, to the above written Acts of Parliament, and do sensibly tend to the re-establishing of the Popish Religion and Tyranny, and to the subversion and ruin of the true Reformed Religion, and of our Liberties, Laws, and Estates. We also declare, that the foresaid Confessions are to be interpreted, and ought to be understood of the foresaid novations and evils, no less than if every one of them had been expressed in the foresaid Confessions; and that we are obliged to detest and abhor them, amongst other particular heads of Papistry abjured therein. And therefore from the knowledge and conscience of our duty to God, to our King and Countrey, without any worldly respect or inducement, so far as humane infirmity will suffer, wis-

ing a further measure of the Grace of God for this effect, We promise and swear by the Great Name of the Lord our God, to continue in the Profession and Obedience of the foresaid Religion: That we shall defend the same, and resist all these contrary errors and corruptions, according to our vocation, and to the uttermost of that power that God hath put in our hands, all the days of our life: And in like manner, with the same heart, we declare before God and Men, That we have no intention nor desire to attempt any thing that may turn to the dishonour of God, or to the diminution of the Kings Greatness and Authority: But on the contrary, we promise and swear, that we shall, to the uttermost of our power, with our means and lives, stand to the defence of our dread Sovereign, the King's Majesty, his Person and Authority, in the defence and preservation of the foresaid true Religion, Liberties, and Laws of the Kingdom; As also to the mutual defence and assistance, every one of us of another in the same cause of maintaining the true Religion, and his Majesties Authority, with our best counsel, our bodies, means, and whole power, against all sorts of persons whatsoever. So that, whatsoever shall be done to the least of us for that cause, shall be taken as done to us all in general, and to every one of us in particular. And that we shall neither directly nor indirectly suffer our selves to be divided or withdrawn by whatsoever suggestion, combination, allurement, or terror, from this blessed and loyal Conjunction, nor shall cast in any let or impediment, that may stay or hinder any such resolution, as by common consent shall be found to conduce for so good ends. But on the contrary, shall by all lawful means labour to further and promote the same: And if any such dangerous and divisive motion be made to us by Word or Writ, we, and every one of us, shall either suppress it, or, if need be, shall incontinent make the same known, that it may be timely obviated; neither do we fear the foul aspersions of Rebellion, Combination, or what else our adversaries from their craft and malice would put upon us, seeing what we do is so well warranted, and ariseth from an unfeigned desire to maintain the true worship of God, the Majesty of our King, and the peace of the Kingdom, for the common happiness of our selves, and the posterity. And because we cannot look for a blessing from God upon our proceedings, except with our Profession and Subscription we joyn such a life and conversation, as becometh Christians, who have renewed their Covenant with God; We therefore faithfully promise, for our selves, our followers, and all others under us, both in publick, in our particular families and personal carriage, to endeavour to keep our selves within the bounds of Christian liberty, and to be good examples to others of all Godliness, Soberness, and Righteousness, and of every duty we owe to God and Man. And that this our Union and Conjunction may be observed without violation, We call the living God, the Searcher of our Hearts, to witness, who knoweth this to be our sincere Desire, and unfeigned Resolution, as we shall answer to JESUS CHRIST in the great day, and under the pain of God's everlasting wrath, and of infamy, and of loss of all honour and respect in this world: Most humbly beseeching the LORD, to strengthen us by his Holy Spirit for this end, and to bless our desires and proceedings with a happy success, that Religion and Righteousness may flourish in the Land, to the glory of God, the honour of our King, and peace and comfort of us all. In witness whereof we have subscribed with our hands all the premises, &c.

TO dispute against this Covenant Scholastically, or otherwise than by vindicating Our Royal Authority, and the Monarchical Government of that Our ancient Kingdom, is far beneath Us; and therefore We would only know, how they can possibly answer these four Questions to the World.

First, By what Authority they entered into this Covenant, and how they durst presume to exact an Oath from any of Our Subjects to it, or any thing else; it being an irrefragable proposition, That no publick Oath can be administred but by a Magistrate, or by one sufficiently deputed by Authority to administer it: For it is a Badge annexed to Magistracy and Authority, to have power of giving and taking an Oath; and therefore they cannot satisfie the world by what Authority or deputation from Authority they did give this Oath to, and receive it from Our Subjects. They do answer, That though they have no Law for it, yet they have President; For this Confession of Faith (say they in the Title of their Covenant) was subscribed by Our Father of happy memory, and his household, in the year 1580. thereafter by persons of all ranks in the year 1581. and that by the Ordinance of the Lords of the Secret Council, and Acts of the General Assembly: Subscribed again, by all sorts of persons in the year 1590. by a new Ordinance of Council at the desire of the General Assembly, with a general band for maintenance of true Religion and the King's person. Now, was this their Confession of Faith, and Covenant annexed, commanded to be sworn and subscribed by Us, by any order from Our Council, or by any Act of General Assembly? But they will say, that it being once commanded, that Commandment is still in force and vigour. That is indeed a good ground or president for Us and Our Council, to command this same Oath to be renewed when We shall see cause; but the repetition of it must still be by the same Authority by which it was at the first enjoined: Now the first injunction of this Subscription was made by Our Royal Father, in the year 1580. the first renewing of it in 1581. was (as they say themselves) by an Ordinance of the Lords of the Secret Council; the second renewing of it 1590. was by a new Ordinance of Council at the desire of the General Assembly. By which it is plain, that the Judgment of the General Assembly, (which in those days was at the highest, and was not wont to derogate from their own power) was, that this Oath could not be renewed, nor any Band, but by Authority from Our Royal Father and his Council. Again, have they not printed in the Frontispiece of this their Covenant Our Royal Father's charge to certain Commissioners, and all Ministers within that Realm, for requiring this Oath, with a command to return to the Ministers of his House, the Names and Processes of all such as should refuse to take the said Oath? Now, did any of all these precede their Covenant? Was Our Authority, or the Authority of Our Council so much as asked, much less obtained? Were there any Commissioners by Us, or Our Council appointed to receive this Oath in the several Shires? Nay, as shall appear afterward in due place, when We, with the advice of Our Council, by Proclamation did command the renewing of that Oath, and designed Commissioners throughout the several Shires of the Kingdom for administering of it, did not those, who call themselves of the Table, refuse to swear it themselves, and command that none of the Kingdom should swear it by any Authority from Us? And is no this pulling down of Our Authority, and setting themselves in Our place? So that if the Reader look upon the Title and Inscription of their Covenant, he shall find (as We said) that it carrieth the overthrow of it in its own Front.

Secondly, Say they had power to command the new taking of this Oath, (as they had not,) yet what power can be pretended for their Interpretation of it? It being a received Maxim, That no less Authority can interpret a Law or Rescript, than that which made it, or those, whom they who made it, have constituted Judges to give Judgment and Sentence according to the true meaning of it. This Oath then being first framed and urged by our Royal Father, with the advice of his Council, can it be interpreted by any but by Us, and His and Our Successours? And have either We or Our Council given any such interpretation? Nay, can any man, though in Authority, indued with Religion or Reason, with any conscience or honesty, give not only so false, but so ridiculous and absurd an interpretation of that Confession of Faith; as those of the Table have given? For they have declared, That this Confession is to be interpreted, and ought to be understood of all the pretended Novations, no less than if every one of them had been expressed in the said Confession. Had they said that they themselves did prohibit these pretended Novations, as other Points of Popery in that Confession abjured, the words had then carried some sense, as intimating that they themselves did now think that they did tend to Popery: But that they should force any man to swear that the Framers of that Confession at the first did so, they being all dead, and so never were asked, nor can be asked the Question; or that they should make men living swear what was the mind of the dead, concerning the five Articles of Pearth, the Service-Book, the Book of Canons, the high Commission, things of which in their lives they never heard, nor perhaps did ever imagine the introduction of them, (they in that Confession abjuring only those Romish corruptions, which in their time had infested the Church,) is such a profane and foolish interpretation, that one would wonder how any one that either hath the knowledge, or maketh conscience of an Oath, can either himself take, or desire others to take an Oath so false and foolish as this: And therefore, with more Wit than Honesty, where they met with no scrupulous people, they suffered them to swallow down that wicked gloss which corrupteth the very Text of the Confession: But where multitudes, especially of the Ministers, (who at their admissions had sworn obedience to and practice of these points which they call Innovations,) quarrelled at this their interpretation, they assured them, that it would breed a great division if they should desire but the least alteration of the words in which their Covenant was conceived, but yet that they might very well swear all, with a reservation of not abjuring Episcopacy, the five Articles of Pearth, or any thing established by Acts of Parliament and General Assembly: With which Protestation and Reservation, and not otherwise, many, especially of the Ministers, did swear their Covenant, as they themselves do well know: which was such a notable piece of of Jesuitical Equivocation on their parts, who exacted this Oath, and contrary to the very Letter and Grammatical sense of the Oath it self, especially in that part of it which containeth their interpretation of the Confession, as the like hath scarcely been heard.

Thirdly, Where was it ever heard that men, pretending for a ground of their Proceedings, the President of a former Confession and Band annexed, did dare to add any thing to the Text of that Confession and Band upon which they meant to build their Actions? But these men have taken upon them, not only without Authority to make an interpretation of that Confession, but flatly against Authority, to add to the very Text of the Band of Maintenance: For whereas the Band annexed to the former Confession was made in defence of Us, Our Authority and Person, with their Fortunes, Bodies and Lives, in defence of the Gospel of Christ, and Liberties of that our Kingdom, &c. they have added a mutual defence of one another: So that the Band, which was at the first made against those Subjects who went about to correspond with Forreigners for the subversion of our Religion and Kingdom, is now made against all Persons whatsoever, who shall oppose them in their Courses. That Band which was made in defence of Our Person and Authority, against all Treason at home and Invasion from abroad, is now principally made against Us, if We shall oppose their Courses; and next, against all such of Our Loyal Subjects as shall adhere to Us in defence of Our Person and Authority: For these words, against all Persons whatsoever, not excepting Us, shews their bad meaning too well. Now, whether Our Royal Father in the first Band, by defence of his Person and Authority, meant maintenance against Us his Successor, our Person and Authority (for they urge the intention of the first Confession and Band as a Warrant for this new one of theirs,) Or whether the words of the Emperour, or any Monarch, or any other Law-giver, in any of their Laws or Rescripts, can be taken in any tolerable construction against the Crown and Dignity of themselves and Successors; Or how these new Covenanters can with the same breath blow both hot and cold, with the same hand both strike and stroak Us, in one Sentence swearing to defend Our Person and Authority, and yet in the next swearing to defend one another against all Persons whatsoever, not excepting Us, if not principally intending Us, We leave it to the world to consider.

Fourthly, What show of defence can these men make, to save themselves from being punished with all rigour, as movers of Sedition, and disturbers of the Publick peace and quietness of the Kingdom, since the Act of the Tenth Parliament of James the Sixth, Act 12. and the 75th Act of the Ninth Parliament of Queen Mary, to which the Act last mentioned relateth, have declared all Leagues of Subjects amongst themselves, without the privity and approbation of the King, to be Seditious, and the Authors and Abettors of them to be punished as movers of Sedition?

The Tenth Parliament of James the Sixth, Act 12.

INASMUCH as there was an Act made in the Regnum of Mary, late Queen Dowager and Regent of this Realm, Our Sovereign Lords Grandmother, of worthy memory, concerning Leagues and Bands, as being thought against all Law and Obedience of Subjects towards their Princes; The not observation of which Act since the making, hath given occasion of many troubles which have occurred since: Wherefore Our Sovereign Lord, with the advice of his Three Estates, convened in this present Parliament, ratifieth, approveth, and for His Successors perpetually confirmeth the said Act of Parliament, and ordaineth the same to have full effect and execution in all time to come: And also of new, with the advice of His said Three Estates, dischargeth and annulleth all Leagues and Bands made between his Lieges and Subjects at any time by-past preceeding the date hereof: And stateth and ordaineth, That in time to come no Leagues nor Bands be made amongst His Subjects, of any degree, upon whatsoever colour or pretence, without His Highness or his Successors privity and consent had and obtained thereunto, under the pain of being held and executed as movers of sedition and unquietness, to the breach and trouble of the Publick peace of the Realm, and so to be cited and pursued therefore with all rigour to the example of others.

The Ninth Parliament of Queen Mary, Act 75.

IT is Statuted and ordained by the Queens Majesty, and Three Estates in Parliament, That no manner of person or persons, of whatsoever quality, estate, condition, or degree, Lieges of this Realm, attempt to do or raise any Bands of men of War, on Horse or Foot, with Culverings, Pistols, Pikes, Spears, Jacks, Splents, Steel-bonnets, white Harnis, or other War-like Munition whatsoever, for daily, weekly, or monthly Wages in any time to come, without special Licence in Writing had and obtained of Our Sovereign Lady and her Successors, under the pain of death, to be executed upon the Raisors of the said Bands, as also upon them that do convene and rise in Bands.

Now Our consent to their Covenant was not only never granted, but never so much as once asked.

When they have satisfied these important Questions and Considerations, which are obvious to all men who are acquainted with Laws and Government, then let them bethink themselves how they will answer, not only to all Divines abroad who are not Jesuited, but even to their own Universities at home in that Our Kingdom, in the case of Conscience, how any Oath, much less such an unlawful Oath as this, can be administered to any Prince his Subjects, without his Consent or Authority. There are but two Universities in Scotland which confer all Degrees, S. Andrews and Aberdeen; both these, upon the first coming abroad of this their Covenant and Oath, did oppose it, and severally set forth, sent abroad and dispersed in writing, those excellent and unanswerable Reasons against it, which We have seen and have, but which the Covenanters did never answer. Besides, the Divines of Aberdeen set out in print their Queries to the three Ministers, sent thither from their Table to perswade their Covenant, which how poorly and pitifully they answered, and so again, how they answered the same mens Duplies, as miserably as their former Queries, We leave to the judgment of Scholars, to whom these three Ministers weakness in their Answers hath made them sufficiently ridiculous. There is likewise an University in Glasgow, which because it hath but one Colledge, and hath not of late conferred any Degree above that of Master of Arts, is called the Colledge of Glasgow. They 1638. They of that Colledge were very backward to come into their Covenant, until they were extremely threatned; and when they came, they premitted such interpretations and limitations, as were destructive of the very foundation of it; some of the Regents never came in at all. In the Colledge of Edinburgh, where there are but four Regents, how two of them, for not subscribing their Covenant, were expelled from their places, is notoriously known. Now one would think, that in any Kingdom the Judgment of the learned Professors in Universities and Colledges, in a point of Conscience, should weigh down the groundless opinions of their Tables, consisting of Noblemen, Gentlemen, Ministers, and Tradesmen.

Anno

But leaving the many unanswerable Reasons which may be brought against this their Covenant, We shall desire the Reader to observe three things, which appeared at the very first coming out of it:

First, How in it they swelled far above all that ever was complained of, either in their Tumults or Petitions: In their Tumults they complained only of the Service-Book; in their Petition exhibited to Our Council and sent up to Us, they complained of the Service-Book and Book of Canons; more of their grievances then, We knew not: Now in this their Covenant, besides these two, they complain of, and do abjure, as they make their Adherents believe, the five Articles of Pearth, which were established by Acts, first of the general Assembly, and then of Parliament; Then they complain of the high Commission, which ever since the Year 1609. hath been quietly established and in practice amongst them; Then they complain of Prelates sitting in Civil Judicatories; a thing which we cannot chuse but wonder at, not only in regard of Our Self, whom by this means they would rob of the benefit of the Abilities of any of Our Subjects in Our Counsels and Affairs of State, as if Holy Orders did superinduce a disability for Civil Wisdom and Prudence; but especially in regard of themselves, because by this strange conceit they contradict, more than they are aware of, their own false and prodigious opinions: For what incongruity can they find in it, for a Bishop to sit at our Council Table, where many causes are heard, in which Religion is concerned; or in Our Session, where many Church-men have trials for their Maintenance? When they themselves hold it not only convenient, but necessary, and that even Jure Divino, that Noblemen, Gentlemen, Merchants, Taylors, Sadlers, Shoemakers, and others of most Mechanical Trades, shall sit and give Sentence in Parochial Sessions and in Presbyteries, in Causes Ecclesiastical, and those of the highest Nature, even the last and supreme Censures of the Church, Excommunication, and depriving of Ministers; nay, that they shall give Sentence in the general Assembly (a Judicatory which now they hold to be above Our Session, Council, or Parliament; for they maintain that the Acts of that Assembly may, in many cases, disannul and derogate from the Acts of the other three) where they do assume to themselves to determine all questions de Fide, Cultu & Disciplina, of Faith, Worship or Discipline, and in which of late they did assume to themselves power to determine, and, according to their weak and poor power, did determine Controversies concerning Predestination, universal Grace, irresistibility of Grace, concurrence of Free-will with Grace, total or final falling from Grace, and other such like intricate Points, as some men would be loath to live so long until they could make them understand them.

Secondly, We desire the Reader to observe with what affections this their Covenant was received abroad, both by Protestants and Papists; at the very first publishing of it: By Papists it was received with infinite joy, as hoping that now the time was come in which both We and Our Successors might be brought to abhor and detest that Religion, whose professed Zealots had been the Authors of such an unsufferable Covenant, which could not consist with Monarchy; which appeared to Us most evidently by the Advertisements which then were sent up to Us from some of Our Council of that Kingdom, that the sudden and frequent arrival of Priests and Jesuits from Downy and other Seminaries beyond the Seas, was so great, in hope of their welcome to Us, because of this seditious Covenant, that unless some speedy order were taken for their present discouragement and sending back, the evil might quickly pass remedy; which moved Us, notwithstanding these present Broils, to take present order for such proceedings against them, as they were forced to retire. With Protestants abroad, it was received with most offensive scandal and infinite grief; which appeared unto Us by Advertisements from some of Our public Ministers abroad, who certified Us, that both the Ministers and others of their Consistory at Charton, and of other Reformed Churches in France, as also the Professors, Ministers, and Consistory of Geneva, and of other neighbouring Reformed Churches in those parts, were so scandalized with this prodigious Covenant, as that they were afraid of nothing more than this, that it would bring an indeble scandal upon the Reformed Churches, and alienate the minds of all the Princes of Christendom from ever entertaining a good thought of their Religion. Of what condition then and fearful consequence that Covenant is, which bringeth grief and offence to Our Friends, joy and triumph to Our Enemies, is evident to all eyes that are opened.

Thirdly, We desire the Reader to consider with what fury and madness this Covenant, after it was conceived, was obtruded to all sorts of People: With what threatnings, with what beating, tearing of the clothes, drawing of the blood, and exposing to thousands of injuries and reproaches, at Edinburgh, S. Andrews, Glasgow, Lanark, and many places more, of those Ministers, who out of religious conscience towards God, and loyal carriage towards Us, did either dissuade their Parishioners from entering into it, or could not by their intreaties or threatnings be perswaded to enter into it themselves. No doubt it cannot be a Covenant approved by God, the first bitter and accursed fruits whereof were the many drops of blood drawn from many of God's Ministers, which now no doubt do call for God's vengeance upon the whole Land.

Now, the fire of this seditious Covenant flaming throughout all the corners of the Kingdom, and that to such an unexpected height and violence, as it was past both the skill and power of Our Council to quench it, Our Council resolved to send up unto us Sir John Hamilton Our Justice Clerk, one of Our Privy Council, and one of the Lords of Our Session, that he might fully acquaint Us with the passages of this Rebellion, and the consequences of it. After Our hearing of him many times, and many consultations had with such of Our Council of Scotland as were then here present, and such of our Council here in England as We thought fit Anno 1638. fit to communicate this business unto, We resolved to send unto that our Kingdom the Marquess of Hamilton with the full power of an High Commissioner, as in other Cases our Royal Father and we had many times done in important business concerning that Kingdom; and in the mean time, we dispatched home the said Sir John Hamilton to give notice thereof, but that they might carry themselves quietly until our Commissioner his coming, from whom they were to expect our pleasure, with all favour which might consist with Royal Authority, as also that they might before our Commissioners going from hence, have time to make us fully acquainted with the uttermost of their Grievances, that so accordingly our Commissioner might receive Instructions from us for giving unto them all just satisfaction.

And so we, having here taken into our serious consideration all their Petitions, which we might have justly rejected, because of the insolencie of their demeanour, and their tumultuous way of presenting them to our Council, yet resolved to take the mildest course we could for calming of these Commotions, and therefore we settled upon a way usually practised by our Royal Father in that Kingdom since his coming to the Crown of England, viz. to establish an High Commissioner, with full Power and Authority to conclude and determine all such things as should be found for the good, quietness, and peace of that Kingdom, with as full and ample power as other Commissioners had exercised in any time of our Royal Father, and especially at Parliaments. And considering that none, in the consultations which we held for this business, had ever shewed himself more forward and inclinable to advices and counsels of Peace, nor a more zealous Patriot towards his Native Country, than our right trusty and well-beloved Cousin and Councillor of both Kingdoms, James Marquess of Hamilton, &c. Gentleman of our Bed-chamber, and Master of our Horse; We made choice of him for our High Commissioner, to that purpose, being perswaded both of his Loyalty and Fidelity towards us, as also of the great acceptation of his Person with our Subjects there, in regard of his Birth and Place, but especially of his singular care of, and love to his Countrey, which they themselves did know he had so piously and affectionately expressed in all his Consultations and Counsels here with us: Him therefore we dispatched from hence with full Instructions, according to which he was to receive his Commission under our Great Seal of that Kingdom at his coming thither, which he received and presented to the Lords of our Council, frequently assembled at Dalkeith, the sixth of June following; the true tenour of which Commission here followeth.

The Commission of the Marquess of Hamilton.

CAROLUS Dei gratia Magna Britannia, Francie, & Hibernia, Rex, Fideique Defensor: Omnibus probis hominibus suis ad quas presentes literae pervenerint, Salutem. Sciatis nos considerantes magnos in hoc Regno nostro Scotia non ita pridem exortos tumultus, ad quas quidem componendas, multiplices regie nostrae voluntatis declarationes promulgavimus, quae tamen minorem spe nostra effectum hactenus sortita sunt: Et nunc statuentes, ex pio erga dictum antiquum regnum nostrum affectu, ut omnia gratiose stabiliantur & instaurentur, quod (per absentiam nostram) non alia ratione commodius effici potest, quam Car. 14. fideli aliquo Delegato constituto, cui potestatem credere possumus tumultus ejusmodi consopendi, aliaque officia praestandi, quae in bonum & commodum dicti antiqui regni nostri eidem Delegato nostro imperare nobis videbitur: Cumque satis compertum habeamus obsequium, diligentiam, & fidem predilecti nostri consanguinei & consilarii Jacobi Marchionis Hamiltonij, Comitis Arrania & Cantabrigiae, Domini Aven & Innerdail, &c. eundemque ad imperata nostra exequenda sufficienter instructum esse: Idcirco fecisse & constituisse, renoreque praesentium facere & constituere praefatum predilectum nostrum consanguineum & consiliarium Jacobum Marchionem de Hamilton, &c. nostrum Commissionarium ad effectum subscriptum: Cum potestate dicto Jacobo Marchioni de Hamilton, &c. dictum regnum nostrum adeundi, ibidemque praefatos tumultus in dicto regno componendi, aliaque officia a nobis eidem committenda in dicti regni nostri bonum & commodum ibi praestandi: Eoque Concilium nostrum quibus locis & temporibus ei visum fuerit convocandi, ac rationem & ordinem in praemissis exequendis servandum declarandi & praescribendi: Et quaecunque alia ad commissionis hujus capita pro commissis ipsi fide exequenda, eandemque ad absolutum finem perducendam & prosequendam conferre possunt tam in Concilio quam extra Concilium nostro nomine efficiendi & praestandi: Idque similiter & adeo libere ac si Nos in sacrosancta nostra persona ibidem adessemus. Et hac praesentis nostrae commissionis durante nostro beneplacito duratura ad semper & donec eadem per nos expresse inhibeatur. In cujus rei testimonium praesentibus magnum sigillum nostrum apponi precepimus. Apud castrum nostrum de Windore vigesimo die Mensis Maij Anno Domini millesimo sexcentesimo trigesimo octavo, Et Anno regni nostri decimo quarto.

Per signaturam manu S. D. N. Regis superscriptam.

The whole Body of our Council, with all respectful and dutiful expressions of joy and thankfulness of our Fatherly care of that our Kingdom in these difficult times, acknowledged and received the said Commission and Commissioner: And the Lord Marquess of Hamilton, did with all submissive reverence then and there accept the said Commission, promising the uttermost of his endeavours for settling the peace of that Kingdom, so far as might consist with his Majesties Royal Crown and Dignity, and the Laws and Liberties of that our ancient and native Kingdom, as by the Act of Council dated at Dalkeith the Sixth of June 1638. doth more fully appear: After which acceptation of the Commission, the said Lord Marquess had by our Council, and all others, whensoever he went abroad, all respects, honour and reverence due to our Commissioner, performed unto him, the Chancellor carrying the Great Seal before him, and some other Noblemen of great place and quality carrying the High Commission before him likewise.

His Majesty having now taken this course which he conceived most agreeable both to the customs of that Kingdom, and most acceptable to them, in regard of the choice of the Commissioner, had then assured hopes, that the dangerous distractions of that Kingdom might be happily composed: But these hopes were quickly blasted; for no sooner had the Heads of the Covenant notice of these peaceable courses intended by the King, but they flew out, even before the Commissioners arriving there, into far greater violence than heretofore, increased the Anno 1638. frequent Meetings of their Tables, subdivided them into several Committees, increased their provision of Arms, made their Pulpits ring with most seditious Sermons, putting the people in fear, that now there was more danger to be expected from the Lord Marquess his coming home, and all peaceable Treaties, than ever; and at their Tables concluded upon a Paper, consisting of Ten Propositions or Articles, which they caused immediately before the Commissioners arrival, with wonderful expedition, to be dispersed throughout all the Shires of that Kingdom: Which Ten Articles, according to the true Copy, are here inserted.

First, For observing union, it is thought fit, that no Answer be made to any of the States-men or others, having Commission from the King, concerning the publick business, but with common consent and advice according to the Articles of our Covenant against divisive motions; and if any propound motions tending to the breach of our union; it would be told them plainly, we will repute them as unfriends both to us and our cause.

Secondly, For the better method in preparing and holding of matters to be treated of, it is thought fit that there be a Committee chosen, and that some of the Gentry, Burrows, and Ministers be present at the Meetings with the Noblemen.

Thirdly, It is thought fit, that all who are interested may attend punctually to Dyets and Meetings, with the rest of the number appointed for the good of the Publick Business; and, lest our Adversaries should (upon the frequent attending of the prime Noblemen and States-men) take occasion to affirm, That they have power to dispose of their Friends in this Cause, their attendance would be the more shunned; to shew we will depend upon no man who is of an averse Judgment, or who are about a contrary Employment in the matter of our Covenant and Conscience.

Fourthly, If there be any new Proclamation, it is thought fit that it may be obviated and reencountered with a new Protestation, which would be considered upon, and would contain our eight last Articles; And that our Protestation may be backed with good Information and Reasons, and sent with diligence to the Commissioners to the several parts of the Kingdom, that they be not deceived nor surprized with Proclamations or Suggestions, and that the Copy of the Protestation may be given to the Commissioners of Shires and Burghes, to meet the Proclamation in all points needful.

Fifthly, If the Discharge of the Book of Service, and Canons, and limitation of the High Commission be granted; and that upon the States-men and Commissioners offer, the King will grant all we can crave which is not repugnant to Law, and alledge that Episcopal Power and Articles of Pearths Assembly are established by Law; It is answered that the abuses of Episcopal Government are contrary to Law, and censurable by Law, and the Articles of Pearth should be rightly interpreted, and our desires for the free and yearly exercise of General Assemblies, free admission of Ministers without unlawful Oaths, and relieving of the Articles of Pearths Assembly, and that the Prelates boundless usurped power, limited according to the Covenants of their Admission, are all agreeable to Law for the Reasons contained in the Articles: And if the Bishops, States-men, and others, be of a different Judgment from the most part of the Church and Kingdom, the General Assembly and Parliament (who were the Law-makers,) are only competent Judges for interpreting their own Acts, whose direction we crave: And although the Law were interpreted as they alledge, which is altogether untrue, and contrary to the grounds and meaning of the Law, yet the Body of the Kingdom, for whose good the Law was made, may crave the lawful redress of the grievances sustained by that Law, and our Complaints, Supplications, and Protestations against the Bishops, depending in Process for clearing the Subjects Loyalty, and repairing the wrong complained of, cannot be otherwise lawfully decided, cannot remedy the present Evils, nor prevent the like or worse Evils in time coming.

Sixthly, It is thought fit, that all who have subscribed the Covenant, be made sensible that they are obliged by their Oath, not to rest satisfied with less than the desire of our Articles, which are agreeable to Law, Conscience, and Reason, and without which we will be frustrated of our ends, our Adversaries in time will obtain the establishment of the Evils we complain of.

Seventhly, It is thought fit, that the number of the Commissioners be doubled, against the States-men and Marquess down coming, and that all be warned to be ready upon Advertisement.

Eighthly, That the Report of the Subscriptions of the Covenant may be sent to Edinburgh from all several parts of the Kingdom.

Ninthly, That things recommended to our former Committee be adverted to, with the best diligence that can be.

Tenthly, It is thought expedient that all the time of the General Meeting there be a Fast.

THe Marquess of Hamilton, his Majesties Commissioner, upon his way to that Kingdom, did meet with Advertisements of these strange fears, which the Ringleaders of the Covenant (who were afraid of nothing more than that the King's Subjects should receive satisfaction from him by his Commissioner) had possessed the People with, and the bad entertainment he was like to receive at his coming thither, he acquainted the King therewith, and went forward on his Journey until he came to Barwick, from whence he sent to his especial Friends and Kindred, and to all such Gentlemen of his own name, and others, as were his Vassals and Tenants, and hold their Lands from him by Service and attendance on him when he shall require it, he received answer that all these Obligations were quite discharged by the Covenanters Table at Edinburgh, who had absolutely commanded that none, who had subscribed their Covenant, should go to meet, or give any personal attendance upon his Majesties Commissioner, until such time as they should have leave from their Table so to do; and so the Lord Commissioner went from Barwick unattended by these Noblemen, or by any other of his own Kindred or Vassals, unless such as had not subscribed their Covenant, (except some few, whose affection exceeded the command of the Tables;) an affront before that time never offered to any person of his quality in that Kingdom: Yet he was very nobly and honourably received, and conducted to Dalkeith by all the King's Council, most of the Lords of the Session, who are the Judges of the Law, great troops of the Nobility and Gentry, who had not subscribed their Covenant.

Now,

Anno 1638. Now, the reasons why their Table had laid this strict charge, of not conducting the Lord Commissioner, upon all their adherents, were these two, as appeared plainly by the speeches uttered by many of the Covenanters themselves: First, That they might not seem to shew the least respect to any, especially to those of greater rank, who were disaffected to their Covenant, as was ordered in the third Article of their ten last mentioned: Secondly, That they might make trial of their power with their own Party, the Heads of the Covenant being perswaded, that if they could prevail with their Associates for breaking through the Bonds of Nature, Blood, Consanguinity, Civility, Vassalage and Dependence, in pursuance of their Orders, they should not much need to fear that any other obligations could be able to divert them from obedience to their Dictates.

The Lord Commissioner, immediately upon his coming to Dalkeith, (where the Council assembled for safety, because the Combuſtions at Edenburgh increased daily) met with many discouragements and difficulties. First, The King had sent some small proportion of Arms and Powder to be put into the Castle of Edenburgh, justly doubting the surprisal of it by the Covenanters, who were there assembled in great Multitudes, and had of late made great provision of Arms there. No sooner had the Ship (in which these Arms with other Goods were) cast Anchor in Leith Rode, but the Covenanters sent for the Merchant owner of the Goods, commanding him to bring the Ship into the Harbour, and discharging him from unloading any thing in the Ship, especially Arms, until he had leave from them, as he would answer the contrary at his peril; of which the Lord Treasurer being advertised, provided that night a Boat which landed the Arms and Powder, and Carts which presently carried them to his Majesties Palace at Dalkeith, some four miles distant: How for this the Merchant was used by them, and how they did threaten to come by force and carry away that Provision out of his Majesties own house of Dalkeith, is notoriously known. Much about this time the Lord Commissioner came to Dalkeith, where he was received for his first welcome with the certain news of the increase of the Peoples rage in Edenburgh, of the Covenanters resolution first to take the Castle, but (upon better advice) of their deserting that purpose, yet falling upon that which was bad enough; for they had begirt the Castle with strong Guards, so that no person or provision could pass to or from it, but by their permission: Besides, they had entred into consultation, whether they should by force take out of the King's Palace of Dalkeith that small provision of Arms and Powder which was lately carried thither: which counsel they were perswaded by some not to follow, because of the residence of his Majesties Commissioner there at that time; but one thing they resolved upon, that during the abode of the Lord Commissioner and Council there, though but four miles distant from Edenburgh, they would take no notice of them, send no Petition to them: and howsoever they allowed some of the Commissioners particular Kinsmen and Acquaintance to go thither and visit him, yet they would not depute any to speak with him of the business for which he was sent, or of their complaints and grievances, but resolved not to leave Edenburgh, where they were well enough, so that if he had any thing to deliver to them, he might come thither, for to him and the Council they would not come: And that they might have some colourable pretence with the People for this their insolent behaviour and resolution, it was cast out and rumoured abroad, that if they went to Dalkeith, there was an intention to blow them up with Gun-powder; not that the Authors of that foul and devillish aspersion entertained the least thought of any such fear, but that they might both have a colour for their unmannerly not addressing themselves thither, as also beget in the minds of their ignorant Followers a higher indignation against, and jealousy of the Lord Commissioner and Council for such a wicked and treacherous Plot.

Now, at this very time when they made all this stir about that small provision of Arms for the Castle of Edenburgh, which exceeded not two hundred Muskets, and so many Pikes, with some small quantity of Powder, the Covenanters had two good Ships come home loaded with Arms and Ammunition, which they landed openly and avowedly.

All these difficulties and new troubles, augmented daily of purpose since their notice of the Lord Commissioners journey, put him and the Council to such a stand, as they knew not well what resolution to take. The Covenanters force and rage increased, which they had not power in any proportion to discharge; they could not discover in them the least inclination to peace; they found they would not so much as address themselves towards them, and they did not hold it agreeable with the King's Honour, or the dignity of those places which they held under him, nor yet for their safety, to go to them; At last this means was thought on, no doubt by the advice of those of their Tables, who scorned to seem to yield or petition for any such thing themselves.

The Citizens of Edenburgh sent certain Commissioners to the Lord High Commissioner with a Supplication that he would be pleased to repair to the King's Palace at Halyrud-house, where they might more conveniently give demonstration of their affection to his Majesties Service, in attending his Graces directions. The Commissioner after he had acquainted and advised the Council with this their Supplication, by their advice, as willing to take any occasion to enter into the business for which his Majesty had sent him, returned this Answer to the Commissioners of Edenburgh, That if they would undertake to be Masters and Governours of their own City, that their Citizens would behave themselves as good and dutiful Subjects, and take order that the Multitudes, now present in their City, who called themselves Covenanters, should do so too, and that the Guards about the Castle of Edenburgh should be dismissed and discharged, he would within a day or two repair to his Majesties Palace at Halyrud-house, otherwise not: For that he did hold it not agreeable to the King's Honour, that his Majesties Commissioner and Council should reside at the King's said Palace, which is situated at the one end of the City, when the Castle seated at the other end of the same should be blocked up with Guards: All which, these Commissioners undertook to perform, and by their words desired to approve themselves most Loyal Subjects, hoping to clear themselves from many aspersions laid upon them, when his Grace would be pleased to hear and examine their proceedings.

Anno 1638. Hereupon the Lord Commissioner, according to his promise, did remove himself from Dalkeith to the Palace at Haly-rud-houfe, attended by all the Council, such of the Nobility, Gentry, and others, as were affected to the King's Service, which consisted of a great number: Some two or three miles from Edenburgh he was met with the whole Body of the Nobility and Gentry of Covenanters, then resident at Edinburgh, who were all mounted on Horse-back, and consisted of divers thousands; and besides, in a nearer distance from Edenburgh, by the Ministers then resident there, who were all on foot, and consisted of many hundreds; and so all the way to the Palace was filled with swarms of people of all sorts and sexes, many of whose exclamations and outcries were very sharp and bitter, stuffed with cursings of Popery and Bishops; by which it was apparent that the multitude had been made believe that these two were one and the same thing. His Majesties Commissioner, when he first met on the way the Lords who call themselves Covenanters, was entreated by them to hear a Speech delivered, as he should pass along, by a Minister in the name of the rest: But he, remembering the Advertisements which he had received of their most seditious Sermons, and knowing by the same Advertisements that he who was to deliver this Speech was a deprived Minister, and one of the most seditious in the whole pack, returned answer to the Lords that he would not hear it, justly doubting that it might be stuffed as full of passages against the King's Authority as their Sermons used to be; and so that speech was omitted: Now, whether these great troops of Covenanters, both of Horse and Foot, in a great Body by themselves, which did not joyn at the first with that Company which attended his Majesties Commissioner from Dalkeith, but stayed for him on the way in a far grosser Body by themselves, was assembled to do honour to the King's Commissioner, or for shewing their own power and strength, by way of comparison with the Company whom they met, which they far exceeded, we will not determine. But thus the Lord Commissioner was conducted to the King's Palace of Haly-rud-houfe, where he was received by the Lord Provost, Bailiffs, Magistrates, and Citizens of Edinburgh with outward demonstrations of being welcome. And this was all the entertainment which at any time he had from the Body of the Covenanters, during the time of his abode in that Kingdom; which whether it were hearty and sincere, or but only in show, and to shew their own power, we leave it to be judged by the entertainment and respect which afterward he received from them; which will be found to be just none at all: For during the time of his continuance amongst them, though he found that they gave civil respects to him as Marquess of Hamilton, yet his being clothed with the King's Authority and Commission did much diminish them, as shall appear now in the next place, by those perpetual affronts which they ceased not to offer daily to him and the Council, in all their proceedings concerning the business for which he was sent.

The Lord Commissioner now being settled at the King's Palace, with the assistance of the Council, he fell presently upon the main business with the Covenanters, whom he desired to dismiss their great Multitudes; which they did, being indeed necessitated thereunto for the ease of their great charge. The two main Propositions which he offered to their consideration were these: First, what they should expect from him in the King's Name for satisfaction to their complaints, and accommodating their grievances: Next, what might be expected from them for returning to their former obedience, especially in renouncing and delivering up their late Covenant. Both which Propositions they did receive with so much slighting and contempt, as that they avowed, no satisfaction from his Majesty should be accepted which contained any particulars; but that they expected, first, A General Assembly of the Church, and then a Parliament, that in these two Judicatories they would represent and discuss their grievances: And no wonder, for in both these they knew that themselves were to be both Judges and Parties. For the second, they answered, that they could not return to their former obedience, from which they would never acknowledge that they had departed in the least degree, having done no act but that which became good and dutiful Subjects: And for their Covenant, that they would rather renounce their Baptism than renounce it, or abate one word or syllable of the literal rigour of it; it being more available and useful unto them, than all the Laws and Acts of Parliament which had been enacted in that Kingdom since the time of Fergus the first King thereof: And that it was a proposition which though they had now heard, they were resolved never to hear a second time: And accordingly, after the King's propositions thus made and rejected, they presently filled the people with such misreports of the intentions and ends of the Lord Commissioners coming, as they wrought them to a greater height of fury than before, as if now their Religion and Laws were brought to the Stake: For now new Guards were clapt upon the Castle of Edenburgh, the Guards and Watches of the City multiplied, the Preachers Prayers and Sermons grew to be so many Libels, and Admonitions that they should take heed of crafty Compositions, or yielding in the least point of their intended Reformation; for if they should abate in any one thing, it would be thought that they might be mistaken in all. They presently printed their weak Reasons against their rendring up of their Covenant, nay, they grew to that rage, that on the Saturday having knowledge that the Lord Commissioner (attended with the Council) was to hear Divine Service and Sermon in his Majesties Chapel at the Palace the day following being Sunday, they sent him word that whosoever should read the English Service in that Chapel, should never read more, and that there were a thousand men provided for the disturbance of it; which forced the Lord Commissioner that night to repair to Dalkeith, being unwilling to hear a Sermon but in that Chapel, or there, without hearing the English Divine Service, it having been continually read there by the space of twenty years, in the audience of the Council, many of the Nobility, Judges, and persons of all quality; without any interruption or dislike: Nay more, they grew to that boldness as to write Letters to every one of the Council, requiring them to subscribe their Covenant; which Letter sent to every one of them severally, but in the same words, here followeth.

The Copy of the Covenanters Letters to the Lords of the Privy Council.

May it please your Lordship,

WE the Ministers of the Gospel, convened at this so necessary a time, do find our selves bound to represent, as unto all, so in special unto your Lordship, what comfortable experience we have of the wonderful favour of God, upon the renewing of the Confession of Faith and Covenant, what peace and comfort hath filled the hearts of all God's People, what resolutions and beginnings of reformation of manners are sensibly perceived in all parts of the Kingdom, above any measure that ever we did find or could have expected, how great glory the Lord hath received thereby, and what confidence we have (if this Sun-shine be not eclipsed by some sinful division or defection) that God shall make this a blessed Kingdom, to the contentment of the King's Majesty, and joy of all his good Subjects, according as God hath promised in his good Word, and performed to his People in former times; And therefore we are forced from our hearts both to wish and entreat your Lordship to be partaker and promover of this joy and happiness by your Subscription, when your Lordship shall think it convenient: And in the mean while, that your Lordship would not be sparing to give a free Testimony to the Truth, as a timely and necessary expression of your tender affection to the Cause of Christ now calling for help at your hands: your Lordships Profession of the true Religion as it was reformed in this Land, the National Oath of this Kingdom sundry times sworn and subscribed, ablishing us who live at this time, the duty of a good Patriot, the Office and trust of a Privy Councillour, the present employment to have place amongst those that are first acquainted with his Majesties pleasure, the consideration that there is the time of trial of your Lordships affection to Religion, the respect which your Lordship hath unto your fame both now and hereafter, when things shall be recorded to Posterity, and the remembrance, that not only the eyes of men and Angels are upon your Lordships carriage, but also that the Lord Jesus is a secret witness now to observe, and shall be an open Judge hereafter to reward and confess every man before his Father, that confesseth him before men: All of these and each of them, besides your Lordships personal and particular obligations to God, do call for no less at your Lordships hands, in the Cause of so great and singular necessity; and we also do expect so much at this time, according as your Lordship at the hour of Death would be free of the terror of God, and be refreshed with the comfortable remembrance of a word spoken in season for Christ Jesus, King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

THE Lord Commissioner in the mean time resolved to publish his Majesties gracious Declaration, for relieving of their Grievances, and satisfying the people in his Majesties forwardness for the maintenance of the Religion professed in that Kingdom, and his averfeness from Popery, which they of the Covenanters Table having notice of, being above all things afraid that our people should receive any satisfaction from the King, or rest contented with the grace of his Majesties reasonable proffers of favour, did mightily repine at, they came to the Lord Commissioner, and wished him for his Majesties Honour, his own safety, and peace of the publick, not to make any such Declaration; which undoubtedly would be encountred with a Protestation, and that in such manner as would be displeasing to him, and make the publishing of that Declaration be found disserviceable unto the King.

The Lord Commissioner being perplexed with these unexpected and dangerous difficulties, resolved by fair proceedings to gain so much time, until he might make the King acquainted with them, and receive his answer and instructions concerning them: In his Letters of advice he acquainted his Majesty with the danger threatned if he should publish the Declaration, which though he knew to be full of grace, yet the heads of the Covenant would never suffer the multitude of their members to understand it so. Two things he desired of the King; One, that in case his Majesty continued in a resolution of publishing our Declaration, he would be pleased to sweeten it with this further favor, as to restore to the City of Edenburgh the sitting of the Privy Council, the Session, and all other Courts of Justice, which he conceived would be very acceptable to the Councillours, Judges, to all Advocates, and all dependents upon the Law, to all the King's Subjects which had business depending in any of these Courts, but most of all to the City of Edenburgh, which complained much of their being impoverished by absence of these Courts, and that this was like to prove a most probable perswasion for reclaiming them to their former obedience. Next, that his Majesty would be pleased to give him leave to take a Journey into England, though he should return presently, that he might acquaint his Majesty with the new emergencies of businesses, and such other things as could not be conveniently expressed in Letters, and so accordingly receive instructions from his Majesty for his carriage.

To which Letters of advice his Majesty did return by a speedy dispatch this Answer, That the King would have our Declaration no longer delayed, but commanded him presently to publish it, because he would not (whatsoever the event should be) have the people barred the knowledge of his Gracious intentions and favours towards them, which his Majesty did see the leaders of them studied nothing more than to suppress; And that at his entreaty, the King was contented that all the Courts of Justice should presently begin to sit again at Edenburgh for the reasons contained in his Letters, and in hope of reclaiming of that City, which otherwise by their misdemeanour had no reason to expect any such favour from his Majesty; And withal, after the dispatch of these two, that the King was contented he should repair to him, as he desired, whensoever he should find it convenient, taking first order with the Council for keeping all things in order until his return.

This Answer of his Majesties so soon as the Lord Commissioner received, he assembled the Council, and made them acquainted with it, who were so well satisfied with the bringing back of the Courts of Justice to Edenburgh, that presently they sent unto his Majesty a Letter of thanks of this Tenour.

Most Sacred Sovereign,

THe Marquess of Hamilton, your Majesties Commissioner, having imparted unto us your Majesties gracious pleasure and allowance that the Judicatories of the Council, of Session, and others, should be returned to the City of Edenburgh; Thereupon, the Lord Commissioner being present, order was given for publication at the Market-Cross of Edenburgh, with all Solemnities requisite; and that the like publication should be made throughout the whole Kingdom at all publick places: This hath given so great contentment to all your Majesties Subjects, that we cannot express with what dutiful respect and hearty Prayers for your Majesty they have embraced this great and undeserved favour: In consideration whereof we conceive our selves bound in duty to acquaint your Majesty herewith; and withal to render to your Majesty most humble and hearty thanks for this so great grace and goodness, which we hope shall contribute to the good of your Majesties Service, and to establishing the peace of the Country, for the which we all your Majesties good Subjects shall ever be most thankful, and all in duty bound to pray for your Majesties long and happy Reign.

And accordingly the Lord Commissioner caused Proclamation to be made at the Cross of Edenburgh, for the first sitting down of the Session there, the Tuesday following, being the third of July, 1638. which was received with much joy by the Judges, Advocates, and all others having relation to the Colledge of Justice, but above all by the Magistrates and Citizens of Edenburgh, that the Lord Commissioner and Council did then well hope all mens minds had been well prepared to receive the Declaration of his Majesties Grace and favour which was to be published in the next Proclamation, with an humble and thankful acknowledgment; which undoubtedly they had done, if they had not been not only diverted, but perverted by those men who interpreted every satisfaction of his Majesties Subjects received from the King, to be a dividing and pulling them away from themselves: And therefore they quickly cast about to find out some means, how this our special-favour might not be repented by them, which was this: They assured their followers that there were two of the Lords of the Session, viz. Sir Rob. Spotswood President of the same, and Sir John Hay our Clerk of Register (answerable to the Master of the Rolls here in England) sworn enemies to their Covenant, well affected to Episcopal Government, Procurers and Abettors of the pretended Innovations, that unless these two were presently removed from the Session, there could be no good intended to them by the bringing of it back to Edenburgh, and therefore advised them to send some of their number to the Lord Commissioner to desire that these two Judges might presently be removed from that Court; Not that they who put this in their heads, thought that the Lord Commissioner could yield to a request of so high injustice, but because they knew, that he neither could nor would yield unto it, and that therefore by his denial they should have means to irritate the People, even to a disgust of that his Majesties Gracious favour, which the day before they had so well relished.

But yet according to their resolution, some of the principal Covenanters of all sorts sent from their Table, had the boldness to repair to the Lord Commissioner, and to demand of him that which they were sure no just nor honest man could grant, viz. That they could clearly prove Bribery and corruptions frequently to have been used by these two Judges, and therefore intreated him to remove them presently from their places of Judicatory, after which they would intend process, and so legally proceed in the probation of these crimes objected against them: To which their demand the Lord Commissioner returned this just and modest answer; That sure they could not expect that he either could or should condescend to this their desire, which yielded unto, did overthrow the very Foundation and main Rule of Justice, viz. That any man should be punished for any crime before he were legally convicted of it, and therefore he advised them to follow the constant course of Justice, which was this; If they thought these Judges clearly convincible of these horrible crimes, they should intend first Process against them, and then probation of the crimes; of which if they were found guilty, then they needed not doubt but they should be removed from their places; and receive such further condigne punishment as the Laws of the Kingdom had provided for such notorious Criminals; assuring them, that the King his Master would be so far from hindring the course of Justice against any such offenders, as that he would hold it a special Service done to him, to bring the iniquity of the Judges to publick Trial and Censure, and that he would make his Majesty acquainted with their demands: with which just answer they were resolved to be so unsatisfied, that they replied unto him, that this his denial would be attended with a great inconvenience to all the King's Subjects, for they would in that case of denial make and publish a Protestation, that whatsoever Act, Decree, or Order, the Lords of the Session should make in any Cause, at which these two Judges, or either of them, were present and gave voice, should be null and void in Law; and that none of the King's Subjects either should be bound or would yield obedience to them: (Was not this a strange Usurpation upon Regal power?) To this the Lord Commissioner only added, That every such Protestation must be made before the Lords of the Session, who had the power of admitting or repelling it, and therefore for that point he remitted them to these Lords as the competent Judges of it; which answer of the Lord Commissioner they presently laboured to have misconstrued by their Party, telling them that there was no hope of any Justice to be had against any man who was an enemy to them and their Covenant.

At

At the day appointed by the Proclamation, the Session fate down, and the Lord Commissioner in his own person went to the place, and opened it, with a short speech to the Judges, to this purpose.

That he was warranted from Us to recall the Session again to Edinburgh; That the chief thing that had moved Us thereunto, was the sense of the many incommodities which Our Subjects in general, and the Judges in particular did sustain by the removing of it; That we had required him to desire and command the Judges to grant all reasonable dispatch to Our Subjects in the Administration of Justice, that so some time, which was lost might be regained; That in Our name he required them to be very careful and circumspect, that in these troublesome times no Order nor Decree might pass from them, which might be prejudicial to Our Crown or Service.

The Judges hereupon returned to the L. Commissioner their humble and hearty expressions of all thankful acknowledgment, for this his Majesties singular favour and grace to themselves and all his Subjects, and with great submission intreated him to return unto his Majesty their humble and hearty acknowledgment.

And here now We desire the Reader to observe, that the Covenanters neither made any such Protestation against the sitting of the two Judges, as they talked of, nor did ever intend any Process or probation against them for the crimes objected, though the Lord Commissioner immediately after his return from his Majesty, assured them, that the King not only had given them leave, but would thank them for so doing, which we are confident they would have done if they had conceived these Judges guilty, and giveth to all persons good assurance that this calumny against these Judges, was only cast in by some of their Ring-leaders, to mar and interrupt that resentment of the King's grace and favour, which they perceived wrought very much upon many of his Majesties Subjects of their Party, for bringing back again the Courts of Justice to the City of Edinburgh.

The Session thus settled, his Majesties Commissioner resolved to publish by Proclamation the Declaration of Grace and Favour: The principal Covenanters, when they could not dissuade him from it, presently went about, and both by themselves and their seditious Preachers, filled their Followers minds with such fearful expectations of it, that some daies before it was published, they filled the Streets with multitudes of People, especially near the Cross where it was to be proclaimed, and those in Hostile Equipage divided into Ranks, pulling their Swords out of their Belts, and with Pistols, (being Arms prohibited by the Laws of that Kingdom,) giving out, that if this Declaration were hearkened unto, it would, undoubtedly bring ruin to their Religion, Laws and Liberties, though the People knew nothing of what was to be delivered in the Declaration; Some daies they continued in this posture, which made the Lord Commissioner delay the publishing of it, until he might hear of more quietness and peace in the Streets; of which being advertised, he caused the Proclamation of Grace and Favour solemnly to be made at the Cross of Edinburgh: No sooner were the Trumpets sounded, but there came to the Cross a mighty confux of People, the Covenanters had presently a Scaffold erected, on which they mounted with a Protestation ready written in their hands, before the Kings Proclamation was pronounced: His Majesties Proclamation was this.

Car. 14.

CHARLES by the grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith. To our Lovits

Heralds,

Messengers, our Sheriffs in that part, conjunctly and severally specially constitute greeting. Forasmuch as We are not ignorant of the great disorders, which have happened of late within this Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, occasioned, as is pretended, upon the introduction of the Service Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission, thereby searing innovation of Religion and Laws. For satisfaction of which fears, We well hoped, that the two Proclamations of the eleventh of December, and nineteenth of February, had been abundantly sufficient. Nevertheless, finding that disorders have daily so increased, that a powerful rather than perswasive way, might have been justly expected from Us; Yet We out of Our innative indulgence to Our People, grieving to see them run themselves so headlong into ruin, are graciously pleased to try, if by a fair way We can reclaim them from their faults, rather than to let them perish in the same. And therefore once for all, We have thought fit to declare, and hereby to assure all Our good people, that We neither were, are, nor by the Grace of God ever shall be stained with Popish Superstition: But by the contrary, are resolved to maintain the true Protestant Christian Religion already profest within this our ancient Kingdom. And for farther clearing of scruples, We do hereby assure all men, that We will neither now nor hereafter press the practice of the foresaid Canons and Service-Book, nor any thing of that nature, but in such a fair and legal way, as shall satisfie all Our loving Subjects, that We neither intend innovation in Religion or Laws: And to this effect, have given order to discharge all Acts of Council made thereanent. And for the High Commission, We shall so rectifie it with the help of advice of Our Privy Council, that it shall never impugn the Laws, nor be a just grievance to Our loyal Subjects. And what is farther fitting to be agitate in general Assemblies and Parliament, for the good and peace of the Kirk, and peaceable Government of the same, in establishing of the Religion presently profest, shall likewise be taken into Our Royal consideration, in a free Assembly and Parliament, which shall be indicted and called with Our best conveniency. And we hereby take God to witness, that Our true meaning and intention is, not to admit of any innovations either in Religion or Laws, but carefully to maintain the purity of Religion already profest and established, and no waies to suffer Our Laws to be infringed. And although we cannot be ignorant, that there may be some disaffected persons who will strive to possess the hearts of Our good Subjects, that this Our gracious Declaration is not to be regarded; Yet We do expect that the behaviour of all Our good and loyal Subjects will be such, as may give testimony of their obedience, and how sensible they are of Our Grace and Favour, that thus passeth over their misdemeanours, and by their future carriage make appear, that it was only fear of innovation, that hath caused the disorders which have happened of late within this

Our

Anno 1638. Our ancient Kingdom. And are confident, that they will not suffer themselves to be seduced and misled, to misconstrue Us or Our actions, but rest heartily satisfied with Our pious and real intentions, for maintenance of the true Religion and Laws of this Kingdom. Wherefore We require and heartily wish all Our good people carefully to advert to these dangerous suggestions, and not to permit themselves, blindly under pretext of Religion, to be led in disobedience, and draw on, infinitely to Our grief, their own ruin, which We have, and still shall strive to save them from, so long as We see not Royal Authority shaken off. And most unwillingly shall make use of that power which God hath endued Us with, for reclaiming of disobedient people.

OUR WILL is herefore, and We charge you straightly and command, that incontinent these Our Letters seen, you pass to the Market-Cross of Our Burgh of Edinburgh, and all other places needful, and there by open Proclamation make publication hereof to all and sundry Our good Subjects, where through none pretend ignorance of the same. The which to do, We commit to you conjunctly and severally Our full power, by these Our Letters, delivering the same by you duly execute and indorsed again to the Bearer. Given at Our Court of Greenwich the twenty eighth day of June, and of Our Reign the thirteenth year, 1638.

Per Regem.

NO sooner was it ended, but this their ensuing Protestation against it begun, and was publickly read; which here, according to their Printed Copy, We have caused to be inserted.

The Protestation of the Noble-men, Barons, Gentlemen, Burroughs, Ministers, and Commons, &c.

WE Noble-men, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgessees, Ministers, and Commons, That whereas we the King's Majesties true and loyal Subjects, who have ever esteemed it our greatest happiness to live under a Religious and Righteous King, and our greatest glory to testify our best affections to our gracious Sovereign, have been in his Majesties absence from this His native Kingdom heavily pressed for a long time past, And especially of late, with diverse innovations, which both in themselves, and in the way wherein they have been urged, do manifestly tend to the prejudice of the King's Honour, and of our Religion, Laws and Liberties, And by which we were brought to such extremity, that there was no way left betwixt the Rock of Excommunication, and the high pain of Rebellion on the one part, and the desperate danger of forsaking the way of true Religion, and the breach of our Covenant with God on the other, but to represent our Case, and present our Supplications to the Lords of Secret Council, that being equally pondered by them, they might either be answered by themselves, or by their commendation might ascend to his Majesties own consideration: And therefore in all humble manner we did to this effect supplicate their Lordships: we were most willing (for the most following of our Supplications) to obey their direction in choosing Commissioners for the great number of Supplicants, who flocked together from all quarters of the Kingdom; were careful to order our selves in all Christian and quiet carriage, and against the tediousness of many and long delays did wait for a long time with very great patience, till at last they were pleased to receive our Supplications, Complaints and Bills: And conceiving them to contain weightier matters than could by themselves be determined, they did promise and undertake to represent and recommend the same, according to their more than ordinary importance, unto his Majesties Royal consideration, and to report his Majesties answer.

While his Majesties good Subjects of all Ranks, throughout the whole Kingdom, had their minds wakened, and their hearts filled with the expectation of a gracious and satisfactory answer, worthy of his Majesties pious and equitable disposition, in the Month of February last, incontinent a rumour flyeth through the Country, and filleth all ears, That the Lords of his Majesties Secret Council were commanded to make such a Proclamation concerning the Service Book, Book of Canons, and the peaceable meetings of his Majesties good Subjects in time coming, as we were persuaded to have been procured by the secret working, and malignant mis-information of our Adversaries, Seeking for their own private ends, without respect to his Majesties honour, and welfare of this Kirk and Kingdom, to stop the course of our legal proceedings, and to escape their own due censure: And therefore intending to make known to the Lords of Secret Council what was noised concerning the Proclamation; how far the whole Kingdom had been by some sinistrous mis-information frustrate of their hopes, and their constant desire to have some course taken by their Lordships' advice; how his Majesty being further informed, might deliver his good Subjects from so great grievances and fears, and establish a sure peace in this Country for time to come; we found our selves tyed by order of Law to decline those against whom we had made our complaint, unless we would admit our Parties to be our Judges: And in case our Declinator should not be accepted, we behoved to protest, that we might have immediate recourse to the King himself, &c.

Thereafter in the Month of March, finding that by the foresaid Proclamation the Innovations supplicated against were approved, our lawful proceedings condemn'd, our most necessary meetings prohibited, there being no other way left unto us, we were necessitate to renew the national Covenant of this Kirk and Kingdom, thereby to reconcile us to God, provoked to wrath against us, by the breach of his Covenant with in this Land, to clear our Sovereigns mind from all jealousies and suspicions, arising from our Adversaries mis-information of our intentions and carriage; and so to make way for his acceptance of our humble Supplications, and grant of their lawful remedies, to guard this Land in defence of Religion, Authority and Liberty against inward divisions, and external violences. And that our actions might be answerable to our holy Profession, we afterward drew up an humble Supplication, containing our grievances, and desires of the ordinary remedies thereof, to have 1638. have been delivered to the King himself: In the mean time we were directed by those, who were intrusted by his Majesty, to attend his Declaration here in Scotland, which would free us of all fears of innovations of Religion, and prove satisfactory: And lest for want of true information of our just grievances and desires it should fall out otherwise, we expressed to them, with the greatest modesty we could, our desires in some few Articles, and with great patience have attended his Majesties pleasure thereanent: And all this Month by-gone being frequently convened to hear the same delivered by his Majesties Commissioner the right Noble and potent Lord James Marquess of Hamilton, &c. we presented a new Petition to his Grace as his Majesties Commissioner, craving most humbly the indiction of a free Assembly and Parliament, as the only remedies thereof: Like as finding a mis-information, or mistake of our Covenant with God, as if it had been an unlawful combination to be the main hinderance of obtaining our desires, in a new Supplication; we have fully removed that impediment, renewed our desires of those supreme Judicatories, to be indicted with diligence, for settling of the Kirk and Kingdom: But being answered only with delays after these nine Months attendance, and with this Proclamation that contained his Majesties gracious Declaration of his pious intentions, not to admit of any innovations in Religion or Law, nor any stain of Popish Superstition, But on the contrary to be resolved to maintain the true Christian Religion professed in this Kingdom; which we were ever so far from calling in question, as in our Supplications, Complaints, and Bills we used the same as one cause of our desires, one ground of our confidence of a gracious answer, and argument of our Adversaries malignant mis-information of so Religious a King. And now most humbly (with bended knees and bowed hearts) thank our gracious Sovereign for the same, Wilhing and praying the Lord of Heaven, truly and fully to inform his Majesty how far these Books, Judicatories, and all our other evils and grievances are full of Idolatrous Superstitions, and Popish errors, How destructive of the Reformation of Religion in this Land, and of the Laws and Liberties of this Church and Kingdom, and so directly contrary to this his Majesties pious intention and Declaration.

Yet seeing that no Proclamation could sufficiently remove the present evils, nor settle our fears, nor secure us from the re-entry of any evil or Innovation, which it seemed to discharge or prevent the like in time coming, nor satisfy our humble Supplications, craving the present indiction of a free Assembly & Parliament, as the only remedies of our evils, and means to prevent the like: And seeing this Proclamation doth not so much as make mention, or acknowledge any of our Supplications, Complaints, and Grievances, or any just cause thereof, except under the name of great increase of disorders, faults, and misdemeanors, but only our fears of some future Innovation of Religion or Laws, occasioned only (as is pretended) by the Introduction of the Service Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission; which fear his Majesty hoped to have been abundantly and sufficiently satisfied by his two former Proclamations of the ninth of December, and nineteenth of February. And by this his present Declaration, except his Subjects be blindly (under pretext of Religion)

led unto disobedience, Doth mis-ken, pass over, and so in effect deny all our supplications, bills, articles, and desires, especially our complaints against the Prelat our parties. And, that once for all, in a fair and perswasive way, even after the relait of our last supplication, clearing us from the calumny of unlawful combination; Doth not disallow nor discharge any of the innovations, and evils complained upon, but only assureth that his Majesty will not press their practice, but in such a fair and legal way, as shall satisfy his Subjects of his intention; which (joyned with the other clause, allowing and confirming the Proclamation the nineteenth of February) evidenceth the liberty left to any Prelate or persons to practise the same, and by all other fair waies to perswade others thereunto; and his Majesties resolution to press their practice in a fair and legal way: And also confirmeth the former Declaration, that the Service Book is a ready mean to maintain the true Religion already professed, and to beat out all Superstition, and no waies to be contrary to the Laws of this Kingdom, but to be compiled and approved for the universal use and edification of all his Majesties Subjects; Doth not abolish, but promiseth to rectifie the High Commission, with advice of his Privy Council, implying the King's power, with consent of the Council, to establish this or any Judicatory within this Kingdom, without consent of the three Estates convened in Parliament, contrary to the fundamental and express Laws thereof; and by consequent with the like reason, to establish Laws and Service Books, without consent of the Assembly and Parliament; Which is contrary to the main ground of all our Supplications, against the manner of their Introduction; Doth only promise to take into his consideration in an Assembly and Parliament, which shall be called at his best convenience, while as the evident and urgent necessity, for settling the combustions, threatening the total dissolution and desolation of this Church and State, excuseth our uncessant and importune calling for these present remedies: Doth insinuate the continuance and execution of any pretended Laws for these innovations of Worship, and corruptions of Church Government, and civil places of Church-men, which by our Covenant, we have obliged ourselves to forbear, and the re-establishment of these evils in an Assembly and Parliament, which he will call in his best conveniencie, to wit, for that and this other end of satisfying his Subjects judgments anent the Service Book and Book of Canons; Doth condemn all our former proceedings, even our supplicating, complaining, protesting, subscribing of our Covenant together, and our continual Meetings, as great disorders, increase of disorders, deserving justly a powerful rather than a perswasive way, a running headlong into ruin, a perishing in our faults, a blind disobedience under pretext of Religion, and doth threaten and denounce, Now once for all, If we be not heartily satisfied, and give testimony of our obedience after this Declaration, but continue, as by our former proceedings, to draw on our own ruin, that albeit unwillingly, he must make use of that power which God hath indued him with, for reclaiming of so disobedient people.

Therefore we, in our own name, and in the name of all who will adhere to the Confession of Faith, and Reformation of Religion within this Land, are forced and compelled, out of our bound duty to God, our King, native Country, our selves and our posterity, (lest our silence should be prejudicial to so important a cause, as concerns God's Glory and Worship, our Religion and Salvation, the Laws and Liberties of this Church and Kingdom, or derogatory to our former Supplications, Complaints, Protestations, Articles and proceedings, or unanswerable to the solemn Oath of our Nation Covenant with God) To declare before God and man, and to protest, Primo, That we do, and will constantly adhere, according to our vocation and power, to the said Reformation, in Doctrine, use of Sacraments, and Discipline; And that notwithstanding of any innovations introduced therein, either of old or of late. Secundo, We protest, That we adhere to the Grievances, Supplications, and Protestations given in at Assemblies and Parliaments, and to our late Supplications, Complaints, Protestations, and other lawful proceedings against the same, and particularly against the Service Book, and Book of Canons, as main innovations of Religion and Laws, and full of Popish Superstition, and so directly contrary to the King's Declaration, And against the High Commission, as a Judicatory established contrary to the Laws and Liberties of this Church and Kingdom, and destructive of other lawful Judicatories, which both in respect of the nature of it, and manner of Introduction, without consent of the three Estates of Parliament, cannot be any waies rectified, but absolutely discharged: Tertio, we protest, That we adhere with our hearts to our Oath and subscription of the Confession of Faith, the solemn Covenant between God, this Church and Kingdom, and the clauses particularly therein expressed and generally contained, and to our last Articles for the peace of this Kirk and Kingdom, drawn out of it, and to all the matters therein contained, and manner of remedy therein desired. Quarto, we protest, That this Proclamation or Act of Council, or any other Act, or Proclamation, or Declaration, or ratification thereof, By Subscription, or Act, or Letter, or any other manner of way whatsoever, or any precondemnation of our cause or carriage, before the same be lawfully heard and tried in the supreme Judicatories of this Kirk and Kingdom, the only proper judges to national causes and proceedings, or any certification or threatening therein denounced, shall no waies be prejudicial to the Confession of Faith, Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom, nor to our supplications, complaints, protestations, articles, lawful Meetings, proceedings, pursuits, mutual defences, nor to our Persons and Estates, and shall no waies be disgraceful either in reality or opinion, at home or abroad, to us or any of us: But on the contrary, that any Act, or Letter, or subscription of the Council, carrying the approbation of the Declaration, and condemnation of our proceedings, indicta causa, is and ought to be reputed and esteemed unjust, illegal and null, as here before God and man we offer to clear, and to verifie both the justice of our cause and carriage, and the injustice of such Acts against us, in the face of the first gen. Assembly of the Church and Parliament of the Estates, unto whom with all solemnities requisite, we do publickly appeal. Quinto, We protest, that seeing our former supplications, last Articles, and our last desire and Petition to his Majesty's Commissioner, which petitioned for the present indiction of a free general Assembly and Parliament, according to the Law and Custom of all Nations, and of this Nation in the like case, to hear the desires, ease the grievances, and settle the fears of the body of the Church and Kingdom, are thus delayed, and in effect refused, to wit, Once for all, till his Majesties conveniency for the end contained in this Proclamation, that We continue by their presents to supplicate his Majesty again and again, for the granting of the same: And whatsoever trouble or inconvenience fall out in this Land in the mean time, for want of these ordinary remedies, and by the practice of any of these innovations and evils, contrary to our supplications, articles, and confession, it be not imputed unto us who most humbly beg these lawful remedies, but also that it is, and shall be lawful unto us, to defend and maintain the Religion, Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom, the King's Authority in defence thereof, and every one of us one another in that cause, of maintaining the Religion, and the King's foresaid Authority, according to our power vocation and Covenant, with our best counsel, bodies, lives, means, and whole strength, against all persons whatsoever, and against all external or internal invasions menaced in this Proclamation. Like as that in the great exigency of the Church, necessitating the use of these ordinary and lawful remedies, for settling the commotions thereof, it is and shall be leasome unto us to appoint, hold and use the ordinary means, our lawful Meetings and Assemblies of the Church agreeable to the Law of God, and practice of the Primitive Church, the Acts of the general Assemblies, and Parliaments, and the example of our Worthy Reformers, in the like case. Sexto, We protest, that our former Supplications, Complaints, Protestations, Confessions, Meetings, Proceedings and mutual defences of every one another in this cause, as they are, and were in themselves most necessary, and orderly means agreeable to the laws and practice of this Church and Kingdom, to be commended as real duties of faithful Christians, loyal Subjects, and sensible members of the body of the Church and Kingdom, and no wise to be stiled nor accounted great disorders, misdemeanors, blind disobedience under pretext of Religion, and running headlong into ruin, &c. So they proceeded only from conscience of our duty to God, our King, native Country, and our posterity, and doth tend to no other end, but to the preservation of the true reformed Religion, the confession of Faith, Laws, Liberties of this His Majesties most ancient Kingdom, and of His Majesties authority in defence thereof, and satisfaction of our humble desires, contained in our Supplications, complaints and articles, unto the which we adhere again and again, as we would eschew the curse of the Almighty God, following the breach of his Covenant: And yet we do certainly expect, according to the King's Majesty his accustomed goodness and justice that his sacred Majesty after a true information of the justice of our cause and carriage, will presently indict these ordinary remedies of a free Assembly and Parliament, to our just Supplications, complaints, and articles, which may be expected, and useth to be granted from so just and gracious a King, towards most loyal and dutiful Subjects, calling for redress of so pressing grievances, and praying heartily that His Majesty may long and prosperously reign over us. Where-

Anno 1638. W Hereupon a Noble Earl, John Earl of Castles, &c. in name of the Noble-men, M. Alexander Gibson younger of Dury in name of the Barons, James Fletcher Provost of Dundy, in name of the Burrowes, M. John Ker Minister at Salt-Prestoun, in name of the Ministers, and Master Archbald Johnston, Reader hereof, in name of all who adheres to the Confession of Faith and Covenant lately renewed within this Kingdom, took Instruments in the hands of three Notars present, at the said Mercat-Cross of Edinburgh, being invironed with great numbers of the foresaid Noble-men, Barons, Gentlemen, Burrows, Ministers and Commons, before many hundred witnesses, and craved the extract thereof: And in token of their dutiful respect to his Majesty, confidence of the equity of their cause, and innocency of their carriage, and hope of his Majesties gracious acceptance, they offered in all humility, with submissive reverence, a Copy thereof to the Herald.

Now we must appeal to the Judgment of the World, whether there was any thing in this Proclamation which deserved such an undutiful and rebellious Protestation, or the seditious clamours, which both at their private and publick Meetings, especially in their Pulpits, were made against it.

This Protestation needeth no answer; for after the first part of it, which is nothing but a Repetition of that which they have so often said, there is nothing but a number of falsities heaped up together, the Reader may easily perceive: For whereas they alledge, That they have removed the impediment which caused their Covenant to be mistaken, as if it had been an unlawful Combination; 'tis nothing so, for no Covenant or Oath can be made or imposed without his Majesties Authority. We suppose that thereby they mean that which they tendered to his Majesties Commissioner, and called it by the name of an Explication of their Covenant; which Explication was so far from giving unto his Majesty any satisfaction, that both to the King and all reasonable men it must needs appear to be a stronger confirmation of their unlawful combination: For whereas they refused to except the King out of the number of those persons against whom their band of mutual maintenance is intended, it plainly demonstrateth, that in their intention his Majesty is the person chiefly aimed at. In some few lines after this, they profess that they never so much as called in question his Majesties resolution to maintain the Religion professed in that Kingdom, and his care for not admitting any Innovations in Religion, or any stain of Popish Superstition: Whereas 'tis notoriously known that in their private Meetings, nay, even in their publick Assemblies and Sermons, they have endeavoured to settle in his Majesties good Subjects minds, opinions, fears, and jealousies, quite contrary to these their Printed asseverations. In the last part they ground their Protestation upon no grounds but such as these: That they will continue together, because they have obliged themselves by Oath so to do, and because they will and are resolved to adhere constantly to what they have done, and because they offer to clear themselves before a general Assembly and Parliament, where they themselves make account to be Judges. Now these and such like false and weak grounds it is very unnecessary to confute, the rehearsal of them being upon the first view, their sufficient conviction. After all these, they end their Protestation with two very unfavourable conclusions: The first is, that if the King will not allow of their proceedings, they themselves will call it a General Assembly, which they shall be sure to allow of them. A notable piece of hypocrisie and disloyalty together, to be suiters to the King for that which they (as they say) both may do and are resolved to do without his leave: The second is, they protest, that, notwithstanding any thing which his Majesty doth or shall say to the contrary, all their proceedings are in themselves most necessary, and orderly means agreeable to the Laws and practice of that Church and Kingdom, to be commended as real duties of faithful Christians, loyal Subjects, and sensible members of the body of that Church and Kingdom, and no way to be styled or accounted great disorders, misdemeanors, blind disobedience, under pretext of Religion, and running headlong into ruin: All which words are multiplied, only to make up a very unmannerly contradiction to the very words of the King's Proclamation.

The Lord Commissioner seeing, not that he was not able to give, but that they were resolute not to receive any satisfaction by what was offered, and that the most that they could be brought to, was that which they called an explication of their Covenant, but indeed was none; for they would never yield that these words, whereby in their Covenant they bound themselves in a mutual defence against all persons whatsoever, should admit this interpretation (except the King): He told them plainly, that since his Instructions were out, he could proceed no further with them without new conference with, and Instructions from his Majestie; and therefore he resolved a speedy Journey to England, to inform his Majesty of what had passed, and make him acquainted with that Explication of their Covenant which they had given him, though as it had given no satisfaction to himself, so he was sure it would give none to his Majesty: In the mean time, he entreated them to behave themselves more quietly and peaceably than they had done, until the King's pleasure were further known.

That pretended Explication of their Covenant was conceived by way of Petition, and was as followeth:

To His Majesties Commissioner:
The Supplication of the Noble-men, Barons, Burgesses, Ministers and Commons here attending His Majesties gracious answer of our former Petitions, Complaints, and Desires, Humbly shewing,

That whereas we expecting from your Grace, as His Majesties Commissioner, a gracious answer of our former Supplications, complaints and just desires, have presented to your Grace a Petition, humbly craving a free general Assembly and Parliament, as the ordinary remedy of our Grievances, and the only mean to put this Kingdom to quietness, It pleased your Grace to shew, that His Majesty, from his Princely care of this Kirk and Kingdom, would be most willing to indict a free general Assembly, and call a Parliament for those good ends; but that your Grace, as His Majesties Commissioner, hath conceived the Confession of Faith, and Covenant lately renewed by us His Majesties Subjects, to be an unlawful combination against Authority; thereby to cast off our dutiful obedience, and not a Covenant for maintaining of true Religion of His

Anno 1638. Majesties Person and Authority, and of the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. And we being most willing to remove that, as the main hinderance of the obtaining of our desires; Therefore, and for clearing of our loyalty, and vindicating our selves from so great an imputation, We do now in all humility remonstrate to your Grace, as His Majesties Commissioner, and declare before God and men, that we are heartily grieved and sorry, that any good man, but most of all that our Dread Sovereign should so conceive of our doing: And that we were, and still are so far from any thought of withdrawing our selves from our dutiful subjection, and obedience to His Majesties Government, which by the descent, and under the Reign of 107 Kings, is most chearfully acknowledged by us & our Predecessors, that we never had, nor have any intention or desire to attempt anything that may turn to the dishonour of God, diminution of the King's greatness and authority. But on the contrary, we acknowledging our quietness, stability and happiness to depend upon the safety of the King's Majesty, as upon God's Vicegerent set over us for maintenance of Religion, and ministracion of Justice, have solemnly sworn, not only our mutual concurrence and assistance for the cause of Religion, but also to the uttermost of our power, with our means and lives, to stand to the defence of our Dread Sovereign the King's Majesty, His Person and Authority, in the preservation and defence of the true Religion, Liberties and Laws of the Kingdom. And therefore, we His Majesties loyal Subjects, free from that and all other imputations of that kind, most humbly beseech your Grace to esteem that our Confession of Faith and Covenant, to have been intended, and to be the largest testimony of our fidelity to God, and loyalty to our King: And that hinderance being removed must still supplicate that your Grace would be pleased to indict a free general Assembly and Parliament, which will undoubtedly redress all our evils, settle the peace of the Kirk and Kingdom, and procure that chearfulness of obedience which ought to be rendered to His Majesty, carrying with it the offer of our Fortunes, and best endeavours for His Majesties honour and happiness, as a real testimony of our thankfulness, and our hearty Prayers to God, that his Majesty may long and prosperously Reign over us.

NOW doth this Petition deserve the name of an Explication of their Covenant? Much less of such an Explication as should give either his Majesty or his Commissioner any satisfaction? No, for it containeth neither more nor less than this, that they do not mean to shake off their obedience, if the King will give way to all their courses, which by this Petition they justify; so that their meaning is, that they will continue obedient Subjects, if the King will part from his Sovereignty; which is in effect, that they will obey if his Majesty will suffer them to command. But where it was expected that to these words of their Covenant, whereby they bind themselves to mutual maintenance, against all persons whatsoever, should have been added, except the King and his Successors, that was refused, though even that could have given no satisfaction, unless his Majesty should give way to that which divers Acts of Parliament have made Sedition, and punishable with death.

Upon notice given by the Lord Commissioner of his intended departure, the debates at their Table grew very hot and fiery upon this point, Whether they should presently indict a general Assembly, and fall upon the violent courses intended by them, or that they should grant some short time for his Journey, his stay with his Majesty, his return to them again, with the King's final answer and last resolution; and in the mean time promise that they would behave themselves quietly and peaceably, and continue all things in statu quo until his return. This last was agreed unto, though not without much contrariety of voices, and so some of the principal Covenanters came and acquainted the Lord Commissioner with this their resolution, which was, That they would expect the King's answer, and his return upon the fifth of August next at the farthest; until which time they would break up their great meeting, contain themselves and the people in quietness and peace; but if by that day he did either not return, or not bring with him from his Majesty such an answer as they expected, then they would hold themselves free, and go on to prosecute the courses which they had resolved upon. And so the Lord Commissioner began his Journey towards England.

After the Commissioner had at Greenwich made his Majesty fully acquainted with all their insolencies, he speedily dispatched him with new Instructions, and commanded him to return, so that he might be back in Scotland by the fifth of August, and gave him order for the indicting both of a General Assembly and a Parliament, but so, that he should first be fully satisfied, by all informations which he could conveniently receive, of the constitution of a General Assembly, with which perhaps many were not acquainted, none having been kept for divers years: And therefore it did require good deliberation, to agree both upon the members of the Assembly (not for their persons but for their quality) and of what things were usually treated and handled there.

No sooner was he returned into Scotland, but he found all things in much worse case, and in a far greater combustion than he left them: For he found that the heads of the Faction (being afraid that he might bring back with him some satisfactory accommodation, which the Subjects might like well, but they themselves resolved to reject,) had in the time of his absence assured their Followers, that they might compass their ends by such means, and upon such conditions as themselves desired: Nay, they proceeded so far, as to make the people believe what they knew to be most untrue, viz. That the Commissioner was well satisfied with all their proceedings, and especially with their Covenant, in regard of the late Explication they had made of it; and were so impudent as to use that inducement for an argument, whereby they perswaded many of all sorts, especially of the Ministers, who had formerly stood out against their Covenant, to enter into it, in this short time of his absence from them; And the three Ministers in their answers to the Queries of the Divines of Aberdene, had the boldness to Print, that the Commissioner rested satisfied with their Covenant, according to their Explication of it: With which their notorious calumny he found himself so highly injured, in a point which so much concerned his loyalty to the King, and the trust reposed in him by the King, that he was enforced to call the Lords of the Council, divers others of the Nobility, and some of the Lords Covenanters themselves, to give testimony of his frequent asseverations in their hearing, that as he himself was no way satisfied with that Explication, so he was assured that the King neither would nor could receive any satisfaction by it, only that he would present it to him at their entreaty: And besides the attestation of so many witnesses, he was necessitated, both for clearing of himself to his

It is true, they printed a weak Answer to that Manifest, in which they confess, that they never heard him say that he was satisfied with that Declaration; but that by some probable Reasons (which are there expressed, and indeed are most improbable ones) they were induced to believe that he was satisfied with it, although that both to their new Profelytes, and in the Ministers printed Answers, they had positively averred, that after he had received that Explication he was fully satisfied with their Covenant: Which dealing of theirs gave occasion for many to think, that this false aspersion was put upon him, by those who ever laboured to strangle all hopes of reconciliation, only to raise in his Majesty a distrustful jealousy of his Service, that so he might be called back, and the People made believe that no relieving of their grievances was intended by the King.

About the same time a great stir was raised in that Kingdom upon a very slender ground, which was this: There had been printed at Amstewp, in several pieces, the Pictures of the several stories of the Gospels, and Acts of the Apostles, after the manner as they are usually printed in the Romish Church; some Papists, and it may be others, had caused these several pieces to be bound in their Bibles, at the several Chapters of those stories to which they did relate; they found such a Bible printed at Edenburgh, which being printed (as all Bibles are) by the King's privilege, upon a sudden there were made most tragical complaints, that Pictures and Images were brought into their Bibles by the King's Authority, aggravated by the Heads of that Faction, especially the Ministers, with the imminent dangers of the present Introduction of Popery, Superstition, and Idolatry, still to make the People averse from all hope of satisfaction; so that some did conceive, that these Pictures might be bound in that Bible by some of themselves, merely to irritate the People, and continue them in their distance from returning to the King's obedience: But so far with this Particular we cannot charge them.

Now, notwithstanding these new and daily emergent combustions, and their perpetual working of the People, both in their Pulpit and at their other Meetings, to new insolencies and greater heights of rage and fury, the Lord Commissioner resolved (as well as he could) to pass them over, and to enter into treaty with them for the preparative Overtures of a General Assembly, because he did see that all these impediments and blocks were laid purposely in his way, that either he might stumble at them, or be so scared as to go back; for it was plainly perceived, that whensoever he made any Proposition of Peace, likely to take or please, they presently cast about how to dash it with some new violence and accident which should make it impossible, as did most evidently appear in this Particular.

The Lord Commissioner sent some of the Council to confer with some of the principal Covenanters, concerning some necessary Propositions fit to be resolved upon before the indicting of the Assembly, both concerning the Members of which it was to be constituted, and concerning the matters to be treated of in it, (two consultations usually previous to that Meeting, for the omission whereof in one Assembly of later times, they had so grievously complained, that in a Petition exhibited by the Ministers of their side, it was alleged for a nullity of that Assembly:) This Message was received with so much choler and contempt, that they presently blazed it abroad amongst their Followers, for a Proposition tending utterly to the ruin of the Laws and Liberties both of Church and Kingdom, that the hearkning to any such Overtures was an absolute prelimitation of that Assembly, which they intended should be free and general; that neither of the Members of their Assembly, nor of the matters to be handled in it, they would speak so much as one word until they came upon the place, and were in the Assembly; that then and there the Assembly itself was to be the sole Judge both of the competency of the Members elected, of the regularity of their election, and of all matters treated of there, whether they were of their cognizance and jurisdiction or not, and likewise gave out, that they did not much care whether the Lord Commissioner would indict an Assembly or not: They would indeed like it better if it were indicted by the King's Authority, but if his Majesty, requested by them so to do, should refuse it, they both could and would do it of themselves: Then did their Pulpits again begin to ring with this monstrous Proposition, as they called it, of the utter subversion of the Liberties of their Church, by the prelimitation of their Assembly, as if this Conference propounded by the Lord Commissioner concerning the orderly proceedings in that Meeting, had been such a blow to their Church, as they could not fear a greater from Rome it self.

And to make the Lord Commissioner believe that they were in good earnest, they had a little before caused the Presbytery of Peebles to begin with the election for their Commissioners to the General Assembly, being a place not above twenty miles distant from Edenburgh, so that they were sure it must speedily come to his knowledge: To this Election all the Gentlemen within the compass of that Presbytery resorted, intruded themselves by violence, and in despite of the Ministers would give their voices to the chusing both of the Ministers and one Lay-man to be Commissioners for that Presbytery at the next Assembly, whensoever, and wheresoever it should be kept, whenas yet no Assembly was indicted.

The Lord Commissioner weighing well these two things; First, That the principal Covenanters, Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Ministers, as he had occasion to speak with them severally, and upon several occasions, had protested unto him, that their meaning never was quite to abolish Episcopal Government, but only to have it limited and restricted, according to the Laws of that Church and Kingdom, and that they might be accountable to, and censurable by the General Assembly, if they should transgress these limits; adding, that they had far rather live under that Government, than under the tyranny of the Presbyteries, which they had heard their Fathers so much complain of, and had given them charge to beware of; the like Protestations they having likewise made to divers of his Majesties Council, and others. And Secondly, considering that he now found that they begun to speak more sparingly and reservedly in that point, and would not so much as treat of it before the Assembly, and that some of them had given out, that they had resolved upon a way to throw off that grievous burthen of the Presbyteries, byteries, with the weight whereof their Fathers were so much grieved, viz. by joyning so many Laick Elders to every Presbytery as there should be Ministers in it, by which means the Laity should be able to keep the Presbytery under, without the help of Bishops. Our Commissioner was now once again at a stand, not knowing how to proceed, as not being sufficiently warranted by his Majesties Instructions to indict a General Assembly or Parliament, unless he should first be satisfied by advice of them who understood the forms of Assemblies, what course was to be held, both for the Members of that Assembly, and the manner of their Election, and for a previous consultation of the principal things to be treated there; all which Consultations the Covenanters did utterly reject: He therefore resolved once again to make a Journey to the King, and acquaint him with these new occurrences, since he found them daily increasing in their obstinacy, and so changed, as he was not able to make any judgment, either of their resolutions, or desires, or of what would give them satisfaction.

And therefore the Lord Commissioner told them plainly, that he had no Authority from his Majesty to indict an Assembly, unless some particulars were agreed upon, both concerning the constitution of the Assembly, the present settling the Peace of the Kingdom, and the righting and restoring to their places such Ministers as had been displaced without order of Law, who might again be displaced, if at the Assembly they were found to deserve it: The sum of his Majesties demands he delivered to the chief Lords Covenanters in these Ten Articles, which will be found by the reading of them to be very just and reasonable:

1. That all Ministers deposed or suspended by the Presbyteries since the first of February last, without warrant of the Ordinary, shall be restored to their own places, till such time as they shall be legally convicted.
2. That all Moderators of Presbyteries, deposed since the foresaid day by the Presbyteries, without warrant of the Ordinary, be restored, and all Moderators appointed by the said Presbyteries without warrant foresaid, to desist from executing the Office of Moderator.
3. That all Ministers admitted by the Presbyteries since the foresaid day, without warrant from the Ordinary, shall desist from exercising the Function of their Ministry in that place to which they have been so presented and admitted.
4. That all Parishioners shall frequent their own Churches, and hear their own Minister, and that the Elders assist the Minister in the Session, and other exercises of the Discipline of the Church, as formerly they were used to do.
5. That all Bishops and Ministers, have their Rents and Stipends duly and thankfully paid them.
6. That all Ministers be appointed presently to repair to their own Churches, that none of them come to the Assembly, or to the place where the same shall be held, but such as shall be chosen Commissioners from the Presbyteries.
7. That according to the Act of Assembly 1606. Moderators of Presbyteries being found necessary Members of the Assembly, every one of the said Moderators be appointed to be Commissioner from that Presbytery where he is Moderator.
8. That Bishops and other Ministers who shall attend the Assembly, may be secured in their persons from all trouble and molestation.

9. That the Commissioners from Presbyteries, be chosen by the Ministers of that Presbytery only: And that no Lay-person whatsoever, meddle in the choice, nor no Minister without his own Presbytery.

10. That all Convocations and Meetings be dissolved, and that every man repair to his own House, and that the Country not only to be made peaceable, but also that all such Acts be forborn, as may make it appear to be otherways.

11. And since his Majesty is still displeased with the Covenant, wisdom and our dutiful obedience to our Sovereign require, that some such course should be taken, whereby his Majesty may receive satisfaction therein; and in the mean time, that there be no pressing, threatening, or persuading of men to subscribe the Covenant, nor no mention be made thereof any more in Pulpits.

To these (according to their usual manner) they would no way condescend, but returned to the Lord Commissioner these most unjust and unreasonable Answers.

Having seriously considered with our selves, that nothing in this World is so precious, and ought to be so dear unto us as our Religion, that the diseases of the Church, after long toleration, did threaten no less than her utter ruin, and the expiring of the truth of Religion at last, and that a free General Assembly was the ordinary remedy appointed by Divine Authority, and blessed by Divine Providence in other Churches, and after a special manner in the Church of Scotland; we have often, and earnestly supplicated for the same, and have laboured to remove what was objected, or what we could conceive to be any hinderance to the obtaining of our desire, like as we have now for the same good end resolved to return this Answer to the Particulars propounded, to be performed by us before any Assembly be indicted.

The Particulars propounded, are either concerning Matters Ecclesiastical or Civil. Ecclesiastical, or Church Matters are, The first, concerning Ministers deposed or suspended by the Presbyteries, since the first of February last, without warrant of the Ordinary, that they be restored to their own places. The second, concerning Moderators of Presbyteries deposed since the foresaid day, to be restored, and all Moderators appointed by the said Presbyteries without warrant a foresaid, to desist from executing the Office of Moderator. The third, concerning Ministers admitted since the foresaid day, that they desist from exercising the Function of the Ministry in that place; to which they have been admitted. These three Particulars do concern the power, duty, and particular facts or faults of Presbyteries, wherein we have no power to judge or determine, whether they have proceeded lawfully or not, far less can we urge or command them to recall what they have determined or done, in the suspending, deposing, or admitting of Ministers, or Moderators, they being properly subject to the superiour Assemblies of the Church; and in this case and condition of the Church, to the General Assembly, where, if they shall not after trial justify their proceedings, from the good warrants of Scripture, reason, and the acts and practices of the Church, they ought to sustain their own deserved censure. And since on the one side, there be many complaints against the Prelates for their usurpation over Presbyteries in the like Particulars; and on the other side, side, there be such complaints of the doings and disorders of the Presbyteries, to the offence of the Prelates; we trust that his Majesties Commissioner will not esteem this to be any hinderance of the indiction of a General Assembly, but rather a powerful and principal motive with speed to convene the same, as the proper Judicatory wherein to determine such dangerous and universal differences of the Church. Neither do we hear that any Ministers are deposed, but only suspended, during this interim till a General Assembly, for their erroneous Doctrine and flagitious Life: So that it were most * offensive to God, disgraceful to Religion, and scandalous to the People, to restore them to their places till they be tried, and censured. And concerning Moderators, none of them (as we understand) are deposed, but some only changed, which is very ordinary in this Church. The fourth, concerning the repairing of Parishioners to their own Church, and that Elders assist the Ministers in the Discipline of the Church, ought to be cognosced and judged by the particular Presbyteries, to which the Parishioners and Elders are subject, since the cause may be in the Ministers no less than in the Parishioners and Elders. And in case they find no redress there, to assent till they come to a General Assembly, the want whereof maketh disorders to be multiplied, both in Presbyteries and particular Parishes.

To the sixth, That Ministers wait upon their own Churches, and that none of them come to the Assembly, or place where the same is kept, but such as shall be chosen Commissioners from Presbyteries, we answer, That none are to come to the place of the Assembly, but such as are either allowed by Commission to have voice, or otherwise have such interest as they can justify to his Majesties Commissioner, and the Assembly convened.

To the seventh, Concerning the appointing of Moderators of Presbyteries to be Commissioners to the General Assembly, only constant Moderators, who have ceased long since, were found in the Assembly 1606. (which yet was never repudiated by the Church to be a lawful National Assembly) so be necessary Members of the General Assembly. And if both the Moderators, who if they be necessary Members, need not to be chosen, and the chosen Commissioners repair to the Assembly, the Assembly itself can judge best of the Members whereof it ought to consist.

To the ninth, That no Lay-person whatsoever meddle with the choosing of Commissioners from the Presbyteries, and no Minister without his own Presbytery, we say, That according to the order of our Church discipline, none but Ministers, and Elders of Churches ought to have voice in choosing Commissioners from Presbyteries, and that no Minister, or Elder, should have voice in Election, but in his own Presbytery.

The rest of the Particulars are concerning Civil Matters: As the fifth, concerning the paying of Rents and Stipends to Ministers and Bishops, concerning which we can say no further, but that the Laws are Patent for them, as for his Majesties other Subjects, and that the General Assembly ought not to be delayed upon any complaint in that kind.

The eighth, requiring that Bishops and Ministers be secured in their persons, we think so reasonable, that we will promise every one of us for our own parts, they shall suffer no violence from us, and that we shall hinder others so far as we may; And if any trouble them otherwise, or make them any kind of molestation in that attendance but by order of Law, the Parties are justly punishable according to the degree of their fault, as other Subjects are.

To the tenth, concerning the dissolving of all Conventions and Meetings, and the peaceableness of the Country; These Meetings being kept for no other end, but for consulting about lawful Remedies against such pressing grievances as threaten the desolation of this Church and State, cannot be dissolved till the Evils be removed. And we trust that nothing in these our Meetings hath escaped which carrieth in it the smallest appearance of tumult, or which may seem to tend to the breach of the Common Peace: But although our Adversaries have herein calumniated us, yet we have always so behaved our selves, as beseeched his Majesties most humble and loyal Subjects, petitioning his Majesty for a legal redress of our just grievances.

To the last, concerning the Covenant; the Commissioner his Grace having many times and most instantly pressed us with that point, we did, first, by * invincible Arguments make manifest, that we could not, without sinning against God, and our own Consciences, and without doing wrong to this National Church, and all Posterity, rescind or alter the same: And thereafter did at large clear the same of all unlawful combinations against Authority, by our last Supplication and Declaration, which his Majesties Commissioner accepted, as the most ready and powerful of all other means, which could come within the compass of our thoughts to give his Majesty satisfaction, The Subscription of this our Confession of Faith, and Covenant, being an act so evidently tending to the || Glory of God, the King's honour, and happiness of the Kingdom: And having already proved so comfortable to us in the inward of our hearts, It is our ardent and constant desire, and ready wish, that both his Majesty and all his good Subjects may be partakers of the same comfort, like as we find our selves bound by Conscience, and by the Covenant itself, to persuade all his Majesties good Subjects to joyn with us for the good of Religion, his Majesties honour, and the quietness of the Kingdom: Which being modestly used by us without pressing, or threatening of the means, we hope shall never give his Majesty the least cause of discontent.

Seeing therefore, according to our power and interest, we are most willing to remove all hinderances that things may be carried in a peaceable manner, worthy our Profession and Covenant, do aim at nothing but the good of the Kingdom, and preservation of the Church, which by consumption, or combustion, is like to be desperately diseased, except remedy some way be speedily provided; And we delight to use no other means, but such as are legal, and have been ordinary in this Church, since the Reformation: We are confident that without further delay, for preventing of greater evils and miseries than we can express, our just desires shall be granted. So shall we be encouraged in the peace of our souls, still to pray for his Majesty, all increase of true honour and happiness.

Upon their refusal, he sent for some of the chief Lords Covenanters, and told them of his resolution for a new Journey; that he found their ways such as he could not go along with them; that he had power to grant them a free General Assembly, but that he could not conceive that to be a free one, in which they should bring in every man to have a voice whom they had a mind to: If they would let him know what manner of persons should sit there, and what they intended to do there, he would give his best concurrence, if he found their intentions to be agreeable to the Laws and Customs of that Church and Kingdom; if they rejected these motions, he knew nothing left for him, but to return back again to his Majesty, yet he desired them before his Journey they would let him know what it was they would have, and that they would express what was the uttermost of that which they desired from his Majesty, without which they would not rest satisfied; that with their desires he would make his Majesty acquainted, and that within a few

Car. 14.
The contrary is most true.

* The Lord Commissioner never heard any Argument to that purpose which could convince a child. The Lord Commissioner never accepted of it, nor conceived it could give satisfaction to any. It doth most evidently tend to the dishonour of God.

Anno few days he would either return to them himself 1638. with the King's Answer, or otherwise it should be speedily sent unto them.

Their answer to the Lord Commissioner was, that they would make their Tables acquainted with his Proposition, and should shortly receive their Answer. At their Table it was much debated, whether he should have any further time allowed him for a new Journey, and a speedy return, or if they should leave him to his own choice and counsels, and they in the mean time to indict a General Assembly, and go on with the prosecution of their intended resolutions: At last, not without contrariety of Suffrages in this also, it was by most voices concluded, that to give the People satisfaction, they would yet forbear the indicting of the Assembly until the 21. day of September, before which time, if he or some other did not return with such answer as should content them, then they would hold themselves free to go on with their designs: And for expressing their desires, or what satisfaction they expected from his Majesty, they would not descend to Particulars, only they looked for a free General Assembly, and a Parliament, in which two great Courts their desires should be made known; And this being all the answer the Lord Commissioner could obtain from them, he told them that he would report it to his Majesty, and intended presently to begin his Journey.

No sooner were they parted from him, but they betook themselves to their old courses, both of incensing the people, and dashing in the Lord Commissioner all hope of doing any good in this service: The first they did by scattering a report amongst their followers, that the Lord Commissioner neither had power from the King, nor any intention in himself to give them any satisfaction, but that he only delayed time, until all things might be in a ripeness and readiness for their ruin, an evident argument whereof was, that now he had taken two Journeys thither, and yet had never offered any thing, nor were they in better case than before he was sent unto them: A thing which they knew to be most untrue, both because in his Majesties last Declaration he had granted them very many things concerning their pretended grievances, which he had not granted before, being the same things which at first they only desired; as likewise because the Lord Commissioner had now lately rendered them in writing Ten Propositions, upon the yielding to which he would presently indict an Assembly: But that was all one with them, for so they could persuade the people that nothing yet had been offered at all to content them, they cared not by what reports (true or false) that persuasion were wrought in them: The King's Commissioner, to assure the People that he intended really, and endeavoured their content, if possibly it might be effected upon any reasonable termes, contracted his former Propositions into these two (which we here insert) and caused many Copies of them to be dispersed through the City, that so the People might not be kept from the knowledge of his Majesties favour towards them.

1. If the Lords and the rest will undertake for themselves and the rest, that no Laicks shall have voices in choosing the Ministers to be sent from the several Presbyteries to the General Assembly, nor none else but the Ministers of the same Presbytery.
2. If they will undertake that at the Assembly they shall not go about to determine of things established by

Acts of Parliament, otherwise than by Remonstrance or Petition to the Parliament, leaving the determining of things Ecclesiastical to the general Assembly, and things settled by Act of Parliament, to the Parliament.

Then I will presently indict a General Assembly, and promise, upon my Honour, immediately after the Assembly to indict a Parliament, which shall cognosce of all their complaints.

THis did so irritate their Leaders, that they presently entred upon a course that should put the Lord Commissioner out of hope of ever doing any good in this Service; for they presently gave order, even before the beginning of his Journey, for the election of the Commissioners to the General Assembly throughout the whole Kingdom, to be made before his return, or the indicting of an Assembly; which caused him presently to send for the chief of the Covenanters, and absolutely to tell them, That if they did proceed to the election of any Commissioners for the Assembly before his return, he would not go his Journey at all; he would not move his Majesty for a general Assembly, nor for any thing else; he would leave them to their own ways; as a private man he would stay in the Kingdom and expect the issue of their Counsels: Which resolution of his, because it should not be concealed from the People, he caused likewise by many Copies of it in writing to be divulged amongst them: This his determination these Lords Covenanters to whom he delivered it, communicated to their Tables, who were very stiff in their former conclusion for the present election of Commissioners; yet because they could not well perceive how to satisfy the People, if they should break off all Treaty upon such a nice point, it was at the last agreed unto, and talked of as a singular favour done to the Lord Commissioner, that the election of the Commissioners to the Assembly should be delayed until his return, which we pray the Reader to observe, because it shall be known at his return, with what a horrible equivocation they did elude this their promise.

Before the Lord Commissioner began his Journey towards the King, he entred into a serious Consultation with the chief Officers of State and principal Counsellors there, what further advice they had to recommend by him unto the King, for the settling of the Peace of that Kingdom, since they clearly perceived that all his Majesties Royal and Gracious Intentions to that People were frustrated, by the rebellious and obstinate courses of some few who miss-led the rest; and since he could not possibly draw from the Covenanters their designs, nay, nor their desires, whereby he might learn what they expected for their satisfaction, he desired of them their best counsel, and that he with them might conceive in writing what they supposed would reduce the Kingdom to peace and quietness, and without which they thought it could not be effected, but by force and arms, which he was sure his Majesty would never use, but in an unavoidable extremity, and for the preservation of his Crown and Dignity. This the Lord Commissioner did not adventure to communicate with the whole Council, because he did know that some of the Counsellors were Covenanters in their hearts, though for dangerous ends, they had forborn the subscribing of the Covenant with their hands, and that they would acquaint the Covenanters with it, with whom they kept private meetings.

This

1638. This Proposition being much debated amongst these Counsellors, they fell upon that way which they conceived would fully satisfy, or else none could; which was this: Since the Covenanters would not express their own desires in particulars, they thought best to take an exact view of all their Petitions, Remonstrances, Grievances, Declarations, Protestations either written or printed, which they had since the first beginning of these Troubles exhibited to the King, Lord Commissioner, or Council; and to extract out of them the Particulars of all their grievances and desires, and to represent them unto his Majesty.

And besides all these, the King being assured by the Lord Commissioner, that the principal motive which the Heads of the Covenanters had used to the People for alienating their minds from his Majesty, was that false opinion of his averiness from the Religion Reformed, and of his inclination to Popery: His Majesty resolved, above all that was desired, to take a course which should give his Subjects full and unquestionable satisfaction in that point; and therefore propounding unto his Majesty, the example of his Royal Father, his Majesty concluded to command and urge the renewing of that Confession of Faith, which was first framed and afterward renewed in his name, by which means he made account that he should both benefit his Subjects and right himself: For perceiving that they had grounded and fathered their spurious Covenant upon that Confession and Covenant urged by his Majesties Father; he resolved, by this Act of his Authority to legitimate it, that it being commanded by him, might save the People who were to swear it, from incurring the danger of the Laws, which have made it very criminal to enter into any Covenant without the King's Authority: As also, to vindicate himself from that false and wicked aspersions, which the Heads of their Covenant had most seditiously laid upon his Majesty, viz. that he had a resolution either to bring in Popery, or at least to tolerate it in his Kingdoms, which though they themselves did not believe, yet they believed that this was the most powerful means of alienating the minds of the People from his Majesty (which they only intended) if they could possibly work them to that belief. And so both his Majesty and the Lord Commissioner, who had lately come from them, were persuaded that not only his Majesties people, but all people in the World, to whose notice it should come, must rest satisfied, that he could not possibly be that way inclined, if he should command, & by his own authority effect a new subscription & swearing of that Confession of Faith, which is more directly opposite to Popery than any Confession besides extant in the World. This being added to the former advice of Council, which was to ease them of all those things which they pretended to be their principal grievances, the King well hoped should have settled the peace of that Church and Kingdom. For by granting the removing of those former grievances, without this last superaddition of his Majesties favour, the Counsellors were persuaded that the King's Subjects for the most part would be satisfied, desert their Leaders, and adhere to his Majesty with their Lives and Fortunes, as they themselves would do who signed this their Counsel with their hands, and sent it up to his Majesty by the said Commissioner.

No sooner was he come to the King at Oatlands, but his Majesty was astonished with his relation of their proceedings; and when he presented into his Majesty, not only the improbability, but also the impossibility that ever the Ring-leaders of that Rebellion would desist, until they had obtained their wicked ends, and that the only hope of peace was placed in dividing the People from them, by proffering unto the people such gracious favours, as in all likelihood they neither could nor would reject; and well weighing the advice given unto his Majesty by the principal Counsellors and Officers of State there, after mature deliberation with such as his Majesty was pleased to call unto him, and especially at the humble and earnest importunity of the Lord Commissioner, so zealously affected to the peace of the King's and his native Countrey, the King did resolve to pursue that advice of his and the other Counsellors, and did again make a very exact survey of whatsoever they had petitioned for, from the very first, either of his Majesty, the Lord Commissioner, or Council, and resolved to grant them all, and besides all these, to renew the former Confession of Faith and the Band annexed, which his Majesty made account would have given them satisfaction above all things, especially in that wherein they had been most wickedly abused, that is, in their opinion of the King's inclination to Popery. The particulars of his Majesties gracious grants unto them you shall find in the next Proclamation made after the Lord Commissioners return to that Kingdom; whom, within eight days after his coming to the King, he dispatched back again, overjoyed with his Majesties grants, as making full accompt, that he should be received this last time as an Angel of God, bringing in his mouth the branch both of piety and peace: But how far both the King and he and the Privy Counsellors, and all the good, religious, loyal, and peaceable Subjects of that Kingdom were deceived herein, the next ensuing Narration (which is almost above credit) will sufficiently declare.

For the Lord Commissioner, returning before the day agreed upon, he found all things in the time of his absence so perplexed and imbroyled by the Heads of the Covenanters, who were afraid of nothing so much, as that he should return with an answer satisfactory to the People, that he began most clearly to perceive, that these men were resolved that nothing should satisfy them; which appeared by their whole proceedings in the time of his absence, and especially in these two particulars: First, whereas they had promised that no Election of Commissioners for the Assembly should be made before Sept. 21. the day agreed upon for his return, they gave order that the Election should be made Sept. 22. being the next day after that, which they knew was to be passed before he could possibly return the King's answer to them: According to which resolution of theirs, Commissioners for the Assembly were elected in many Presbyteries upon that day, before any of the Covenanters did, or could come to know the King's answer from the Lord Commissioner, or before the Assembly was indicted, which was not until some days after these Elections were past: Now, we desire to know whether ever there were heard a more gross, absurd, and palpable equivocation than this, and that from men, who would be accounted the greatest opposites in the world to Popish Tenets, and to none more than that of equivocation. They promise that no Election shall be made until the Lord Commissioner return, and before such a day; and that promise grounded upon the Lord Commissioners resolution before his departure from them, that unless they would give him that assurance, he would not undertake his Journey, nor move the King any more in this business; but if they would

Anno 1638. expect his return and answer by that time, he would do both. These holy men resolve to expect that time before any Election shall be actually made, but give order that it shall be made the next day after, before it could be known in most parts of the Kingdom whether he were returned, or in any part of the Kingdom, or by any person of the Kingdom, what Answer he had returned from the King. The insincerity of which proceedings (condemned by many Covenanting Ministers at their Meeting at Edinburgh for a most desperate Equivocation) We may be confident every man will detest, especially in those men who boast themselves to be the only sincere Professors of these times.

Besides, the Lord Commissioner found that these men (who would not so much as hear him speak of any precedent Conference of any thing concerning the Assembly, nor of any directions to be agreed upon for the more orderly proceeding in it, but cried out against them as unsufferable prelimitations and prejudgings of the liberties of Christ and his Church) had in the time of his absence at their Tables agreed upon certain directions comprehended in eight Articles, which they had dispersed through the whole Kingdom, and commanded to be observed by the several Presbyteries thereof in their Elections; the true Copy whereof here followeth.

A Direction for Presbyteries.

That every Presbytery have a Copy of the Act made at Dundee the seventh of March, 1597. concerning the number of Commissioners; the tenour whereof followeth.

Because there hath been no order hitherto anent the number of Commissioners to be directed from every Presbytery to the General Assembly, therefore it is statued and ordained, that in all time coming three of the wisest and gravest of the Brethren shall be directed from every Presbytery at the most, as Commissioners to every Assembly, and that none presume to come without Commission: And likewise, that one be directed from every Presbytery in name of the Barons, and one out of every Burgh, except Edinburgh, which shall have power to direct two Commissioners to the General Assembly.

2. That every Presbytery have a Copy of the Commission to be given to the Commissioners; the tenour thereof follows.

T. T. the day of
The which day after calling upon the Name of God, We the Members of the Presbytery of _____ having diligently considered the manifold corruptions, innovations, and disorders, disturbing our peace, and tending to the overthrow of our Religion, and Liberties of the Reformed Church within this Realm; which hath come to pass, especially through the want of the necessary remedy of General Assemblies, as well ordinary as pro re nata, enjoyed by this Church for many years, and ratified by Act of Parliament. And now expecting shortly by the mercy of God the benefit of a free General Assembly, do by these Presents nominate and appoint _____ Minister of _____ as also _____ in name of the Burroughs, conjunctly and severally our lawful Commissioners, giving and granting unto them our full Power, Commission, and express Charge, to repair to the said Assembly at the day and place, when and where it shall happen to sit, in any safe and commodious place within this Kingdom, and there with the rest who shall be authorized with lawful Commission, in our name to propound, treat, reason, vote, and conclude, according to the Word of God, and Confession of Faith approved by sundry General Assemblies, and received throughout the whole Kingdom in all Ecclesiastical Matters, competent to a free General Assembly, and tending to the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ, and the good of Religion, as they will answer to God, and his Church thereupon, and to report to us their diligence therein. In testification of this our Commission and Charge, we have subscribed these Presents with our Hands, and which they have accepted with the lifting up of their Hands.

3. That every Church-Session send one of the most qualified Elders unto the Presbytery the day of choosing Commissioners to the General Assembly: That by common consent of the Ministers and those Elders present in the Presbytery, there may be chosen both the Commissioners for the Ministers, and also some well affected and qualified Nobleman, or special Gentleman, being an Elder of some particular Church-Session within that Presbytery, in name of the Barons: For this is the constitution of the Presbyteries, (otherwise called Elderships) appointed by the Church in the Books of Discipline, Acts of the General Assembly, practised for many years after the Reformation, and ratified in the Parliament, the twelfth of King James the Sixth, and never since altered nor rescinded; neither can be with reason altered, seeing that same is the constitution of the Supreme and General Assemblies, and of the Inferiour and Church-Sessions, as is at more length cleared by some Reasons.

4. That such as are erroneous in Doctrine, or scandalous in Life, be presently processed, that they be not chosen Commissioners; and if they shall happen to be chosen by the greater part, that all the best affected, both Ministers and Elders, protest and come to the Assembly to testify the same.

5. To send to every Presbytery a Copy of the printed Reasons for an Assembly.

6. That Moderators by virtue of their Office be not Commissioners to the Assembly, except they be chosen.

7. That the Presbyteries in one of the ordinary Meetings, appoint to convene solemnly after the twentieth of September, either upon the 21, 22, 23, 24, or 25. for choosing of their Commissioners to the Assembly, and for to send them hither to Edinburgh before the first of October, or so soon as they can, that with common consent, they may receive the King's last answer, and advise upon the next lawful remedies, in their extream necessities of Church and State.

8. That in the Fast to be observed on the sixteenth day of September, the second day preceding their Election, they may crave God's direction therein.

TO these eight Articles they joyned (by way of Information) a very impertinent, long and tedious Discourse of Ruling Elders, too long and too simple to be here inserted, which was added no doubt only to perswade the Ministers to admit Lay-men to have voices in their Presbyteries at the Election of the Ministers who were to be Commissioners for the Assembly; or in case of their refusal, to perswade the Lay-men to put themselves in possession, and give their voices in these Elections whether the Ministers would or no, as shall appear afterwards, both by that intrusion which these Lay-Elders used in many Presbyteries, where the Ministers refused to admit them, and by some of the Tables more private instructions, by which they were ordered so to do.

Now, we desire the Reader to consider, whether the Conference which the Lord Commissioner desired for debating of what Members the Assembly was to be constituted, and the matters which 1638. which were principally to be discussed there (with so much bitterness exclaimed against by them) could in any construction or sense be taken for such a prelimitation of the Assembly, either in the Members, Matter, or Manner of it, as these eight Articles composed and commanded by their Tables. In the second Article, they set down to every Presbytery, a set form of a Commission to be made to their Commissioners, which was never done before; and at the Assembly, when the several Commissions were read, it was observed that all the Commissions were the same verbatim, except a very few from some Presbyteries who would not be ruled by the Table; and gave power to their Commissioners to continue no longer in the Assembly, than his Majesty or his Commissioner in his name should continue it: In the same Article, they will have the Presbyteries in their Commissions to take it pro confesso, that the pretended and complained of Innovations are, corruptions and disorders disturbing the peace, and tending to the overthrow of their Religion and Liberties within the Reformed Church of that Realm: If this be not to pre-judge and take that for granted, which was to be tried by the Assembly, whether it was so or not, viz. whether these things complained of were Innovations and Corruptions introduced in Religion, We must leave it to the Reader to judge. In the third Article they appoint Lay-men to sit in Presbyteries, which had not been done for above Forty years before; Nay, and these Lay-men to be equal in number with the Ministers, which is contrary to their own Book of Discipline alledged by them, which did then order that the Ministers should always exceed the number of the Lay-Elders; so that before this time they never were equal in number: Nay, that these Lay-men should have voices, not only in the chusing of their own Lay-Elder, but, which is insufferable, should have suffrage in the Election of the three Ministers Commissioners for the Assembly, which they themselves do know was never heard nor practised in that Church before, in the very first and strictest times of Reformation, nor ever since. In the fourth Article they order a notable trick and device of their own to be put in practice, whereby they were ascertained, that no Minister should be chosen Commissioner in any Presbytery where they had any power, but such as did undoubtedly concur with them in their rebellious courses: For they appointed (and accordingly it was practised) that every man suspected to be of a different Judgment from them, should presently be proceeded against and brought under the scandal of erroneous Life or Doctrine, and so made incapable of being chosen Commissioner; according to which Article there were very few Ministers in the Kingdom, who had not subscribed their Covenant, but they were presently suspended by their Presbytery, where they had voices to do it, or at the least put under Process by some one or other, which could not be prevented; for no man can be denied an original Process against any man whom he will implead: But yet this Article left no evasion, if it should happen that such a one should be chosen Commissioner, for in this case they ordered, that the rest who gave not voices should protest against the Election, and complain of it to the General Assembly, where they were sure enough to proceed against him there, and lay him aside until his Process should be discussed, which they did put in practice upon some Ministers, who did not concur in Judgment with them at the first sitting down of the Assembly. The sixth Article is directly against the Constitutions of their Church then in force, and till then practised; the Moderator of the Presbytery being constantly one, as being most able to give an account to the Assembly of all Presbyterial actions. The seventh Article gives order for practising the above-mentioned equivocation, and enjoyneth them to make their Elections before they received the King's Answer, and that they repair to Edinburgh immediately after their Election, that all the Commissioners elected may consult before hand upon what was to be said or done at the Assembly; which is in effect neither more nor less, than to receive direction from their Tables how to carry themselves at the Assembly, and indeed to preconvence and hold the Assembly at Edinburgh before their meeting at Glasgow.

These were their publick Instructions which they were not ashamed to avow and send abroad from their Tables, as it were by publick Authority, to the several Presbyteries of that Kingdom; and whether they do not contain prelimitations of the Assembly, we shall leave it to the Reader to judge: But whether, if his Majesty, Commissioner, or Council, had sent any such directions and instructions to the several Presbyteries, they would not have exclaimed against them as unsufferable prelimitations of that Assembly, and pre-judgings of the Liberties of the Church of Christ in that Realm, the King did appeal even to their own Consciences. And yet these publick instructions are nothing to the private ones, which they durst not communicate to all their Party, but only to some one Laick, and one Minister, their special Confidants in every Presbytery, of which you shall hear more afterwards in their due place.

Notwithstanding all these discouragements, arising from the disorderly proceedings of the Covenanters in the time of his absence, the Lord Commissioner the day after the time prefixed for his return, viz. the 22. day of September, 1638. assembled the Council at the Palace of Holy-rood-house, and there first delivered unto them this Letter from his Majesty, as followeth.

Apud Holy-rood-house, Sept. 22. 1638.

The which day James Marquess of Hamilton, his Majesties Commissioner, produced and exhibited before the Lords of Privy Council, the two Missives under-written, signed by the King's Majesty, and directed to the said Lords, which being read, heard, and considered by the said Lords, they have ordained, and ordains the same to be inserted and registred in the Books of Secret Council, therein to remain ad futuram rei memoriam, whereof the tenour followeth.

CHARLES R.

Right trusty, &c. being certainly informed that the distractions which have happened of late, (both in Church and Commonwealth) in this Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, have much troubled the minds of many of Our good and loyal Subjects; and that these distractions have been occasioned upon jealousies and fears of innovation of Religion and Laws, as tending to the introduction of Popery, and not without some suspicion, as if We our self were inclined that way; Upon occasion whereof, many of Our Subjects have of late subscribed a Band or Covenant for preserving the true Religion and Laws already established, and for defending the King's person, and each others, in defence thereof: But the same not being warranted by Royal Authority (as that which was in Our dear Fathers time) must needs of it self be ineffectual, and much prejudicial to the ancient Form and Custom of Government kept within that Our Kingdom of Scotland: Wherefore We, out of Our inborn love to our said native Country, and for obviating these conceived fears, and satisfying of you, and all Our loving People, have thought good to ordain the Confession of Faith, and Band subjoyned thereto, of the date at Edinburgh, January 28. 1580. and signed by Our Royal Father to be renewed: And to that effect have given Order to Our Commissioner, with advice of Our Council, to set down and settle some solid course, whereby the same may be subscribed by Our Council, Judges, Magistrates of Burroughs, and all other our People of that Kingdom. And for further clearing of Our self, We declare, That as We are and ever have been satisfied in Our Judgment and Conscience for the Reformed Religion now established, and against the Roman: So We purpose, by God's Grace, both to live and die in the practice thereof, and to preserve and maintain the same in full strength and integrity, according to the Laws of that Our ancient Kingdom. What We have thought further fitting to be done at this time, concerning the Particulars contained in our Subjects Petitions; you shall receive Our full pleasure therein from Our Commissioner. And that this Our Declaration concerning Our self, and Our pious intention, for settling the Reformed Religion within that Our Kingdom, may appear to Posterity; Our pleasure is, that these presents be registred in the Books of Council.

THIS his Majesties Letter being received by the Council with all submissive, joyful, and thankful acknowledgment, the Commissioner made them further acquainted with the Particulars of the King's Grace and Favour, for the appeasing of the Troubles of that Kingdom, who (upon hearing of the same) were filled with excessive joy, as making full account that now malice it self could not find the least pretence of keeping the People from being satisfied, all things which ever yet since the beginning of these Troubles they had desired, being granted unto them. But so soon as some of the Privy Counsellors, who were not only Covenanters in their heart, but the very heart of their Covenant, had made some of the chief covenanting Lords acquainted with the unexpected excess of his Majesties Favours towards his People, these Lords, making full accompt that their Reign was upon the point of expiration if the People should understand the King's Grace and Favour, bestirred themselves with might and main to disperse rumours amongst them, That the News brought home by the Lord Commissioner, importing his Majesties Answer, did tend to the utter subversion of their Religion and Liberties; That there was a new Covenant to be set on foot by the King, to destroy theirs, and that if they now did not resist, all they had done was quite undone and lost: After which, the principal of them came down, first, to the Lord Commissioner, and then to the Council, requesting them, or indeed rather requiring them, that they would not subscribe the Confession of Faith, nor require it to be subscribed by others, by any Authority from the King, threatening in a manner, that if they did, they would repent it, and that a present rupture would follow: The Lord Commissioner and Council heard them twice fully, but found not the least ground of reason for the delay of the Declaration of his Majesties Grace and Favour towards his People, as seeing it proceeded only from an earnest desire in these Lords to have it concealed from them; and therefore resolved, and imparted unto the Lords Covenanters their resolution, that they would publish it that day, being Saturday. The Lords Covenanters did then seem to abate something of their requests, or rather demands, and desired the Kings Commissioner and Council to delay the publishing of the Declaration only until the Monday following, before which time, if they could not shew good Reasons for the stopping of it, they would be content with the publication thereof: Which motion of theirs wanted not seconding from some of the Privy Council there present, who were indeed the first and chiefest of them: But the Lord Commissioner and Counsellors well and wisely foreseeing that this delay was desired, first, that these Lords Covenanters might have time to pen and prepare a Protestation against this his Majesties gracious Declaration, with the Contents whereof some of the Privy Counsellors (heartly Covenanters) had made them acquainted; which Protestation could not be provided nor penned in the space of so few hours: Secondly, That the Lords Covenanters made no question, but that the next day being Sunday, their Ministers in all the Pulpits of Edinburgh, by their subornation, should so configure up the spirits of the People against the Kings gracious Declaration, as they should not be easily and readily laid again: Thirdly, that they might have time to dispatch Messengers and Postes abroad with Copies of their Protestation, in all Burroughs where the Declaration was to be published, before, or as soon as the King's Declaration could be sent to those places: For these important considerations, the Lord Commissioner and Council did declare unto these Lords, after full hearing of them, that considering the invalidity of their Reasons to the contrary, his Majesties gracious Declaration should be published that day at the Cross of Edinburgh: And so accordingly the King's Declaration that day was proclaimed as here it followeth.

CHARLES, by the Grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith. To Our Lovells,

Messengers, Our Sheriffs, in that part conjunctly and severally specially constituted, greeting. Forasmuch as the cause and occasion of all the distractions which have happened of late both in Church & Commonwealth of this Our Kingdom, have proceeded from the conceived fears of innovation of Religion and Laws: To free all Our good Subjects of the least suspicion of any intention in Us to innovate anything, either in Religion or Laws; and to satisfy not only their desires, but even their doubts, We have discharged, and by these presents do discharge the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission, and the practice of them; or any of them: and by these presents annuls and rescinds all acts of Council, Proclamations, and other acts and deeds whatsoever, that have been made or published, for establishing them, or any of them; and declares the same to be null, and to have no force nor effect in time coming. And being informed, that the urging of the practice of the 5 Articles of Pearth Assembly, hath bred great distraction and division in the Church and State, We have been graciously pleased to take the same into Our consideration; and for the quiet and peace of Church and State, do not only dispenze with the practice of the said Articles, but also discharge, like as by these presents We discharge all and whatsoever presents from urging the practice thereof, upon either Lay or Ecclesiastical person whatsoever. And We do hereby free all Our Subjects from all censure and pain, whether Ecclesiastical or Secular, for not urging, praising, or obeying the same, notwithstanding of anything contained in the Acts of Parliament, or general Assembly to the contrary. And because it hath been, to the disgrace of Government, dispersed and surmised throughout this Our Kingdom, that some of Our Subjects have exercised such unlimited and unwaranted power, and have held themselves exempted from censure and punishment, so which others Our Subjects are liable, We do by these presents declare, that if any of Our Subjects, whether Ecclesiastical or Civil, of whatsoever quality, title, or degree, have, or shall at any time presume to do any such act, or assume to themselves any such exemption or power, That they shall, like as by these presents We make and ordain them to be liable to the trial and censure of Parliament, general Assembly, or any other judicatories competent, according to the nature and quality of the offence. And for the free entry of Ministers, that no other Oath be administered unto them than that which is contained in the Act of Parliament, And so give Our Subjects full assurance, that We never intend to admit of any change or alteration in the true Religion already established and professed in this Our Kingdom, And that all Our good people may be fully and clearly satisfied of the reality of Our intentions towards the maintenance of the truth and integrity of the said Religion, We have thought fit and expedient to injoin and authorize, like as We by these presents do require and command all the Lords of Our Privy Council, Senators of the Colledge of Justice, Judges, and Magistrates to Burgh and Land, and all Our other Subjects whatsoever, to subscribe and renew the Confession of Faith, subscribed at first by Our dear Father and His Household, in the year of God 1580. Thereafter by persons of all Ranks, in the year 1581. by Ordinance of the Lords of Secret Council, and Acts of the general Assembly. Subscribed again by all sorts of persons in the year 1590. by a new Ordinance of Council at the desire of the general Assembly, with their general band of maintenance of the true Religion, and the Kings person. And for that effect We do require the Lords of Council to take such course among the foresaid Confession and general Band, that it may be subscribed and renewed throughout the whole Kingdom with all possible diligence. And because We will not leave in Our Subjects minds the least scruple or doubt of Our Royal intentions and real resolutions, We have given warrant to Our Commissioner to indite a free general Assembly, to be holden at Glasgow the twenty first day of November, in this present year 1638. And thereafter a Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh the fifteenth day of May, Anno 1639. for settling a perfect peace in the Church and Commonwealth of this Kingdom. And because it is likely that the disorders and distractions which have happened of late, have been occasioned through the conceived fears of innovation of Religion and Laws, and not out of any disloyalty or disaffection to Sovereignty, We are graciously pleased absolutely to forget what is past, and freely to forgive all by-gones to all such as shall acquiesce to this Our gracious pleasure, and carry themselves peaceably as loyal and dutiful Subjects, and shall ratify and approve the same in Our next ensuing Parliament. And that this Assembly may have the better success, and more happy conclusion, Our will is, that there be a solemn Fast proclaimed and kept by all Our good Subjects of this Kingdom, a fourteen daies before the beginning of the said Assembly: the causes thereof to be a begging a blessing from God upon that Assembly, and a peaceable end to the distractions of this Church and Kingdom, with the aversion of God's heavy judgments from both. And Our pleasure is, that this Fast be kept in the most solemn manner as hath been in this Church at any time heretofore upon the most extraordinary occasion.

OUR WILL is heretofore, and We charge you straightly and command, that incontinent these Our Letters seen, ye pass, and make publication hereof by open Proclamation at the Market Crosses of the head Burroughs of this Kingdom, where-through none pretend ignorance of the same.

Given at Our Court of Oranlds, the ninth day of September, 1638.

Per Regem.

After this Declaration was proclaimed, the Confession of Faith, as it was at the first commanded by King James, as also the Band annexed for defence of the Religion now established, and of the King's Person and Authority, with the Subscriptions of the Lord Commissioner and Council to them both, do here follow.

Subscribed at the first by the King's Majesties unwhile dearest Father, of blessed memory, and his Household, in the year of God 1580. Thereafter by persons of all ranks, in the year of God 1581. by Ordinance of the Lords of Secret Council, and Acts of the General Assembly. Subscribed again by all sorts of Persons in the year 1590. by a new Ordinance of Council, at the desire of the General Assembly: With the general Band for maintenance of the true Religion. And now renewed and subscribed again by his Majesties Special Command, by the right noble Marquess, James, Marquess of Hamilton, Earl of Arran and Cambridge, Lord Evan and Evendail, his Majesties High Commissioner, and Lords of Secret Council undersubscribing. And that of and according to the date and tenor of the said Confession of Faith, dated in March 1580. and of the Band, dated in Anno 1589.

WE All, and every one of us underwritten, protest, That, after long and due examination of our own Consciences, in matters of true and false Religion, are now thoroughly resolved in the Truth, by the Word and Spirit of God, and therefore we believe with our hearts, confess with our mouths, subscribe with our hands, and constantly affirm before God and the whole World, that this only is the true Christian Faith and Religion, pleasing God, and bringing Salvation to man, which is now by the mercy of God, revealed to the World by the Preaching of the blessed Evangel.

And received, believed, and defended by many and sundry notable Kirks and Realms, but chiefly by the Kirk of Scotland, the King's Majesty, and three Estates of this Realm, as God's Eternal truth and only ground of our Salvation; as more particularly is expressed in the Confession of our Faith, established, and publicly confirmed by sundry Acts of Parliaments, and now of a long time hath been openly professed by the King's Anno 1638. King's Majesty, and whole body of this Realm, both in Burgh and Land. To the which Confession and form of Religion, we willingly agree in our Consciences in all points, as unto God's undoubted Truth and Verity, grounded only upon his written Word: And therefore We abhor and detest all contrary Religion and Doctrine, But chiefly all kind of Papiſtry in general and particular heads, even as they are now damned and confuted by the Word of God and Kirk of Scotland: but in ſpecial, we detest and reſuſe the uſurped Authority of that Roman Antichriſt upon the Scriptures of God, upon the Kirk, the Civil Magiſtrate, and Conſcience of men: All his Tyranomous Laws made upon indifferent things againſt our Chriſtian Liberty; His erroneous Doctrine againſt the ſufficiency of the written Word, the perfection of the Law, the Office of Chriſt, and his bleſſed Evangel. His corrupted Doctrine concerning Original Sin, our natural inability, and Rebellion to God's Law, our Juſtification by Faith only, our imperfect Sanctification and Obedience to the Law, the nature, number, and uſe of the Holy Sacraments. His five Baſtard Sacraments, with all his Rites, Ceremonies, and falſe Doctrine, added to the Miniſtration of the true Sacraments without the Word of God. His cruel judgment againſt Infants departing without the Sacrament. His abſolute neceſſity of Baptiſm. His blaſphemous opinion of Tranſubſtantiation, or real preſence of Chriſt's Body in the Elements, and receiving of the ſame by the wicked, or Bodies of men. His diſpenſations with ſolemn Oaths, Perjuries, and degrees of marriage forbidden in the Word. His cruelty againſt the innocent divorced. His deviliſh Maſs. His blaſphemous Prieſthood. His profane Sacrifice for the ſins of the Dead and the Quick. His Canonization of men, calling upon Angels or Saints departed, Worſhipping of Imagery, Reliques, and Croſſes, dedicating of Kirks, Altars, Daies, Vows to Creatures. His Purgatory, Prayers for the Dead, praying or ſpeaking in a ſtrange Language, with his Proceſſions and blaſphemous Letany, and multitude of Advocates or Mediators, His manifold Orders, Auricular Confeſſion. His deſperate and uncertain Repentance. His general and doubtſome Faith. His ſatisfactions of men for their ſins. His Juſtification by Works, Opus operatum, works of Supererogation, Merits, Pardons, Peregrinations, and Stations. His Holy Water, Baptiſing of Bells, Conjuring of Spirits, Croſſing, Saning, anointing, Conjuring, Hallowing of God's good Creatures, with the ſuperſtitious opinion joyned therewith. His worldly Monarchy, and wicked Hierarchy. His three ſolemn Vows, with all his ſhavellings of ſundry ſorts. His erroneous and bloody Decrees made at Trent, with all the Subſcribers and Approvers of that cruel and bloody Band, conjured againſt the Kirk of God. And finally, we detest all his vain Allegories, Rites, Signs, and Traditions brought in the Kirk, without, or againſt the Word of God, and Doctrine of this true reformed Kirk. To the which we joyn our ſelves willingly, in Doctrine, Faith, Religion, Diſcipline, and uſe of the Holy Sacraments, as lively members of the ſame, in Chriſt our Head: promiſing and ſwearing, by the great Name of the Lord our God, that we ſhall continue in the obedience of the Doctrine and Diſcipline of this Kirk, and ſhall defend the ſame, according to our vocation and power, all the daies of our lives, under the pains contained in the Law, and danger both of Body and Soul, in the day of God's fearful judgment. And ſeeing that many are ſtirred up by Satan and that Roman Antichriſt, to Promiſe, Swear, Subſcribe, and for a time uſe the holy Sacraments in the Kirk deceitfully, againſt their own Conſciences, minding hereby, firſt, under the external Cloak of Religion, to corrupt and ſubvert ſecretly God's true Religion within the Kirk, and afterward, when time may ſerve, to become open Enemies and Perſecutors of the ſame, under vain hope of the Popes diſpenſation deviſed againſt the Word of God, to his greater confuſion, and their double condemnation in the day of the Lord Jeſus.

We therefore, willing to take away all ſuſpicion of Hypocriſie, and of ſuch double dealing with God and his Kirk, proteſt, and call the Searcher of all hearts to witneſs, that our minds and hearts do fully agree with this our Confeſſion, Promiſe, Oath, and Subſcription: So that we are not moved for any worldly reſpect, but are perſwaded only in our Conſciences, through the knowledge and love of God's true Religion, printed in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, as we ſhall answer to him in the day when the ſecrets of all hearts ſhall be diſcloſed. And becauſe we perceive, that the quietneſs and ſtability of our Religion and Kirk doth depend upon the ſafety and good behaviour of the King's Majesty, as upon a comfortable inſtrument of God's mercy granted to this Country, for the Maintenance of his Kirk, and Miniſtration of Juſtice amongſt us, we proteſt and promiſe with our hearts under the ſame Oath, Hand-writ, and pains, that we ſhall defend his Perſon and Authority, with our Gear, Bodies, and Lives, in the defence of Chriſt his Evangel, Liberties of our Country, Miniſtration of Juſtice, and puniſhment of iniquity, againſt all enemies within this Realm, or without, as we deſire our God to be a ſtrong and merciful defender to us in the day of our Death, and coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: to whom, with the Father, and the holy Spirit, be all honour and glory eternally. Amen.

WE under ſubſcribing, and conſidering the ſtrait link and conjunction betwixt the true and Chriſtian Religion preſently proteſt within this Realm, and Sovereign Lords eſtate and ſtanding, having both the ſelf ſame Friends and Common Enemies, and ſubject to the like event of ſtanding and decay, and weighing therewithal the eminent danger threatened to the ſaid Religion, the preſervation whereof being dearer to us than whatſoever we have deareſt to us in this life; And finding in his Majesty a moſt honourable and Chriſtian reſolution, to manifeſt himſelf to the World that zealous and religious Prince which he hath hitherto profeſſed; and to imploy the means and power that God hath put into his hands, as well to the withſtanding of whatſoever Foreign force ſhall mean within this Land, for alteration of the ſaid Religion, or endangering of the preſent ſtate, as to the reſpreſſing of the inward Enemies thereto amongſt our ſelves, linked with them in the ſaid Antichriſtian League and Confederacy; Have therefore in the preſence of Almighty God, and with his Majesties authoriſing and allowance, faithfully promiſed, and ſolemnly ſworn, like as hereby we faithfully and ſolemnly ſwear, and promiſe, to take a true, effauld, and plain part with his Majesty amongſt our ſelves, for diſverting of the appearing danger threatened to the ſaid Religion, and his Majesties ſtate and ſtanding, depending thereupon, by whatſoever Foreign or inſeſtine plots or preparations. And to that effect, faithfully, and that upon our truth and honours, bind and oblige us to others, to convene and aſſemble our ſelves publicly, with our Friends in Arms, or in quiet manner, at ſuch times and places as we ſhall be required by his Proclamations, or by writ or meſſage direct to us from his Majesty, or any having power from him, And being convened and aſſembled, to join and concur with the whole forces of our friends and favourers, againſt whatſoever Foreign or inſeſtine powers or Papiſts, and their partakers, ſhall arrive or riſe within this Iſland, or any part thereof, ready to defend or purſue, as we ſhall be authoriſed and conducted by his Majesty, or any others having his power and Com.

Commission, to join and hold hand to the execution of whatsoever mean or order shall be thought meet by his Majesty, and his Council, for suppressing of the Papists, promotion of the true Religion, and settling of his Highness estate, and obedience in all the Countries and corners of this Realm, to expound and hazard our Lives, Lands, and Goods, and whatsoever means God hath lent us, in the defence of the said true and Christian Religion, and his Majesties Person and Estate, against whatsoever Jesuits and Seminary or Mass-Priests, condemned enemies to God and his Majesty, to their utter wreck and exterminion, according to the power granted to us by his Majesties Proclamation, and Acts of Parliament: To try, search and seek out all Excommunicates, Practisers, and others Papists whatsoever, within our bounds and shire where we keep residence, and dilate them to his Highness and his Privy Council, and conform us to such directions, as from time to time we shall receive from his Majesty and his Council in their behalfs. And specially so many of us as presently are, or hereafter shall be appointed Commissioners in every shire, shall follow, pursue, and travel by all means possible, to take and apprehend all such Papists, Apostates, and Excommunicates, as we shall receive in Writ from his Majesty. And we, the remanent within that Shire, shall concur and assist with the saids Commissioners with our whole Friends and Forces, to that effect, without respect of any person whatsoever. And generally to assist in the mean time, and defend every one of us another, in all and whatsoever Quarrels, Actions, Debates, moved, or to be moved against us, or any of us upon action of the present Band, or other causes depending thereupon. And effauldly join in defence and pursuit against whatsoever shall offer or intend any injury, or revenge against any one of them for the premises, making his cause and part that is pursued, all our parts; Notwithstanding, whatsoever privy grudge, or displeasure standing betwixt any of us, which shall be no impediment or hinder to our said effauld joining in the said common cause; but to lie over, and be misknown, till they be orderly removed, and taken away by the order under-specified. To the which time, we for the better furtherance of the said cause and service, have assured, and by the tenour hereof, every one of us taking the burden upon us for our selves, and all that we may let, assure each other to be unhurt, unharmed, or any waies to be invaded by us, or any our foresaids for old feid or new, otherwise than by ordinary course of Law and Justice: neither shall we, nor any of our foresaids make any provocation, or tumult, trouble or displeasure to others in any sort, as we shall answer to God and upon our Honours, and fidelity to his Majesty. And for our further and more hearty union in this service, we are content and consent, that all whatsoever our feids and variances fallen, or that may fall out betwixt us, be within forty daies after the date hereof amicably referred and submitted to seven or five indifferent friends, chosen by his Majesty of our whole number, and by their moderation and arbitrement componed and taken away. And finally, that we shall neither directly, nor indirectly separate nor with-draw us from the Union and Fellowship of the remanent, by whatsoever suggestion or private advice, or by whatsoever incident regard, or stay such resolution as by common deliberation shall be taken in the premises, as we shall answer to God upon our Consciences, and to the World upon our Truth and Honours, under the pain to be esteemed Traitors to God and his Majesty, and to have lost all honour, credit, and estimation in time coming. In witness whereof, by his Majesties Special Command, Allowance, and Protection promised to us therein, We have subscribed these presents with our hands. At

We JAMES Marquess of Hamilton, Earl of Arran and Cambridge, Lord Even and Evendail, his Majesties High Commissioner, and Lords of his Majesties Privy Council under-subscribing, by vertue, and conform to a Warrant and Command, signed by his Sacred Majesty, of the date of Sept. 9. 1638. and registrate in the Books of Council upon the 22 day of the said Month, Swear, and with our hearts and humble and true affections to God's truth, and to his Sacred Majesty, subscribe the Confession of Faith, of and according to the date and Tenour above specified: and also renew, Swear, and Subscribe the foresaid general Band of the Tenour above written, for preservation of the true Religion, and maintenance of his Sacred Majesties Authority, according to the Tenour thereof, and siclike, as amply as the same was conceived in favours of his Majesties umwhile blessed Father of eternal memory, by the said Band. In witness whereof, we have Subscribed these presents with our hands, At Holy-rood-house, Septemb. 22. 1638. Sic Subscribitur,

HAMILTON,

Traquair, Roxburgh, Mairseall, Mar, Murray, Linlithgow, Perth, Wigton, Kingorne, Tullibardin, Haddington, Annandail, Lauderdale, Kinnoul, Dumfries, Southesk, Belhaven, Angus, Lorn, Elphinston, Naper, Dalryell, Annt, J. Hay, S. Thomas Hope, S. W. Elphinston, Ja. Carmichael, J. Hamilton, Blackhall.

At the same time was a Proclamation made for the indiction of the General Assembly, which was this:

At Holy-rood-house, the 22 of September, 1638.

‘FOrasmuch as it hath pleased the King's Majesty, out of his pious and religious disposition to the true Religion, and out of his Fatherly care, for removing of all fears, doubts, and scruples, which may arise in the minds of his Subjects, for preservation of the purity thereof, and upon divers great and weighty considerations, importing the glory of God, the peace of the Kirk and Common-weal of this Kingdom, to appoint and give order, that a free general Assembly be indicted, kept, and holden at the City of Glasgow the 21 of November next: Therefore the Lords of Secret Council ordains Letters to be direct, charging Maisters, and Officers of Arms, to pass and make publication hereof by open Proclamation at the Market-Cross of Edinburgh, and the head Burrows of this Kingdom; and other places needful. And to warn all and sundry Archbishops, Bishops, Commissioners of Kirks, and others having place and Vote in the Assembly, to repair and address to the said City of Glasgow the said one and twentieth day of November next to come, and to attend the said Assembly induring the time thereof, and aye and while the same be dissolved, and to do and perform all which to their charges in such cases appertaineth, as they will answer to the contrary at their highest peril.

Immediately after that, this Proclamation was made for the induction of the Parliament.

At Holy-rood-house the 22 day of Sept. 1638.

FORASMUCH as it hath pleased his Majesty, out of his pious and religious disposition to the true Religion, and out of his Fatherly care for removing of all fears, doubts, and scruples which may arise in the minds of his Subjects, for preservation of the purity thereof, and upon divers other great and weighty causes, importing the Glory of God, the peace of the Kirk and Common-weal of this Kingdom, to appoint and give order, that the Sovereign and High Court of Parliament shall be holden at the City of Edinburgh upon the 15 day of May next to come, with continuation of daies: Therefore the Lords of Secret Council ordain Letters to be direct to Maisters and Officers of Arms charging them to pass to the Market-Cross of Edinburgh, and other places needful, and there by open Proclamation to make publication of the holding of the said Parliament, and to warn all and sundry Noblemen, Prelates, and Commissioners for the Barons, and Burroughs, and all others having voice and place in the said Parliament, that they and every one of them, in their most decent and comely manner, make their address to the said Parliament, attend and await thereat during the time thereof, and to discharge that duty which is incumbent to them and each one of them, as they will answer on the contrary at their peril.

And last of all was published and proclaimed first the Act of the Lords of Our Council for requiring all the King's Subjects to subscribe the said Confession of Faith and Band annexed, which here followeth:

Sept. Anno 1638.

THE which day a Noble Earl, JAMES Marquess of Hamilton, Earl of Arran and Cambridge, his Majesties Commissioner, having produced and exhibit before the Lords of Secret Council, upon the twenty second day of this instant, a Warrant signed by his Majesty, of the date the ninth of September instant; wherein among others of his Majesties gracious and royal expressions for preservation of the purity of Religion, and due obedience to his Majesties Authority in the maintenance thereof, his Majesty did will and ordain that the Lords themselves should swear the Confession and general Band mentioned in his Majesties said Warrant, and also should take such order, as all his Majesties Lieges may subscribe the same. And the said Lords of Secret Council, acknowledging his Majesties pious and gracious disposition and affection to the purity of God's truth, did upon the 22 day of September instant, unanimously and with all humble, hearty, and sincere affection, swear and subscribe the Confession of Faith, dated the 2 day of March, 1580, according as it was then profest within this Kingdom: Together with the foresaid general Band dated in Anno 1589: And now to the effect that all his Majesties Lieges may give the like obedience to his Majesties so pious desire, therefore the said Lords have ordained and ordains all his Majesties Lieges, of whatsoever estate, degree or quality, Ecclesiastical or Civil, to swear and subscribe the said Confession, dated the second of March, 1580, and that according to the said date and tenour thereof, and as it was then profest within this Kingdom: Together with the said general Band, dated in Anno 1589. as they will answer at the contrary upon their obedience. And ordains Officers of Arms to pass to the Market-Cross of Edinburgh, and make publication hereof, and at all other places needful, wherethrough none pretend ignorance of the same.

And next after that was proclaimed the Commission of the Lords of the Privy Council, whereby they appointed and designed several Commissioners for requiring and taking the Subscriptions of his Majesties Subjects to the said Confession and Band annexed, throughout the several Shires within the Kingdom, which here followeth:

Sept. Anno 1638.

FORASMUCH as a Noble Marquess, James Marquess of Hamilton, Earl of Arran and Cambridge, his Majesties Commissioner, and the Lords of Secret Council, by an Act of the date of the twenty second of this instant, have by special Warrant of his Sacred Majesty, sworn and subscribed, with all humble and hearty affection and unanimously, the Confession of Faith, dated the second of March, 1580. and at length insert in the Books of Privy Council, of and according to the said date and tenour thereof, and according as it was then profest within this Kingdom: Together with the general Band insert therewith in the said Books of Privy Council, dated in Anno 1589. Like as also the said Lords of Council, by their Act of the date of these presents, acknowledging his Majesties pious and gracious disposition and affection to the purity of God's truth, and as thereby they conceive themselves bound in Conscience and humble duty to use and follow forth all possible diligence, for procuring the Subscriptions of all his Majesties Lieges thereto. And to this effect, have thought fit that the care and diligence in procuring thereof, be committed to some of his Majesties Council and others of the Nobility and Gentry within the several Sheriffdoms and Provinces of the Kingdom, in manner after specified: Therefore the said Lord Commissioner, and Lords of Secret Council, give power, Warrant, and Commission to such of their number, and others after-following, within the bounds after specified, viz. For the Sheriffdom of Edinburgh principal, William Earl of Lothian, Archibald Lord Naper, S. John Dalmahoy of that ilke, S. George Towers of Innerleith. For the Burgh of Edinburgh, the Provost and Baillies of Edinburgh, that are, or shall be for the time. For East-lothian, Robert Earl of Roxburgh, Lord Privy Seal, Thomas Earl of Hadinton, John Earl of Lauderdale, Harrie Lord Ker, S. Patrick Murray of Elibank, S. Patrick Hepburne of Wauchton, and James Maxwel of Innerweik. For the

 'craig, and William Stewart of Maynes. For the 'Sheriffdom of Bute, the Lord Lorn and Sheriff 'of Bute. For the Isles, the Lord Lorn. With 'power to them conjunctly and severally to pass
 'to the several Bounds above-written, at such 'times and places as they shall think fit, and 'there to exhibit the said Confession of Faith 'and general Band above-specified, marked and 'subscribed by the Clerk of the Council, and 'to require all his Majesties Lieges, of what'soever Rank and Quality, to subscribe the 'said Confession of Faith, dated the second of 'March, 1580. according to the said date and 'tenour thereof, and as it was then profest with-
 'in this Kingdom: together with the general
 'Band dated in Anno 1589. as they will be an'swerable to his Majesty and the said Lords, up'on their dutie and obedience: and to make re'port of their said diligence betwixt and the 'thirteenth day of November next.

AND because many did conceive, though falsely, that these pretended Innovations had made some alteration in the Religion which was sworn at the first in the said Confession, the Lord Commissioner and Council knowing well that suggestion to be made by those who were enemies to all peace, and only to that end that the King's Subjects might be kept from returning to their obedience, did declare most truly and justly that the King's intention; and so accordingly the Oath which they had now taken was to defend the true Religion and Confession of Faith as it was professed in that Kingdom, and Sworn unto in the year of our Lord, 1588. by which they did assuredly conceive that all the King's good people would rest fully satisfied. The Act of Council containing that short Explication here followeth:

1638.

Apud Holy-rood-house 22 Septembris
Anno 1638.

THE which day a Noble Marques, JAMES Marques of Hamilton, Earl of Arran and Cambridge, his Majesties Commissioner, and Lords of Secret Council, in all humble and heartly affection unanimously Swore, and Subscribed the Confession of Faith above-written, dated the second of March, 1580. according as it was then profest within this Kingdom:
Together with the general Band above specified, dated in Anno 1589. Whereupon S. Thomas Hope of Craighall, his Majesties Advocate, in his Majesties name asked instruments.

With all these his Majesties gracious proceedings the Lords of the Privy Council were so fully satisfied themselves, that they did verily believe that there would remain no more scruples in the minds of his Majesties good Subjects, and that nothing now could keep them from a chearful and thankful returning to their former obedience.
Their own resentment and satisfaction they testified both by an Act of Council, and a particular Letter directed to the King for that purpose, which here do follow:

An Act of Council.

THE Lords of Secret Council having read and maturely considered his Majesties Letters, and particular Declaration of his pleasure anent the annulling of the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission, discharging the pressing of the practice of the five Articles, making all persons, Ecclesiastick and Civil, of what Title or Degree soever, liable to the tryal and censure of Parliament, general Assembly, and other Judicatories competent, anent the not Administrating to Ministers at their entry any other Oath than that which is contained in the Act of Parliament anent the subscribing and renewing the Confession of Faith, subscribed by his Majesties Father of blef-sed memory, and his Houshold, in Anno 1580.
and Band following thereupon, anent the indi-ction of a General Assembly, to be holden at Glasgow the 21 day of November, 1638. and Parliament at Edinburgh the 15 of May, 1639. and anent his gracious goodness in forgetting and forgiving all by-gones, and indiction of a Fast for craving of God's blessing to this Assembly; find themselves so fully satisfied therewith, and the same to be so satisfactory for removing all the fears of the Subjects anent innovation of Religion or Laws, that we hold our selves bound in duty, not only to acquiesce therewith, as the best mean to secure both Religion and Laws, but also to use our best endeavours that all his Majesties good Subjects may likewise rest satisfied therewith: And that they with us, and we with them, may testify our thankfulness for so great a grace and goodness, with all the hearty expressions of dutifulness and loyalty; And that our true sense hereof may the more clearly appear to our Sacred Sovereign, We do by these humbly and heartily make offer of our Lives and Fortunes in the defending and assisting of his Majesties Sacred Person and Authority, in the maintenance of the foresaid Religion and Confession, and repressing of all such as shall hereafter pres to disturb the peace of this Kirk and Kingdom.

In witness whereof we have heartily and freely Subscribed these Presents with our hands.
At Holy-rood-house the twenty second day of September, 1638.

The Letter of Our Council.

Most Sacred Sovereign,

IF ever Faithful and Loyal Subjects had reason to acknowledge extraordinary favours, shown to a Nation, and in a most submissive and hearty manner give real demonstrations of the grace vouchsafed; then do we of your Majesties Council, of this your ancient Kingdom, manifously profess, that such Acts of Clemency vouchsafed us, cannot proceed from any Prince, saving him who is the lively Image on Earth of the great God Author of all goodness. For return of so transcendent grace, fortified with the real expresion of unparallel'd Piety, Royal inclination to Peace, and Universal Love, not only to those of our number; but likewise to all your Majesties loyal Subjects, we do all in one voice, with all resentment can be imagined, in all humility render our most bounden thanks, and offer, in testimony of our full satisfaction and acquiescence herewith, to Sacrifice our Lives and Fortunes in seconding your Sacred Majesties Commandments, and repressing all such as shall hereafter pres to disturb the Peace of the Kirk and Kingdom. And for some small signification of our alacrity and diligence in your Sacred Majesties Service, we have all, without the least shadow of any scruple, Subscribed the Confession of Faith and Band appointed to be received by all your Majesties loyal Subjects, sent the Act passed in Council, with our other proceedings, which we do most humbly represent to your Royal view. And we besech your Majesty to be pleased, to be perswaded of the unviolable devotion of all here Subscribers, who do all in all humility pray for your Majesties most happy and flourishing Reign.

Upon

Upon all which his Majesty in his Declaration makes a reflection that might have reclaimed the most obstinate of Rebels, had they not been Scots, as followeth:

It is not for men to judge of other mens hearts, and of their secret desires, but we do challenge the most rigid Covenanters to name any one particular ever desired by them, in any of their Supplications, Remonstrances, Protestations, Declarations, written or Printed, exhibited to Us, Our Commissioner, or Council, which is not in this our gracious Declaration granted to our people: For not only all and every one of their particular grievances any way petitioned against by them, are hereby discharged and removed, but even the two general things, which they made the people believe was the sum of all their desires and expectations, viz. a free General Assembly and a Parliament are indicted, and in that order upon which they stood so earnestly, first the Assembly, and then the Parliament: And besides all these, their own Confession of Faith, the ground as they pretend, of their Covenant renewed and established.

Who would not now have expected a happy period to all the distractions of that Kingdom, upon this our gracious assenting to all their own desires? But the devillish obstinacy and malice of those factious spirits, who did see that all their designs were utterly defeated, and that their hopes for compassing of them were now a bleeding and drawing their last breath, if they could not find some means to blindfold our peoples eyes, and so keep them from discerning and acknowledging our grace and goodness towards them: They presently before the hour that this our Declaration was to be proclaimed, filled our peoples minds and ears with fearful expectations of most terrible things to be delivered in this our Proclamation, and so destructive of the Laws and Liberties of that Church and Kingdom, especially of their late sworn Covenant, that presently they wrought the people to a detestation of our Declaration, before they knew what it was: They presently erected a large Scaffold under the Cross where our Proclamation was to be made, upon which were mounted, not one or two from every Table, to protest in the name of the rest, as heretofore they had done, but a great number of Earls, Lords, Gentlemen, and others, with their Swords in their hands, and hats on their heads, not without jeering and laughing during all the time of our Proclamation; which no sooner was ended, but with a most insolent and rebellious behaviour they assisted one Johnston in reading of a most wicked, treasonable, and ignorant Protestation, which within few daies after they Printed, and we do here insert, as being confident that all Subjects in the World who shall come to read it, will abhor and detest it, if ever they did feel in their own hearts the least touch or taste of a Princes favour and elemency, or carry any affection to loyalty, justice, and Government: The very reading of it will bring every good Subject and religious honest man so far out of Love with it, as it needeth no further confutation than the very perusal of it: For who can endure to hear Scripture so grossly abused, the holy name of God so solemnly invoked as a witness to such notorious falsehoods; to their rebellious courses and Covenant those attributes of Infallibility given, which are only proper to the Sacred Scripture; and

Royal Authority affronted with such peremptory asseverations, ignorant and senseless reasons, the falsehood and inconsequence whereof must needs appear upon first view to any one who shall cast his eye upon them? The Protestation follows, thus:

Cov. 14.

The Protestation of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burroughs, Ministers, and Commons, &c.

WE Noble men, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgeses, Ministers, and Commons, his Majesties true and loyal Subjects, That where-as our continual Supplications, Complaints, Articles, and Informations, presented, first, to the Lords of his Majesties Privy Council; next, to his Sacred Majesty; and last, from time to time to his Majesties Commissioner, our long attendance and great patience this twelve-month by-gone, in waiting for satisfaction of our most just desires, our zeal to remove all rubs out of the way, which were either mentioned unto us; or could be conceived by us, as hinderances of our pious intentions, aiming at nothing but the good of the Kingdom, and preservation of the Kirk, which by consumption or combustion is likely to expire; delighting to use no other means but such as are legal, and have been ordinary in this Kirk since the Reformation, and labouring according to our power and interest, that all things might be carried in a peaceable manner, worthy of our Profession and Covenant, our Protestation containing a hearty thanksgiving for what his Majesty in his Proclamation from his justice had granted of our just desires; and our Protests and hopes for so much as was not as yet granted. All these made us confidently to expect from his Majesties Royal and compassionate disposition towards this his native Kingdom, that a free General Assembly and Parliament should have been indicted, as the ordinary and most proper remedies of our grievances, and did constrain us to renew our Petition, earnestly intreating, that his Majesties Commissioner would be pleased to represent unto his Majesty the condition of this Kirk and Kingdom, crying in an extreme exigency for present help, with the lawfulness of the remedies prescribed by his Majesties Laws, required by us, and presented to him in some particular Articles, which his Grace promised to recommend to his Majesty, and to do his best endeavours for obtaining the same; especially the first Article, that there might be indicted a full and free General Assembly, without prelimitation, either in the constitution and members thereof, in the order and manner of proceeding, or in the matters to be treated: And if there should be any question or doubt about one of these, or such like particulars, that the determination thereof might be remitted to the Assembly it self; as the only proper and competent judge. And now, after so many Supplications, Complaints, Articles, and Informations; after our necessary Protestation, expressing the humble thankfulness and continued desires of our hearts; after so long expectation and so much dealing, having with open ears, and attentive minds heard his Majesties Proclamation, it is our desire, purpose, and endeavour so to proceed, that we may upon the one part still be thankful to God and the King, for the least blink of his Majesties countenance, and the smallest crumbs of comfort that fall unto us from his Majesties Royal hands; beseeching the Lord yet further to enlarge his Majesties heart, for our full satisfaction and rejoycing, to the honour of God, the good of this Kirk and Kingdom, and his Majesties never dying Fame and Glory; that his wise Government and zeal to the service of God, may be a measure and pattern of desires to all Generations hereafter, when they shall be wishing for a religious and righteous King: And on the other part, that Christ our Lord, the King of King's, through our neglect or lukewarmness may want no part of his Sovereignty and Dominion, and that in our Religion, which is more dear unto us than our lives, we deceive not our selves, with that which cannot satisfy and make up the breach of this Kirk and Kingdom, or remove our fears, doubts, and suspicions, of the innovations of Religion: This hath made us to observe, and perceive, that his Majesties Proclamation doth ascribe all the late distractions of this Kirk and Common-wealth, to our conceived fears of the innovation of Religion and Law, as the cause and occasion thereof, and not to the innovations themselves, with which we have been for a long time, and especially of late, heavily pressed and grieved; as if the cause were rather in apprehension and fancy, than in reality and substance. That the Service Book, and Book of Canons are not so far discharged by this Proclamation, as they have been urged by preceding Proclamations; for this Proclamation only dischargeth the practice of them, and rescinds the Acts made for establishing their Practice, but doth not rescind the former Proclamations; namely, that of the nineteenth of February at Stirling, and that of the fourth of July at Edinburgh, which give an high approbation to these Books, as fit means to maintain Religion, and to beat down all superstition; and withal declares his Majesties purpose, to bring them into this Kirk in a fair and legal way: And thus both our fears that they may be introduced hereafter, must still remain; and the liberty of the General Assembly, by such a Declaration of his Majesties judgment, is not a little prejudged in the minds of so many as wisely consider and compare the preceding Proclamations with this which we now hear, although others who looking upon one step and not upon the whole progress, run on rashly, and, neither considering what they are doing, nor with whom they are dealing, may be easily deceived, Qui paucavidet, cito judicat, a short sight maketh a sudden judgment.

That it is declared in this Proclamation, That his Majesty neither intendeth to innovate any thing in Religion or Laws, or to admit of any change or alteration in the true Religion already established and professed in this Kingdom: and withal, this is interposed, That the Articles of Pearth are established by the Acts of Parliament and General Assembly, and dispensation of the practice only granted, and discharge given, that no person be urged with the practice thereof; and consequently, his Majesties intention for the standing of the Acts of the Assembly and Parliament, appointing the Articles of Pearth, is manifest; which is no small prejudice to the freedom of the General Assembly, That while the Proclamation ordaineth all his Majesties Subjects to be liable to the trial and censure of the Judicatories competent, and that none of them shall use any unlimited and unwarranted power; likewise that no other Oath be administered to Ministers at their entry, than that which is contained in the Act of Parliament; in both these Articles the Bishops are meant, who are only thereby for the present curbed against their exorbitancy and enormities in exercising their Office: but the Office of Bishops is thereby not only presupposed as unquestionable, but also so strongly established, that his Majesty declareth, for the present, his intention, to admit no innovation therein: which is more evident by the induction of the Parliament, warning all Prelates to be present, as having voice and place in Parliament; and by the induction of the Assembly, warning all Archbishops and Bishops (for so are their divers degrees and Offices Ecclesiastical here designed and supposed) to be present, as having place and voice in the Assembly, contrary to the Caveats, acts of the Kirk, and our Declinator: And thus a third and great limitation is put upon the General Assembly. The Proclamation, by reason of these many real limitations, and prejudices of the liberty of the Assembly in the very points which have wrought so much wo and disturbance in this Kirk and Kingdom, and wherein the liberty of the Assembly is most useful and necessary at this time, can neither satisfy our grievances and complaints, nor remove our fears and doubts, nor cannot (without protestation) be admitted by us his Majesties Subjects, who earnestly desire that Truth and Peace may be established; and that for the reasons following.

1. TO keep silence in any thing that may serve for the good of the Kirk, whether it be in Preaching, Prayer, or in proposing and voicing in a lawful Assembly of the Kirk, is against the Word of God. Esay 62. 6. Ye that are the Lords remembrancers, keep not silence, and give him no rest till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth. 1 King. 18. 21. Like the halting of the people between two opinions, and their not answering a word, when the Lord called them to give a Testimony. Acts 20. 20. I have kept back nothing that was profitable unto you: And again, 1 Cor. 12. 7. Math. 23. 18. Rom. 1. 18. Revel. 2. 14, 20. and 3. 15. And therefore to keep silence, or not to meddle with corruptions, whether in Doctrine, Sacraments, Worship or Discipline, in a general Assembly of the Kirk, convened for that end, were the ready way to move the Lord to deny his Spirit unto us, and to provoke him to wrath against our proceedings, and might be imputed unto us for prejudice, for collusion, and for betraying our selves and the posterity.

2. This predetermination is against our Supplications and Protestations, wherein we have shewn our selves so earnest for a free General Assembly, contrary to every limitation of this kind; so far prejudging the liberty thereof, is against the Confession of Faith registered in the Parliament 1567. declaring that one cause of the Councils of the Kirk is for good policy and order to be observed in the Kirk, and for to change such things as men have devised when they rather foster Superstition than edifie the Kirk, using the same, and is against our late Confession, wherein we have promised to forbear all novations till they be tryed, which obligeth us to forbear now, and to try them in an Assembly, and by all lawful means to labour to recover the former purity

1638. purity and liberty of the Gospel, to which this limitation is directly repugnant, our liberty in a General Assembly being the principal of all lawful means serving to that end.

3. This were directly contrary to the nature and ends of a General Assembly, which having authority from God, being convened according to the Laws of the Kingdom, and receiving power from the whole collective Body of the Kirk, for the good of Religion, and safety of the Kirk; Whatsoever may conduce for these good ends in wisdom and modesty should be propound, examined, and determined without Prelimitation, either of the Matters to be treated, or of the Liberties of the Members thereof. It being manifest, that as far as the Assembly is limited in the Matters to be treated, and in the Members to be used, the necessary ends of the Assembly, and the Supream Law, which is the safety of the Kirk, are as far hindered and pre-judged.

4. This limitation is against the Discipline of the Kirk, which, Book 2. chap. 7. declareth this to be one of her Liberties, That the Assembly hath power to abrogate and abolish all Statutes and Ordinances concerning Ecclesiastical Matters that are found noysem and unprofitable, and agree not with the time, or are abused by the People, and against the Acts of the General Assembly. Like as the pretended Assembly 1610. declareth for the common Affairs of the Kirk (without exception or limitation) it is necessary that there be yearly General Assemblies, and what order can be hoped for hereafter, if this Assembly indicted after so long intermission, and so many gross corruptions, be limited, and that more than ever any lawful Assembly of the Kirk was, when it was yearly observed.

5. It is ordained in Parl. 11. Act. 40. K. James 6. anent the necessary and lawful form of all Parliaments that nothing shall be done, or commanded to be done, which may directly or indirectly pre-judge the liberty of the free voicing or reasoning of the Estates, or any of them in time coming. It is also appointed in Parl. 6. Act. 92. K. James 6. that the Lords of Council and Session proceed in all Civil causes intended or depending before them, or to be intended, to cause execute their Decrees notwithstanding any private Writing, Charge, or Command in the contrary, and generally by the Acts of Parliament appointing every matter for its own Judicatory, and to all Judicatories their own freedom. And therefore much more doth this Liberty belong to the Supream Judicatory Ecclesiastick in matters so important as concerneth God's honour and worship immediately, the salvation of the Peoples Souls, and right constitution of the Kirk whose Liberties and Priviledges are confirmed Parl. 12. K. James 6. Parl. 1. K. Charles, for if it be carefully provided by divers Acts of Parliament, especially Parl. 12. Act. 148. K. James 6. That there be no forestalling or regrating of things pertaining to this natural life: What shall be thought of this spiritual forestalling and regrating which tendeth to the famishing or poisoning of the Souls of the People both now and in the Generations afterward.

6. It were contrary to our Protestations, proceedings and complaints against the late Innovations. And it might be accounted an innovation and usurpation as gross and dangerous to us, and the posterity, and as prejudicial to Religion as any complained upon by us, to admit limitations, and secret or open determinations, which belongeth to no Person or Judicatory, but to an Assembly, or to consent to, and approve by our silence the same predeterminations, it were to be guilty of that our selves, which we condemn in others. We may easily judge how the Apostles before the Council of Jerusalem, the Fathers before the Nicene Council, and our Predecessors before the Assembly holden at the Reformation, and afterwards, would have taken such dealing.

That this Proclamation commandeth all his Majesties Subjects for maintenance of the Religion already established to subscribe, and renew the Confession of Faith subscribed before in the year 1580. and afterward. And requireth the Lords of Privy Council to take such course anent the same, and the general Band of Maintenance of the true Religion, and the King's Person, that it may be subscribed, and renewed throughout the whole Kingdom with all possible diligence, which cannot now be performed by us. For although of late we would have been glad that our selves, and other his Majesties Subjects, had been commanded by Authority to swear, and subscribe the general Confession of Faith against Popish errors and superstitions; and now would be glad that all others should joyn with us in our late Covenant and Confession, descending more specially to the novations and errors of the time, and obliging us to the defence of Religion, and of the King's Majesties Person and Authority, and for these ends to the mutual defence every one of us of another, yet can we not now after so necessary, and so solemn a specification return to the general for the reasons following.

1. No means have been left unassayed against our late Confession of Faith and Covenant so solemnly sworn and subscribed. For, first, we were prest with the rendring and rescinding of our Covenant. Next, an alteration in some substantial points was urged. Thirdly, A Declaration was motioned, which tended to the enervation thereof, and now we find in the same strain, that we are put to a new trial, and the last mean is used more subtle than the former: That by this new subscription our late Covenant, and Confession may be quite absorbed and buried in Oblivion, that where it was intended and sworn to be an everlasting Covenant never to be forgotten, it shall be never more remembred, the one shall be cried up, and the other drowned in the noise thereof; And thus the new Subscription now urged (although in a different way) shall prove equivalent to the rendring of the Covenant, or what of that kind hath before been assayed. Like as the reasons against the rendring of the Covenant, do militate directly against this new motion.

2. If we should now enter upon this new Subscription, we would think our selves guilty of mocking God, and taking his Name in vain; for the tears that began to be poured forth at the solemnizing of the Covenant are not yet dried up and wiped away, and the joyful noise which then began to sound hath not yet ceased; and there can be no new necessity from us, and upon our part pretended for a ground of urging this new Subscription, at first intended to be an abjuration of Popery upon us who are known to hate Popery with an unfeigned hatred, and have all this year bygone given large testimony of our zeal against it. As we are not to multiply Miracles on God's part, so ought we not to multiply solemn Oaths and Covenants upon our part, and thus to play with others, as children do with their Toys, without necessity.

3. Neither

3. Neither would we in giving way to this new Subscription think our selves free of Perjury: For as we were driven by an undecidable necessity to enter into a mutual Covenant, so are we bound, not only by the Law of God and Nature, but by our solemn Oath and Subscription, against all divisive motions to promote and observe the same without violation: And it is most manifest, that having already refused to render, alter, or destroy our Covenant, nothing can be more contrary and adverse to our pious intentions and sincere resolutions, than to consent to such a Subscription and Oath, as both in the intention of the urgers, and in the nature and condition of the matter urged, is the ready way to extinguish, and to drown in oblivion the Band of our union and conjunction that they be no more remembered. In this case we are called to lay seriously to our hearts, 1. That we have sworn that we shall neither directly nor indirectly suffer our selves to be divided and withdrawn from this blessed and loyal conjunction, which consisteth not only in the general Confession, but also in our explanation and application thereof, but on the contrary, shall by all lawful means, labour to further and promote the same. 2. That our union and conjunction may be observed without violation, (and so without mutilation of our application) we call the living LORD to witness, as we shall answer to Christ in the great Day, &c.

4. This new Subscription, in stead of performing our Vows, would be a real Testimony and Confession before the World, That we have been transgressors in making rash Vows, that we repent our selves of former zeal and forwardness against the Particulars exprest first in our Supplications, Complaints, and Protestations, and next abjured in our Covenant, that we in our Judgment prefer the general Confession unto this, which necessarily was now made more special; and that we are now under the fair pretext and honest cover of a new Oath, recanting and undoing that, which upon so mature deliberation we have been doing before. This beside all other evils, were to make way and open a door to the re-entry of the Particulars abjured, and to repent our selves of our chiefest consolations, and to lie both against God and our own Souls.

5. It hath been often objected, That our Confession of Faith and Covenant was unlawful, because it wanted the warrants of publick Authority; and it hath been answered by us, That we were not destitute of the warrant Civil and Ecclesiastical which authorized the former Covenant. And although we could have wished that his Majesty had added both his Subscription and Authority unto it, yet the less constraint from Authority and the more liberty, the less hypocrisie, and more sincerity hath appeared: But by this new Subscription urged by Authority we both condemn our former Subscription as unlawful, because alledged to be done without Authority, and pre-condemning also the like laudable course in the like necessity to be taken by the Posterity.

6. What is the use of Merch-stones upon borders of Lands, the like use hath Confessions of Faith in the Kirk, to determinate and divide betwixt Truth and Error: And the renewing and applying of Confessions of Faith to the present Errors and Corruptions, are not unlike ryding Merches. And therefore to content our selves with the general, and to return to it, from the particular application of the Confession necessarily made upon the invasion or creeping in of Errors within the Borders of the Kirk, if it be not a removing of the Merch-stone from the own place, it is at least the hiding of the Merch in the ground that it be not seen, which at this time were very unseasonable for two causes: One is, because Popery is so pregnant and powerful in this Land, as we have learned of late: The other, because the Papists, who upon the urging of the Service-Book and Canons, have presumed of our return to Rome, will upon this our Subscription arise from their despairing of us, unto their wonted presumption. None of us will deny, but the large Confession of Faith registrated in the Acts of Parliament, doth by consequence contain this short Confession and Abjuration: Yet were it not sufficient against Popery to subscribe the one without the other: How then shall we think that the more general Confession and Abjuration at this time, when the urging of such Popish Books hath extorted from us so necessary an application, and doth still call for a testimony, is compleat enough without it.

7. The Papists shall hereby be occasioned to renew their old Objection against us, Annus & mensuras fides de Deo decernunt, That our Faith changeth with the Moon, or once in the year. Other Reformed Kirks might justly wonder at our inconstancy in changing our Confession without any real necessity, and that in one and the same year it cometh forth larger, and more particular, then shorter, and more general: And our Adversaries will not fail to traduce us as troublers of the peace of the Kirk and Kingdom without any necessary cause.

8. It will likewise prove a confirmation of their Error, who think they may both subscribe the Confession of Faith, and receive the Service-Book, and Canons, which is not only a direct scandalizing of them, but also a ready way to put a weapon in their hands against our selves, who maintain and profess that these and such other evils are abjured in the Confession of Faith.

9. If we should now swear this Confession, we should be obliged by our Oath to maintain Pearth Articles, which are the innovations already introduced in the worship of God, and to maintain Episcopacy, with the Civil places, and power of Kirk-men. Because we are bound to swear this Confession by vertue of, and conform unto the King's Command signed by his Sacred Majesty of the date of September 9. 1638. (These are the very words subjoynd to the Confession and Band, and prefixed to the Subscriptions) and it cannot be denied, but any Oath ministred unto us, must either be refused, or else taken according to the known mind, professed intention, and exprest command of Authority urging the same: And it is most manifest, that his Majesty's mind, intention, and commandment, is no other, but that the Confession be sworn, for the maintenance of Religion, as it is already or presently professed, (these two being coincident, altogether one and the same, not only in our common form of speaking, but in all his Majesty's Proclamations) and thus as it includeth and containeth within the compass thereof, the foresaid Novations and Episcopacy, which under that name were also ratified, in the first Parliament holden by his Majesty. And where it may be objected, That the Counsellors have subscribed the Confession of Faith, as it was professed 1580. and will not urge the Subscription in another sense upon the Subjects. We answer, first, the Act of Council containing that Declaration, is not as yet published by Proclamation. Secondly, If it were so published, it behooved of necessity either be repugnant to his Majesties declared Judgment and Command, which is more not to swear without warrant from Authority, (a fault although unjustly, often objected unto us) or else we must affirm the Religion in the year 1580. and at this time to be altogether one and the same; and thus must acknowledge, that there is no Novation of Religion, which were a formal contradiction to that we have sworn. Thirdly, By approving the Proclamation anent the Oath to be administered to Ministers, according to the Act of Parliament, which is to swear simple Obedience to the Diocesan Bishop, and by warning all Archbishops and Bishops to be present, as having voice and place in the Assembly: They seem to determine, that in their Judgment the Confession of Faith, as it was professed 1580. doth consist with Episcopacy, whereas we by our Oath have referred the trial of this or any other Question of that kind to the General Assembly and Parliament.

10. This Subscription and Oath in the mind and intention of Authority, and consequently in our swearing thereof, may consist with the corruptions of the Service-Book and Canons, which we have abjured as other heads of Popery: For both this present Proclamation, and his Majesties former Proclamations at Linlithgow, Strive-ling, Edinburgh; The Lords of Privy Council in their approbation of the same, and the Prelats and Doctors who stand for the Service-Book and Canons, do all speak plainly, or import so much, That these Books are not repugnant to the Confession of Faith, and that the introducing of them is no Novation of Religion or Law: And therefore we must either refuse to subscribe now, or we must confess contrary to our late Oath, and to a clear Truth, That the Service-Book and Canons are no Innovations in Religion. And though the present Books be discharged by Proclamation, yet if we shall by any deed of our own testify, that they may consist with our Confession of Faith, within a very short time, either the same Books, or some other like unto them, with some small change, may be obtruded upon us, who by our abjuration (if we adhere unto it) have freed both our selves, and the posterity, of all such corruptions, and have laid a fair foundation for the pure Worship of God in all time coming.

11. Although there be indeed no substantial difference between that which we have subscribed, and the Confession subscribed 1580. more than there is between that which is hid, and that which is revealed; a Merch-stone hid in the ground, and uncovered, betwixt the hand closed and open, betwixt a sword sheathed and drawn, or betwixt the large Confession, registered in the Acts of Parliament, and the short Confession, or (if we may with reverence ascend yet higher) between the Old Testament and the New; yet as to sheathe our Sword when it should be drawn, were imprudency, or at the commandment of Princes, professedly Popish in their Dominions, after the Subjects had subscribed both Confessions, to subscribe the first without the second, or at the will of a Jewish Magistrate, openly denying the New Testament, to subscribe the Old alone, after that they have subscribed both, were horrible impiety against God, and treachery against the Truth: Right so, for us to subscribe the former apart, as it is now urged and framed, without the explanation and application thereof at this time, when ours is rejected; and the Subscribers of the former refuse to subscribe ours, as containing something substantially different, and urge the former upon us, as different from ours, and not expressing the special abjuration of the evils, supplicated against by us, were nothing else, but to deny and part from our former Subscription, if not formally, yet interpretatively. Old Eleazar, who would not seem to eat forbidden meat, and the Confessors and Martyrs of old, who would not seem by delivering some of their Papers, to render the Bible, or to deny the Truth, may teach us our duty in this Case, although our lives were in hazard for refusing this Subscription: And who knoweth, but the Lord may be calling his People now, who have proceeded so far in professing his Truth at this time, to such Trials and Confessions, as his faithful Witnesses have given of old; that in this point also our doing may be a document both to the succeeding Ages, and to other Kirks to whom for the present we are made a Spectacle?

12. If any be so forgetful of his Oath (which God forbid) as to subscribe this Confession, as it is now urged, he doth according to the Proclamation acquiesce in this Declaration of his Majesties will, and doth accept of such a pardon as hath need to be ratified in Parliament; And thus doth turn our glory unto shame, by confessing our guiltiness, where God from Heaven hath made us guiltless, and by the fire of his Spirit from Heaven hath accepted of our service, And doth depart from the commandment of God, the practice of the Godly in former times, and the worthy and laudable example of our worthy and religious Progenitors, in obedience whereof, and conform to which we made profession to subscribe: For there is no particular Act required of us, to whom the pardon is presented in this Proclamation, but this new Subscription allanerly.

13. The general Band now urged to be subscribed, as it containeth many Clauses not so fitting the present time as that wherein it was subscribed, so it is deficient in a point, at this time most necessary, Of the reformation of our lives, that we shall answerably to our Profession, be examples to others, of all godliness, soberness, and righteousness, and of every duty we owe to God and man; without which we cannot now subscribe this Confession, lest we loose the bands to wickedness, seem to repeat of our former resolutions and promises, and choose to have our portion with hypocrites, professing and swearing that we know God, but in our Works denying him, being abominable, disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate.

14. Since the Narrative of the general Band is now changed, and some lines, expressing at length the Papists, and their adherents to be the Party from whom the danger to Religion and the King's Majesty was threatned, are left out, and no designation made of the Party from whom the danger is now threatned, we are made either to think, that our Subscription at this time is unnecessary, or to suspect that we who have supplicated and entered into Covenant, are understood to be the Party, especially since the Lords of Council have in the Act September 22. ratified the Proclamation, found themselves bound

1638. To use their best endeavours, that all his Majesties good Subjects may rest satisfied with his Majesties Declaration; since also we have been (although undeservedly) challenged of disorders, distractions, and dangers to Religion, and his Majesties Authority; and since in the foresaid Act, and in the Missive directed to his Majesty, the Lords of Council offer their Lives and Fortunes to his Majesty, in repressing all such as shall hereafter prease to disturb the peace of this Kirk and Kingdom; which being expressed in a generality, is by many applied to us, and interpreted of our adhering to our Covenant; we should therefore, by our Subscription of the Covenant, as it is now conceived, both do directly against our own minds, in condemning our selves, wherein we are innocent, and should consent to our own hurt, to the suppressing of the Cause which we maintain, and to the repressing mutually one of us of another, directly contrary to our former solemn Oath and Subscription.

15. The subscribing of this Confession by the Lords of his Majesties Privy Council, who by their place and high employment are publick Peace-makers, and by others who have not subscribed the late Commission, will make the breach wider, and the lamentable division of this Kirk more desperate than ever before; some having sworn to labour by all lawful means to recover the former liberty and purity of Religion; and others maintaining that for purity, which is already established; some believing and professing that the evils supplicated against, are abjured in that Confession of Faith; and others maintaining the Confession of Faith, and these corruptions (although for the present discharged by Authority) not to be inconsistent: And beside this, many divisions and subdivisions will ensue to the doleful renting of the Kirk and Kingdom, making way for the wrath and many judgments of God often threatned by his faithful Servants, which all the godly ought to labour by all means to prevent.

For these and the like Considerations, in our own name, and in name of all who will adhere to the late Covenant, subscribed by us, and sealed from Heaven, we (from our duty to God, our King, our Native Country, our selves, and the Posterity, lest our silence import a satisfaction of our desires, and a stopping of our mouths from necessary supplication for things yet to be obtained from his Majesties just and gracious disposition) are constrained to declare and protest;

First, That the cause and occasion of the distractions of the Kirk and Commonwealth, are no ways to be imputed unto us, or our needles fears, but to the innovations and corruptions of Religion, which against the Acts and Order of this Kirk, and the Laws of the Kingdom, have been pressed upon us the people of God, and his Majesties loyal Subjects; who, although under great thralldom, were living in peace and quietness, labouring in all godliness and honesty to do our duty to God and man.

Secondly, We protest, that all questions and doubts that arise, concerning the freedom of the Assembly, whether in the Constitution and Members thereof, or in the Matters to be treated, or in the manner and order of proceeding, be remitted to the determination of the Assembly itself, as the only proper and competent Judge; and that it shall be lawful for us, being authorized with lawful Commissions, as at other times when the urgent necessity of the Kirk shall require, so in this exigence to assemble ourselves at the Diet appointed, notwithstanding any impediment or prorogation to the contrary: And being assembled, against all qualifications and predeterminations, or presupposals to propound, treat, reason, vote, and conclude, according to the Word of God, confession of Faith, and Acts of lawful Assemblies, in all Ecclesiastical Matters, pertaining to the Assembly, and tending to the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ, and good of Religion.

Thirdly, Since Archbishops and Bishops have no warrant for their Office in this Kirk, since it is contrary both to Reason and to the Acts of the Kirk, that any have place and voice in the Assembly, who are not authorized with lawful Commissions; and seeing both in common equity, and by the tenour of this Proclamation, they are made liable to the trial and censure of the Assembly, we protest, that they be not present, as having place or voice in the Assembly; but as rei to compeer, for underlying trial and censure upon the general complaints already made, and the particular accusations to be given in against them; And that the warning given by his Majesties Proclamation, and this our Protestation, be a sufficient citation to them, to compeer before the Assembly, for their trial and censure, in Life, Office, and Benefice.

Fourthly, We solemnly protest, that we do constantly adhere to our Oath and Subscription of the Confession of Faith and Covenant, lately renewed and approved with rare and undeniable evidences from Heaven, of the wonderful workings of his Spirit in the hearts both of Pastors and People, through all the parts of the Kingdom; And that we stand to all parts and clauses thereof, and particularly to the explanation and application, containing both our abjuration of, and our union against the particular evils and corruptions of the time; a duty which the Lord at this time especially craveth at our hands.

Fifthly, We also protest, that none of us who have subscribed, and do adhere to our Subscription of the late Covenant, be charged or urged, either to procure the Subscriptions of others, or to subscribe our selves unto any other Confession or Covenant, containing any derogation thereunto, especially that mentioned in the Proclamation, without the necessary explanation and the application thereof, already sworn by us, for the Reasons above expressed: And because, as we did in our former Protestation appeal from the Lords of his Majesties Council, so do we now by these renew our solemn Appeal, with all solemnities requisite, unto the next free General Assembly and Parliament, as the only Supream National Judicatories competent, to judge of National Causes and Proceedings.

anno 1638. W Sixthly, We protest, That no Subscription, whether by the Lords of Council or others, of the Confession mentioned in the Proclamation, and enjoined for the maintenance of Religion, as it is now already, or at this present time established and professed within this Kingdom, without any innovation of Religion or Law, be any manner of way prejudicial to our Covenant, wherein we have sworn to forbear the practice of Novations already introduced, &c. till they be tried in a free Assembly; and to labour by all lawful means, to recover the purity and liberty of the Gospel as it was established and professed before the foresaid Innovations: And in like manner, that no Subscription foresaid be any derogation to the true and sound meaning of our worthy Predecessors, at the time of their Subscription in the year 1581. and afterward. Withal, warning and exhorting all men who lay to heart the cause of Religion, against the corruptions of the time, and the present estate of things, both to subscribe the Covenant as it hath been explained, and necessarily applied; and as they love the purity and liberty of the Gospel, to hold back their hands from all other Covenants, till the Assembly now indicted be convened, and determine the present differences and divisions, and preserve this Country from contrary Oaths.

Seventhly, As his Majesties Royal Clemency appeareth in forgiving and forgetting what his Majesty conceiveth to be a disorder or done amiss in the proceeding of any; so are we very confident of his Majesties approbation, to the integrity of our hearts and peaceableness of our ways and actions all this time past: And therefore we protest that we still adhere to our former complaints, protestations, lawful meetings, proceedings, mutual defences, &c. All which, as they have been in themselves lawful, so were they to us, pressed with so many grievances in his Majesties absence from this native Kingdom, most necessary, and ought to be regarded as good offices, and pertinent duties of faithful Christians, loyal Subjects, and sensible Members of this Kirk and Commonwealth, as we trust at all occasions to make manifest to all good men, especially to his Sacred Majesty, for whose long and prosperous Government, that we may live a peaceable and quiet life in all godliness and honesty, we earnestly pray.

W Hereupon a noble Earl, James Earl of Montrose, &c. in name of the Noblemen; Mr. Alexander Gibson younger of Durie, in name of the Barons; George Porterfield Merchant, Burges of Glasgow, in name of the Burrows; M. Harie Rollock Minister at Edinburgh, in name of the Ministers; and M. Archbald Johnston Reader hereof, in name of all who adhere to the Confession of Faith and Covenant, lately renewed within this Kingdom, took Instruments in the hands of 3 Notars present, at the said Mercate Cross of Edinburgh, being invironed with great numbers of the foresaid Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burrows, Ministers, and Commons, before many hundred Witnesses, and craved the extract thereof: And in token of their dutiful respect to his Majesty, confidence of the equity of their Cause, and innocency of their Carriage, and hope of his Majesties gracious acceptance, they offered in all humility with submiss reverence a Copy thereof to the Herald.

Car. 14. A And now for trial of what hath been said, the Reader may reflect upon these Particulars: Not far from the beginning, they aver that they did confidently expect from the King a free General Assembly and Parliament to be indicted; and that his Majesties Commissioner promised to recommend unto his Majesty this their suit for a free General Assembly, without prelimitation either in the constitution and members thereof, in the order and manner of proceeding, or in the matters to be treated of; and do insinuate as if the King had not given order for any such Assembly in his Declaration; which every Reader (looking upon that Declaration) may see to be most untrue: For in it his Majesty gives warrant to his Commissioner to indict a free General Assembly; nor is there either mention or meaning of any prelimitation, though they themselves did use very many, some whereof you have heard already, and shall hear of more hereafter. Afterwards they quarrel with the King's Declaration for ascribing all the late distractions of this Church and Commonwealth to their conceived fears of the Innovation of Religion and Laws, and not to the Innovations themselves: No doubt a great crime, that the King would not acknowledge that the Service-Book, which was penned at first by those who laid down their lives in opposition to Popery, is an introduction to Popery; and his Majesty did profess that he did discharge that Book only to remove their fears and doubts, and ease their pretended grievances: Nor could he condemn that Book, without condemning the Service-Book of England, for the Covenanters Arguement alike at both. Then immediately after, W take it ill that though his Majesty have discharged the practice of these pretended Innovations, and voided all Acts made for the establishing of them, yet he hath not rescinded his former Proclamations at Sterling and Edinburgh: As if nothing could content them, unless the King should disgrace his own Proclamations, which did not any way establish or authorize the things complained of: Nay more, unless he should call back his own words, which cannot be interpreted to any such sense as they would force upon them, they would make the People believe, that the liberty of the General Assembly is prejudged, and, in a suspicious, undutiful, and dangerous phrase, tell them, That they do not consider with whom they are dealing; as if no trust were to be given to his Majesty. Next, they quarrel with the discharging of the practice of the Articles of Perth, but not the Articles themselves which are established by Acts both of Parliament and General Assembly; and yet it may be thought, that they would hold it for a strange Position, if the King should use his Prerogative to the disanulling of any thing established by these two Judicatories; nay, if his Majesty and the Parliament jointly should (as the World goeth now) offer to disanul any Act of their General Assembly: So glad they were to quarrel with the King's Declaration, that in their eagerness they destroy their own grounds. The next Cavil, if it were possible, is as senseless as the former, whereby they aver, that the naming of Bishops in the Proclamation for the indictment of the Assembly is a prelimitation of it, because thereby we take it as granted, that the office of a Bishop is unquestionably an Office in that Church and Kingdom: And this they call a great prelimitation put upon the Assembly; P p p p but 1638. but with what shew of consequence we cannot possibly conceive: For who would not take that undoubtedly for an Office in any Church or Kingdom, which is established by the Laws and Acts of both? And such is the Office of a Bishop in that Kingdom: After these fancied prelimitations, they add six Reasons why they should not be admitted; which are so ignorant and simple, as it is not possible to draw them into any form of reasoning or concluding: And though they could be so drawn, yet they were very needless; for to what end should Reasons be brought against the admitting of these prelimitations, when there were no prelimitations offered, and these that are alledged are no prelimitations at all? And therefore these six Reasons, at least so called by them, are to be passed over with contempt, as having not one word in them worthy the answering.

Next, they muster up sixteen Reasons against the Subscription to the Confession of Faith urged by the King's Authority in that Declaration, of the very same piece with the former six Reasons, every way as full of Non-sense as they: The first is, that it will make their Covenant be forgotten: A matter of great consequence indeed, that their unlawful Acts should be drowned by any Act of lawful Authority! For this one would think they should thank the King. The second Reason is, that if they should subscribe this Confession now, they would think themselves guilty of mocking God: A notable whimsey, that Acts of Authority must want obedience if they cross some Peoples foolish thoughts and idle fancies. But in the mean time what a fearful mocking of God, and taking of his name in vain, is it for them to say so, and use that great name for so groundless a suspicion? The third Reason is, that they are afraid that this Subscription will introduce a division amongst themselves, it being against their Oath, in their late Covenant, to admit of any divisive motions. And truly whatsoever they pretend in all their other Reasons, this is the main, if not the only reason of the principal Covenanters furious proceedings in all their ways, and especially in this their Protestation, because they did plainly perceive that if the People should once see and acknowledge his Majesties Grace and Clemency, or be brought to subscribe to the same thing by his Authority, to which they had subscribed before by their persuasion, then they would begin again to relish Government, and so fall off, and divide themselves from those who have resolved never to indure it: In the mean time, the Reader shall do well to observe the wonderful strength of this Reason; we must not subscribe, because it will occasion some division amongst us; by the same Reason, all hope of peace must be banished out of that Kingdom for ever: For certainly if they themselves should set down in writing the utmost of their desires, and the King should assent unto them, yet undoubtedly some would dislike and not admit of those Propositions of Peace, which the rest had agreed upon: Are they therefore sworn by their Oath to reject all proffers of Peace, because some will dislike them, upon which a division must follow more or less? The fourth Reason is plain Popery, and the main ground of most of the Errors established at the Council of Trent; If they subscribe now, it will be thought that they have erred in their former proceedings; but where the reason of this Reason lies, is past ordinary finding: The fifth

Reason hath in it a reach beyond the Moon; this Subscription is urged by Authority, but our former Subscription proceeded from our own Heads, and therefore is to be preferred, as carrying with it more liberty, more sincerity, and less hypocrisie; a Reason fit to be answered by none but such as have lost their Reason. The sixth Reason is in the same case; for truly it cannot be understood. The seventh Reason supposeth that there is a Papist in the World so foolish and simple as to think, that the same Confession of Faith, consisting of the same words and syllables, enjoined to be sworn without Authority, if it shall be commanded to be sworn by Authority, becometh a new and different confession of Faith; or if that the King every year of his Reign should renew and command a Subscription to the same Confession, that then every year he should establish a new Faith; sure they need not trouble the Peoples heads with such foolish fears; for undoubtedly there will be no such foolish Fellows found amongst the Papists. The eighth Reason hath not a shew of any reason. For their ninth Reason, we are confident, that if they had known as much as now they do, and have expressed in their Answer to the Lord Commissioners last Declaration, they would have left this quite out: For the truth is, that no man can subscribe this Confession of Faith commanded by the King, and with a safe Conscience hold that Episcopacy is abjured by it, for many Reasons, amongst which this alledged by them is but one, yet a very true one, viz. That an Oath must either be refused or taken according to the known intention of him that ministred it; and it being well known, that his Majesty, according to the Laws of all his Kingdoms, is resolved to maintain Episcopal Government, no man can swear any Oath administred by the King or his Authority, which may not consist with that Government: And it is as true, that there is nothing in that Confession of Faith, which being sworn unto, abjureth Episcopacy, by whomsoever the Oath shall be administred; and therefore it is a very unjust and unnecessary fear, which seems to make them sweat at the end of this ninth Reason, viz. That this Subscription commanded by us, seemeth to determine, that the Confession of Faith as it was professed 1580. doth consist with Episcopacy: That this Subscription determineth it, is undoubtedly a very simple conceit, but that the Confession it self made in 1580. may and doth consist with Episcopacy, is unquestionably true; and it is so determined by the Covenanters themselves, who assured many who made that Scruple, and would not have come into their Covenant unless the Covenanters had first resolved them of it, that they might swear the same Confession, and yet not abjure Episcopal Government, which likewise the three Ministers in their first Answer to the Divines of Aberdene, have positively affirmed, averring, that Episcopacy was not abjured by that Confession, nor their Covenant, but only referred to the trial of an Assembly and Parliament: Now it is most certain, that when the King commanded this Subscription to that Confession, no Assembly (true or pretended) had determined that it was abjured, nor hath any Parliament done so yet; and therefore the Covenanters themselves have determined, that when the King required this Subscription, a man might safely subscribe without abjuration of Episcopacy:

Anno 1638. copacy: But to let the weakness of this Ninth Reason pass, it is a wonder to observe how these men in their Answer to the Fourth Reason (contained in the Lord Commissioners last Declaration) are constrained by main force of Argument to deny their own most true Proposition, expressed at the beginning of this Ninth Reason: For there they affirm it plainly, that a man may swear secundum rem juratam, though he know that that which he swears to, is against the meaning and sense of him that gives the Oath; which is such a notable piece of Equivocation, and, indeed, of such dishonesty, as is not to be expressed by us in its proper name; for no Patron of Equivocation hath yet out-gone it. The Tenth Reason propoundeth an undoubted truth, viz. that by swearing that Confession, none of these pretended innovations is abjured. What then? Is it not sufficient, that by the King's Authority they are discharged, and referred to the trial of a General Assembly and Parliament? The Eleventh Reason repeateth again the dark Parable of the Merch-stone which was in the Sixth Reason; it would break any man's teeth to crack it, and so it is not to be hoped, that ever any man will find the pith and kernel of it; and therefore let it be as unintelligible as the sixth. The Twelfth Reason is such a one as certainly no rational man could ever have dreamed of: If we subscribe the Confession by the King's Authority, then it will be thought that we acquiesce in his Majesties Declaration, and that we are contented to be pardoned by him, and that is such a thing as it turns all our glory into shame, by confessing our guiltiness. A strange fancy, that men should account that a shame, which the Scripture calleth giving glory unto God! But truly it is not far from blasphemy, when they affirm, that God by the fire of his Spirit from Heaven hath accepted their service: If they mean their Covenant, what more can be said of the holy Scriptures? For sure to be indited by the Spirit, and to be approved by the fire of the Spirit from Heaven, is much about one; if there be any difference, the odds will seem to lye upon the acceptance of it from Heaven by the fire of the Spirit; for the Spirit descending upon the Apostles in fiery Tongues, was that which both sealed their calling unto them, and enabled them for it, and for inditing those holy Scriptures which they wrote: And thus, before they are aware, they make themselves Patrons of a notable point of Popery, viz. That their Covenant, which sure was penned by men, and so but a human writings, is of equal authority with the Sacred Scriptures: For if it be approved from Heaven by the fire of the Spirit, it must be so. But it is to be hoped that every man will pity this frenzy, and give no credit to it, until they make it appear unto us, when and where God from Heaven by the fire of his Spirit did seal and approve this Covenant. The Thirteenth Reason is a mad one indeed, for it doth condemn the Confession of Faith which was first subscribed in 1580. upon which Confession they do solely ground their own Covenant; for that Confession hath no such Oath for Reformation of Life annexed unto it: The truth is, something they would have said against the King's Declaration, but they did not well know what: Their Wits were run very low, when in an extraordinary Vow and Covenant with God, they would put in Reformation of Life, unto which every man is tied by the ordinary moral Precepts, both of Law and Gospel, and by the Doctrine of Repentance contained in both: For the Reason which is in their fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth Reasons, we leave it for them to find that can, we are persuaded they will lose their labour who seek it.

After their Reasons, they conclude with seven Protestations, which truly need not to be taken notice of; for being grounded upon to weak and inconsiderable considerations, the Reader is unreasonable, like them, if he should expect a conclusion stronger than the premises. In the preamble to them, take notice only of their dangerous and fearful approach unto blasphemy, while they affirm, That the Covenant made by them was sealed from Heaven. Their first Protestation is utterly invalid, being Protestatio contra factum; for it is plain to the whole World, that the rebellious distractions of that Kingdom proceed from them alone. Their second Protestation is void most evidently upon the same ground; for they themselves, both by their publick Instructions, of which you have heard, and in their private Instructions, of which you shall hear, have used many prelimitations in all the particulars against which they protest, but neither his Majesty, nor any by his Authority have used any. The third Protestation begins with a Supposition, which they themselves do know to be most false; for both Archbishops and Bishops had, at the time of this their Protestation, both by the Acts of the Church, and by the Acts of Parliament, a settled Office in the Church, and have so still by Parliament, nay, and by Assembly too, unless they do pitifully beg that which will never be granted them, That their last Assembly at Glasgow was a lawful Assembly, after the King's Authority had dissolved it. And as it beginneth with a false Supposition, so it endeth with as false and foolish a Position and Petition: For it mainteineth, That all those who are to undergo any trial at the Assembly, either upon any general Complaint already made, or upon any particular Accusation to be given in against them, are to compare at the Assembly, not to have voice, but as rei: Upon which ground, none of themselves could have voice there; for they were all liable to trial and censure upon any particular Accusation that was to be given in against them: And then their Petition is, That the warning given to the Bishops by this Proclamation, and this their Protestation, should be a sufficient Citation to them to appear as rei: That their Protestation should be so, it is so foolish a Request, as a man may be confident no man ever heard of the like before; nor could they expect that any man, indued with Reason, would yield unto it: And that the King's warning of the Bishops by Proclamation to appear at the Assembly, as he did all the rest of the Members of it, should make them appear as rei, is such a conceit, as is to be wondered any man could light upon it, unless they do hold, that every one of themselves was to appear as rei too, for all of them were warned by the Kings Proclamation to appear at the Assembly as well as the Bishops. In their fourth Protestation we may admire their rare and undeniable impudence, who dare affirm, that their Covenant is approved from Heaven, with rare and undeniable evidences, when all the Christians in the World (except themselves and their Faction) who have heard of it, do acknowledge that no such Covenant or Combination can come from Heaven, but from Hell, from whence cometh all Faction and Schism. In their fifth Protestation they do run into an act of High Treason; for they appeal from the King and his Council, which by an Act of Parliament is made High Treason, and which they know themselves was adjudged to be so in the case of the Ministers, who held an Assembly at Aberdene, after it was prorogued by his Royal Father, who being cited to compeer before the Lords of the Council to answer that high contempt, and compeering declined the Authority of his Royal Father and his Council, and appealed to a General Assembly, were therefore Arraigned of High Treason upon that Statute before the Lord Chief Justice of that Kingdom; and after pleading to it by their Advocates, were found by a Jury or Assise, guilty of High Treason; and had received Sentence accordingly, if his Royal Father, out of his singular Clemency and gracious Respect to their Calling, had not Reprieved them before Sentence, and only inflicted upon them perpetual Banishment, which they did undergo: The Act of Parliament upon which they were Arraigned was this.

The Eighth Parliament current holden at Edenburgh, the 22th of May, in the Year of God 1584. by the Right Excellent, Right High and Mighty Prince James the Sixth, by the Grace of God, King of Scots, and three Estates of this Realm.

An Act Confirming the King's Majesties Royal Power over all Estates and Subjects within this Realm.

Forasmuch as some Persons being lately called before the King's Majesty and his secret Council, to answer upon certain Points to have been enquired of them, concerning some Treasonable, Seditious, and Contumelious Speeches uttered by them in Pulpits, Schools, and otherwaies, to the disdain and reproach of his Highness, his Progenitors, and present Council; contemptuously declined the Judgment of his Highness and his said Council in that behalf, to the evil example of others to do the like, if timely remedy be not provided: Therefore our Sovereign Lord, and his three Estates assembled in this present Parliament, ratifieth and approveth, and perpetually confirmeth, the Royal Power and Authority over all Estates, as well Spiritual as Temporal, within this Realm, in the Person of the King's Majesty our Sovereign Lord, his Heirs and Successors: And also stateth and ordaineth that his Highness, his Heirs and Successors, by themselves and their Councils, are, and in time to come shall be Judges competent to all persons his Highness Subjects, of what estate, degree, function, or condition soever they be of, Spiritual or Temporal, in all matters wherein they, or any of them shall be apprehended, summoned, or charged to answer to such things as shall be inquired of them by our said Sovereign Lord and his Council. And that none of them which shall happen to be apprehended, called or summoned to the effect aforesaid, presume to take in hand to decline the Judgment of his Highness, his Heirs and Successors, or their Council in the premises, under the pain of Treason.

Their sixth Protestation is nothing but a Repetition of that which they have said so oft, even unto tediousness: In their seventh and last, they bewray an unexampled boldness, in avowing their confidence of his Majesties approbation to the integrity of their hearts, and peaceableness of their ways and actions all this time past, when in their own Consciences they do know, that his Majesty did hold and detest their ways and actions, as most unpeaceable and seditious.

And now having taken a short survey of this their Protestation, we Appeal to any man, who shall compare it with the Kings Declaration, whether his gracious Proclamation, against which they protested, did not rather deserve an humble and hearty acknowledgment of his many Graces and Favours towards them, with a joyful and submissive acceptance of them, than first to be traduced to the people before it was made, for a Proclamation tending to the utter ruin and subversion of the Religion and Laws of that Church and Kingdom; and then afterward to be encountered in publick with such an impudent, insolent, seditious, and senseless Protestation; and lastly, after all this, to be railed at in their Pulpits, and the People made to believe, that that part of it which required Subscription to their own Confession of Faith, but lately sworn and subscribed unto by themselves, was a device of the Devil, and hatched in Hell, as shall appear by that which followed?

For the next day, being Sunday, all the Pulpits of Edenburgh, nay, and many places where there were no Pulpits (for they heard Sermons in many Halls, and other profane and common places) did ring with bitter invectives and declamations against this the King's gracious Declaration, especially against that part of it which they conceived would be most satisfactory to his People, and prove a special Antidote for expelling that Poyson which they had made them swallow, concerning his declining from the Reformed Religion, and inclining to Popery, viz. the Subscription to their own Confession of Faith now commanded by him: For, they branded it so with most hideous and horrible names of the very depth and policy of Satan, that the common People, who were well perswaded of the Piety of their Preachers, could not chuse but imagine that there was some wickedness in it, which their Preachers could and did dive into, though they did not. One Preacher in his Sermon prayed God to scatter them in Israel, and to divide them in Jacob, who were the Authors of this scattering and divisive Counsel. Another Preacher in his Pulpit told his People, that the urging of this Subscription, was an Italian and a devillish device, first to make them renounce God, and perjure themselves, and then afterward there was an intention to destroy their Bodies; and so that this Subscription imported no less than the destruction both of their Bodies and Souls. These and many more such false fears suggested, first from two of the Preachers of Edinburgh, and from them transmitted to their Fellows throughout the Kingdom, did work so strongly with the good but simple and seduced People, as that they were wrought unto a perswasion, that this Subscription to their own Confession of Faith, commanded by the King, for removing that false opinion which their Leaders had put into their heads of his inclination to Popery, was of a far deeper reach, and of more dangerous consequence, than if he had been inclined to Popery indeed; still adding, 1638. ding, That if they did subscribe it now by his Authority, it could receive no acceptation at God's hands, God rejecting any service done to him by constraint (it being very familiar with them at these times to term obedience to authority constraint) but when they subscribed it voluntarily, or by the perswasion of their Leaders, then it was acceptable to God; and, if they durst have used such a Popish word, no question they would have added, Meritorious: And thus you see, with what undutifulness his Majesties gracious Declaration was entertained.

Anno

Yet it was not so received by all: For, First, all the Lords of the Council (amongst whom were some, who never seemed to be satisfied before) were so fully satisfied, and so much over-joyed with this his gracious Declaration, that they did condemn and utterly detest this odious Protestation of the Covenanters; whereupon the Councils Letter of thanks and proffer of service was sent to the King, as was before declared.

Next, the greatest part of the Ministers of that Kingdom did rest satisfied with it; as shall be made evident if it come to trial: But this is most certain, that the Ministers Assembled at Edinburgh that morning at the Gray-Friars-Church by the name of the fourth Table, or Table of the Ministers ordinarily resident at Edinburgh all this time, for attendance upon the business of the Covenant, being sent unto by the other Tables, and desired by them to send some of their number up to the great Committee of all the Tables, to joyn with them in a Protestation which was to be made that afternoon against the King's Declaration, which then they expected would be proclaimed; the Ministers returned this answer by their whole voices (not above two or three at the most dissenting,) That they would not agree to any Protestation which should be made against the Kings gracious Declaration, unless it should be sent down unto them, that it might be thoroughly advised upon; especially considering that they had heard so much of the contents of that the King's Declaration, importing the removing of their grievances which occasioned their Covenant, that they could not conceive the necessity of any Protestation. Which answer being turned to the other Tables, did so trouble them, that they sent a second message to them, intreating them presently to come up to St. Gyles Church, and to sit there, that so being in a place of a near distance from their great Committee, they might the more easily consult with them. Thither they came, and staid a great while, but heard nothing from the Committee, who it seems were much distracted and puzzled about the penning of their Protestation, and had certain Ministers with them (especially Rollock) at that consultation, who were not deputed by the Table of Ministers to be present at it; and having stayed in that Church until near one of the Clock in the afternoon, dissolved themselves, took their leaves one of another, and resolved not to meet until the next week, many of them going home presently towards their own Country Churches, where they were to Preach the next day, being Sunday; and at their parting they deputed none to join with the Committee from the other Tables, either to consult about, or to assist at any Protestation which should be made against this the King's gracious Declaration: And all this was averred by divers Ministers then present, before divers of the Lords of the Council, and other persons of special rank and quality, who likewise would have averred it before the last pretended General Assembly, if they durst have done it without running the hazzard of their fortunes, if not their lives: And yet in that afternoon about three of the Clock, Rollock, in the name of the Ministers, did upon a Scaffold join with the Deputies from the three other Tables, in that wicked Protestation, without deputation (as is presumed) from the Table of Ministers, unless perhaps he called some few straggling Ministers about the Town, of whom it may be he asked the question.

Besides, many thousands of the King's Subjects Covenanters were fully satisfied with his Declaration, though they durst not, as many of them have professed, subscribe this Confession of Faith urged by his Majesty, for fear of being troubled by the major part. And it is known, that wheresoever that Declaration was published, before that the Covenanters from their Tables sent their emissaries to dissuade the acknowledgment of it, and Copies of their Protestations against it, it was received with all expressions of joy and thankful acknowledgment; insomuch that when it was proclaimed at the Market-Cross at Glasgow, it was assisted with all these expressions, both by the Magistrates and all the Inhabitants, by the Principal, the Regents and Professors, by all the Ministers of that City, though Covenanters, who out of the great sense of the many obligations and favours, which his Majesty had laid upon that whole Kingdom, by this his gracious Declaration, directed their several Letters of thanks and acknowledgment to the Lord Commissioner, which are here exhibited.

The Letter of the Provost, Bailiffs, and the Council of Glasgow.

Most Honourable and our very good Lord,

Having received a Letter directed from your Grace to us with this bearer your Graces Cousin, and having read the same, and heard and weighed his Majesties gracious Proclamation, which was this day proclaimed within this City, to the great joy of all the hearers; We cannot but praise God, who hath endued his Sacred Majesty our Dread Sovereign, with such Wisdom, Piety, Clemency, and fatherly care of this Church and Kingdom; and pray God for a long and happy Reign to his Sacred Majesty, and his Highness posterity over us and succeeding Generations; And shall ever endeavour to approve our selves his Majesties most loyal Subjects; And wish from our hearts all happiness to your Grace, and your Graces most Noble Family, for the well-wishing of this City; and especially for the great pains taken by your Grace in this so weighty an employment, hoping and praying to God that the same may obtain the wished for accomplishment, and shall ever remain,

Most Honourable and our very good Lord,

Having received the Letter directed from your Grace, and having heard and considered his Majesties most gracious Proclamation published this day in this City, with joyful acclamations universally of the hearers, as we of the Ministry and University of Glasgow, who were present, with great contentment and joy of heart applauded thereto; and do praise God who hath inspired our Dread Sovereign with such wisdom, Piety, Clemency, and fatherly care of the Church and Common-wealth of this Kingdom, as is abundantly manifested in the said Proclamation; So we would gladly testify, by what means we can, our thankfulness to his Majesty, our Crown of rejoicing, and the breath of our Nostrils; not omitting our bound duty to your Grace, whom God and his Majesty hath appointed so fit and happy an instrument in this great errand, for your singular Prudence, rare Piety, and Zeal to God, your Prince, and Country, and incredible pains in this Honourable and weighty Employment, which we pray God may still prosper in your hands, until it be brought to a full and blessed conclusion, being willing for our part to contribute what lyeth in our poor power by our earnest Prayers and best Endeavours.

Now, besides these, in many places of the Kingdom, whither they sent their Protestation to be read, it was refused by divers, who had subscribed their own Covenant.

The Assembly being indicted, the Covenanters did now go about to effect all which they had plotted and designed concerning the election of the Commissioners to it, That all, and none but they, might be chosen whom they had resolved upon, and were of the most rigid rank, whom they were sure would receive no satisfaction, and keep all others (so far as in them lay) from accepting of any: Their device was this; They perceived that most of the Ministers throughout the Kingdom would gladly embrace peace, if they might see their Consciences satisfied in these fears and doubts, upon which they entred into the late Covenant. The Leaders resolved not to trust any such moderate men, considering that all their scruples were removed by the King's last Declaration, and the induction of a free General Assembly; and therefore they took order by their secret instructions, that none of them should be chosen, though they were Covenanters: For Ministers Non-Covenanters, they took order, that if in any place by plurality of voices such a one should be chosen, then he should be processed and protested against, (which no man could avoid) and so he should be sure to be set by at the Assembly, and cast from having any voice there. And whereas they might fear, that the rigid Ministers, designed by them for this Assembly, might want a sufficient number of their fellow-Ministers for their elections in their several Presbyteries, they took an order, That not only for this time, but for all times to come, there should be no Minister chosen Commissioner from any Presbytery to any Assembly, but such as the Laity should make choice of: For they presently gave order from their Tables, That every particular Parish should send to the Presbytery in their bounds one Lay-man, whom they called a Ruling Elder, who by their appointment should have voice in the Presbytery as well as the Minister of the Parish; so that when the whole Presbytery was Assembled together, the number of the Lay-men was at the least equal to the number of the Ministers; By which new device, the Laity gained of the Ministers undoubtedly these four things.

First, That never any Minister should be chosen Commissioner to the Assembly, but whom they would; for they being equal in number in voices with the Ministers, and six of the Ministers being to be put in the List, and to stand in Election, out of which six, three must be chosen, and all these six must be removed in the time of the Election, and have no voices themselves in it, it is clear, that the number of the Lay-voices in these Elections must needs exceed the number of the Ministers voices at least by six: Or, if in some Presbyteries (as was done in some few) these six Ministers before their removing gave voices to whom they pleased, yet (no man being able to give a voice to himself; of necessity the number of the Lay-voices must exceed the number of the Ministers by one.

Secondly, The Laity gained this, That in all other Presbyterial Meetings, which are weekly, the Ministers should never have a casting voice, to determine any thing but what they liked; the Lay-men being alwaies at the least equal to them in number.

Thirdly, This they gained, That whatsoever should be concluded in a General Assembly, should ever be concluded likewise in a Parliament, if Our Negative voice did not stop it: (and they have not spared to give out, that they will take from his Majesty and his Successors, that which all his Predecessours have enjoyed, that is, a negative voice in Parliament, as they have done in Assemblies, for as much as lies in them:) For by their instructions they ordered, That where any Noble-man lived in any Presbytery, he should be chosen Lay-Elder there for the Assembly, and all Noble-men are Hereditary members of the Parliament: and where there wanted a Noble-man, they should chuse some special Gentleman, who in all probability standeth fair for being chosen one of the Commissioners of the Shire for the Parliament; which made the Covenanters stand so importunately for that point, viz. to have the Assembly held before the Parliament, as making just accompt, that all the Lay-voices in the Assembly were engaged to give their voices to the same conclusions, when they should sit in Parliament; and so, that the Parliament, for its Acts, should depend upon the General Assembly, and the General Assembly (for the Acts passed there) should depend upon them, but neither the one nor the other depend upon the King.

4. Fourthly, The Laity gained this, That they exempted themselves for ever hereafter from all fears of the power of the Clergy: for they being resolved (so far as in them lay) to overthrow Episcopal Government, and yet fearing by so doing to be brought again under the Tyranny of Presbyterial Government, of which they had heard their

1638. their Fathers so grievously complain, they pitched upon this way of equal number of Lay-Elders in every Presbytery, being assured thereby to curb their Ministers, most of whom had their Stipends and Rents paid by these Lay-Patrons; and so now the Laity made accompt, that if in their Elections to this Assembly they could compass these conclusions and resolutions, they had brought the Church and Church-men under for ever.

These Conclusions, though effected by the Laity with violence, yet received great resistance by many Ministers in most Presbyteries, and in some by all: For when these Lay-Elders came to sit with them, they either refused to admit them, or desired time to deliberate, how they (who being Covenanters, and had complained of Innovations) could admit of such Innovations as those which seemed to threaten the ruin of the Liberty of the Church, for these Reasons:

Secondly, Because at the beginning of the Reformation, when there was a kind of necessity to require the assistance of Lay-men for the Government of the Church, (Ministers being then so few and scant,) yet it was provided that they should ever be fewer in number than the Ministers, and that therefore this obtruding of themselves in equal number, was not only an Innovation, but directly against the Book of Discipline, upon which they did so much ground their proceedings.

Thirdly, That it was a thing never heard nor practised before in that Church, that Lay-men had voices in the chusing of the Ministers Commissioners for the Assembly, and therefore if they would chuse, they desired them to chuse their own Lay Commissioner, but for the Ministers Commissioners to leave it to themselves, who were better able to discern of their Ministers abilities since they were weekly conversant with them, than they whom they had never seen in their Presbytery before.

But all this opposition and arguing was fruitless: For the Lay-Elders, according to their secret instructions from the Covenanters Tables, which afterward shall be related, would not remove, but put themselves in possession of suffrage, and so these Ministers, and none but they, were chosen in each Presbytery whom the Tables at Edenburgh had designed: A thing so odious and distastful to the Ministers, that in some Presbyteries, the Ministers (chosen Commissioners) had but eight Ministers voices, and the voices of two and twenty Lay-men, in others not above two Ministers voices, in some but one; but in all Presbyteries the Ministers Commissioners were elected by the plurality of Lay-voices. Some of these Ministers, though Covenanters, seeing the Liberty of the Church by this means utterly lost and betrayed, did repair to the two Covenanting Ministers of Edenburgh, to whom they bemoaned themselves, wondering that they would give way to the utter defacing of the Church by these Laick intrusions; to whom they gave this answer, That they grieved for it as much as themselves, but that the necessity of the times was such, that they must wink at it, else the Nobility, Gentry, and Burroughs did threaten them with a desertion, upon which a division must follow, which by their Oath and Covenant they were bound by all means to prevent. But the aggrieved Ministers were not satisfied with such cold, comfortless, and unconscionable answers, but resolved in many Presbyteries to draw up their Protestations against the Lay-Elders to the Assembly; yet they were so threatened by the Laity, that most of them fell back and durst not adventure upon it, though others both Covenanters and Non-Covenanters had the courage to do it, but with what success shall be declared when we come to speak of the Assembly it self. Yet this we will confidently averr, That when his Majesties Commissioner came last from that Kingdom, three parts of four of all the Covenanting Ministers did detest the elections made by Lay-Elders, and would have declared the nullity of all such elections if they durst have done it; and that these Ministers, (unless they have changed their minds since) had rather live under Episcopal Government, than under the Tyranny of the Laity and a few Ministers, from whom they have suffered more in a few Months, than ever they did under all the Bishops in the Kingdom, since his Majesties coming to the Crown: all which very many of them have affirmed, both for themselves and others, to the Lord Commissioner, divers of the Council, and others of good credit and quality.

But the elections being now past according as they had plotted them, or in good forwardness so to be where they were not yet past, the Covenanters next care was, how to hinder the subscription of the Confession of Faith commanded by the King, they conceiving it their Master-piece to stop any thing (though never so well liked by themselves) if it were commanded by his Authority; as fearing, that if he had obedience given to him in any one thing, the people might recover the taste of Government: And hearing that the Lord Commissioner was to repair to the Colledge of Justice, there to tender to the Lords of the Session, who are the supreme Judges of the Laws in that Kingdom, the Confession of Faith and Band annexed, to be sworn by Authority, that very morning they set up Kollock to Preach, (though it was not his ordinary course) where many of the Judges were present before they went to sit: There he with many false and foolish impertinences did so labour to perswade them, that the swearing of that Confession was unlawful and plain perjury, that he shewed himself a ridiculous and most dishonest man to most that were present, and a weak man to all; and so little he prevailed, that immediately after Sermon the Judges repairing to their usual place of sitting, whither the Lord Commissioner came presently and tendered them the said Confession, all of them, except four who were known to be of the false stamp, did swear to it and subscribe it, the number of the Judges in all being twenty.

And here we desire the Reader to observe, whether these men shall not be accounted a Faction, and not a Body of a Kingdom, when they shall separate themselves from the King who is their Sovereign; from the body of his Council, who have the supreme Government of the Kingdom under the King; and from the body of the Judges, who are the Interpreters of the Laws, and under his Majesty the supreme Judges of all their Estates and Fortunes, these two Judicatories, together with the Judges in Criminal Causes, being under the King by the Laws constituted the only Judges of all their actions? For if these Covenanters shall ascribe unto themselves the Government, because they are more in number than those who dissent from them, then certainly in all Kingdoms and Republics, the established Government must go down; for in them all, they who are ruled and governed are far more than the Rulers and Governours.

They then seeing that their fierce endeavours were fruitless with the Lords of the Session, with all speed dispatched some of their Tables throughout all parts of the Kingdom, to stop the subscription to the Confession of Faith commanded by the King, with Copies of their Protestation to be read in all places, where the Lord Commissioner should either proclaim the Declaration, or require subscription to that Confession: In many places they prevailed, in many not; Where they prevailed, they used such indirect and violent courses, as they gained an assent from many mens mouthes, whose minds were very far from it. In Glasgow, after that the Lord Lowdan, with divers others, Noble-men, Gentlemen, and Ministers, sent (as they pretended) from the Tables at Edenburgh, had caused to be read that infamous Libel (of which you shall hear afterwards) against the Archbishop of Glasgow in his own Cathedral Church, without the knowledge of the Magistrates of that City; the Lord Lowdan desired the Provost of Glasgow to convocate their Town-Council, that he might impart some things unto them; which the Provost refused: But that Lord and his Associates, understanding that their ordinary Church Session sate that afternoon, at which the Magistrates and Ministers were to be present, came suddenly into the place where they did sit, beyond their expectation, where the Lord Lowdan made a Speech of great length, concerning the iniquity and danger of his Majesties Covenant, adjuring them both by perswasions and threatnings, that they would not subscribe the Confession of Faith required by the King; and therefore his demand was, That he might have the assured promises of the Magistrates and Ministers, that they would not subscribe it, that so he might report their answer to the Tables from whence he was sent: To which the Provost presently answered, That his Lordship knew well that the Lord Commissioner had required from them a subscription to the Covenant, that they had humbly intreated of his Grace some short time to return their answer; and therefore he wondred that any man should think it was fit to answer any who was sent from the Tables, before they had made their answer to the Lord Commissioner; and so refusing to give any answer to these Emisaries, from the Tables, they went away unsatisfied.

The Covenanters, finding that his Majesties commanding of the subscription of the Confession of Faith, in many places had given satisfaction, and had indeed confuted that lying scandal of his inclination to Popery, and that many of the Covenanters had remitted much of their former rigour, being much taken with his last gracious Proclamation, the Heads and swayers of the four Tables, (as if all their designs were come to the last cast) cast about once again, and laboured hard to work the people into the belief of this one point, That none of these things promised in the last gracious Proclamation, no not the Assembly it self, were ever intended to be performed by the King; That he only studied to gain time, until he were ready for their ruin; and therefore they gave out, that the Lord Commissioners late coming from Hamilton to Edenburgh was only to Prorogue the Assembly. They spent daies and nights in penning a Protestation against it, and writing multitudes of Copies to be ready in all places of the Kingdom, before the Proclamations of the Prorogation should arrive. They sent for all their Party to flock to Edenburgh, as if now there were greater danger than ever: All which was carried with notable hypocrisie; for the Authors of this report did disperse it, not that they did believe it to be true, but because it was conducive to their ends to have the people believe it.

But knowing that they who do act long parts, must needs sometimes be out, and that the time of the Assembly beginning to approach, and the Commissioners provisions and preparations for his Journey to Glasgow, were far stronger proofs to the people of the Kings holding the Assembly, than all which they had surmised to the contrary, they then betook themselves to their last shift, which was a miserable and wicked one, and it was this: Since they were perswaded that the Assembly indicted by the King would now hold if they could not divert it, they resolved to take such courses, as they conceived the Commissioner neither could nor would endure; with which they did conceive they should so irritate him, that he could not chuse but either discharge or prorogue the Assembly. For two things now they feared: First, that they had committed a great error in Petitioning the King for an Assembly, which they conceived was fully in their own power to indict; and therefore did begin to think, that by that act they had weakned their own power and claim, and supposed, that it had been more agreeable to their designs, if they had indicted one themselves, being the title which they meant to stand to, as appeareth by their own indictment of a new Assembly, since the dissolution of this. Secondly, they were afraid of nothing more than this, that the Lord Commissioners propounding and passing into Acts of Assembly, all the particulars of the King's grace and favour contained in his last Proclamation, would abundantly satisfy the greatest part of their own Party, when they should see the grounds of their fears of innovations in Religion removed, which occasioned them to enter into the late Covenant: But now, if the Lord Commissioner could be forced any way, either to Prorogue or discharge this Assembly indicted by the King, that then they would presently indict one themselves, which they were sure the King would not countenance with any Commissioner from him; by which means they were both secured from having their Party weakned by the propounding in Assembly his Majesties gracious offers expressed in his last Declaration, and were certainly perswaded, that they should easily induce the people to believe, that these things promised in that Declaration were never intended by the King.

To compass therefore their desires of the Lord Commissioners either Proroguing or discharging the Assembly, they resolved to increase their disorders to such a height, as they hoped he would never endure them; and to multiply so many affronts upon him, and in him upon his Majesty and his Authority, as they imagined should be past all sufferance: As first, by their Letters directed from their Tables at Edenburgh, they quarrelled with the Lord Commissioner, that the Confession and Covenant was commanded to be subscribed in many parts of the Kingdom by the Authority of the King and his Council, with an unbecoming violence: The Copy of their Letter to the Lord Commissioner, being then at Hamilton, here followeth:

Please your Grace,

WE were glad of the indiction of an Assembly as the meane to bring our complaints to an end: And as we promised for our part to do our endeavour, that all matters might be carried in a peaceable way, and no man troubled in any sort till that time, so did we certainly expect that no violence or molestation should have been used against any of those who had subscribed the late Covenant: and yet, far contrary to our expectation, are brought hither almost every hour grievous complaints from many of the people, in divers parts of the Kingdom, That they are by the threatnings and open violence of some Statesmen, Councillours, and Barons, constrained to subscribe a Confession of Faith, and Band; some with blind and doubting minds, and others against their Consciences, to the great trouble of their Souls, and great disturbance of the Peace of the Country, contrary to such peaceable preparations as should have preceded a perfite pacification at a General Assembly. If we had heard but some complaints of this kind, we would have spared both your Graces pains and our own, but complaints being multiplied more and more, we could not of duty but make some representation thereof to your Grace, that some course may be taken for present suppressing this so irreligious and unjust manner of doing; and for preventing the hard consequences that may ensue from people who are thus pressed to subscribe against their minds, and from others who are joined in Covenant with them; which, as it is humbly Petitioned, so it is confidently expected by

THe complaint contained in this Letter did afterward prove to be most unjust; and yet it was dispersed through the Kingdom with horrible and most false aggravations, viz. That some of the Council with charged Pistols and drawn Daggers held to the breasts of the Kings Subjects, had forced them to subscribe the Covenant: To this their Letter the Lord Commissioner returned an answer, though not to their Table, because he would not acknowledge it, yet to that Noble-man, whose hand was first at it: The Copy of which answer is this:

My very good Lord,

I Have received from your Lordship, and other Noble-men, a Letter, containing a Complaint against the violence offered to divers of his Majesties Subjects, by States-men, Councillours, and others; and that Complaint aggravated by your promising and undertaking, for your self and all your adherents, that no man should be troubled till the General Assembly; and your just expectation that the same course should have been held on the other side by us.

For the former, I know not what States-men, Noble-men or Barons your Lordship means; for naming none, I know not to whom I shall take my self; nor do I know what violence and threatnings you mean: If you mean his Majesties Commissioners appointed by the King, they requiring his Subjects to subscribe the old Confession and Covenant, by his Authority now renewed, and remonstrating unto them the danger they incur by Law in not obeying his Majesties commandment, I hope that cannot be called violence but duty, the omission whereof, must needs be a violation of, and violence offered to his Majesties Sacred Authority: If other violences and threatnings they have used, as your Lordship seemeth to intimate (for their obedience to his Majesties just Authority, I am sure, your Lordship will not call violence) they must answer for it, and shall whensoever your Lordship shall make known the delinquents. But, alas! my Lords, Tell me now in good earnest whether you have heard they have used such violence in perswading this Covenant, as hath been used by your adherents in enforcing of yours? Hath the blood of God's Servants, his holy Ministers, been shed, which blood I am afraid keepeth the vengeance of God still hanging over this Land? Have men been beaten, turned out of their livings and maintenance, reviled and Excommunicated in the Pulpits, and a thousand more out-rages acted upon them, for not subscribing this Covenant? Have none who have subscribed your Covenant, done it with blind and doubting minds? If they have, I beseech your Lordship not to call his Majesties Councillours legal proceedings, irreligious and unjust, until you have proved the piety and justice of the proceedings of your own adherents.

For the other, of your undertaking and promising for your parts, that no man should be troubled till the Assembly, and expecting the like from us, truly I am glad I have it under your Lordships hands; for I think there are few hours of any one day, since the indicting of the Assembly, that from all parts of this Kingdom, I am not vexed with Complaints of new processing of Ministers, new withholding of Ministers stipends unprocessed, heavy Complaints of Ministers of your own Covenant, that they are threatened, and that sharply and bitterly, for their declaring of their grief, in being barred of their freedom in the Election of their own Commissioners to the General Assembly, and being borne down by the multitude of Lay-voices, and menaced because of their protesting against the same: The Complaints of Ministers Non-Covenanters and Lay-Elders Non-Covenanters, chosen by their Sessions to assist at the Election of the Commissioners, from the Presbyteries, but turned back, for not having subscribing your Covenant, and reviled with bitter words, for being so pert as to come thither; is this the performance of promising, that no man shall be troubled till the Assembly? These are, indeed, preparations very unfit to precede this Assembly, they being so unpeaceable and like to take up much time, in discussing at that great Meeting the illegality of these Elections. My Lord, the truth is, I shall be as careful to see any wrong offered by his Majesties Commissioners (in urging his Majesties Authority) punished, when I shall know the offences and the offenders, as I am heartily grieved at the proceedings of your Associates: Here I am sure, his Majesties Commissioners have been rather backward than forward, but so have not your Lordships adherents been; for they have in very many places proclaimed your Protestation, where his Majesties Declaration hath not been Proclaimed. I hope your Lordship will pardon my unusual prolixity; for I confess I am much troubled to see his Majesties good Subjects led into such misconstructions of his pious and religious intentions towards them. This my Letter, I pray your Lordship to communicate to the other Noble Lords, who subscribed that to me. To your self and them, I pray your Lordship commend the true respects of

For the Earl of Cassils.

THis Letter it seems gave them no satisfaction, for they still continued their Reports: Besides, they had the boldness by another Letter from the same Tables sent likewise to the Lord Commissioner, being then at Hamilton, to expostulate with him, that one of the King's Ships at Sea had searched a Scottish Merchants Ship for Ammunition; when as they themselves before had searched a Merchants Ship for some Ammunition, which the King had sent for Scotland, and would have seized upon it, if they had not been prevented; and immediately after, a little English Vessel carrying Beer to some part of that Kingdom, was likewise stayed and searched by them. In the same Letter they quarrel with the Lord Commissioner, for hindering the bringing of Horses from England thither; which is unlawful for any one to do, without a special licence from the Master of the King's Horse. The Copy of their Letter, filled with their ordinary pretences of Religion, and the Lord Commissioners Answer unto it, be these.

Please your Grace,

After your parting from us, we had knowledge from John Wilfon Skipper, and sundry of his Passengers newly arrived, That being at Sea on his way from Holland hither, one of his Majesties small Ships of eight Pieces, came aboard and searched him for Arms and Ammunition, declaring they did the same by his Majesties Warrant. We do not so much value the hazard of any prejudice, as we are heartily grieved to find any such note of his Majesties displeasure, differencing us from his other Subjects, when our own hearts, and the Lord that searcheth them, doth bear witness of our loyalty and affection to his Majesty, especially to have found it now when we are made so secure, both by the hopes of obtaining from his Majesties favour, by your mediation, these ordinary and publick remedies that can fully settle this Church and State, and by assurance from your Grace we should find no such hard dealing, during the time of your employment amongst the Subjects here, who trust in your care to prevent speedily the inconvenience of this, as you did in that other late particular anent the arrest of our Horses in England. We think this Advertisement sufficient to your Grace, who is wounded through our sides if we suffer any thing in this time, being so far interessed to vindicate us from such prejudice, who do acknowledge our selves to be

My Lord,

I Have received a Letter this day signed by your Lordship and sundry other Noblemen, making mention, that one John Wilfon Skipper, being on his way from Holland hither, was searched by one of his Majesties small Ships. This is no new nor unaccustomed thing; for commonly the Captains of his Majesties Ships during the time of being at Sea, do take notice what the loadings of all such Ships are, as they meet with, who trade in the Channel; it being a Prerogative that belongs to his Imperial Crown: I am persuaded that your Lordship and the rest of my Lords cannot think, but if his Majesty had been desirous to have made stop of importation of Ammunition into this Kingdom this time past, but it would have been an easie matter for him to have effected; but so little hath he regarded this, as he hath not so much as taken notice of it: And yet it were no strange thing, if his Majesty should give directions to cause examine for what end so great store of Ammunition is imported into this Kingdom, and a little more narrowly to look into our actions; when, by I know not whom, there hath been so much notice taken of such Ammunition, as his Majesty hath thought fit to send hither. For notwithstanding that your Lordship says we are made secure by the hopes of obtaining from his Majesty these remedies that can fully settle this Church and State, yet I may say courses are taken to put fears in his Majesties good Subjects minds, by perswading of them that no such thing is intended: This does too too manifestly appear by the watching and guarding his Majesties Castle, and many other courses; but of this I will write nothing, my intention being only to return answer of what is writ to me: And therefore for your Lordships satisfaction I shall acquaint his Majesty with the contents of your Letters, who will no doubt give such directions therein, as his good Subjects will have no just cause of complaint: Whereas you have been pleased to say, that you have been assured by me, that you should receive no such hard dealing, during the time of my employment; let me desire you to consider this aright, and you will find it none; for neither was that Ship stayed from proceeding in their intended Voyage, nor any thing taken from them: Nor needs your Lordship to doubt that his Majesty will do any thing (except our own indiscretion provoke him) that may make appear to the World that he makes a difference betwixt us of this Nation and his other Subjects. Be confident, my Lord, that my endeavours have, and do tend to no other end, but to the glory of God, the honour of his Sacred Majesty, and the preserving from ruine this poor distracted Kingdom; and that I have and shall labour to prevent all such Accidents as may breed the least stop or hindrance of this wished event, which I hope and am confident that your Lordship and all those noble Lords who have signed this Letter to me, will take the same to heart; and then certainly you will not be so easily moved with such light and sleight reports: Nor will your Lordship think that either you or I can be wounded by the order and command of so pious, merciful, and so clement a Prince as is our dread Sovereign, who hath shewn himself to be so full of goodness, as we must of all men living prove the worst, if we be not thankful to God, and him for it: This my Letter your Lordship will be pleased to communicate to the rest who have writ to me, and esteem of me as

With his Answer they were so far from being satisfied, that to answer this affront (as they did interpret it) for searching a Ship of that Kingdom at Sea, they resolved to put a greater affront upon the King, by increasing their Guards about the Castle of Edenburgh. In Fife they gave order for a Communion throughout their Churches, at which they made every one to swear that they should not subscribe the Confession and Covenant, nor any other but their own, which they swore again de novo; especially to stand to that part of it which concerneth mutual defence against all persons whomsoever. They gave general order for the Fast to be kept on the fourth of November, being Sunday, neglecting the day designed in the King's Proclamation, which was the Wednesday following, and the seventh of that Month.

The Lord Commissioner seeing these contempts daily to increase, and hearing that they had appointed the Communion to be celebrated at Edenburgh, sent for the Provost and Magistrates, and inquired of them these particulars: First, whether at their Communion (which was to be celebrated the two next Sundays following) it was intended that the like Oath should be taken with them, as had been taken in Fife? Secondly, whether they intended to keep the Fast-day designed by his Majesty in his Proclamation, and according as they had lately since been required to do, by an order sent from the Council to them for that purpose? Thirdly, what order they had taken with those, who had the day before reviled and abused Dr. Eliot while he was preaching in the Pulpit? That he had sent for them, because he had found those few Ministers, by whom they were ruled, to be unreasonable men, and despisers of Authority. To the last, they promised that they would make a discovery of the Offenders, and see them punished; which they never did. For the first, they thought it most unreasonable that any Oath should be ministered as it was in Fife. For the second, they thought it most reasonable that the Fast-day should be kept, but before they could give a full answer, they must first confer with their Ministers; at their meeting with whom, they found that the Ministers had intended that barbarous Oath at the Communion, and not to keep the King's Fast-day more than other Churches in the Country had done: Yet the Magistrates did with much persuasions over-rule them in both. The Lord Commissioner did resolve with great solemnity, attended with all the Council and Judges, to keep that Fast in the great Church of Edenburgh, on the day appointed by the King, and gave notice thereof to the Magistrates; who returned him thanks, and assurance of welcome; but understanding that they were resolved to discharge the ordinary Ministers of that Church, from preaching there that day, only because they were Non-covenanters, and had appointed their places to be supplied with the two only Covenanting Ministers of their Town, he sent for the Magistrates again, telling him, That he could not come to their Church, and countenance so great a disorder as the displacing of the two Preachers of that Church, only because they were faithful Subjects to the King; nor durst hear these two Preachers designed by them, who in their Pulpits did ordinarily inveigh against the King and his Authority; unless therefore he might either nominate the Preachers, or hear the ordinary Preachers of that Church, he must not come thither. The Magistrates did what they could to persuade with their Ministers; the one of them was contented with the Lord Commissioners desire, but the other was so obstinate, as he would no way hearken to it; and him (being so powerful with the People) the Magistrates durst not offend: And so the Lord Commissioner, with the Council and Judges, were necessitated to keep the Fast at another Church hard by the Palace. Now we desire the Reader to observe, how the Heads of the Covenanters were afraid that any show of obedience should be yielded unto the King by the People in the least point, they having ordered, that in most places of the Kingdom, the day designed by his Majesty for the Fast should not be observed; certainly, only because it was commanded by him, as being unwilling that his Majesty (whom they had given out to the People for an Innovator in Religion, and an Introducer of Popery) should be thought by them to have any care of so religious an exercise as a solemn Fast: And how that in Edenburgh, though the Magistrates by their earnest intreaty had procured the observation of it, yet they could not obtain it without putting a special affront upon Authority, by displacing of those Ministers who had continued in loyalty and obedience to his Majesty.

But these were nothing to their other violences, whereby they would have the Lord Commissioner take notice, that it was impossible their proceedings at the Assembly should be pleasing unto his Majesty: For not only in many of their Pulpits did they preach, That whosoever subscribed this Covenant, were perjured and villains, but when some affirmed the contrary, and reproved the Preachers for such furious Speeches, after their Sermon was ended, they were cited before their Presbyteries for so doing, and threatened with Excommunication: Nay, more than so, there were few Ministers of the Kingdom, not Subscribers of their Covenant, whom they did not presently process and cite before their several Presbyteries; and notwithstanding their Appeals to the General Assembly then approaching, yet they would not shew so much patience, but proceeded to present, most illegal, and unwarrantable suspending of them, and other censures, as best pleased them; which being complained of to the Lord Commissioner & Council, could find no redress, although they sent many times to the Covenanters, requiring them to forbear all such unjust proceedings, and to refer the trial of these oppressed Ministers causes to the General Assembly, which was now at hand.

None were so insolent as the Presbytery of Edenburgh; for they presently put very many of their Ministers under process: They begun with one Master David Michell Minister of Edenburgh; the Lord Commissioner wrote earnestly to that Presbytery, to forbear proceeding against him until the Assembly, to the which he had appealed, and where his cause might have a full and fair trial; which they not only most unjustly rejected, but were so unmannerly, as they did not vouchsafe to answer his Letter, either by Message or otherwise: The next Presbytery day he wrote to them again to the same purpose, but with the like success; for they proceeded without taking notice of his Letter, or returning any answer to it, although in that second Letter he had desired them, either to delay their proceedings that day, or else to send one or more of their number to him, (being then hard by at the Palace of Holy-rood-house) who might shew him him some reason why they could not stay so long as until the Assembly, which was now so near approaching. The Lord Commissioner wondring at this contempt, by the advice of some of the principal Lords of the Council, sent for an Officer of the Council, and directed him to them with an ordinary warrant drawn up in an ordinary form by the Clerk of the Council, requiring them in the King's Name, under pain of his high displeasure, and as they would answer the contrary at their utmost peril, to desist from any further proceeding in that cause until the General Assembly; to which the Defendant had appealed, and which was to begin within fourteen days: This Warrant was delivered unto them by the Officer of the Council, in whose audience it was read, and when he required an Answer to it, yet received none, but in highest contempt of his Majesties Crown, Dignity, and Royal Commandment, and against all Rules of Justice (the Appellants appeal to the superiour Court of a General Assembly, legally depending) for Doctrines preached by him four year since at least, and the Witnesses being all Lay-men, who (besides their no extraordinary memory for such a time as was laid) were men of such mean and ordinary understanding, as that it was improbable, if not impossible, that they should understand the Doctrines wherewith he was charged; and some of them being uncontroverted, and such as are generally received by all Protestant Churches in the World; they presently suspended him, and discharged him from the place of his Ministry; and afterward, to make their contempt the greater, sent down three of their number to tell the Lord Commissioner that they had done so, who offered to shew him Reasons for their so doing: But the Lord Commissioner told them, That since they were not pleased to shew him their Reasons before their Sentence as he required, he would not hear their Reasons after their Sentence as they desired. But to let pass this and many more their such unjust proceedings, against those Ministers which continued in his Majesties obedience, in all places of the Kingdom, even when the Assembly was ready to begin, notwithstanding these Ministers legal Appeals thereunto, we shall desire the Reader to observe their proceedings in one Process, which certainly was framed and pursued with such malice, injustice, falshood, and scandal, not only to the Reformed Religion in particular, but to the Christian Religion in general, as it cannot be parallel'd by any President of Injustice in precedent Ages, nor ('tis to be hoped) shall ever be followed in future, and which if it were known amongst Turks, Pagans, or Infidels, would make them abhor the Christian Religion, if they did think it would either countenance or could consist with such abominable impiety and injustice.

It is their Process against all and every one of the Archbishops and Bishops of that Kingdom: The Covenanters did indeed first desire the Lord Commissioner, in his own name, and as he was his Majesties Commissioner, to grant out Process against the Archbishops and Bishops, and thereby to cite them to appear as rei, or guilty persons: To whom he returned this fair Answer, That he did not hold it fit to cite them as guilty, of whose guiltiness he had no presumptions; and besides that he would be loth to do an act which should void, according to their grounds, both the Prelates places and voices in the Assembly, they having laid it down for a Rule (though it were a false one) that parties cited can have no suffrage there; yet if either by the Law or Practice of that Kingdom, the King's Commissioner or Commissioners did use to grant out any such Process, he would not refuse it, being resolved to concur with them in any course of Justice: But he hoped that they would not make the King his Master, or himself, do any act prejudicial to the Bishops, their place and government, before they were heard, and that in the mean time for their satisfaction he would advise with some of the Judges and his Majesties Advocate, whether any such Process was awardable, or had usually been awarded by his Majesties Royal Father's Commissioners to the General Assembly, and according to their advice he would do that which should be agreeable to Justice. From this Answer of the Lord Commissioner, they expected no satisfaction to their desire; for they themselves did know as well as any Judge or Advocate in the Kingdom, that no Commissioner either could award, or ever had awarded any such Process as they required: And therefore they moved the Lord Commissioner once again, that he would require the Judges or Lords of the Session to grant out such Process; with which Request, when the Lord Commissioner made the Judges acquainted, they returned him that Answer which the Covenanters knew very well they could not chuse but make, viz. That they could grant out no Process for the compearance of any persons before them, but those who were impleaded, and whose Causes were triable before them. The truth is, the Lord Commissioner found by their inquiry, and the Covenanters knew it perfectly well, that the ordinary way of Process or Citation to a General Assembly was to pass it under the hand of the Clerk of the Assembly, whose Office is during life, if he be not legally removed, and usually too under the hand of him who was Moderator at the last General Assembly; both which were then living, and are so still: The name of the Clerk of the Assembly being Master James Sandelands, an Advocate and Commissary of Aberdene, and the Moderator of the last Assembly, being the now Archbishop of St. Andrews: But they who had all this while gone on in disorderly, illegal, and unjustifiable ways, belike thought it an incongruity to keep the beaten Path and Tract of Justice in any thing, and therefore they fell and resolved upon a way so unlike Justice, so repugnant to Religion and common Honesty, as one would wonder how they hit upon it, having neither Law nor Practice for it, which was this, They caused to be drawn up a most false, odious, and scandalous Libel against the Archbishops and Bishops, with a Petition annexed, to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, wherein they desired the Libel to be admitted by them; the Copy whereof, as it was exhibited by them to the said Presbytery, and afterward publicly read in all the Pulpits thereof, here followeth; which his Majesty wished out of his love to the Christian Religion might never come to the notice of any Pagan, and out of his love to the Religion Reformed, he wished might never come to the notice of any Papist: But it cannot be concealed.

WE, for our ſelves, and in name and behalf of the reſt of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burgeſſes, Miniſters, and Commons within this Realm of Scotland, Subſcribers of the Covenant, (who are not choſen Commiſſioners to the General Aſſembly, but) who will aſſiſt and inſiſt in this Complaint with us, as faithful Chriſtians, as loyal Subjects, and ſenſible Members of this Church and Common-weal, having intereſt to purſue this popular action, in a ſpecial manner and an eminent degree, by which perſe- God may be glorified, Chriſt's Kingdom advanced, that the Church may be reſtored to her privileges and liberties, and freed from manifold ſcandals, from the corrupters of Doctrine with Popery and Arminianiſm, of the Sacraments with Superſtition and Will-worſhip, and of the Diſcipline with Tyranny, and from the overthrowers of the peace of this Church and Kingdom by their uſurpations and lies, their violent humours, and falſhood for their own worldly ends, may be tried and cenſured accordingly, and ſo this Church and State made free from the preſent diviſions and combuſtions, and reſtored to peace and unity, both with God and amongſt themſelves, and that his Maſteſties religious diſpoſition and honour may be cleared to all the world, by the trial and cenſure of thoſe men who have fraudulently abuſed his Maſteſties Name and Authority by their truſt and credit with his Maſteſty: We moſt earneſtly make requeſt, That whereas by the Laws of this Church and Kingdom, and by his Maſteſties laſt Proclamation, all his Maſteſties Subjects, whether Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, of whatſoever title or degree, if they have exerciſed an unlimited or unwarrantable power, They are declared and ordained to be liable to the trial and cenſure of the General Aſſembly and Parliament, or to any other Judicatory, according to the nature and quality of the offence. And whereas Maſter David Lyndſey pretended Biſhop of Edinburgh, Maſter Thomas Sydeſerſe pretended Biſhop of Galloway, Maſter Walter Whiteford pretended Biſhop of Breichen, Maſter James Wedderburne pretended Biſhop of Dunblane, Maſter James Fairly pretended Biſhop of Argyll, Maſter John Spotswood pretended Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, (having their reſidences or dwelling places within the bounds of this Preſbytery of Edinburgh,) Maſter Patrick Lyndſey pretended Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, Mr. Alexander Lyndſey pretended Biſhop of Dunkell, Maſter Adam Bannatine pretended Biſhop of Aberdene, Maſter John Guherie pretended Biſhop of Murray, Maſter John Maxwell pretended Biſhop of Roſſe, Maſter George Grene pretended Biſhop of Orkney, Maſter John Abernethie pretended Biſhop of Caithneſſe, Maſter Neil Cambel pretended Biſhop of the Iles, ſhould be tried and cenſured for their unlimited and unwarranted power.

For whereas it was provided in the Cautions agreed upon in the General Aſſembly holden at Montreſe, Anno 1600. for bounding of the Miniſters Votes in Parliament, and concluded to be inſerted in the Body of the Act of Parliament, for confirmation of this Vote as a moſt neceſſary and ſubſtantial Point of the ſame, which was never yet repealed by a lawful Aſſembly, That the Miniſter ſhould ſwear, upon his admiſſion to the Office of Commiſſionary, to ſubſcribe and fulfil the Cautions agreed upon under the penalties expreſſed therein, otherwiſe he was not to be admitted; yet the ſaid Maſter David Lyndſey, ſometimes Miniſter of Breichen, now pretended Biſhop of this this Diocess of Edenburgh, and pretended Moderator of this Presbytery, with his foresaid Colleagues, the pretended Bishops and Archbishops of this Church respective, have taken upon them (without craving or obtaining Commission from the Church as it is set down in that Assembly at Montross) the office and power to vote in Parliament, without swearing at his or their entrances to subscribe and fulfill those Cautions which are set down under Penalties.

In the first Caution it was provided, that he presume not to propound in Parliament, in Council or Convention, any thing in the name of the Church without an exprels Warrant or Direction from the Church, under the pain of deposition from his Office; and that he should neither give consent unto, nor keep silence from any thing (amidst these Meetings) that might be prejudicial to the liberty of the Church, under the said pain.

But the forenamed Mr. David Lindsey pretended Bishop of Edenburgh, with the rest of his Colleagues respective above named, have presumed (having no Warrant nor Direction from the Church) to propound in Parliament, and to consent to several Acts which have past in Parliament, to the prejudice of the Church; as namely, To the Act concerning the restitution of the State of Bishops, Anno 1606. the Act concerning the Chapter of St. Andrew's, Anno 1607. To the Act of Commissariots and Jurisdictions given to Archbishops and Bishops, Anno 1609. To the ratification of the Act agreed upon in the Assembly of Glasgow, Anno 1610. with an Explanation, contrary to the meaning and tenor of the said conclusions, Anno 1612. To the Acts concerning the Elections of Archbishops and Bishops, and to the Acts concerning the Restitution of Chapters, Anno 1617. To the ratification of the five Articles of Perth, Anno 1621. To the Act concerning the Apparel of Church-men, and to the Ratification of the Acts concerning Religion, in which all the former Acts are included, Anno 1633. and to many other several Acts of this kind. In like manner he propounded and gave consent to several Acts of the Privy-Council, for the establishing of it, and of the power of the High Commission, which are against the Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom; and for Ratification of several Acts and Sentences given out by them and their Colleagues in that unwarrantable Judiciary: for in the same manner did he propound and consent unto the Acts made in the Privy-Council for pressing and bringing in of the Service-Book, which would have trod under-foot the frame of God's publick Worship in this Kingdom, if the Lord had not prevented it. And further, in the last Convention of the States holden in the years 1625. and 1629. he did not only keep silence, but propound and give consent to some things which were prejudicial to the liberties of this Church, and he did oppose himself to the just desires and grievances which were presented in the name of the Church for some of her liberties and priviledges: whereas it was provided that he shall be bound upon each general Assembly to give an account of the discharge of his Commission since the Assembly going before, and should submit himself to the censure of the Assembly, and stand to the determinations of it without farther Appeal, and should Sue for and obtain Ratification of his carriage from the Assembly, under the pain of Infamy and Excommunication; but the said Mr. David Lind- sey, and his Colleagues respective above-named, have never given an account of the discharge of his or their Commissions, nor sought nor have obtained Ratification of his or their doings from the Assembly.

Whereas it was provided in the third Caution, that he should content himself with that portion of the Benefice which should be assigned to him from his Majesty for his livelihood, not hurting or prejudging the rest of the Ministers, or any Minister whatsoever, planted or to be planted within his Benefice, and that this clause was to be inserted in his provision: Besides, when Bishops were charged in the Assembly holden in Octob. Anno 1578. to quit the corruptions of that State, there was numbred amongst the corruptions, That they received for the maintaining of their Ambition and Riot, the Emoluments of the Church, which might sustain many Pastors, the Schools and the Poor; but the said Mr. David Lindsey with his Colleagues respective, have took provision for their Benefices, and the foresaid clause was not inserted; and he and they have prejudged Ministers, Schools, and the Poor, by taking and enjoying plurality of Benefices.

Whereas it was provided in the fourth Caution that he should not dilapidate nor make a disposition of his Benefice without the consent of his Majesty and the General Assembly; and for the greater warrant of this, That he should interdict himself to the general Assembly not to dilapidate, nor to give consent to the dilapidation of his Benefice made by others, and that he should be contented that an Inhibition should be raised upon him to that purpose; but the said Mr. David Lindsey, with his Colleagues respective, have set, and take settled patronages.

Whereas in the fifth Caution it is provided that he should be bound to attend his particular Congregation faithfully in all the points of a Pastor; and that he shall be subject to the Trial and Censure of his own Presbytery and Provincial Assembly, as another Minister that bears no Commission: In like manner by divers Acts and Constitutions of the General Assemblies and Presbyteries, Non-residents are punishable by deprivation; Yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have been Non-resident from his and their charges for many years; nor have they performed the duties of Pastors by Preaching, Administration of the Sacraments, visiting the sick, &c. but they have deserted their charges by the space now of many years; neither have they in this subjected themselves to the trial of the Presbyteries and Provincial Assemblies.

That whereas in the sixth Caution it was provided, That in the Administration of Discipline, Collation of Benefices, Visitation, and all other points of Ecclesiastical Government, he shall neither usurp nor acclaim to himself a power or jurisdiction further over the rest of his Brethren under the pain of deprivation: and in case he usurp upon the Ecclesiastical Government, if the Synodal Presbyteries, or General Assemblies did oppose, or make impediment unto him; whatsoever he did in that case should be ipso facto null, without a declarator; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with his Colleagues respective, have usurped a jurisdiction in the Administration of Discipline, Collation of Benefices, Visitation, and other points of Ecclesiastical Government, without a lawful Warrant from the Church, in exercising power to suspend, deprive, command, and inhibit Excommunication at their pleasure, to fine, confine, imimprison, banish Ministers, and other Professors without the warrant of the Laws of the Country; appointing their Moderators over Presbyteries and Synods, prorogating their Diets, staying their proceedings against Papists, Sorcerers, Adulterers, and other gross Offenders, by exacting Contributions to such Commissioners as he pleased to send to Court for his own and his Colleagues affairs; by depriving, and ordaining of Ministers, not only without the consent of the Presbyteries and Synods, but by ordaining of scandalous and unqualified Ministers, and depriving of learned and religious Pastors; by ordaining Ministers after a form not allowed of in this Church; by silencing Ministers for not reading the Service-Book, and Book of Canons; by interdicting after a Popish manner, the exercises of Morning and Evening Prayer in their Churches; by releasing of Excommunicated Papists; by contradicting and crossing the Votes of the Presbyteries at their pleasure; by their pretended negative vote directly contrary to this Caution; by enacting Decrees of Synods without demanding their votes; by changing and falsifying their Acts, when most votes had carried the contrary; by many waies have they failed in this caution, which are so notorious to the whole Church and to your Wisdoms, that we shall condescend upon the same when we are required.

Whereas in the seventh Caution it was provided, That in Presbyteries, and in Provincial and General Assemblies, he shall behave himself in all things, as one of the Brethren of the Presbytery, and be subject to their censure; yet the foresaid Mr. David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, hath not behaved himself as a Brother at these Meetings; he disdains to sit in Presbyteries, or to be subject to their censures; he sitteth and over-ruleth in Provincial Assemblies rather as a Lord than a Moderator; and instead of behaving himself as a Brother in the General Assembly, hath, by threatening and silencing, prejudged the liberties of the lawful Commissioners; when they propounded, reasoned, or concluded matters conducing to the liberty of the Church, he forced them to conclude things contrary.

That whereas it was concluded at Mount Rose, That none of them who should have vote in Parliament should come Commissioners to the General Assembly, or have vote in it in time to come, unless they had Authority or Commission from their own Presbyteries for that purpose; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, though they had no Authority by Commission from any Presbyteries, have usurped to give votes in the last pretended Assemblies.

Whereas in the seventh Chapter of the Book of Policy, registrated in the register of the Acts of the Assembly, it was concluded, That in all Assemblies a Moderator should be chosen by common consent of the whole Brethren assembled together, and it hath been so practised since the beginning of the Reformation, till he and his Fellows began to break the Cautions; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have usurped the place of moderation in the last pretended Assemblies, and rather domineered than moderated, to bring in novations; yea further, have directed Mandats from themselves as from the representative Church of Scotland, which name and power is only competent to General Assemblies; he hath brought in the practice of many Innovations in the Royal Chapel, in the Abbey Church, and his pretended Cathedral; he hath laboured not only to hinder the ordinary Meetings of General Assemblies of this Church, by obtaining Letters and charge from Authority to that purpose, but also hath laboured, what in him lay, to take away from the Church the priviledge of holding General Assemblies yearly, belonging to Her by the Word of God, Acts of this Church, and Laws of this Kingdom.

Whereas it is provided by another Caution, That Crimen ambitus shall be a sufficient cause of deprivation of him that shall have vote in Parliament; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with is foresaid Colleagues respective, are guilty of the said crime, in seeking of the said Offices, and promising and giving good deeds for them.

Whereas it was provided by the Book of Discipline, and Acts of the Assembly, Feb. An. 1569. and December 1565. and 1567. that marriage should not be solemnized without asking of Banes three several Sabbath daies before; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey and his foresaid Colleagues respective, have given licence to sundry Ministers to solemnize Marriage without asking three several Sabbaths before; upon which have followed divers inconveniences; a man hath been Married to a Woman her Husband being alive; and they not Divorced; some have been Married to persons with whom they have committed Adultery before, and some have been Married without the consent or knowledge of their Parents.

Whereas by the Book of Fasting, authorized by the General Assembly, and prefixed before the Psalms, no set or yearly Fast is allowed, but disallowed, as contrary to the liberty of the Church, and to the nature of the exercise (a Fast;) yet the said Mr. David Lindsey and his foresaid Colleagues respective, have appointed yearly Fast, and troubled some godly Professors for not observing the same.

Whereas the Office of a Deacon is set forth in the Book of Discipline, and Book of common order before the Psalms, according to the Word of God, to have no meddling with the Preaching of the Word, or the Ministration of the Sacraments, and by the first Confession of Faith ratified in the Acts of Parliament, Chapter 23. Ministers called unto particuar flocks have only power of the Ministration of the Sacraments; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have given a power to certain Divines whom they make Deacons (men not admitted to the calling of the Ministry) to Administer the Sacrament of Baptism, under the names and titles of Preaching Deacons, and they refuse to admit diverse men to the calling of the Ministry before they be admitted to that Order.

Whereas it is ordained by the Book of Policy, and Acts of the Assembly, that no man should receive Ordination to the Ministry without a present admission to a particular flock; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have separated the Act of Ordination from the Act of Admission.

Whereas according to the established order of the Church, and the Acts of the Assembly, the Ordination and Admission of Ministers should be publick, in the presence and with the consent of the Congregation; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have given Ordination to some men in other places, not in their own Congregation; and violent-ly ly have thrust upon them scandalous Ministers.

Whereas Ministers who teach erroneous and corrupt Doctrine should be censured by the Book of Discipline, and by the Acts of the Assembly, yet the said Mr. David Lindsey and his-foresaid Colleagues respective, have taught erroneous and corrupt Doctrine themselves, and by their pretended power have preferred to the Ministry men who have taught erroneous Doctrine against the Confession of Faith, and Acts of Parliament quoted in our Covenant; and they cherish and maintain them who teach Arminianism and Popery; as, conditional Election; Free-will; resistibility of effectual Grace; The universality of Christ's death; The merit of it in Heaven and in Hell; a final Apostacy of the Saints; The local descent of Christ into Hell; That Christ came into the World clauso Virginis utero; Auricular Confession, and Papal absolution; That the Pope is not Antichrist; That the Church of Rome is a true Church; That Reconciliation with Rome is a thing easie; That the Church of Rome errs not in Fundamentals; and that she differs not in Fundamentals from the reformed Churches; They call in question the imputation of Christ's Righteousness, and they affirm the formal cause of justifying Faith, to consist in our inherent Righteousness; They affirm that there is a local and circumscriptive presence of Christ in the Sacrament, and they change the Sacrament into a Sacrifice, and the Table into an Altar, the Ministers into Priests. There are other damnable and heretical points of Doctrine which they maintain; of which we shall give particular information in our particular accusation of each one of them respective, with the proofs thereof, when we shall be required.

Whereas by the Acts of the Church, no Oaths or Subscriptions should be required from those who enter into the Ministry, but to the Confession of Faith, and to the Book of Policy; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey with his foresaid Colleagues respective, without a Warrant from the Church or Parliament, do exact divers Oaths and Subscriptions from them who enter into the Ministry; namely, That they should both in publick and private Prayers commend the Prelates to God's merciful protection; That they should be subject to the orders which were now in the Church, or by the consent of the Church, that is, by their consent (as they affirm) should be established; as to the Service-Book, and to the Book of Canons. The heaviness of this grievance made the most part of his Majesties Subjects to complain in these Articles, that worthy men which have testimonies of their learning from Universities, and are tried by Presbyteries to be fit for the work of the Ministry, and for their gifts and lives were much desired by the people; yet these men are kept out, because they could not be perswaded to subscribe and swear unto such unlawful Oaths, which have no warrant from the Acts of the Church, nor the Laws of the Kingdom; and they were Articles and Oaths conceived according to their pleasure: and men of little worth, and ready to swear, were for by-respects thrust upon the people, and admitted to the most eminent places of the Church, and of the Schools in Divinity, which breeds continual complaints, and moves the people to run from their own Parish Churches, refusing to receive the Sacrament from the hands of Ministers set over them against their hearts, which makes them not to render unto them that honour which is due from the people to their Pastors; and it is a mighty hinderance to the Gospel, to the souls of the people, and to the peace of this Church and Kingdom. Car. 14.

Whereas in the Assembly holden at Edenburgh, in March, Anno 1578. it was declared that it was neither agreeable to the Word of God, nor to the practice of the Primitive Church, that the Administration of the Word and Sacraments, and the Ministration of Civil and Criminal Justice should be confounded, that one person could supply both the charges, but that a Minister should not be both a Minister and a Senator in the Colledge of Justice. And in the assembly holden in October, Anno 1578. it was reckoned amongst the corruptions of the State of Bishops, which they were charged to forgo, that they should usurp a criminal Jurisdiction, that they should not claim unto themselves the Titles of Lords, that they should only be called by their own names, or Brethren; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey, with his foresaid Colleagues respective, have assumed to themselves the Titles and Honours of Lords, they did sit as Senators in the Colledge of Justice, as Councillors in the Privy Council, as auditors in the Exchequer, and have enjoyed prime Offices of State. The pretended Bishops have usurped the place and precedence before all Temporal Lords, the pretended Archbishops before all the Noble Earls of the Land, and the pretended Primate before the prime Officers of State in the Land.

Whereas by the Word of God and Acts of the Assembly; namely, Anno 1576, 1577, and 1578. no man should be suffered to be a Minister, unless he be tied to a particular Flock and Congregation; and not to be tied to a particular Flock it is condemned as a corruption of the state of Bishops which they were charged to forgo; yet the said Mr. David Lindsey, with his Colleagues respective foresaid, are Ministers, and will not be tied to particular Flocks.

Whereas the Office of a Bishop (as it is now used within this Realm) was condemned by the Book of Policy, and by the Act of the Assembly holden at Dundee, Anno 1580. whereof these are the words; Forasmuch as the Office of a Bishop (as it is now used and commonly taken within this Realm) hath no sure warrant from authority, nor good ground out of the Scriptures, but it is brought in by the folly and corruptions of the inventions of men, to the great hurt of the Church, The whole Assembly of this Church with one voice, after liberty given to all men to reason in the said matter (no man opposing himself to maintain the said pretended Office) do find and declare the said pretended Office, used and termed as is aforesaid, unlawful in it self, as having neither ground nor warrant within the Word of God; and we do ordain that all such persons which do, or shall hereafter, enjoy the said Office, shall be charged simply to dimitt, quit, and leave the same, as an Office unto which they were not called by God; and that they shall leave off all Preaching, Ministration of the Sacraments, or other Offices of Pastors, until such time as they receive admission de novo from the General Assembly, under the pain of Excommunication to be used against them; and if they be found disobedient to contradict this Act in the least point, after due Admonition, the sentence of Excommunication shall be executed against them. And for the better execution of the said Act, it is ordained that a Synodal Assembly 1638. bly shall be holden in every Province (in which usurping Bishops are) 18 August next to come, in which they shall be cited and summoned by the Visitors of the said Countries to compeer before their Synodal Assemblies; as namely, The Archbishop of Saint Andrews to compeer at Saint Andrews, The Bishop of Aberdeen in Aberdeen, The Archbishop of Glasgow in Glasgow, the Bishop of Murray in Elgin, to give obedience to the said Act, which if they refused to do, that the Synodal Assemblies shall appoint certain Brethren of their Presbyteries to give them publick Admonitions out of their Pulpits, and to warn them, if they disobey, to compeer before the next General Assembly to be holden at Edinburgh 20 October, to hear the sentence of Excommunication pronounced against them for their disobedience: And to this Act the Bishop of Dunblane that then was, agreed, submitting himself to be ruled by it: It was also condemned by the Act of Glasgow, Anno 1581. which doth ratifie the former Act of Dundee, and ordains the Book of Policy, which was approved by several General Assemblies to be registered in the Books of the Assembly, and enjoined the general Confession of Faith to be subscribed by all his Majesties Lieges: Yet hath the said Master David Lyndsey with his foresaid Colleagues respectively, not only incroached upon the Liberties of Presbyteries and Synods, but hath also took Consecration to the Office of a Diocesan Bishop, without the knowledge or consent of the Church, and against the Acts of it, claiming the power of Ordination and Jurisdiction, as due to him by that unwarrantable office.

Besides, the said Master David Lyndsey with his foresaid Colleagues respectively, have, against the Laws of the Church and Kingdom, brought in the Service-Book, the Book of Canons, and the High Commission Court, and would have changed and overthrown the whole frame of Doctrine of God's word, the use of the Sacraments, the Discipline, Liberties, and Priviledges of this Church and State, if the Lord had not prevented them: The Particulars we shall present to your Wisdoms, though it be known to all men, how he and they have abused his Majesties Authority against his Royal Intentions and Declarations, they having moved discontents betwixt the King and his Subjects, by scandalous lies betwixt Subject and Subject, for which things Complaints have been given in to the Council, which we hold here to be repeated as a part of our Complaint, and to be tried by your Wisdoms, and referred to the Assembly.

Besides all these faults, the said Master David Lyndsey with his Colleagues respectively, in his life and conversation is slandered constantly as guilty of excessive drinking, whoring, playing at Cards and Dice, swearing, profane speaking, excessive gaming, profaning of the Sabbath, contempt of the publick Ordinances and private Family-Exercises, mocking of the power of preaching, prayer, and spiritual conference, and sincere professors; besides, with bribery, simony, selling of Commissariots places, lies, perjuries, dishonest dealing in civil bargains, abusing of their vassals, and of Adultery, and Incest, with many other offences, of which we shall give the Particulars in our particular Accusations.

Whereas the Presbytery is the ordinary Judicatory of this Church for trying of these Offences, and hath the Ecclesiastical Power for citation of the Parties and Offenders, with the reference of their Complaints to the General Assembly, Therefore we most earnestly and humbly beseech your godly Wisdoms, as you tender the glory of God, the peace and liberty of this Church, the removal of scandals, and punishment of vice, that you will take into your consideration and trial the foresaid many and heinous Offences, with the particular reservations and qualifications of them, which we shall present to your Wisdoms, or to the Assembly, when it shall be thought convenient; and that you would either take order with it your selves, and censure the Offenders, according to the nature of the Offences, with the Ecclesiastical pains contained in the Acts and foresaid Canons of this Church and Kingdom, or else make a reference of them to the General Assembly to be holden at Glasgow, 21 Novemb. and, that the knowledge of these should come to the Delinquents, that you will be pleased to ordain the publishing hereof, to be made by all the Brethren of the Presbytery in their Pulpits upon the Sabbath before noon, with a publick admonition to the Offenders to be present at the Assembly, to answer to this Complaint, and to undergo the censure and trial of it, and to bring with them the Books and Scrouls of Subscriptions and Oaths required from those who enter into the Ministry, with the Books of the High Commission Court, and the Books of the General Assembly, which they or their Clerk had or have fraudulently conveyed away; together with this certification, That if the said Master David Lyndsey, with his foresaid Colleagues respectively, do not appear in the said Assembly, and bring with them the said Books, to answer to this Complaint in general, and to the particular Heads of it, and to submit himself to the trial and proof of this Complaint general, and to the particular Heads of it, that there shall be a condigne censure of these Offenders for their contempt and contumacy: Here we humbly beseech your Wisdoms Answer.

The Act of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, 24 Octob. 1638 year, in Answer to this Complaint.

UPON the said day, we the Brethren of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, after we had received this Bill and Complaint, presented unto us by the Laird of Buchanan, the Laird of Dornie the younger, the Laird of Carberry, John Smith late Bailiff of Edinburgh, John Hamilton, and Richard Maxwell, in name of the Noblemen, Barons, Burghesses, and Commons, Subscribers of the Covenant (which are not Commissioners to the General Assembly) against the pretended Archbishops and Bishops of this Kingdom, and after we had read and seriously considered the same, we according to the desire of the Complainers did and do refer the same to the next General Assembly to be holden at Glasgow, 21 Novemb. And we ordain the publishing of this Complaint, and of our reference of it to the Assembly, to be fully read by all the Pastors of the Presbytery upon the next Sabbath before noon out of the Pulpits, with a publick warning and citation to the Offenders complained upon; by name Master John Spenswood pretended Archbishop of Saint Andrews, Master Patrick Lyndsey pretended Archbishop of Glasgow, Master Thomas Sydserf pretended Bishop of Galloway, Master David Lyndsey pretended Bishop of Edinburgh, Master Alexander Lyndsey pretended Bishop of Dunkeld, Master Adam Bannatine pretended Bishop of Aberdeen, Master John Gutherie pretended Bishop of Murray, Master John Maxwell pretended Bishop of Ross, Master George Greme pretended Bishop of Orkney, Master John Abernethie pretended Bishop of Caithness, Master Walter Whitefoord pretended Bishop of Brechin, Master James Wedderburne pretended Bishop of Dunblane, Master James Fayrley pretended Bishop of Argyle, Master Nail Campbell pretended Bishop of the Isles, to be present at the said Assembly, to answer to this complaint in general, and to the particular Heads of it, to undergo the trial and censure of it, and to bring with them the Books and Scrouls of the Subscriptions and Oaths of them who enter into the Ministry, the Books of the High Commission, and the Book of the General Assembly, which they either had or have fraudulently put away, and if any Pastor within this Presbytery refuse to publish this citation, we require the Reader of the Church to do it. In like manner we require all parties who have interest, either in pursuing, or specifying, or proving this complaint, to be present at the said Assembly for that purpose: Upon which the Complainers took instruments in the hands of the Notary.

According to this complaint, and the warrant of the Presbyteries reference of it, I. A. R. warn and admonish the abovenamed Offenders to compare before the next General Assembly to be holden at Glasgow, Nov. 21. for the causes contained in the Complaint, and for the certification expressed in it.

Now though the very reading of this Libel, cannot choose but work a detestation of it in the heart of every religious and just man, yet the Reader shall do well to take a more special notice of these particular passages of injustice and impiety in it:

First, That the Presbytery of Edinburgh taketh cognisance of the Cause, and accordingly makes citation, not only of the Bishop of Edinburgh, over whom they can have no Jurisdiction, but of all the rest of the Archbishops and Bishops, of which none at all, or certainly if any, very few are inhabitants within the bounds of their Presbytery: And who before this, did ever hear that any Consistory or Judicatory, Ecclesiastical or Civil, could make process against any man, or take cognisance of the Cause of any man, who was not an inhabitant, nor had any charge or estate within the precincts or bounds of those places, which only are liable to the Jurisdiction of that Court?

Next, Who did ever hear that men should willingly and willingly cite others to answer for the transgression of Acts and Laws which they themselves do know were repealed by posterior Acts and Laws, and so stood at the time of this citation, and therefore can no ways be censurable for them, though it were true that the person cited had done as it is alledged in the Libel? And such be these Acts of Assembly cited by them, which were and still are disannulled by divers Acts both of Assembly and Parliament.

Thirdly, Who did ever hear that men should be called in question for yielding obedience to Acts of Parliament and General Assemblies? And yet in this Libel the Prelates are charged with giving voices in Parliament, and practising the five Articles of Perth, and divers other particulars, which then were and are now still in force by Acts both of Parliament and Assembly: And if it should be said that these Acts were unduly obtained (which is the Covenanters only Plea,) sure to say so is a greater fault than the other: For what Judge can ever give sentence in any cause, if the asseveration of the party aggrieved by the sentence, that the Law was unjustly made, may pass for a good Plea?

Fourthly, Who ever heard that men should be charged with yielding obedience to Acts commanded by the Authority of his Majesty and his Council, especially in things not repugnant to any established Law of that Church and Kingdom? And yet such are all these pretended Innovations, with the introduction whereof the Prelates are charged in this Libel; for they were enjoined and commanded first by his Majesty, and then by Acts of the Council; it being far more agreeable to reason to complain of the Lords of the Council, by whose Authority they were commanded, than of those who in dutiful obedience to Authority did practise them: But indeed it is to be wondered at, with what face the Covenanters can blame either the one for commanding, or the other for practising them: For what ground have they, or did they ever yet alledge, for their swearing to the Confession of Faith and their Covenant annexed? Did they ever yet alledge any but the Authority of his Majesties Royal Father and his Council, who by their Authority commanded them to be sworn throughout the Realm? And did not his Majesty and his Council by equal Authority command these pretended Innovations? Was not then the Prelates practice of them as well warranted, as this Confession of Faith and the Band annexed, which were never brought in by Acts of Parliament or Assembly, but merely by his Majesties Royal Father's Prerogative, and put in execution by the Authority of his Council?

Fifthly, Who did ever hear that men professing Piety and Religion, durst adventure in the sight of God, in the House of God, and in the Pulpit, which is as it were the Chair of God, and in the face of the Congregation, which is the people of God, to command the Bishops to be indicted and accused of such horrible Crimes, as whoring, excessive drinking, excessive gaming, swearing, profane talking, profanation of the Lord's day, contempt of God's publick Ordinances, neglecting piety in their families, mocking of the power of preaching, prayer, and spiritual communication; drabery, sumptuary, lying, perjuries, dishonest dealing in civil bargains, adultery, incest, and what not? His Majesty did appeal to their own Consciences, whether they did think all of them, or any one of them, guilty of all these Crimes: Most certainly they did not; and that excuse which they bring for the justifying of this wicked Libel cannot any ways extenuate their fault. They said that some particulars contained in the whole Libel may be proved against every one of them, and therefore it is a good and a legal Libel, if they can make good any thing contained in it: But be it legal or not, the World must needs take notice that it is most unconscionable. The other things mentioned before, and charged upon them in this Libel, are not crimes at all, being warranted by Acts of Parliament, Assembly and Council; these last rehearsed are crimes indeed, odious in the sight of God and man, and of which, as if they be guilty, the Bishops deserve death and exquisite torments; so, if they who have accused them of these crimes, shall fail in proving them to be guilty, they deserve to be infamous throughout all Generations, for the most malicious and malignant traducers of the Servants of God, that ever lived upon the Earth, and must look for the unavoidable judgments of God to fall upon them and their whole Families for this so horrible a crime, committed wilfully against the knowledge of their own Consciences, unless they do expiate it with the bitter tears of Repentance: For his Majesty desired them to declare bona fide, whether they themselves did believe or conceive all the Bishops accused in the Libel, or only some of them to be guilty of these last recited Crimes: If not all, but some, why did they not distinguish them, that the People might know whom they should take for guilty, and whom for not guilty? Nay, did they not believe and know, that some of these Bishops were holy and learned men, free from the crimes objected? For instance, we will only name the Bishop of Edenburgh, seeing in the principal Presbytery of his Diocese this Libel was presented, admitted, and publicly read in the Churches within the Precincts of it: Did they then, or do they yet believe or suspect that he was guilty of incest, adultery, excessive whoring, gaming, drinking, dicing, swearing, &c. ut supra? We do verily believe, that if they were judicially called, they would absolve him from such foul crimes; how then they can answer to God, men, or their own Consciences, for accusing that reverend, learned, and holy Prelate of such crimes, for which they themselves would be his Compurgators, We must leave it to themselves to resolve: Nay, what if they themselves did not believe any one, not the most hated of all the Prelates to be guilty of these last recited crimes? Sure, the presumptions are very pregnant and unanswerable, that they did not believe it: For at the General Assembly, when the several Bishops causes came to be heard and discussed upon this Libel, they did not so much as offer to make any proof of these last rehearsed crimes against them, they examined not so much as one witness upon them in discussing the processes of many of the Bishops: And in the printed Acts of their pretended Assembly (as shall appear by those passages of it in their place) in their particular sentences of deprivation and excommunication, they not only do not censure them for these crimes, but do not so much as take notice of them: And it is well known, that these men who in all their proceedings had made every Bishops moat a beam, were not so mercifully or compassionately affected towards them, that they would have spared them, or forbore to make proof of these crimes, if they had seen but colour for it. If they shall say, that though they could not prove these crimes, yet there was a publick scandal of them; There was indeed a scandal raised amongst them, and that publick enough, when it was proclaimed in the Pulpits; But by whom was it raised? Even by the principal Covenanters themselves, who were resolved to raise a fame when they were sure they could prove no fact: Or if they should alledge that they did forbear probation, or examining of Witnesses, out of their respect either to the Bishops Calling or their Persons, they will hardly find credit with any one; For who will think they did it out of the respect of their Calling, which they have given out for Popish and Antichristian? Or out of respect of their Persons, whom they have scandalized in so many great and publick Congregations of the Kingdom, infinitely exceeding in number those who were present at the Assembly? The plain truth then was this: They could easily slander them with these crimes in the Churches, but they were sure they could make no proof of them at the Assembly.

Sixthly, Who did ever hear, that the form of proceeding of Presbyteries in that Kingdom was by reading of the Libel in any Church? The Custom being to cite them personally where they may be found; or if they be not to be found, by leaving both the citation and copy of the Libel at the place of their dwelling; or if the party be out of the Kingdom, by citing him publicly in the Church, and afterward serving him with a copy of the Libel upon his coming home and appearance: And if he do not appear, by proceeding against him tanquam pro confesso; which form was observed by them in the processing of all the Ministers, whom at this time they suspended and transmitted over to the general Assembly, none of their Libels being publicly read in Churches: But with the Bishops they proceeded otherways, against all course of Law, made the Libel against them to be read publicly in the Churches, and that after divers of them, upon the Covenanters own knowledge, had been served with it by the Officers of that Presbytery; so that there was no use of any further publick citation, personal citation being already made: Nay, and to do it upon a Sunday, though that morning the Magistrates of Edenburgh, by his Majesties Commissioners special commandment, required them to forbear: Nay, yet to publish that infamous Libel in their Churches, upon a day when the holy Communion was solemnly administered: Nay, and in the Colledge Church where Kollock is Minister, (because it was late, and after-noon before all the people had received) to have the ordinary Thanksgiving and Prayers after the Communion quite omitted, and the Afternoon Sermon begun without any precedent Prayer, and all to gain time for the reading this lewd Libel, as if it had been of greater consequence than either the Thanksgiving or Prayers after the holy Communion, or the reading of those Lessons and Chapters of sacred Scripture, or using of Prayer, which are duties usually performed before Sermon: Nay, to have this Libel read in the Afternoon, directly against the Act of the Presbytery which appointed it to be read in the Forenoon, and to have it read neither by Minister nor Reader, as the Act enjoyneth, but by a Lay-man, and a fiery Advocate: All these put together, let the Reader judge whether here were not many acts, first of injustice, then of impiety; as drawing along with them the profanation and violation of the Lord's house, the Lord's day, the Lord's holy Communion, the Lord's service and worship in both parts of it, Prayer and Preaching.

Seventhly, The Reader shall do well to observe in the Preface of this Libel, what a harmless and hazzardless mustering and training of their men they make: For all the Covenanters being now one gross body, sworn to one Covenant, and to mutual defence one of another, without admitting any motion which shall tend to the division or breaking of their ranks, see how they divide themselves, only to exercise their Arms, and to make them perfect in their postures and motions; after they have cast themselves in several fi-

Anno 1638. gures, they fall to skirmishing, not in earnest, but in jest, to please themselves and the spectators: For since they could not all be Judges, and Commissioners of the Assembly, they make their Fellow-Covenanters not elected Commissioners, to be Plaintiffs; so that indeed upon the point, the Plaintiffs and Judges are all one: For they having all sworn and abjured (as they say themselves) the principal things to be determined in the Assembly, the same Actors before they came from their Tables at Edinburgh, sorted and divided their parts, appointed some to be chosen Commissioners, and so to act the part of Judges, and others of themselves to draw a Libel against those whom they should nominate, and so they should act the part of Plaintiffs: In the mean time, what was like to become of the poor Defendants and the Parties cited? Whether they were not like to be killed in this play, let the Spectators deliver their opinions: And this now is that Libel, with which the Covenanters did undoubtedly compass their own end, which was, to raise up in the People an utter abhorring of the present Bishops persons, and an irreconcilable hatred against both their persons and calling; but with what Religion, Justice, and Honesty they have effected it, others besides themselves, both in Heaven and Earth, must judge and give sentence.

As this of the Libel was a trick of falshood, so about this time there was put upon the people a notable trick of Forgery, which was this: There was a Maid, whose name is Michelson, her Father was a Minister; and when he died left her young, she hath been for many years distracted by fits: Upon this young Maids weakness some were pleased to work, and to report her for one inspired with a spirit of divination; and finding, that out of her blind zeal she was wonderfully affected with their Covenant, and that in her raving fits her words tended all, or for the most part, to the admiration of it, and detestation of the opposers of it; and perceiving, that she was well skilled in the phrases of the Scripture, and had a good memory, so that she could remember the bitter invectives, which both in the Pulpits and elsewhere she had heard made against the Bishops and the Service-Book, they thought her a very fit instrument to abuse the People, and cried her up so much, that the multitude was made believe her words proceeded not from her self, but from God. Thence was that incredible concourse of all sorts of People, Noblemen, Gentlemen, Ministers, Women of all ranks and qualities, who watched or stayed by her day and night, during the time of her pretended fits, and did admire her raptures and inspirations, as coming from Heaven: She spake but at certain times, and many times had intermissions of days and weeks, in all probability, that she might have time to receive instructions, and to digest them against the next time of exercising her Gifts (as they call them;) which so soon as she was ready to begin, the news of it was blown all the Town over, and the House so thronged, that thousands at every time could find no access. The joy which her Auditors conceived for the comfort of such a Messenger from Heaven, and such Messages as she delivered from thence, was many times expressed by them in tears, by none more than by Rollock her special Favourite; who being desired sometimes by the Spectators to pray with her, and speak to her, answered, That he durst not do it, as being no good manners in him to speak while his Master was speaking in her. Now, that she was set up by the Covenanters, to perswade their ends with the People, there be two Reasons which may induce the Reader probably to believe:

First, Because that they of best judgment, who were present at the time of her pretended raptures, did affirm, that they saw nor could observe nothing supernatural in them; they only found she had a good memory, especially of that which she had read in the Scripture, or had heard preached: That she had a very good expression of her self; but yet they found that both she knew that she was speaking, and what she was speaking (contrary to that report which went about of her) and that while she was speaking, if she were interrupted by any questions, she made very pertinent answers to them, which could not have been, if all that time she had been transported with any supernatural rapture.

Secondly, Because most of all that she spake, still tended to the Covenanters ends: When she spake of Christ, she ordinarily called him by the name of Covenanting Jesus. The sum of her Speeches for the most part was, that it was revealed unto her from God, that their Covenant was approved and ratified in Heaven, but that his Majesties Covenant was an invention of Satan; that all the adherents to it should be confounded, as all the adherents to the former were and should be protected by God, the Author of their Covenant, against all opposition whatsoever: Which Speeches of hers were averred by the Covenanters with as great confidence, and admired by the People with as much veneration, if not more, as any other of their Pulpit Dictates: Which presumptions did make very many (both Covenanters and others) think, that the crying up of this Maid did look something like a Romish imposture.

Let all this rebellious behaviour, and these contempts of his Majesties Commissioner and Council, intervening between his last gracious Proclamation of the indiction of the Assembly, and the day of the Assembly near at hand, be laid together, and what judgment can any man make of them, but that they were devised and practised principally for this purpose, That his Majesties Commissioner might prorogue or discharge the Assembly, from whence by these strange proceedings he could not have the least hope of any good? And if he should discharge it, they were sure they should gain some credit with their Party, whom they had made believe that he never intended otherwise; as also, should indict an Assembly themselves, which they made full accompt to do; which appeareth both by the tenour of the Commissions given to their several Commissioners, both from Presbyteries and Burrows, which run thus: We give you full power to appear for Us at this Assembly now indicted the 21. of November next, wheresoever it shall happen to be, not naming the place, Glasgow, where his Majesty had appointed it, hoping that it should be prorogued; in which case they intended to hold it at Edinburgh, the seat of their Tables, as also by divers of the Covenanters Letters written to that purpose; the Copy of one, written by the Lord of Balmerino, we here exhibit to you.

Loving

Loving Cousin,

I Have lately received advertisement from several Friends that are chosen Commissioners for the Assembly, to help them to Lodgings in Glasgow; I send you here a Roll of some of our particular Friends, whereof you may give a Copy to the Provost and Magistrates, that they (being men of quality) may be accordingly furnished for themselves and their train, with such Rooms (at least) as you have provided for me. I hope your Magistrates have been as careful to provide for the Commissioners as for the Counsellors, which are not so necessary Members of the Assembly as the Commissioners: And if they be not well eased, it may be a great argument to the Assembly to remove it self elsewhere. I am of opinion, that of the three hundred necessary Commissioners of Assembly, the half of them have not provided themselves, as being far distant and unacquainted, hoping in so good a Town to find all Commodities for money. I would send a Servant to take possession of those Lodgings which can be had, for my self and our friends, that we be not surprised with the Counsellors followers, who are to be with you the fifteenth or sixteenth of this Instant.

George Porterfield undertook to my Lord Lindsey and other Noblemen, at his last being here, to bespeak three or four of the best Lodgings they designed for such Noblemen as was given him in list; we have heard nothing of his performance. My Lord Lindsey hath written oft-times to me, and I would intreat you to desire George to write with the first occasion to John Smith, or any other he pleaseth here, that we may know his care and account of his undertaking. You will pardon me for this trouble I put you to, being for Friends that will be very sensible of it, whereof none are more obliged and less able to acquit all your favours, then Edenb. Nov. 8.

1638.Your loving Cousin to dispose of,

Balmerino.

I could wish our own Friends were as well bestowed near one another as can be; and if I cannot come there the next week, I will send a servant.

BY these Lines you may easily perceive, both the insolent contempts used by these men towards the King's Council, and the resolution which they had to keep the Assembly, or to remove it at their pleasures. But after they were once perswaded, that the Lord Commissioner was resolved to hold the Assembly at the time and place appointed by the King's Proclamation, the time of it approaching, they sent out from their Tables a second Paper of publick instructions throughout all the parts of the Kingdom, which were these.

1. That all Noblemen subscribers of the Covenant (except the Noblemen of the West, who shall be ready upon advertisement) meet at Edinburgh the 12th of November, and stay there till they go to Glasgow, where they shall all meet on Saturday the 17th of November at the furthest.

2. That the full number of these who are appointed Commissioners by the several Shires, to attend this common cause, with four Gentlemen within the bounds of every Presbytery at the least, out of the number of their Assessors, without excluding any voluntaries,

That they come to Glasgow the 17. day of November, to attend constantly the Assembly, and give their advice in the common cause to the ruling Elders, Commissioners to the Assembly out of these Shires and Presbyteries. Car. 14.

3. That the Burrows appoint (according to their quality and number) two, four, or six, of most judicious men to come to Glasgow the 17th of November, and there constantly to attend the Assembly, and give their advice to their Commissioner in this common cause.

4. That the Fast be observed the fourth day of November universally, with any other days they may conveniently: And if any be repairing to the Assembly, that they keep the Fast where they shall be for the time.

5. That now especially, seeing ruling Elders from particular Congregations are received in Presbyteries, that particular Congregations take such course, that no Minister Commissioner be forced to be absent from the Assembly for want of necessary charges.

6. That where any hath been deceived or compelled to subscribe this new Covenant, that the Ministers take their Declarations in writing, or by Act in the Books of Session, or before one Witness, that they were forced, deceived, or mistaken: And that every Minister make known, and intimate publicly to the people the printed Protestation, containing the Reasons against this new Subscription; and where the Minister refuseth, that some well-affected Gentleman do it.

IN the first of these, there is a Meeting appointed of all the Commissioners, first at Edinburgh, then at Glasgow, which was (no doubt) to agree upon the conclusions to be made in the Assembly, before the Assembly should assemble: In the second and third you see a course taken, That both from Presbyteries and Burrows, the several Commissioners shall have numbers of Assistants, without whose advice the Commissioners were to conclude nothing; a thing never heard of before at any Assembly of that Church; and by which multitude they meant to terrifie all those, who in Glasgow should offer to oppose or speak against them. In the fourth, to the high contempt of the King's Authority and Proclamation, they appoint another day for the publick Fast than was by his Majesty designed. In the sixth, they order that all these who had subscribed his Majesties Covenant and Confession, should be presented as publick Offenders.

These new instructions, especially that Article which appointed so great troops to repair to Glasgow, all which (as the Lord Commissioner was informed) meant to go thither with Arms, and in hostile equipage, which is most severely prohibited by the Laws of that Kingdom, moved his Majesties Commissioner and Council, by publick Proclamation at the Cross of Edinburgh, severely to interdict any Commissioner for the Assembly at Glasgow to travel thither, or to continue there with more attendance than those of their own family and ordinary retinue; and that they should carry with them no other Arms, but such as were allowed by the Laws of that Kingdom, under the pains and penalties contained in the said Laws. This Proclamation they only answered with a Protestation, yielding no obedience to it; for they travelled to Glasgow in great troops, carrying with them prohibited and warlike Arms.

Anno 1638. It is easie now to be conceived, that the Lord Commissioner could expect no good from this Assembly, the preparations whereunto were so full of Rebellion and Tumult; and the precedent Elections of the Members whereof had induced many legal, unavoidable, and undeniable nullities of it: Yet because the People should clearly see the reality of his Majesties Royal intentions, and the Covenanters party might understand how they had been abused by the reports which their Leaders had dispersed, That his Majesty meant nothing less than to keep this Assembly; and principally, that in that Assembly his Majesty might fully make good to all his Subjects, whatsoever he had promised in his last gracious declaration, (the Heads of the Covenanters having mainly laboured with them that point, viz. that he never meant to perform what therein he had promised) the Lord Commissioner began his Journey towards Glasgow, and arrived there on the 17th day of November in a quiet and peaceable manner, none of his Train carrying with them any prohibited Arms: There met him at Glasgow all the Council by his Majesties direction, according to a Letter which his Majesty had written unto them, requiring them to assist him all the time of his being there, with their best concurrence and counsel: His Majesties Letter to them here followeth.

Right trusty and right well-beloved Cousin and Counsellor, Right trusty and right well-beloved Cousins and Counsellors, We greet you well: As by your Letter we find how well you are satisfied with Our gracious pleasure, expressed in our late Proclamation and Declaration; so we do expect the continuance of your care by your best endeavours, to bring all Our good People to a true sense of Our Royal intentions, and real care of preferring and advancing the good and peace of that Church and Kingdom, which hath always been and still is one of Our chiefest cares. We give you hearty thanks for your affection and pains in this service, and do approve of your course in subscribing of the Confession and Band, and order taken by you for publishing and requiring the like due and thankful acceptance of Our gracious pleasure by all Our good Subjects. And seeing the time of the Assembly doth now approach, We require you to attend diligently upon Our Commissioner, until the time appointed for the down sitting of the said Assembly, and further, to the final ending thereof; that from time to time you may be assisting to him with your best opinions and advices, for preparing and digesting every thing that may conduce to bring this business, to be treated upon in the Assembly, to the wished peaceable and happy end. And although We will not doubt but that all Our good Subjects will be careful of every thing that may concern Us, or Our Sovereign Authority; yet because that at such publick and general Meetings, it is not to be expected that all mens dispositions will be alike, and of one temper, We require you, and that in a more particular manner, according to the trust and confidence We have in your affections to Our service, carefully to advert, that if any proposition shall be made, which may seem to derogate from Sovereignty, or that true estate of Monarchical Government already established within that Kingdom, or which may impede the peaceable conclusion of this Assembly, that as good Subjects and faithful Counsellors and Servants to Us, you assist Our Commissioner to withstand the same to the uttermost of your power: To whom We will you to give absolute trust in every thing which he in Our name shall deliver or impart to you, or any of you, in publick or in private, And so We bid you

THe City of Glasgow being much filled and thronged with all sorts of People on the 21. day of November 1638. the day designed by his Majesties Proclamation, the General Assembly begun, and was opened; and the proceedings were as follow.

After Sermon in the Morning, they assembled in the Afternoon: The ancientest Minister of the Town, who had preached in the Morning, desired all present to begin the Action with the chusing of a Moderator: The Lord Commissioner (who sate upon a Seat raised in a place eminent above the rest, with his Assessors about him conveniently seated below) told them that there was something to be done before the choice of the Moderator, viz. that his Commission was first to be read, that it might be known by what Authority he sate there; which was done, and so his Majesties Commission to him was publickly read, as followeth.

NOW this his Majesties Commission was sealed both with the Great Seal of that Kingdom and the Privy Seal, because the Archbishop of St. Andrew's the late Lord Chancellor, had lately delivered up unto his Majesty the Great Seal of that Kingdom, which being by the King for a time deposited into the custody of the Lord Commissioner until his Majesty should otherwise dispose of it, it was thought fit, that the said Commission to him should be attested, not only by the Great Seal, which he then had in his Custody, but by the Privy Seal also, which was in the keeping of the Lord Privy Seal: After the Commission read, the Lord Commissioner exhorted them to a peaceable and moderate carriage, touching a little (but with great discretion) the disorderly proceedings which had been used before their Meeting: At which a Nobleman Lay-Elder presently took fire (an undoubted presage of their succeeding carriage) and answered sharply, That they had given his Grace content for all their proceedings; to which the Lord Commissioner replied, That he had never yet received any satisfaction from them in any of their proceedings, and, by way of attestation, called God to witness to it: It had like to have grown to a hot contestation, but that that night the Assembly was dismissed. The next day upon their first sitting down, they urged presently the choice of a Moderator; but the Lord Commissioner desired first his Majesties Letter to the Assembly to be read, which was done, and it was thus:

ALthough We be not ignorant that the best of Our Subjects have been mistaken by many of Our Subjects in that Our ancient Kingdom, as if We had intended innovation in Religion or Laws; yet considering nothing to be more incumbent to the duty of a Christian King, than the advancement of God's glory, and the true Religion; forgetting what is past, We have seriously taken to Our Princely consideration such particulars as may settle and establish the truth of Religion in that Our ancient Kingdom, and also to satisfy all Our good people of the reality of Our intentions herein, having indicted a free General Assembly to be kept at Glasgow the 21 of this instant; We have likewise appointed Our Commissioner to attend the same, from whom you are to expect Our pleasure in every thing, and to whom We require you to give that true and due respect and obedience, as if We were personally present Our selves. And in full assurance of Our consent to what he shall in Our name promise, We have signed these, and with the same for a Testimony to posterity to be registered in the Books of the Assembly. At White-Hall the 29 of Octob. 1638.

THEN they called again for the choice of a Moderator, at which time one Dr. Hamilton presented to the Commissioner a Declinator and Protestation in the name of the Bishops against the Assembly, containing the nullities of it, with a desire that it might be read, and a publick Act entered for the production of it: Upon this there arose a very great heat in the Assembly, they alledging, that nothing could be done until a Moderator was chosen; and they did directly refuse to read the said Declinator: upon which both the Lord Commissioner entered a Protestation in the Clerk of Registers hands against the refusal of it, and took Instruments thereupon; and so likewise did Dr. Hamilton in the name of the Bishops. At last they proceeded to the choice of a Moderator; to which, before Our Commissioner gave way, he entered (as before) another Protestation, that their Act of choosing should neither prejudice his Majesties Prerogative and Authority, nor any Law or Custom of that Church and Kingdom, nor bar him (when he should see cause) from taking legal exceptions, either against the person elected, or the illegality of his election: And so they having put divers other stales upon the List, accordingly as it was resolved upon before at their Tables in Edinburgh, without one contrary voice except his own, who could not chose himself, one Mr. Alexander Henderson, the prime and most rigid Covenanter in the Kingdom, was chosen Moderator.

The third day the Lord Commissioner, at their first Meeting, required again that the Bishops Declinator and Protestation might be read, which he conceived they had promised after the Moderator should be chosen: but they rejected it again, adding then, that the Assembly must be fully constituted of all its Members, and be once an Assembly, before any thing could be presented to it: To which it was answered by the Lord Commissioner, That he required it only to be read, not to be discussed until the Members of the Assembly were constituted by allowing their several Commissions, because this Declinator contained reasons why either all, or at least some elected, should not be admitted Commissioners in the Assembly, because of the nullities of the elections expressed in the Declinator; which reasons containing the said nullities, might persuade (as they hoped) with them, for the rejecting their Commissions, which could not be done after their approving and allowing of them, and so by virtue of these Commissions, admitting them for constituted Members of the Assembly. The reason why the Lord Commissioner did so earnestly urge the reading of that Declinator, was, because he did fore-see the fallacy which they meant to use, viz. The Declinator cannot be read before the Assembly be constituted; and they fearing that the Declinator contained reasons against the constitution of it by such Members as were elected, and that after they were once admitted, it was too late to alledge any reasons; for then they were faine to answer, that all Elections were discussed, and the Members of the Assembly received, and therefore nothing then to be heard against either; which indeed afterward was their very answer: There was nothing left here to the Lord Commissioner, but entering a Protestation as formerly, and solemnly calling themselves to witness, nefs, whether with any shew of Justice the re-Anno ing of the Bishops Protestation could be den-1638. before the Elections were admitted, the pripal aim of it being to shew reasons why they co-not be admitted, wondering with what colour face they (above all men) could do it, who read and published so many Protestations against the King's Proclamations and Acts of Council; and so, how they could deny to Lord Commissioner a thing required in his Majesties name, and by his authority, which they themselves had practised without any warrant or authority at all: But all in vain, for not least resolution taken at Edenburgh must suffer abatement: and therefore rejecting the reading of the Declinator, they first put by the Clerk the Assembly his Son, who by reason of his thers sickness had a lawful deputation from him and whom (as it seemeth) they afterward wrong to a dismissal, and went on to the Election of new Clerk, whom without one contrary voice they did chuse, viz. one Mr. Archibald Johnston an Advocate, the Clerk of their Tables at Eden- burgh; against whose Election his Majesties Commissioner likewise protested as formerly. At admission he made a short Speech, declaring (against his Conscience) his unwillingness accept that charge, but yet affirming, that at time he would not be wanting to contribute part towards the defence of the Prerogative the Son of God; as if that now had been in danger.

The fourth day they begun the reading of several Commissions. The Lord Commissioner as formerly, entred a Protestation to take exception against their Elections, in his own due time only he was content they should go on, that might see their Justice in allowing or disallowing the Elections, of which he knew many to be very untoward, and made with violence: No the Reader is carefully to observe their partiality in admitting or rejecting Elections: for where-ever there was a Non-Covenanter chosen (of which number there were not above two or three) or any moderate Covenanter, nor designed by them at Edenburgh, and chosen according to the secret instructions (with which the Reader shall afterward be made acquainted) them they either quite rejected, or suspended from voice, until some exceptions made against their Election should be discussed; which they were sure should never be done: as shall now appear in these particulars.

When the Commission from the Presbytery of Peebles was read, there was presently read a Pro-testation and Petition given in by a mean Minister of that Presbytery, not against the Election itself (for there did not appear the least shew of exception against it when the Act of the Presbytery was read) but against some violence pretended to be used by the Lord Treasurer, who, being an Inhabitant within the Precincts of that Presbytery, was present at the Election: The Petition was conceived in very boisterous and uncivil terms: The Lord Treasurer answered all that was pretended so fully, that not any one in the Assembly seemed to be unsatisfied; there being not one Election returned which was more punctually made, and that even according to their own publick instructions: yet because the Commissioners elected, though Covenanters, were not the same who had been designed at Edenburgh nor such as another Lord, dwelling in that Presbytery, who was a Lay-Elder and Covenanter had a mind to, the approbation of that Commission, and admission of these Commissioners most shamefully was put off and respited, until that Petition and Protestation might be examined; and so it was continued from time to time, though it were often called upon: the Lord Commissioner told them, That sure there were none present, who did not admire at these proceedings; and that if the Petitioner failed in his probation (which afterward he did, and asked pardon for it) he deserved some exemplary punishment to be inflicted upon him, who had dared to traduce so great an Officer of State: In this particular it was too plain, that the poor Minister was only set on to present this Protestation for the reasons now declared.

After this, there arose a very hot contestation, concerning the Election of the Lay-Elder for the Presbytery of Brichen: The Earl of Mont-ross presented one Commission in which the Laird of Dunn was chosen Lay-Elder by the voice of one Minister, and a few Lay-Elders: There was another Commission presented by that Presbytery, in which was returned the Lord Carnegie, lawfully chosen by the voices of all the rest of the Ministers and Lay-Elders; yet because the Earl of Montross did oppose the Election of the Lord Carnegie, though his own Brother-in-law, all the Covenanters in the Assembly sided with the Laird of Dunn, for whom the Earl of Montross stood, both of them being rigid Covenanters, against the other Lord who was a Covenanter likewise, but a more moderate one. And indeed, it was a wonder to see how openly all rules of Justice without any fear or shame, were laid aside in this particular; for though they did not approve the Election of the Laird of Dunn, who wanted voices to his Election, yet they would not admit of the other, whose Election admitted not the least scruple. In the agitation of this business, there fell out a memorable passage, of which the Covenanters were very much ashamed, because it betrayed one of their secret instructions, and it was this: There was written upon the back of that Commission which was tendered by the Lord Montross, a Declaration wherein the lawfulness of that Commission, and the unlawfulness of the other was offered to be cleared, in which, among other things, it was objected against the Lord Carnegie his Election that it was made contrary to the directions of the Tables at Edinburgh; which the Clerk perceiving, stopped, and would read no further. The Lord Commissioner hereupon required the Moderator to give him a copy or extract of that Paper which was last read, and of the names of those who had subscribed to it, and that subscribed by the hand of the Clerk of the Assembly. The Moderator absolutely refused it:
the Lord Commissioner told him, that he desired it to help him in his Majesties service, that by it he might be the better informed how to proceed in his objecting against such Commissions as be meant to challenge: The Moderator again refused to do it, alledging, that the challenged Declaration was but accidentally written on the back of the Commission; the Lord Commissioner replied, That could not be written privately or accidentally, which was given in publick to the Assembly, and that by a member of it, of so great place and quality, for a justification of his proceeding in that Election; and withal protested, That though he were not his Majesties Commissioner, but the meanest Subject of the Land, he could not in Justice be denied the copy of any thing exhibited in a Court.

Court of Justice. But all in vain: for after much cavilling by the Moderator and other Covenanting Lords, the Lord Commissioner desiring the Moderator to put it to voices whether he could be denied a Copy of it; even that was refused him likewise, they being afraid, that the Assembly would not deny so notorious an act of justice: upon which the Lord Commissioner (though mildly, yet with some expression of distast) did thus deliver himself: Let God Almighty judge if this be a free Assembly, in which is denied to his Majesties Commissioner that, which cannot be denied to the meanest of his subjects; and at last, he took instruments in the hands of the Clerk Register, that he was refused the Copy of a Declaration given in to the Assembly, delivered into the Clerks hands, and publicly read by him; in which amongst other things, was contained, that the Election of the Lord Carnegie, Commissioner from Brichen, was invalid, as being contrary to the directions of the Tables of the Commissioners at Edinburgh; which occasioned the Moderator to say, That his Majesties Commissioner needed no Copy of it, he had so faithfully repeated all that was contained in it: the Lord Commissioner hereupon, since he could not obtain a Copy of it, desired all present to be witnesses of what the Moderator had spoken, and that he had acknowledged his faithful repetition of that part of the Declaration whereof he was refused the Copy; and thereupon again took Instruments. In this business Sir Lewis Stewart, one of the Assessors to the Lord Commissioner, spake some few words; which when the Moderator was about to answer, the Lord of Montross forbid him to answer one who had no place to speak there: Afterward there arose a great contestation between the Earl of Somerset, one of the Assessors, and the Moderator, with so much heat on the Moderators side, and some Lords who sided with him, that the Lord Commissioner was put to moderate the Moderator, and quench the head of the Assembly; for which many of them gave the Lord Commissioner thanks, and so all business was continued till Munday.

On Munday, being the fifth day of their sitting, they went on in the rest of the controverted elections, refusing to hear the Lord Carnegie his election discussed, but putting it off to a Committee: Mr. Andrew Logie Minister of Red, but a Non-covenanter, being returned a Commissioner from the Presbytery of Garrloche, was refused to be admitted, though they laid not the least exception against his election: their pretence was, There was a Petition presented against him to the Assembly, and no voice must be allowed him, until he had answered that: A very easie device for putting by any Commissioner whom they liked not, since it was no hard matter to find one to present a Petition against any man. Another Minister of the Channery of Rosse, and Archdeacon of Rosse, one Mr. William Mackenzie, Commissioner from the Presbytery of the Channery, upon certain Cavils both of his Election and Commission, which did bear, that he should continue there no longer than his Majesty or his Commissioner should continue the Assembly, because the sole power of calling and dissolving of Assemblies did belong to the King, for the present was only suspended from his voice; the reason was plain, he was a Non-covenanter, and had openly averred in the Assembly, that at their Election the Ministers of their Presbytery were threatened by those who brought Letters from the Tables, if they should return the Election of any, but such as they who brought the Letters desired. Two Elections were returned from the Presbytery of Aberdene, one of Covenanters, made by a few Ministers, but many Lay-Elders, at which neither the Moderator nor the Clerk of the Presbytery were present; Another of Non-covenanters, which Election was made only by Ministers, and at which the Moderator and Clerk were both present; yet that other Election, at the return whereof there wanted the Clerks hand, (without which no Presbyterial Act can be taken for a Record) was allowed, and the other rejected, upon the bare relation of one of the Covenanting Ministers who was returned wrongfully, and the attestation of the other whom the Moderator openly in the Assembly called up and desired to testify whether the Relation of his fellow was true: an excellent way of proof against a publick Record, to take the Testimony of one who was as wrongfully returned as the Relator.

The University of Aberdene sent none of their Professours to the Assembly, not daring to trust themselves upon the way, having been so much threatened with the loss of their lives for writing against the Covenant: Only they sent one of their number, no Divine, but a Professour of Humanity, to excuse their absence; his Commission being read, gave him only power to be there, and did constitute him their Agent in any thing which should concern their University; requiring him to continue there, and from time to time to give them advertisement of all that passed. The Moderator did justly affirm, That that was no Commission, the party having no power by it to give any voice in the Assembly, and so there was no more to be said to it: but immediately something being transmitted by whispering from ear to ear, until it came to the Moderators ear, the Moderator begun presently to recant, and perusing his Letter of credence, said, he perceived that there was only want of formality in the draught, which they might easily pass over; and so they allowed that for a Commission which was none, and admitted him to have a voice in the Assembly, though the University gave him no such power, nor would they have sent any Commissioner but a Divine. At this sudden change of the Moderator, made in him by a whisper, many begun to smile, and to lay wagers that the party admitted was a Covenanter, which the Moderator did not expect from that University, and that this secretly-conveyed intelligence of it had changed him; and indeed afterward it proved to be so.

And thus the Members of their Assembly were constituted, just as they had designed them; at which they were mightily over-joyed, being now assured, that they might conclude what they pleased: And although it might in common reputation have better suited with the principles of wisdom, not to have taken exceptions against these few Elections, which were made contrary to their directions (for thereby they had gained the opinion of impartiality, and had lost nothing of their power, these few voices not being able to carry any thing against their great number) yet such was their blind obstinacy, that they scorned that any one should sit there who run not their Rebellious courses, as holding it a dis-reputation to them if they should be thought to have abated any thing, not only of their power

even of their will. Besides, not only their wishness, but even their pride appeared notably in one particular: his Majesty, in his Letters to the Assembly, had nominated for Assessors to his Commissioner these six: The Earl of Traquair Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Roxburgh Lord Privy-Seal, the Earl of Argyle, the Earl of Lauderdale, the Earl of Southesk, Lords of the Privy Council, and Sir Lewis Stewart an Advocate, a far fewer number than ever his Majesties Royal Father called to assist any of his Commissioners; all which ever constantly had voices in the Assembly; But here, though these six suffrages were able to do nothing against their minds; yet because they would be sure to clip the wings of authority, they absolutely refused to let them have any voice at all, telling his Majesties Commissioner, That he might consult with these Assessors if he pleased, but that they were to have no voice in the Assembly: affirming, with incredible impudence, That if the King himself were there, he should have but one voice, and that not negative neither, nor more affirmative than any one member of the Assembly had: by which means they have published to the World this sweet and wholesome Doctrine, That their King in their Ecclesiastical Assembly hath no more power than any Town-Clerk, Taylor, or Sadler who shall sit as a Lay-Elder there: which desperate opinion of theirs doth plainly shew the reason why in their last publick instructions preceding the Assembly, they ordered, That every Lay-Elder from Presbyteries should come attended with three or four, and every Commissioner from Burroughs with five or six of their own rank and quality, who should continue with them all the time of the Assembly, without whose advice they should not give voice to any thing; a thing never heard of at any General Assembly before. Sure they had heard and knew the number and names of the Assessors, whom the King had appointed to assist the Lord Commissioner; and therefore they would have every Mechanical Artizan, chosen a Lay-Elder for the Assembly, (whom they held to have equal power with his Majesty in it) to carry the same Badge of Power and State with his Majesty, and to have their Assessors as well as he, and those equal in number to his, and the same power with his, of consulting, though not concluding: all which, whether Royal Majesty and supreme Sovereignty could or ought to digest, any reasonable man may judge.

The Assembly being just now the same thing which the Tables were at Edinburgh in substance, but in condition far worse (for here were none now but the most obstinate Covenanters, whom the several Tables had picked out of all the pack) and they meeting at the Town-house of Glasgow alwaies before they met at the Church (the place of the Assembly) the Moderator being the same materially who governed them at Edinburgh, though not so formally chosen as now; the Clerk of the Assembly being the same, who was Clerk to their Covenant and to their Tables at Edinburgh; the Members of the Assembly being the same who sate at their Tables there, and those the most corrupted and distempered of them all: who could now expect less insolent conclusions from this Assembly, than they had found from their Tables?

And indeed the very same were found: For immediately they bragged that now they were a constituted Assembly, and resolved to laugh at any who should quarrel with the Elections which they had approved; and especially at the Bishops Declinator, if it should contain any arguments to that purpose. The first Cock who begun to crow upon this Dunghill, though it were within night, no ordinary time of crowing, was Mr. Andrew Ramsay, a Minister of Edinburgh, who, getting up upon a Stool or Forme, made a very great bragg, offering by dispute to prove against any man the lawfulness of lay-Elders, by Scripture, Antiquity, Fathers, Councils, the judgment of all the Reformed Churches, even of the Church of England, who admitted them into the High Commission. The Lord Commissioner seeing him crowd so much in a very little room, told him that he run no great hazard or danger in his challenge; for he was sure the Judges would be his seconds: yet if it pleased him, he would find one should enter into the Lists with him, either publicly or privately, upon that quarrel; but many of his Brethren were not very well pleased with his glorious challenge, as making account that he would never be able to make good the greatest part of it: And with this bragg the Assembly dissolved for that night.

The next day, being the 27 of November, after the Assembly was met, his Majesties Commissioner urged once again that the Bishops Declinator might be read; which was accordingly done by the Clerk of the Assembly. It was entertained with much jeering and laughter, and by transmission of a whisper from one ear to another they resolved, when it was read out, to have received it with a general hissing; but yet by another general whisper, transmitted as the former, that course was stopped. After it was ended, the Lord Commissioner spake home to them, for the necessity of that Declinator, and the unavoidable strength of the reasons contained in the same, and in depressing, by way of parallel, their Libel against the Bishops: which he spared not to call infamous and scurrilous, both in the matter of it, and the manner of promulging it; and hereupon took instruments in Our Clerk of Registers hands, both for the production and reading of the Declinator. Some of the Lords of the Assembly offered to do the like in the Clerk of the Assemblies hands, but the Lord Commissioner told him it was needless, since it was not tendred to the Assembly but to himself: First, the Moderator in a short speech deplored the obstinacy of the Bishops hearts, who in all that Declinator had bewrayed no sign of remorse and sorrow for their wicked courses; and then the Lords of the Assembly perceiving their error, that they who found themselves to be Judges, had offered to take instruments in the Clerks hands of the production of any exhibits (which was never heard to be done by the Judge, but only by the actor or plaintiff) prompted some young Noble-men, and Gentlemen Covenanters (but not Members of the Assembly) then present, to demand instruments of the production of the Bishop's Declinator; in whose name one Gibson, one of the Clerks of the Session (and so acquainted with Law terms) both demanded instruments, and thundered out a verbal Protestation, in such Law terms as was not easie to be understood by most of the auditors: The sum of what was understood was this, That they would pursue their Libel against the Bishops so long as they had lives and

Our Commissioner first protested against that Protestation, and then discharged the Bishops Proctor from appearance before the Assembly, to which he had presented no Declinator; but required him to appear before himself, to whom it was presented, when he should require him: The Declinator of the Bishops here insueth.

The Declinator and Protestation of the Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of Scotland, and others their adherents within that Kingdom, against the pretended General Assembly holden at Glasgow, Novemb. 21. 1638.

WE Archbishops, Bishops and other Under-subscribers for our selves, and in name and behalf of the Church of Scotland: Whereas it hath pleased the King's Majesty to indict a General Assembly of the Church to be kept at Glasgow, November 21. 1638. for composing and settling of the distractions of the same. 1. Do acknowledge and profess, That a General Assembly lawfully called and orderly convened is a most necessary and effectual meane for removing those evils wherewith the said Church is infested, and for settling that order which becometh the House of God. And that we wish nothing more than a Meeting of a peaceable and orderly Assembly to that effect. 2. We acknowledge and profess, as becometh good Christians and faithful subjects, that his Majesty hath authority by his Prerogative Royal to call Assemblies, as is acknowledged by the Assembly at Glasgow, 1610. and Parl. 1612. and that it is not lawful to convene without his Royal consent and approbation, except we will put our selves in danger to be called in question for Sedition.

Yet nevertheless in sundry respects, we cannot but esteem this Meeting at Glasgow most unlawful and disorderly, and their proceedings void and null in Law, for the causes and reasons following:

First, Before his Majesties Royal Warrant to my Lord Commissioner his Grace to indict a lawful free General Assembly, the usurped authority of the Table (as they call it) by their missives and instructions, did give order and direction for all Presbyteries to elect and chuse their Commissioners for the Assembly, and, for seeking of God's blessing to it, to keep a solemn Fast, Sept. 16. whereas his Majesties Warrant for indicting of that Assembly was not published till the 22 of that month: so that they preventing and not proceeding by Warrant of Royal authority, the pretended Commissioners being chosen before the Presbyteries were authorized to make Election, cannot be reputed members of a lawful Assembly.

Secondly, A lawful Assembly must not only be indicted by lawful authority (as we acknowledge this to be) but also constituted of such Members as are requisite to make up such a Body. For if, according to the indictment, none at all do convene, or where the Clergy is called there meet none but Laicks, or more Laicks than of the Clergy, with equal power to judge and determine; or such of the Laicks and Clergy as are not lawfully authorized, or are not capable of that employment by their places; or such as are legally disabled to sit and decide in an Assembly of the Church: a Meeting consisting of such Members cannot be thought a free and lawful Assembly: By that Act of Parliament, Jac. 6. par. 3. cap. 46. 1572. Every Minister who shall pretend to be a Minister of God's Word and Sacraments, is bound to give his assent and subscription to the Articles of Religion contained in the Acts of our Sovereign Lord's Parliament, and, in presence of the Archbishop, Superintendent or Commissioner of the Province, give his Oath, for acknowledging and recognoscing of our Sovereign Lord and his authority, and bring a testimonial in writing thereupon, and openly upon some Sunday, in time of Sermon or publick Prayer, in the Kirk where he ought to attend, read both the Testimonial and Confession, and of new make the said Oath within a Month after his admission, under the pain that every person that shall not do as is above appointed, shall ipso facto be deprived, and all his Ecclesiastical promotions and living shall be then vacant, as if he were then naturally dead, and that all inferior persons under Prelats be called before the Archbishops, Bishops, Superintendents and Commissioners of the Diocesses or Province, within which they dwell, as the Act bears.

Thirdly, All of the Clergy convened to this Assembly pretend themselves to be Ministers of God's Word and Sacraments, and have Benefices or other Ecclesiastical livings: yet nevertheless the most part of them have never in presence of the Archbishop, Bishop, Superintendent or Commissioner of the Diocess or Province, subscribed the Articles of Religion contained in the Acts of Parliament, and given their Oath for acknowledging and recognoscing our Sovereign Lord and his authority, and brought a Testimonial thereof: and therefore they are ipso facto deprived, and their places void, as if they were naturally dead; and consequently having no place nor Function in the Church, cannot be Commissioners to this Assembly: hoc maxime attento, that the said persons not only have never given their Oath for acknowledging his Majesties authority, nor can shew no Testimonial thereupon, as they are bound by the said Act; but also having as subjects comprehended in the representative Body of this Kingdom, Promised to acknowledge, obey, maintain, defend, and advance the life, honour, safety, dignity, Sovereign authority, and Prerogative Royal of his Sovereign Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, and privileges of his Highness Crown, with their Lives, Lands, and Goods, to the uttermost of their power, constantly and faithfully to withstand all and whatsoever persons, powers and estates, who shall presume, prease or intend any wise to impugn, prejudice, hurt or impair the same, and never to come in the contrary thereof, directly or indirectly in any time coming, at the Acts of Parliament, Jac. 6. Parl. 18. Cap. 1. Car. Parl. Cap. 1. do propterea.

And moreover, being obliged at their admission to give their Oath for performance of this duty of their allegiance, and to resist and declare on their Conscience, that the King is the lawful Supreme Governour, as well in matters Spiritual and Ecclesiastical as Temporal, and to assist and defend all Jurisdiction and Authority, belonging to his Majesty by the Act of Parliament, 1612. yet notwithstanding of the said Bands, Acts, and Promises, whereas by the said persons are so strictly bound to the performance of the premisses, his Majesty having ordained by Act of Council at Holy-rood-house, Sept. 24. 1638. and Proclamations following thereupon, that all his Majesties Lieges of whatsoever estate, degree or quality, Ecclesiastical or Temporal, should swear and subscribe the said Confession, together with a general Band for defending his Majesties Person and Authority, against all enemies within this Realm or without, have not only refused to subscribe the said band and Confession, but have in their Sermons and other Speeches, dissuaded, deterred, impeded and hindered others of the Lieges to subscribe the same, and publicly protested against the Subscription thereof: and thereupon cannot convene nor concur lawfully to the making up of the Body of an Assembly of the Kirk, as being deprived and denuded of all place and Function in the same.

A General Assembly was condescended to, out of his Majesties gracious Clemency and pious disposition, as a Royal favour to those that should acknowledge the same, and acquiesce to his gracious pleasure, and carry themselves peaceably as loyal and dutiful Subjects; which the Commissioners directed to this Assembly supposed to be of the number of those that adhere to the last Protestation made at Edenburgh, Sept. 1638. do not so account of, and accept, as appears by the said Protestation, whereby they protest, That it shall be lawful for them, as at other times, so at this, to assemble themselves notwithstanding any impediment or prorogation to the contrary; as also by continuing their Meetings and Table, discharged by authority, refusing to subscribe the band according to his Majesties and Councils command, for maintaining his Majesties Royal Person and Authority, protesting against the same, still insisting with the Lieges to subscribe the Band of mutual defence against all persons whatsoever; and remitting nothing of their former proceedings, whereby his Majesties wrath was provoked: thereby they are become in the same state and condition wherein they were before his Majesties Proclamation and Pardon, and so forfeit the favour of this Assembly, and liberty to be Members thereof. And others of his Majesties Subjects, may justly fear to meet with them in this Convention, for that by the Act of Parliament, James 6. Parl. 15. Cap. 31. Prelacies being declared to be one of the three Estates of this Kingdom, and by the Act of Parliament, James 6. Parl. 8. Cap. 130. all persons are discharged to impugn the Dignity and Authority of the three Estates, or any of them in time coming, under the pain of Treason. And whereas the King by his Proclamation declares Archbishops and Bishops to have voice in the General Assembly, and calls them to the same for that effect, as constantly they have been in use in all Assemblies, where they were present, as appears by many Acts of the General Assembly, ordaining them to keep and assist at the same, as in the Assembly at Edenburgh, December 15. 1566. At Edenburgh, March 6. 1572. At Edenburgh, May 10. 1586. and by a Letter written by the Assembly, March 6. 1573. to the Regent, earnestly desiring his own or his Commissioners presence, and the Lords of Council, and the Bishops at the Assembly: They notwithstanding, by the said Protestation, September 22. declared Archbishops and Bishops to have no warrant for their Office in this Kirk, to be authorised with no lawful Commission, and to have no place nor voice in this Assembly; and withal do arrogate to their Meetings a Sovereign Authority to determine of all questions and doubts that can arise, contrary to the freedom of the Assembly, whether in constitution and members, or in the matters to be treated, or in manner and order of proceeding: which how it doth stand with his Majesties Supremacy in all Causes and over all Persons, we leave it to that judgment whereunto it belongeth, and do call God and man to witness, if these be fit Members of an Assembly, intended for the order and peace of the Church. Car. 14.

Fourthly, Giving, and not granting, that the persons foresaid directed Commissioners in name of the Clergy to this Meeting, were capable of that Authority, and that the said Presbyteries had the authority to direct Commissioners to the General Assembly; yet have they now lost and fallen from all such right, if any they had, in so far as they have deposed the Moderators, who were lawfully appointed to govern them, by the Bishops in their Synods, and elected others in their place, contrary to the Act of the Assembly at Glasgow, 1610. and Act of Parliament 1612. ordaining Bishops to be Moderators at these Meetings; and in their absence, the Minister whom the Bishop should appoint at the Synod. So these Meetings having disclaimed the Authority of Bishops, deposed their lawful Moderators, and chusing others without Authority, cannot be esteemed lawful Convocations, that can have lawful power of sending out Commissioners with Authority to judge of the affairs of this Church.

Fifthly, And yet doth the nullity of the Commissions, flowing from such Meetings, further appear in this, that they have associate to themselves a Laick ruling Elder (as they call him) out of every Session and Parish, who, being ordinarily the Lord of the Parish, or a man of the greatest authority in the bounds, doth over-rule in the Election of the said Commissioners, both by his authority and their number, being more than the Ministers, whereof some being ordinarily absent, and five or six, or so many of them put in list, and removed, there remain but a few Ministers to voice to the Election; and in effect the Commissioners for the Clergy are chosen by Lay-men, contrary to all order, decency, and custom observed in the Christian World, no wise according to the custom of this Church, which they pretend to follow: the Presbyteries formerly never associating to themselves Lay-Elders in the Election of the Commissioners to the General Assembly, but only for their assistance in Discipline and correction of manners, calling for them at such occasions as they stood in need of their godly concurrence, declaring otherwise their Meeting not necessary, and providing expressly that they should not be equal, but fewer in number than the Pastors, as by Act of Assembly at St. Andrews, April 24. 1582. (where Mr. Andrew Melvill was Moderator) doth appear. Like as these forty years by-gone and upwards, long before the re-establishing of Bishops, these Lay-Elders have not been called at all to Presbyteries. And by the Act at Dundie, 1597. (whereby it is pretended that Presbyteries have authority to send these Lay-Commissioners) it doth no way appear that those Lay-Elders had any hand in chusing of the Ministers: and this is the only Act of the Assembly, authorizing Presbyteries to chuse Commissioners to the General Assembly: nor have Lay-Elders sate ordinarily in Presbyteries upon any occasion these forty years, and upwards, nor ever had any place nor voice in the Election of Ministers for the General Assembly, and consequently those chosen by them to this Assembly have no lawful power nor Authority.

Sixthly

Anno 1638. Sixthly, Beside, the persons Ecclesiastical, pretended to be authorized Commissioners to this Assembly, have so behaved themselves, that justly they may be thought unworthy and incapable of Commission to a free and lawful Assembly.

1. For that by their seditious and railing Sermons and Pamphlets, they have wounded the Kings Honour and Sovereign Authority, and animated his Lieges to Rebellion, averring that all Authority Sovereign is originally in the collective Body, derived from thence to the Prince; and that not only in case of negligence, it is Suppletive in the collective Body, as being communicate from the Commonalty to the King, Cumulative not Privative: But also in case of male-administration, to return to the collective Body; so that Rex excidit jure suo, and that they may refuse obedience.

2. Next, they are known to be such as have either been schismatically refractory and opposite to good order settled in the Church and State; or such as having promised, subscribed, and sworn obedience to their Ordinary, have never made Conscience of their Oath; or such as have sworn and accordingly practised, yet contrary to their promise and practice, have refused, to the contempt of Authority, and disturbance of the Church; or such as are under the Censures of the Church of Ireland, for their disobedience to order; or under the Censures of this Church, or convened, at least deserving to be convened before the Ordinaries, or a lawful General Assembly, for divers Transgressions deserving deprivation: As first, for uttering in their Sermons, rash and irreverent Speeches in Pulpit against his Majesties Council and their proceedings, punishable by deprivation, by the Act of Assembly at Edinburgh, May 22. 1590. Next, for reproving his Majesties Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, contrary to the Act of Assembly at Pearth, Maij 1. 1596. Thirdly, for expressing of mens names in Pulpit, or describing them vividly to their reproach, where there was no notorious fault; against another Act of the same Assembly. Fourthly, for using Applications in their Sermons, not tending to the edification of their present Auditory; contrary to another Act of the same Assembly. Fifthly, for keeping Conventions not allowed by his Majesty, without his knowledge and consent; contrary to another Act of the same Assembly. Sixthly, for receiving of people of other Ministers flocks to the Communion; contrary to Order, Acts of Assemblies and Councils. Seventhly, for intruding themselves into other mens Pulpits, without calling or authority. Eighthly, for usurping the authority to convent their Brethren, and proceed against them to the Censures of Suspension and Deprivation. Ninthly, for pressing the People to subscribe a Covenant, not allowed by authority; and opposing and withstanding the subscribing of a Covenant offered by his Majesty, and allowed by the Council: Beside many personal faults and enormities, whereof many of them are guilty, which in Charity we forbear to express. But hereby it doth appear, how unfit these persons are to be Members of a free and lawful Assembly.

Seventhly, Nor doth it stand with Reason, Scripture, or practice of the Christian Church, that Lay-men should be authorized to have decisive voice in a General Assembly. In that Act of Dundy, 1597. whereby these Elders pretend to have this place, there is no warrant expressed for them, to deliberate and determine. Their presence and assistance we approve, being allowed and authorized by the Prince. The King's Majesties presence in person, or by his Delegates, we hold most necessary to see all things orderly and peaceably done; and that he have the chief hand in all Deliberations and Determinations. Nor do we refuse that any intelligent or moderate man may make remonstrance of his opinion, with the reasons of it, in that way that becometh him in a National Assembly, due reverence being kept, and confusion avoided. But that any Lay-man, except he be delegate by Sovereign authority, shall presume to have a definitive and decisive voice, we esteem it to be intrusion upon the Pastoral charge, and without warrant. May we not therefore intreat my Lord Commissioner his Grace, in the words of the Fathers of the fourth General Council at Chalcedon? Mitte foras superfluos. Nor will a pious Prince be offended with it; but with Theodosius the younger will say, Illegitimum est, eum qui non sit in ordine Sanctissimorum Episcoporum Ecclesiasticis immisceri tractatibus. — And Pulcheria the Empress commanded Strategus, Ut Clerici, Monachi, & Laici vi repellerentur, exceptis paucis illis quos Episcopi secum duxerunt. Upon this respect was Martinus in that Council of Chalcedon moved to say, Non esse suum, sed Episcoporum tantum, subscribere.

Eighthly, If these pretended Commissioners, both Lay and Ecclesiastical, were lawfully authorized, (as it is evident they are not) and for none other cause declinable, yet the Law doth admit that justly a Judge may be declined, who is probably suspect: And of all probabilities, this is the most pregnant, when the Judge, before he come to judgment, doth give sentence of these things he hath to judge. This made our Reformers protestation against the Council of Trent valid, and their not compeering justifiable, because Pope Leo 10. had pre-condemned Luther, as appeared by his Bull, dated 8 Junij 1520. renewed by Paul 3. dated in Aug. 1535. This was the cause why Athanasius would not give his appearance at some Councils, nor Hosius of Cordoba, nor Maximus Patriarch of Constantinople. But so it is, the most part, if not all of the said Commissioners directed to this Meeting, have precondemned Episcopal Government, and condemned, at least suspended obedience to the Acts of the General Assembly and Parliament concerning the five Articles of Pearth, have approved their Covenant as most necessary to be embraced of all in this Kingdom, and not only have given judgment of these things before hand, but by most solemn Oaths have bound themselves to defend and stand to the same; as doth appear by their Covenant, Petitions, Protestations, Pamphlets, Libels, and Sermons: and therefore by no Law nor Equity can these pretended Commissioners be admitted to determine in this Meeting, concerning these persons and points, which beforehand they have so unjustly condemned.

Ninthly, Further, with no Law or Reason can it subsist, that the same persons shall be both Judges and Parties. And we appeal to the Consciences of all honest men, if all, at least the greatest part of the pretended Commissioners, have not declared themselves Party to the Archbishops and Bishops of this Church: For in that they have declined the Bishops to be their Judges as being their Party, (as their Declinators, Petitions, Declarations and Protestations do bear) have they not simul & semel, & ipso facto declared themselves to be Party against Bishops; whom they have not only declined, but persecuted by their calumnies and reproaches reproaches vented by word and writ, in publick and in private, by invading their persons, opposing and oppressing them by strength of an unlawful Combination; for the subscribing and swearing whereof, they have by their own authority indicted and kept Fasts, not only in their own Churches, but where worthy men refused to be accessory to these disorderly and impious courses, they have (by aid of the unruly multitude) entered their Churches, usurped upon their charges, reading and causing to be read that unlawful Covenant; by threatening and menacing compelling some (otherwise unwilling) out of just fear to set their hands to it; by proceßing, suspending, and removing obedient and worthy Ministers from their places by the usurped authority of their Table and Presbyteries? And whereas by all Law and Justice, persons finding themselves wronged in judgment, have never been denied the remedy of declinatory and appellation; nevertheless not a few of these Presbyteries have proceeded against sundry worthy Ministers, who have declined and appealed from their judgments, without respect to this defence; by these means craftily intending to disable them to be Commissioners for the Church; directly or indirectly causing their stipends to be kept back from them: By which means not the least part of the subscribing Ministers have been gained to their Covenant.

But it is without example uncharitable and illegal, that under the pretext of Summons (the like whereof was never used, nor in the like manner against the most heinous Malefactors in the Kingdom) they have devised, forged, vented, and published a most infamous and scurrile Libel, full of impudent lies and malicious calumnies against the Archbishops and Bishops of this Church; and have first given out from their Table, the order prescribed in these subsequent Articles, which we have insert, that the World may be witness of the illegality and maliciousness of their proceedings.

I.

TO desire the Presbytery of every Bishop, especially where he keeps his Residence, as also the Presbytery where his Cathedral Seat is, to have a special care of this Bill and Complaint against the Prelats, and particularly against the Bishop of their Diocese.

II.

That some Noblemen (if any be within the Presbytery) some Gentlemen and Barons, some Ministers, and some Commons, who are not chosen Commissioners to the Assembly, in their own Name, and in Name of all other Covenanters or Complainers, either within the Presbytery, or Diocese, or whole Kingdom, who are not Commissioners to the Assembly, will adhere and assist in this Complaint, that they present this Bill to the Presbytery.

III.

That they who are Complainers have a particular care to fill up the Blanks left in the Bill, in the assumptions of the particular fautes committed by the Bishop of the Diocese, against these general Rules, Canons and Acts: or if these Blanks will not contain the same, that the Complainers draw up in a particular claim, all the particular fautes and transgressions of the Bishop of that Diocese, against these Rules,

Canons, and Acts, or any other Law of the Church or Kingdom, and present the same to the Presbytery with this general Complaint. And if they cannot get the particulars presently ready, notwithstanding they present without any delay, because of the scarceness of the time, this Complaint as it stands with the Blanks; and in the mean time, may gather any other particulars against the Assembly, to which this Complaint is to be referred.

IV.

That the Presbytery finding the Complaint important, and the General Assembly so approaching, refer the same to the General Assembly, by an Act of this reference insert in the Books of the Presbytery.

V.

That upon this reference of the complaint to the Assembly, the Presbytery admonish the Complainers apud acta, to be present at the said Assembly, for assisting and verifying of the said Complaint.

VI.

That the Presbytery ordain all their Pastors, out of Pulpit on a Sabbath-day before noon, to cause read publicly this whole Complaint and the Presbyteries reference to the Assembly, and so to admonish the Bishop of that Diocese, the Delinquent complainer upon, with the rest of his Colleagues, to be present at the General Assembly, to answer to the particular Complaint, both in the particular and general Heads thereof, given or to be given in; and to abide the censure and trial of the Assembly thereupon. And likewise, out of Pulpit to admonish all others who have interest either in the pursuing or referring this Complaint, to be present at the said Assembly.

VII.

That the Presbytery insert in their Presbytery-Books the whole tenour of this Complaint, both in the general and particular Heads thereof; and that they have a care to cause deliver by their ordinary Bearer, to the Bishop of the Diocese, a Copy thereof, and a Copy of an Act, referring the same to the Assembly, and summon him to compeer before the Assembly. And if he be within the Countrey, and cannot be personally apprehended, to affix a full Copy thereof upon each dwelling place, and upon the most patent door of the Cathedral Church and Episcopal Seat.

VIII.

That the Complainers within the Presbytery where the Bishop is resident, or hath his Cathedral, be careful to keep correspondence with those in other Presbyteries within their Diocese, who best can specify and verify their Bishops usurpation and transgressions, and who had particular Articles to gather particular Declarations and Informations of the same.

IX.

That some of these Complainers in their own name, and with Warrant and Power from the rest, without failing attend the Assembly with the general Complaint and particular verifications and specifications of the same.

X. Tho

Anno 1638.
That in case the Presbytery where the Bishop hath his residence, or where he hath his Cathedral and Episcopal Seat, refuse to receive this Complaint, or refer the same to the Assembly, or to admonish or cite the Bishop delinquent before the Assembly, to answer to the Complaint; that the Gentlemen and others who are Complainers to the Presbyteries, upon their refusal take Instrument in the hands of the Clerk of the Presbytery, or any Notary, and protest that their refusal of the ordinary care of Justice, procured (without doubt) by the Bishop of that Diocese delinquent complained of, the equivalent of Law and Reason, be a formal citation of him. Which Protestation they may affix upon the dwelling house of the said Bishop, or upon his Cathedral Church, or the prime Church within the Presbytery. And that they may deal with any other Presbytery within the Diocese, who is better disposed, and upon their receipt of the Complaint, will refer the same to the Assembly, and cite the Bishop in manner above expressed, to compeer before the said Assembly.

XI.

Item, Perhaps some Minister within the Presbytery may think some Heads of this Complaint not to be relevant in his Opinion, or know the Bishop not to be guilty of all the particular Heads contained therein: Yet he in Justice cannot refuse to refer the trial of the Relevancy and Probation thereof to the General Assembly; especially seeing the Relevancy and Probation of more or fewer Points against the Bishop of the Diocese is sufficient, and seeing the subsumption of every particular Head is against the Bishop of the Diocese, with his Colleagues.

XII.

Item, To desire the Presbytery, upon Complaints upon any persons within the same, against any scandalous Minister either in Doctrine or Life, either to judge the Complaint, or refer the same to the trial and censure of the General Assembly, and so to admonish and cite the Ministers complained upon, to compeer before the General Assembly for that end.

According to which Articles, upon Sunday, Octob. 28. they caused read the said Libel in all the Churches of Edinburgh notwithstanding my Lord Commissioner's command given to the Provost and Bailies to the contrary, except in Holyrood-house, where it was read the next Sunday, as it was in other Churches of the Kingdom; proceeding herein, 1. Against all Charity, which doth not behave it self unseemly, nor delighteth in the discovery of mens nakedness, nor to take up a reproach, nor backbite with the tongue; much less to write a Book against a Brother. 2. Against the order prescribed by the Apostle not to rebuke an Elder, but to intreat him as a Father: And by the Act of Parliament, Jam. 6. par. 8. discharging all persons to impugn or to procure the diminution of the authority and power of the three Estates, or any of them. 3. Against all lawful and formal proceeding, especially that prescribed by the Act of General Assembly at Perth, Martij 1. 1596. whereby it is ordained, That all Summons contain the special cause and crime, which the said Libel doth not; naming only general calumnies, reproaches and aspersions without instruction of any particular, but leaving these to be filled up by malicious delation, after they have defamed their Brethren by publishing this Libel; C. 17. 14. as appears by the eighth and eleventh Articles of the said Instructions: And against the Order prescribed by the Assembly at St. Andrews, April 24. 1582. whereby it is enacted, That in process of deprivation of Ministers, there be a libelled precept upon forty days warning, being within the Realm, and threescore days being without the Realm, to be directed by the Kirk and such Commissioners thereof, as elects and admits the person complained of, summoning them to compeer and answer upon the Complaint. And in case of their absence at the first Summons, the second to be directed upon the like warning, with certification, if he fail, the Libel shall be admitted to probation; and he shall be holden pro confesso. Which form not being kept in a Summons inferring the punishment of deprivation, the same cannot be sustained by the order of that Assembly. 4. Against common equity, which admits Summons only by the authority of that Judge before whom the Delinquent is to compeer; whereby the Summons directed by the authority of these pretended Presbyteries, cannot sustain for compeerance before the General Assembly, nor could reference be made from the Presbytery to the General Assembly, the Parties never being summoned to compeer before the Presbytery, whereby either in presence of the Party, or in case of contumacy, the Complaint might be referred to the Assembly. That there was no citation before the reference, is clear by the said Instructions: And what a strange and odious form it is to insert such a calumnious Libel in the Presbytery Books, without citing of the Parties to answer thereto; and to cite Bishops before the General Assembly by the said Libel, by publishing the same at Churches, to which they had no relation, and were many miles distant, we leave it to the judgment of indifferent men. 5. Against all decency and respect due to men of their place, the said persons being men of dignity, and some of them of his Majesties most honourable privy Council, and known to be of blameless conversation, and to have deserved well, thus to be reviled and traduced, doth redound to the reproach of Church and State, and of the Gospel whereof they are Preachers. 6. Lastly, to omit many other informalities against their own Consciences, which we charge in the sight of God, as they must answer before his great and fearful Tribunal, if they suspect and know not perfectly, according to the judgment of Charity, them, whom they thus accuse, to be free of these Crimes wherewith they charge them, at least of many of them; as appears evidently by the eleventh Article of the said Instructions, having therein libelled the general, and have yet to seek the specification thereof, from the malice of their Neighbours, if so be they can furnish it. By which informal and malicious proceeding, it is most apparent, that our said Parties do seek our disgrace and overthrow most maliciously and illegally. And therefore we call Heaven and Earth to witness, if this be not a barbarous and violent persecution, that all circumstances being considered, hath few or none to parallel it since the beginning of Christianity; and if we have not just cause to decline the said pretended Commissioners as our Party.

Moreover, can these men expect, but in a lawful Assembly they were to be called and censured for their enorme Transgressions foresaid? And will any man think, that they can be Judges in their own Cause? It is alledged out of the Canon Law

1638. Law against the Pope, that if the Pope be at variance with any man, he ought not to be Judge himself, but to choose Arbitrators. And this may militate against them; except they be more unruly than Popes. Ludovicus Bavarus and all the Estates of Germany with him, did plead this nullity against the sentence and proceeding of Pope John 22. and of his Council: And the Archbishop of Cullen 1546. did plead the nullity of Paul 3. his Bull of Excommunication, because he protested, that so soon as a lawful Council should be opened, he would implead the Pope as Party, being guilty of many things censurable by the Council.

Tenthly, But the late Protestation doth shew the Authors thereof to be no less injurious to our place and Authority, than they are over-weening of their own. For it is against reason and practice of the Christian Church, that no Preme, Arch-bishop, nor Bishop, have place nor voice deliberative or decisive in General Assemblies, except they be authorized and elected by their Presbyterial Meetings, consisting of preaching and ruling Elders (as they call them) and without warrant or example in the primitive and purest times of the Church.

This also doth infer the nullity of an Assembly, if the Moderator and President for matters of Doctrine, and Discipline, shall be neither the Preme, Archbishop, nor Bishop, but he who by plurality of Presbyters and Lay-mens voices shall be elected: Which happily may be one of the inferior Clergy, or a Lay-person, as sometimes it hath fallen out: Whereas canonically, according to the ancient practice of the Church, the Preme should preside, according to the constitution of the first Council of Nice, Can. 6. of Antioch, Can. 9. and of the Imperial Law Novell. constit. 123. cap. 10. and according to our own Law. For what place in Assemblies Archbishops and Bishops had in other Christian Nations, the same they had (no doubt) in Scotland, and yet still do retain, except by some municipal Law it hath been restrained, which cannot be shewn. For the restraint of their authority by the Act of Parliament 1592. is restored by the Act of Parliament 1606. and 1609. and all Acts prejudicial to their Jurisdiction abrogated. Neither doth that Act 1592. establishing General Assemblies, debar Bishops from presiding therein; nor the abrogation of their Commission granted to them by Act of Parliament in Ecclesiastical Causes, imply & infer the abrogation of that authority which they received not from the Parliament, but from Christ, from whom they received the spiritual oversight of the Clergy under their charge; whereto belongeth the Presidentship in all Assemblies for matters spiritual, always with due submission to the Supreme Governor: Which is so intrinsically inherent in them, as they are Bishops, that hoc ipso that they are Bishops, they are Presidents of all Assemblies of the Clergy; as the Chancellor of the Kingdom hath place in Council and Session, not by any Act or Statute, but hoc ipso that he is Chancellor. By Act of Parliament Bishops are declared to have their right in Synods and other inferior Meetings, but by no Law restrained nor debarred from the exercise of it in National Assemblies; and the Law allowing Bishops to be Moderators of the Synods, doth present a List in absence of the Metropolitan, to whom of right this place doth belong, as said is, out of which the Moderator of the General Assembly shall be chosen. For, is it not more agreeable to reason, order, and decency, that out of Moderators of Synods a Moderator of the general Assembly should be chosen, then of the inferior Clergy subject to them? Car. 14.

As concerning that Act of the General Assembly 1580. whereby Bishops are declared to have no warrant out of Scripture; if corruption of time shall be regarded, the authority of that Assembly might be neglected no less then that at Glasgow, 1610. But it is ordinary that prior Acts of Assemblies and Parliaments give place to the posterior; for Posteriora derogant prioribus. And there past not full six years when a General Assembly at Edinburgh found, that the name of Bishops hath a special charge and function annexed to it by the word of God; and that it was lawful for the General Assembly to admit a Bishop to a Benefice, presented by the King's Majesty, with power to admit, visit, and deprive Ministers, and to be Moderators of the Presbyteries where they are resident, and subject only to the sentence of the General Assembly.

As for that Act at Montrose, let them answer to it that have their calling by that Commission. We profess that we have a lawful calling by the election of the Clergy, who are of the Chapter of our Cathedrals, and consecration of Bishops by his Majesties consent and approbation, according to the laudable Laws and ancient Custom of this Kingdom, and of the Church in ancient times, and do homage to our Sovereign Lord for our Temporalities, and acknowledge him solo Deo minore, next unto God in all Causes, and over all persons Spiritual or Temporal, in his own Dominions Supreme Governor. But now we may take up Cyprian his Complaint Lib. 3. Ep. 14. Quod non periculum metuere debemus de offensa Domini, quando aliqui de Presbyteris nec Evangelij nec loci sui memores, sed neque futurum Dei judicium, neque prepositum sibi Episcopum cogitantes, quod nunquam omnino sub antecessoribus factum est, cum contumelia & contemptu prepositi, totum sibi vendicem? Atque utinam non prostrata fratrum nostrorum salute sibi omnia vendicarent. Contumelias Episcopatus nostri dissimulare & ferre possem, sicut dissimulari semper & petuli; sed dissimulandi nunc locus non est, quando decipiantur fraternitas nostra à quibusdam vestrum, qui dum sine ratione restituenda salutis plausibiles esse cupiunt, magis lapsi obsunt.

Twelfthly, Lastly, it is most manifest by the premises, how absurd it is and contrary to all reason and practice of the Christian Church, that Archbishops and Bishops shall be judged by Presbyteries; and more absurd, that they should be judged by a mixt meeting of Presbyteries and Laicks, convening without lawful authority of the Church. How, and by whom they are to be judged, according to the Custom of ancient times, may be seen by the Council of Chalcedon, Can. 9. and Concil. Milevit. Can. 22. and Concil. Carthag. 2. Can. 10. Nor do we decline the lawful trial of any competent Judicatory in the Kingdom, especially of a General Assembly lawfully constitute, or of his Majesties High Commissioner, for any thing in life or doctrine can be laid to our charge: Only we declare and affirm, That it is against order, decency, & Scripture, that we should be judged by Presbyters or by Laicks, without authority and Commission from Sovereign authority.

For the Reasons forefaid, and many more, and for discharge of our duty to God, to his Church, and to our Sacred Sovereign, lest by our silence we betray the Churches right, his Majesties authority, and our own consciences, We for our selves, and 1638. and in name of the Church of Scotland, are forced to protest, That this Assembly be reputed and holden null in Law Divine and Human, and that no Church-man be holden to appear before, assist or approve it; and therefore, that no Letter, Petition, Subscription, Interlocutor, Certification, Admonition, or other Act whatsoever proceeding from the said Assembly, or any Member thereof, be any wise prejudicial to the Religion and Confession of Faith by Act of Parliament established, or to the Church, or any Member thereof, or to the Jurisdiction, Liberties, Privileges, Rents, Benefices, and Possessions of the same, Acts of General Assembly, of Council and Parliament in favours thereof, or to the three Estates of the Kingdom, or any of them, or to us, or any of us, in our Persons or Estates, Authority, Jurisdiction, Dignity, Rents, Benefices, Reputation, and good Name: But on the contrary, that all such Acts and Deeds above-mentioned, and every one of them, are, and shall be reputed and esteemed unjust, illegal and null in themselves, with all that hath followed or may follow thereupon.

And forasmuch as the said Assembly doth intend (as we are informed) to call in question, discuss, and condemn things not only in themselves lawful and warrantable, but also defined and determined by Acts of General Assembly and Parliaments, and in practice accordingly, to the disgrace and prejudice of Reformed Religion, Authority of the Laws and Liberties of the Church and Kingdom, weakning his Majesties Authority, disgracing the Profession and Practice which he holdeth in the Communion of the Church where he liveth, and branding of Reformed Churches with the foul aspersions of Idolatry and Superstition; we protest before God and Man, That what shall be done in this kind, may not redound to the disgrace or disadvantage of Reformed Religion, nor be reputed a Deed of the Church of Scotland.

We protest that we imbrace and hold, that the Religion presently professed in the Church of Scotland, according to the Confession thereof, received by the Estates of this Kingdom, and ratified in Parliament the year 1567. is the true Religion bringing men to eternal Salvation, and do detest all contrary Error.

We protest, that Episcopal Government in the Church is lawful and necessary; and that the same is not opposed and impugned for any defect or fault, either in the Government or Governors; but by the malice and craft of the Devil, envying the success of that Government in this Church these many years by-past, most evident in planting of Churches with able and learned Ministers, recovering of the Church Rents, helping of the Ministers stipends, preventing of these jars betwixt the King and the Church, which in former times dangerously infested the same, keeping the people in peace and obedience, and suppressing of Popery, which, in respect either of the number of their Professors, or boldness of their Profession, was never at so low an ebb in this Kingdom as before these stirs.

We protest that, seeing these who for scruple of Conscience did mislike the Service-Book, Canons, and High Commission, which were apprehended or given forth to be the cause of the troubles of this Church, have now received satisfaction, and his Majesty is graciously pleased to forget and forgive all Offences by-past in these stirs, that all the Subjects of this Kingdom may live in peace and Christian love, as becometh faithful Subjects and good Christians, laying aside all hatred, envy, and bitterness; and if any shall refuse so to do, they may bear the blame, and be thought the cause of the troubles that may ensue: And the same be not imputed to us, or any of us, who desire nothing more, than to live in peace and concord with all men under his Majesties obedience; and who have committed nothing against the Laws of the Kingdom and Church, that may give any man just cause of offence; and are so far from wishing hurt to any man, in his person or estate, notwithstanding all the indignities and injuries we have suffered, that for quenching this present Combustion, and settling peace in this Church and Countrey, we could be content (after clearing of our innocency of all things where-with we can be charged) not only to lay down our Bishopricks at his Majesties feet, to be disposed of at his Royal pleasure, but also, if so be it pleased God, to lay down our lives, and become a Sacrifice for this Attonement.

We protest in the sight of God, to whom one day we must give account, that we make use of this Declinator and Protestation out of the conscience of our duty to God and his Church, and not out of fear of any guiltiness, whereof any of us is conscious to himself, either of wickedness in our lives, or miscarriage in our callings; being content every one of us, for our own particular (as we have never shewn our selves to be otherwise) to undergo the lawful and most exact trial of any competent Judicatory within this Kingdom, or of his Majesties High Commissioner.

And we most humbly intreat his Grace to intercede with the King's Majesty, that he may appoint a free and lawful General Assembly, such as God's Word, the practice of the primitive Church, and Laws of the Kingdom to prescribe and allow, with all convenient speed, to the effect the present distractions of the Church may be settled. And if there be any thing to be laid to the charge of any of the Clergy, of whatsoever degree, either in life and manners, or doctrine, or exercise of his calling and jurisdiction, he may be heard to answer all accusations, and abide all trial, either for clearing his innocency, or suffering condign punishment, according to his transgressions; declining always this Assembly, for the causes above-written: Like as by these presents, we, and every one of us, decline the same, the whole Members thereof, and Commissioners foresaid directed thereto, and every one of them.

We protest, that this our Protestation, in respect of our lawful absence, may be received in the name of us under-subscribing for our selves, and in the name of the Church of Scotland that shall adhere to the said Protestation, and in the name of every one of them, from our welbeloved Dr. Robert Hamilton Minister at Glasford, to whom by these presents we give our full power and express mandate to present the same in or at the said Assembly, or where else it shall be necessary to be used, with all submission and obedience due to our gracious Sovereign and his Majesties High Commissioner; and upon the presenting and using thereof, acts and instruments to crave, and all other things to do that necessarily are required in such cases; firm and stable holding, or for to hold, what he, or any of them, shall lawfully do in the premises.

In witness whereof, as we are ready with our Anno Blood, so with our Hand we have subscribed these 1638. Presents, at the Palace of Holy-rood-house, Newcastle, and Glasgow, the 16, 17, and 20th days of Novemb. 1638. & sic subscribitur;

After these passages, there were read divers
 A Protestations at the Lord Commissioners instance, from several places against the lawfulness of this Assembly, both in regard of the Lay-elders present in it, and the Ministers Commissioners in it chosen by Lay-elders: One sent from many Ministers, and read publickly, doth here follow.

The Supplication and humble Remonitance of the Ministers of the Church of Scotland, presented to his Majesties High Commissioner and General Assembly held at Glasgow in November 1638.

May it please your Grace,

And you right Noble, Right Worshipful, and A you most Reverend Brethren, convened by his Majesties Proclamation in this venerable National Assembly, to consult upon the most convenient ways, and to enact such Ecclesiastical Laws, as to your Wisdoms seems most expedient, for preserving of peace and truth in this Church, for which ends we from the bottom of our hearts (as feeling Members of the same) earnestly intreat him, who hath promised to be with his own to the end of the World, by his Spirit and Grace, so to direct and assist your Wisdoms, that by this long expected Meeting, glory may redound to his ever glorious Name, and peace to this rent Church, which all the Members thereof, with most earnest wishes, expect at your hands. For the present, we thought it our duty, as those whom it doth most clearly concern (our great Shepherd having committed to our Charge a part of that Flock which he hath redeemed with his precious blood) to present unto you our just fears which arise from the sudden in-croaching of the Laick (now called Ruling) Elders, in divers Presbyteries of this Kingdom, having chief hand in choosing of Commissioners there, lest they, with Commissioners thus elected, may bring upon the Neck of the Ministry and Church here, the heavy yoke of over-ruling Elders in all times coming, to the no small hurt of us and our Successors in the Gospel, except timely remedy be provided.

Our humble Supplication therefore to your Grace, and Members of this present Assembly, is, That all these Commissioners thus chosen by the voice of Laick Elders, and in whose Commissions they have had hand, may be removed, as men to whose voices and judgments we cannot submit our selves in matter of Church Government, for the just fears above exprest, they being justly suspect Judges not to be admitted, and their Elections and Commissions void for Reasons following:

First, There is no Law in this Kingdom whereby Laick Elders have any voice in choosing Commissioners to General Assemblies; the chusers therefore having no legal Power to elect, those that are chosen by such, can have no place nor voice in this Assembly.

Secondly, Albeit there have been heretofore, and before Churches were fully planted, a custom that Laick Elders did sit in Presbyteries, yet that custom hath been these thirty five years by-past, universally (and above forty years in most Presbyteries) interrupted; which Prescription is sufficient to make void any such Custom: So that it can be no sufficient warrant for them to sit and voice in Presbyteries now, much less to intrude themselves (as they have done in many Presbyteries) contrary to the minds and publick Pro-testation of the Ministry.

Thirdly, When Laick Elders had place in Pres-byteries, yet it was ordained that the voices should not be equal in number, with the voices of the Ministry, as is to be seen in the Book of Discipline Chapter. But in this Election, their number were not only equal, but in most parts more, because out of every Parish there was a Laick Elder, and so at least equal in number; and in election of these Commissioners, against whose election we except, there was put upon the list six in some places, and in others four of the Ministers, who being removed, in their absence the choice was made when the Laick Elders by six or four at the least exceeded the Ministers in number of voices, yea, in some Presbyteries the Laick Elders were twice so many in number; so that these Commissioners are mainly chosen by the Laity, and not by the Ministers, neither can we acknowledge them for ours.

Fourthly, These Laick Elders did of old only assist in Discipline, not meddling with points of Doctrine (suffering the spirit of the Prophets to be subject to the Prophets, according to the Apostolical Rule;) but now they intrude themselves to sit and voice in the Presbyteries in matters of Doctrine, and have given Commission to those whom we except against, to voice in this venerable Assembly, in Doctrine as well as in matters of Discipline; which Commissions are null, as proceeding a non habente potestatem. For these and other most weighty causes, the Election of such Commissioners, and their place in this Assembly being so dangerous to the Church, threaten the same with the most intolerable yoke of bondage to be laid upon the neck of the Presbyteries by Laick over-ruling Elders, to the prejudice of the Liberties of the said Presbyteries, and whole Discipline of this Church. We could not, out of Conscience to God, our Callings, and Flocks, but make humble remonstrance of the same to your Grace and Members of this grave Assembly: Withal protesting, both in our own names, and in name of all the Ministry and Body of this Church that will adhere to this present Supplication, that all Sentences, Conclusions, Canons, Statutes, and Ordinances, which shall be made in that Assembly wherein the foresaid Commissioners shall have determinative voices, to be void, null, and of no effect to oblige us or any of us to the obedience of the same: But if this our just Supplication be not admitted (which we hope and earnestly pray may be graciously accepted) then this our Protestation may be of force against such Laws and proceedings that may follow thereupon. Thus hoping for your charitable construction of this our necessary duty in so eminent a danger of the Church, and humbly intreating these presents may be put upon Record, We rest.

And

And when the Protestation of the Presbytery of Glasgow (which was a very strong one) begun to be read, the Principal of the Colledge there desired the forbearance of it for a time; to which the Moderator gladly yielded: But the Lord Commissioner, who had delivered it in with his own hands, pressed the reading of it out; which the Moderator refused, alledging that any man might withdraw his own Protestation, much more desire the forbearance of reading of it: To which the Lord Commissioner replied, That the Protestation was subscribed not only by the hand of the Principal, but the major part of the Ministers of that Presbytery, of whom many were Covenanters; that in all their names it was presented unto him, and therefore could not be recalled by any one of them, without the consent of the rest, praying him that it might be read out to the end; but all in vain; for no Justice could be had from them, especially in a point which so much concerned their reputation: For they conceived it would be a great blur to their business, if a Protestation (made by that Presbytery, in which was the seat of the Assembly) should be known: And therefore they would neither read it, nor did they deliver it back again, against all Rules both of Justice and Equity. After this Contest the Assembly for that night was dismissed.

The Lord Commissioner wondering that the Principal of the Colledge should in publick desire the forbearance of publishing the Protestation of the Presbytery of Glasgow in the Assembly, used means to know the reason of it; and found by the averment of persons of good credit upon their own knowledge, that the night before late at Ten of the clock, the Lord Lowdan and the Moderator, with divers others Covenanting Ministers, had been with the Principal, and told him, That the Presbyterian Protestation would make a great division among them; that unless he did withdraw it, he must never look to live quietly in Glasgow, nor any where in Scotland. That the Principal told them, it was presented to the Lord Commissioner, from whom it was not possible to recover it; that then by the same threatnings they adjured him to desire the forbearance of reading of it, if it should be tendered to the Assembly; that after they were parted from him, his Wife all in tears begged the like of him, affirming, that the Lord Lindsey had been with her, and sworn to her, that both he and his must be utterly ruined, if she could not prevail with him for re-calling that Protestation. This and many other passages heretofore mentioned, banishing quite out of the Lord Commissioners mind, and the minds of all his Majesties well-affected Counsellors there present, all hopes, not only of just and fair, but even of formal proceedings in that Assembly, where not so much as the shew and countenance of Justice was to be discerned, nor anything but the power and obstinate wilfulness of the Covenanters, and the unanswerable nullities of this Assembly, in regard both of the Members elected, and the manner of their Election, being thoroughly considered, and the Reasons of the Bishops declinator presented to the Lord Commissioner being seriously weighed, by which they did not decline the Judgment of a General Assembly lawfully constituted, but only of this Assembly, which was to be accounted far rather a Laical Convention, than Ecclesiastical, all the Members whereof had barred themselves from being Judges by their Solemn Oath of Combination for the rooting out of that Kingdom both the Bishops persons and callings; to whose sentence his or the Lord Commissioner could not deliver them over without betraying all courses of Justice, and denying to the Bishops that protection which cannot be denied by the King to any of his Subjects, viz. the benefit of the Laws of that Church and Kingdom. And besides, the Lord Commissioner having certain and unquestionable intelligence of the Covenanters unmoveable resolution, that although the Assembly should be continued, and all things which they desired (even to their own wishes) should be granted and effected, yet that the quietness and peace of that Kingdom should be never awhit the more settled or established, but that they were determined to choose at this Assembly certain Committees, who, under the name of Commissioners from the General Assembly, should keep up their Tables, and be chosen and continued from one Assembly to another, and so hold on the same rebellious courses which they have held ever since the first erection of their Tables, to the utter overthrow of his Majesties Royal authority, and the authority of the Lords of his Council, and Lords of the Session under him: And the Lord Commissioner well weighing his Majesties Instructions, according to which he was to carry himself in this Assembly, if he should find that these mischiefs and courses of Injustice could not be stopped, resolved the next day (according to his Majesties special commandment) in his Majesties name, and by his authority to dissolve that Assembly, whose aim was only to rob his Majesty of his Sovereign Power, and to put it in the hands of their Commissioners.

According to which resolution the Lord Commissioner the next day, being Wednesday the 28th of November, went betimes in the morning to the Church, and the Council (having warning over night) met him in the Chapter-house, where they sat in Consultation before they went to the Assembly: He did then impart to them the resolution he had to dissolve the Assembly, and did ask their advice for the manner of doing it: After hearing each of their advice severally, he was confirmed in his resolution. The reason why the Lord Commissioner held the Council in that place, was, because some of the Council, who were present, should have no time to communicate his resolution to the Covenanters, nor to consult with them about the hindering it; the Assembly being fully set before the Council came out, so that what had passed there, could not be communicated to them.

The first thing propounded there by the Moderator that day, was this: A day or two before, there were brought into the Assembly three or four great Volumes by their new Clerk, which he alledged were the Acts of the General Assembly from the very first Reformation of that Church, which, by the special Providence of God, and his own careful industry, had been recovered, else they had been lost for ever, to the invaluable loss of the purity of the Religion and Discipline established amongst them; for they had been thrown by for many years, until he by some strange accident had light upon them. After which Speech of the Clerk, the Moderator had desired them to choose a Committee to peruse these Books, and to report to the Assembly, Whether they conceived them to be the true and authentical Acts of the General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland.

The

The day before this, these Committees had made their report that they had perused them, and had found them to be true and authentical Records, and delivered in Writing some Reasons of this their Opinion; which made the impartial Auditors wonder how in two days men could peruse, and make a judgment of such Volumes, which other men (who took themselves to be no Fools) thought could hardly be done in one Year: But that was all one, the Moderator this day put it to the question and voices, Whether they would allow the Copies of those Books of Assembly (which the Committees the day before had reported to be good and faithful Copies) to be reputed ever hereafter for the authentical Records and Registers of the Church of Scotland? The Lord Commissioner prayed them to forbear doing any thing suddenly in a business of so great importance; that nothing, especially if it were doubtful, could be made a publick Record of any Judicatory which was to oblige his Majesties Subjects, unless his Majesty first by his Advocate and Learned Counsel were satisfied of the authentical Authority of that Record; and therefore wished them to stay until that course might be taken, and before that time not to put it to voices: But all in vain, for presently they of the Assembly (without one contrary voice) concluded these Books to be authentical Registers, and so to be held and reputed for ever, without knowing what was in them: They were four Books, and very large, and confessed not to be the Originals, but Copies. The Lord Commissioner then remembring that at the Palace at Holy-rood-house he was denied the sight of the Books of the Assembly (the Covenanters having threatned the former Clerk of the Assembly, if he should let his Majesties Commissioner have the perusal of them) begun now to think, that there might be stuff enough in them against the King's Regal authority, and perhaps a great deal of it of their own devising; which caused the Lord Commissioner to enter into the Clerk of Registers hands a solemn Protestation against the validity of these Records, and against any of his Majesties Subjects being obliged by them, until such time as they should be perused and allowed by such as his Majesty should authorize by Commission for that purpose.

Next, The Moderator desired the Clerk to read certain answers, which upon the sudden had been drawn up (as he said) by certain Brethren to the Reasons contained in the Bishops Declinator which had been read the day before: And indeed, so soon as they were heard, it was easily believed that they were drawn up upon a sudden, without either fear or wit, being very poor and silly, stuffed full of citations out of their own Books of Discipline, which did allow Lay-elders; and by these Testimonies concluded the exception of the Bishops against Lay-elders, and Ministers, Commissioners chosen by them for having voice in the Assembly, to be invalid; which made some admire by what consequence it could be inferred, that because there had been Lay-elders in particular Church-Sessions, nay, and perhaps in Presbyteries, that therefore these Lay-elders either had, or must now have voices in the General Assembly, or in choosing the Ministers Commissioners to it: Yet the Moderator caused another Paper to be read in defence of Lay-elders, of the very same tedious stuff with the former: And, to magnifie those Books of Discipline, so often cited in both these Papers, the Moderator desired the whole Assembly to hear himself read a long Latin Testimony, given in the Syntagma of the Confessions of the Reformed Churches, to the purity of the Discipline of the Church of Scotland. The Lord Commissioner called for the Book, and desired to see what he had read, and found it to be a private Testimony of one unknown, inserted by the Printer or setter out of that Syntagma, to make it sell the better, because it had some new thing in it; which made a good many laugh at that so much magnified Testimony. Then the Moderator, to take away that exception in the Bishops Declinator, that the Assembly was a declared Party (and therefore could not be their Judge) alledged, that the Remonstrants had made the same Objection against the Synod of Dort, but that it was repelled by all the Divines there present, and the invalidity of that exception declared by none better than by the Divines of Great Britain, whose judgment against that exception he then out of the publick Acts of that Synod did read: The Lord Commissioner told the Moderator, that he should have done well to have translated into Scottish that passage which he last read, and the former out of the Syntagma, that so many of the Lay-elders, who were to judge of the fitness of these citations, might understand him and them; which the Moderator passed over with a smile. One who stood by the Lord Commissioner, and had been present at the Synod of Dort, asked leave first of the Lord Commissioner, and then of the Moderator to speak, which being granted him by both, he answered the Moderators answer to the Bishops objection, thus: That the Bishops exception against them of the Assembly, as pars adversa, differed from that of the Remonstrants against the Synod of Dort two ways: First, in regard of the matter of it. For the Synod consisting of Divines, and the matters controverted being points of Divinity (and by some men thought to be fundamental points of faith, though they were not so) in which Scholars use not to be neutral, it was impossible for the Remonstrants to find Divines to be their Judges, if they would except against such Divines as had declared themselves to be of the one opinion or the other: But it was not so with Episcopacy in the judgment of the Members of this Assembly; for they could not hold the allowing or rejecting of Episcopacy to be a point of Doctrine, because points of Doctrine are not alterable; but the Church of Scotland in her positive Confession, Article 21. did hold Church Policy or Government alterable at the will of the Church; which opinion, whether he did allow or not, he was not then and there to declare: But sure in such points, which they themselves held alterable and indifferent at the will of the Church, being no points of Doctrine, there was no necessity of pre-declaring their judgment, especially after they meant to be Judges: Nay, there was a necessity of not pre-declaring their judgment against Episcopal Government, considering it stood now in force by Acts both of Church and Parliament; and therefore that the Declaration of their judgment against it, (even since they intended to be Judges of it, but before they were actually so) did bar them from being Judges of it at all. But secondly, and that upon which he principally insisted, was this: That the Bishops case in their exception against this Assembly, differed from that of the Remonstrants against the other Synod, in the manner of the Members of that Synods pre-declaration, and of the Members of this Assemblies pre-declaration. Many of the Members of that Synod had Anno 1638. pre-declared themselves by Discourſing, Writing, Preaching, &c. but not by any judicial Act, nor by any Act equivalent to a judicial Act, ſuch as ſwearing againſt the other Tenet, binding themſelves by Oathes, Covenants, Combinations, Confederacies, Affociations againſt the abettors of it, all which being Acts analogical to judicial Acts, and being done by the Members of this Aſſembly againſt the Biſhops, abſolutely barred them from being Judges in the queſtion of theſe Biſhops perſons or calling. Some answer was made to this by the Moderator and others, which required no reply; and therefore received none, that which was answered being no way againſt that which had been delivered: For the Moderator conceiving that he who ſpoke, had affirmed that the five Articles treated of at the Synod of Dort, had been fundamental points of Faith (of which opinion the Speaker never was, nor is) fell upon a diſcourſe of fundamental and not fundamental points of Faith; affirming that the Synod of Dort had never determined the five Articles to be fundamental points of Faith, which the former Speaker knew very well to be true: And it made many auditors think, that the Moderator did deliver this only becauſe he would have ſomething to ſay; for they did conceive that he had been a man ſo rigid in theſe Tenets, that he had held them to be fundamental points of Faith: But whether he did or not, there were many Miniſters Members of the Aſſembly, who did hold them to be fundamental points, and moſt unchriſtianiſm and uncharitably had Preached, that the Remonſtrants Tenets did deſtroy the very foundation of Faith; and whoſoever ſided with them in the five Articles, could not poſſibly be ſaved. But now the other exception laid by him that ſpoke, and in which he conceived the ſtrength of his Speech principally to lie, viz. That by their ſwearing, and combining by a Covenant againſt the Biſhops (which was a plain pre-judging of them) they had barred themſelves from being their Judges; the Moderator was pleaſed to make no answer at all, though of all that was ſpoken it moſt principally required one. Another Miniſter, one of the graveſt and learnedeſt in the Aſſembly, did conceive that he which ſpoke had affirmed, that Councils and Synods were only Judges of points of Faith and Doctrine, but not of Government or other matters; and inſtanced in Novatus and Donatus, who by Councils and Synods had been cenſured in points of Schiſm; which no man ever denied, nor ever came within the compaſs of the thoughts or words of him that ſpoke. Here a Lay-Elder, who was a Lord, conceived that he who ſpoke had ſaid ſomething inſinuating that Lay-Elders had given voices in ſome Councils; Thereupon the perſon that ſpoke, unwilling to let that paſs, asked leave to tell his Lordſhip that he was miſtaken, and that if the L. Commiſſioner and the Aſſembly would give him leave, he would maintain it againſt any man in the Aſſembly, that neither the name nor thing of a Lay-Elder, was ever known to any General or Provincial Council; nay, not to any particular Church in the whole Chriſtian World, before Calvin's daies. To this no reply was made, ſave only by the Moderator, who firſt ſaid that it would be thought a ſtrange thing in England, if any of this Aſſembly ſhould ſtand up in the Convocation Houſe, and ſpeak againſt their Church Government: to which was answered by him that ſpoke, That he neither did ſpeak, nor would have ſpoken there, without leave asked and obtained; nor would he have asked leave, if it had not been to have cleared a paſſage of the Synod of Dort urged by the Moderator, and in which he himſelf was intereſſed. And it ſeems here the Moderator was brought very low, by telling the party that his Father while he lived was of another opinion: to which the other answered, That that was a weak reaſon; for there were ſome Members of the Aſſembly then ſitting, whoſe Fathers had been Papists: And he who ſpoke did very much wonder that the Moderator ſhould think it ſtrange for him to differ from his Father in his judgment of theſe points of Eccleſiaſtical Government; for he did not apprehend it ſo great a matter for any man to differ from his Father in judgment, as to differ from himſelf: and he was ſure that the Moderator knew well enough that many Members of the Aſſembly, who were now fierceſt againſt Episcopall Government, within theſe few years had been as earneſt maintainers of it as any, and more ambitious and earneſt ſuitors for Biſhopricks than any other. The Moderator at laſt cut off all further conteſtation about theſe Lay-Elders, by affirming that the ſtate of the queſtion as it ſtood before them, was not whether Lay-Elders had ever been received in other Churches, but whether their Office and place in the Aſſembly was agreeable with the conſtitutions of the Church of Scotland; and ſo no more was ſpoke of it.

The Moderator from that Speech which was made for juſtifying the Biſhops exception againſt the competency of their Judges, viz. the Aſſembly, becauſe the Members of it had declared themſelves parties, took occaſion to ſpeak thus to the Aſſembly: Since we ſee both the competency and conſtitution of this Judicatory and aſſembly is thus openly impugned, it is high time to clear this point, of which none can be Judge but the Aſſembly it ſelf, and therefore I will preſently put it to voices, Whether this Aſſembly be the lawful and competent Judge of the Libel againſt the Biſhops, notwithstanding the reaſons contained in their Declinator.

This gave the Lord Commiſſioner the occaſion (which he neglected not) to do and declare that which by his Maſtieſties Special Commandment he had reſolved on; for he preſently made a Speech of a competent length, the ſum whereof was this: I ſhould perhaps have continued a little longer with you, if you had not ſet upon a point which doth inforce my deſerting you: You are now about to jeſtle the lawfulness of this Judicatory, and the competency of it againſt the Biſhops, whom you have cited hither; neither of which I can allow, if I ſhall diſcharge either my duty towards God, or loyalty towards my gracious and juſt Maſter. This is a day to me both of gladneſs and ſadneſs; Gladneſs, in that I have both ſeen this Aſſembly meet, which his Maſtieſties Subjects have been made believe was never intended by Him, and in that I ſhall now in his Maſtieſties name make good unto you all his moſt gracious offers in his laſt Royal Proclamation, which likewise his Maſtieſties Subjects were made believe would never be performed by Him: Of Sadneſs, in that you who have called ſo much for a free General Aſſembly, having one moſt free, in his Maſtieſties intentions, granted you, have ſo handled and marred the matter, that there is not the leaſt ſhadow of freedom to be diſcerned in this your Meeting: for the former, which is the diſcharge and performance of your Sovereigns gracious promiſes, let this Paper, which I deliver to the Clerk to be read, witneſs it to you all, which I am ſure you can not chuſe but receive with all thankfulneſs and due acknowledgment of his Maſtieſties Piety, Goodneſs, and Clemency, ry, unless all Religion and goodness be quite banished Anno out of this Land: Here the Clerk publicly read the 1638. Paper, which followeth:

THe King's Majesty being informed, that many of his good Subjects have apprehended, that by the introducing of the Service-Book and Book of Canons, the in-bringing of Popery and Superstition hath been intended, hath been graciously pleased to discharge, like as by these he doth discharge the Service-Book and Book of Canons, and the practise of them or either of them: And annulleth and rescindeth all Acts of Council, Proclamations, and all other Acts and Deeds whatsoever, that have been made and published for establishing them, or either of them: And declareth the same to be null, and to have no force nor effect in time coming.

The King's Majesty, as he conceived, for the ease and benefit of his Subjects, established the High Commission, that thereby Justice might be Ministred, and the faults and errors of such persons as are made liable thereto, taken order with and punished, with the more conveniency and less trouble to the people: But finding his gracious intentions therein to be mistaken, hath been pleased to discharge, like as by these presents he doth discharge the same, and all acts and deeds whatsoever made for establishing thereof. And the King's Majesty being informed, that the urging of the five Articles of Perthes Assembly hath bred distraction in the Church and State, hath been graciously pleased to take the same to his Royal consideration, and for the quiet and peace of this Country, hath not only dispensed with the practise of the said Articles, but also discharged all and whomsoever persons from urging the practise thereof, upon either Laick or Ecclesiastical person whatsoever: And hath freed all his Subjects from all censure and pains, whether Ecclesiastical or Secular, for not urging, practising, or obeying them, or any of them, notwithstanding of any thing contained in the Acts of Parliament, or general Assembly to the contrary. And his Majesty is further contented, that the Assembly take the same so far into their consideration, as to represent it to the next Parliament, there to be ratified as the Estates shall find fitting.

And because it hath been pretended, that Oathes have been Administred different from that which is conceived in the Acts of Parliament, his Majesty is pleased to declare by Me, that no other Oath shall be required of any Minister at his entry, than that which is set down in the Act of Parliament.

And that it may appear how careful his Majesty is, that no corruption or innovation shall creep into this Church, neither yet any scandal, vice, or fault of any person whatsoever (censurable or punishable by the Assembly) go unpunished, his Majesty is content to declare by Me, and assure all his good people, that general Assemblies shall be kept so oft as the affairs of this Church shall require.

And that none of Our good Subjects may have cause of grievances against the proceedings of the Prelates, his Majesty is content, that all and every one of the present Bishops and their Successours, shall be answerable, and accordingly from time to time censurable according to their merits by the General Assembly.

And to give all his Majesties good people full assurance, that he never intended to admit any alteration or change in the true Religion professed within this Kingdom, and that they may be truly and fully satisfied of the reality of his intentions, and integrity of the same, his Majesty hath been pleased to require and command all his good Subjects to subscribe the Confession of Faith and Band for maintenance thereof, and of his Majesties Person and Authority formerly signed by Our dear Father in anno 1580. and now likewise requireth all those of this present Assembly to subscribe the same. And it is his Majesties will, that this be inserted and registred in the Books of Assembly, as a Testimony to Posterity, not only of the sincerity of his intentions to the said true Religion, but also of his resolution to maintain and defend the same, and his Subjects in the Profession thereof. Subscribitur

HAMILTON.

After the Reading whereof, Our Commissioner went on, and added: I have, you see, subscribed that Paper with mine own hand, and to make his Majesties Religion, Grace, Goodness, and the Zeal which he hath to settle the peace of this Church and Kingdom, known to all succeeding Generations, I do require that it be entred into your ordinary Books of Assembly; but with this provision, That this my assent to the Act of Registring this his Majesties Declaration, shall be no approbation of the lawfulness of this Assembly, or of any other Act made, or to be made in it, but that all Protestations, made or to be made against this Assembly in all other acts and proceedings thereof, shall stand in full force and effect:
 And of the delivery of this Paper, containing his Majesties gracious offers, into the hands of the Clerk of the Assembly, and of my requiring it to be registred in the Books of the same, as also of my Protestation against the lawfulness of this Assembly in all other Acts, I take publick Instruments in the hands of the Clerk of Our Sovereign Lord his Register, and require him to make an Act thereof. Which being done the Moderator in a short Speech acknowledged his Majesties special goodness in granting the particulars contained in the Paper, promising it should be Regi-stred in the Books of Assembly, and desired to go on with the business of the Assembly.

But the Lord Commissioner told them, he must go on with them no more; for now the sad part was behind, viz. That since they had brought Lay-Elders to give voices in this Assembly, a thing not practised before, or at least dis-used so long, that no man present had seen it; the Ministers sitting here as Commissioners were chosen by Lay-Elders, a thing never heard of before in this Church; all the persons having voices here, were before the Elections designed by the Tables at Edinburgh; all others by their express directions barred; these few Commissioners sent hither, but not chosen according to their designation, were by their Cavils, made for that purpose, set aside, and not admitted to have voices; the Bishops cited hither were to be judged by the very same persons who had pre-judged and condemned them at their Tables; he attested Heaven and Earth, whether this could be imagined to be any way a free Assembly, and therefore called God to witness, that they themselves were the cause, and the only cause why this Assembly could not have that happy issue which his Majesty heartily wished; and why the Bishops could receive no censure from them, in regard of these their sinister proceedings: for how could any man expect Justice from them, who had denied it to his Majesty, in refusing voices to his Commissioners Assessors, which was never denied to his Majesties Royal Father, when he called far more Assessors than his Majesty did now? Much more to this purpose was delivered by the Lord Commissioner; upon all which he commanded and required them not to proceed any further in this Assembly, and declared that whatsoever they should say or do hereafter in it, he in his Majesties name protested against it, and that it should never oblige any of the King's Subjects, nor be repaired for an Act of General Assembly.

The Moderator with a Speech well penned, which he had in readiness whensoever the Assembly should be dissolved, seemed much to deplore the Lord Commissioners resolution for breaking up the Assembly; he attributed very much to the King's power in Ecclesiastical Causes and Assemblies, said many things of his Majesties power, quite contrary to much which they have since printed in their seditious Pamphlets and Protestations, and much more then was liked and approved by many of his Fellow-Covenanters: Towards the end of his Speech he affirmed, That his Majesty was Universal Bishop over all his Kingdoms, &c. which made the Lord Commissioner use means to have the Copy of his Speech, but it could not be obtained while it was fresh in the Auditors memories. Many days after the Lord Commissioner was gone from Glasgow, a Copy of it was sent him, but all that which concerned his Majesties Ecclesiastical Power, especially of his being Universal Bishop in his Kingdoms, was quite left out; by which it was plain, that (as it was before conjectured) he had displeased many of the Assembly, by giving more Ecclesiastical Power to his Majesty in that Speech, than they intended he should ever have. The conclusion of his Speech was, That as the Lord Commissioner had served his Master carefully and faithfully, in preserving his Privileges and Prerogatives, so they must needs likewise be faithful and careful in preserving the Privileges and Prerogatives of the Kingdom of the Son of God, which was his Church; That they should much grieve for his absence, whose presence had been so acceptable and comfortable to them, and who had carried himself among them with so much Wisdom and moderation, that they should have a great miss of him; with many more words, tending to the very high commendation of the Lord Commissioner.

After the Moderator, divers of the Lords spake much to vindicate the Covenanters from their prelimitations and sinister dealings in their Elections: But the Lord Commissioner presently choaked their confidence, with the production of two Papers, which they little supposed he had ever seen: They contained their secret instructions, with which the whole Tables were not acquainted, for they must then of necessity some way or other have come to the knowledge of all the Covenanters, very many of whom by these secret Orders were barred from being chosen Commissioners to the Assembly, as well as the Non-covenanters: And therefore they fearing to lose or displease such a considerable number of their own Party, did by these private Advertisements (contrived only by the chief Rulers of the Table, but never presented to the Tables themselves) take order that none who could fall within the suspicion of moderation, should be chosen Commissioner for the Assembly.

The one of these Papers was directed to one Lay-elder of every Presbytery, some special Confident of theirs, containing these Nine Articles ensuing.

1. BEcause all projects and purposes will fail, if they be not pursued with constant diligence to the end, the Devil sleeps not, and we hear our Adversaries are busy, and our misery will be unexpressible great, and we || ludibrious if they shall prevail over us in a free General Assembly, for which we have been pleading so long; it were meet that so far as may be a new warning should be given, to stir up the best affected.

2. That every Nobleman be diligent with the Barons and Ministers nearest unto them, and that he write unto his best Acquaintance, who are far off.

3. That some one Minister and Gentleman in every Presbytery meet oft together, to resolve upon the particular Commissioners to be chosen, and use all diligence with the rest of the Ministers and Gentlemen that such may be chosen.

4. Because nothing will avail so much for our purpose, where the most part of the Ministers are distressed, as that the Gentlemen be present to vote in Presbyteries, it would be presently tried whether this be put in execution; and if the Minister be slow in urging it, the Gentlemen themselves to urge it, and put themselves in possession.

5. Our Adversaries in this cause are seeking their own ends, and will set our Friends on work to deal with us; all would be warned to shut their ears, and in this case to forget Parents, Brethren, and Friends, and without respect to any person, to do what may most conduce for our good ends.

6. Much will be pretended that the Bishops be limited, They will be harmless in time coming; and on the other hand, that Ministers having all in their power will prove unruly: But it would be seriously considered, first, That God's Ordinance (except that we will mock him, and be wiser in his errands than himself) should have place. Secondly, That Ministers will be constrained to keep themselves within bounds, if Gentlemen resort to the Presbyteries, Synods, and Assemblies. Thirdly, That this Order will both make Gentlemen more religious and more accomplished every way, and will make Ministers more diligent in their Studies and Calling, and take better heed to all their ways; which, no doubt, will (through the blessing of God) make this a flourishing Church and Kingdom, which otherwise, of all Nations will be most slavish, miserable, and contemptible to all our Neighbours, when they shall perceive how by our own silliness and treachery we have lost so fair an occasion of our liberty, both Christian and Civil.

7. That they linger not, they would be urged again to send their Commissioners to Edinburgh before the first of October; by this we shall know our own strength the better at our next meeting.

8. And the Gentlemen, at the least the greatest part of them, would be warned to be at Edinburgh the 20th of September; and that only the Gentlemen who are named Commissioners to the Presbytery, for choosing their Commissioners for the Assembly, with some to assist them, that day stay at home, and those to come away immediately after the Election.

9. That in every Presbytery there be a particular care taken of the informations against the Prelates for instructing our Complaints.

The other Paper was directed to some Minister of every Presbytery, in whom they put most special trust, containing these eight Articles ensuing.

Car. 14.
We desire the Reader to observe, that they were afraid of being overthrown in a free General Assembly, and therefore they took a course by these private instructions to prevent all freedom in the Assembly, and to make sure that none should be chosen a Member of it, but such of whom they were sure.

Private Instructions, August 27. 1638.

1. These private Instructions shall be discovered to none but to Brethren well affected to the cause.

2. Order must be taken that none be chosen ruling Elders but Covenanters, and those well affected to the business.

3. That where the Minister is not well affected, the ruling Elder be chosen by the Commissioners of the Shire, and spoken to particularly for that effect.

4. That they be careful no Chapter-men, Chapel-men, or a Minister Justice of Peace, be chosen, although Covenanters, except they have publicly renounced or declared the unlawfulness of their places.

5. That the ruling Elders come from every Church in equal number with the Ministers, and if the Minister oppose, to put themselves in possession notwithstanding any opposition.

6. That the Commissioner of the Shire cause convene before him the ruling Elder of every Church chosen before the day of the election, and enjoin them upon their Oath, that they give vote to none but to those who are named already at the meeting at Edinburgh.

7. That where there is a Nobleman within the bounds of the Presbytery, he be chosen: And where there is none, there be chosen a Baron, or one of the best quality, and he only a Covenanter.

8. That the ablest man in every Presbytery be provided to dispute de potestate supremi Magistratus in Ecclesiasticis, præsertim in convocandis Conciliis, de Senioribus, de Episcopatu, de Juramento, de Liturgia, & corruptelis ejusdem.

Now both these were so closely carried, that the rest of the Covenanting Ministers never suspected there had been any other instructions, save the two publick and avowed Papers before related; nor would they ever have suspected any such close and double dealing, but that when they came to their elections, they found for the most part the ablest and most experienced Ministers passed by, and only the rigidest & hottest men chosen; which made them (inquiring after the reason of it) come to hear of these private Instructions, at which they stormed exceedingly, but could not then help any thing. And now whether these two Papers do not contain prelimitations of the Assembly, a thing against which they most fearfully cried out, We leave it to the judgment of the Reader.

The Moderator and some Noblemen Lay-Elders, went about to clear themselves from the notice of these two Papers of the secret instructions, but could not do it: the Lord Commissioner when he delivered them to the Clerk to be read, told him, That surely they were Papers which he had seen before, and with which he was well acquainted: The former of these, to a Lay-Elder of every Presbytery, in which is that seditious Article, being the sixth in number (intimating their fear of the loss of their Civil Liberty as well as Christian) he acknowledged he had seen; but denied that he had seen the other. One of the principal Covenanting Lords affirmed, That these Instructions were not sent from the Tables, but that they might be some private advices from one friend to another; for proof whereof, he offered to produce the two Papers of publick Instructions which had been sent from their Tables, and which are set down before by Us in this Narration. To this the Lord Commissioner answered, That the sending of these publick instructions, of which all the Kingdom had notice, was a weak argument to prove that they sent no other private ones; That he acknowledged these private instructions were not sent from their publick Tables, but he offered to prove that they were sent to the several Presbyteries by the direction of some of the principal Rulers of the Tables, who laboured by all means to conceal them from the rest of their Party, who they were sure would take offence at them: That they were sent from one friend to another by way of private advice, he declared to be impossible for these two reasons; First, because it could not be imagined that several men, writing to their private friends, should light upon the same words, and yet that the Copies of these instructions sent unto him his Majesties Commissioner from many parts of the Kingdom, very far distant one from another, were the very same: Secondly, because he and every man did find that all the elections now returned, were made throughout the whole Kingdom according to these private instructions, and in pursuance of them: And, that these private instructions were undoubtedly sent, besides the two Reasons last mentioned, it doth evidently appear:

First, Because it is well known, that they who had never yet let any thing slip which they thought was advantageous to them, would not have let this pass unquestioned, but would have required the Lord Commissioner to prove the truth of these secret instructions, which brought so great a scandal upon their proceedings if they were not forged; and so great a scandal upon him if they were: and therefore their not urging of him to make proof of them, doth clearly evince their guiltiness.

Secondly, The Lord Commissioner, though he was loth to nominate unto them those several Covenanters from whom he received Copies of these secret instructions, unless he were put to it; yet he hath upon his Honour protested unto his Majesty, that he received them only by the means of Covenanters, who found themselves aggrieved by these sinister dealings, and that he would justify the receipt of these Papers from them whensoever he shall be put to it, as he would have done in the Assembly if he had been urged thereunto; which he expected they would have done, but did not, because they knew there were divers Members of the Assembly there present, who were well acquainted with the truth of what he had delivered concerning these secret instructions.

Thirdly, Because in their protestation made against his Majesties last Proclamation, they have confessed some of them, which were not in either of their publick instructions, and which never came to the Lord Commissioners notice, but by these private Papers.

After this, first divers of the Lords, and then some of the Ministers, intreated the Lord Commissioner to stay, adding many words both to that purpose, and for justifying their proceedings. To the Lords the Lord Commissioner answered, That for many Months, only their Tables had been obeyed, but that his Majesties and the Council-Table had received no obedience at all; he was therefore now to try their obedience in this point, whether they would dissolve themselves at his Special Commandment. To the Ministers he replied, That one of the chief reasons which had moved the King to dissolve this Assembly, was, to vindicate them from the Tyranny of Lay-Elders, who as they had gone about to suppress the Bishops, Anno shops, so now to oppress them; and, if his Majesty did not protect them, would undoubtedly prove, not only ruling but over-ruling Elders: And withal added, That if they would now depart he would be a suitor to his Majesty for the induction of a new free General Assembly, in which they might mend all the faults committed by them in their proceedings at this.

Here the Earl of Argyle, one of his Majesties Council and Assessors to Our Commissioner, desired to speak: his voice was low, his speech he directed to the Covenanters; the sum of it was, That he was surpris'd, and did not expect this sudden rupture, but that he was willing to say something, which was, That he held it fit the Assembly should consist of Lay-men as well as Church-men; because these two made up one complete body, exhorted them to stand by the Confession of Faith, as it was sworn in 1581. After he had done, the Lord Commissioner desired the Moderator to say Prayer, and so to dismiss the Assembly; which he was about to do, but was hindered by the Lords, who fell again with new persuasions to urge the Lord Commissioners stay with them: which he answered with so much expression of grief for their misdemeanors, which had necessarily enforced this rupture, that very many of the Assembly seemed to be much moved with it. When nothing could persuade his stay, at last some of the Lords told him, that fearing this rupture they had a protestation ready against what he had said and done, which they desired him to hear read; which so soon as the Clerk begun to read, the Lord Commissioner repeated his former protestation, adding, in express words, that in his Majesties name he dissolved the Court under the highest pains: and so came out with the Lords of the Council, leaving the Clerk reading their protestation. When he came to the Church-door, he found it shut, so that some of his company were glad to force it open.

No sooner was he gone, but the Lord Areskyn, eldest son to the Earl of Marr, stood up and made this wise speech, not without tears: My Lords, and the rest, my heart hath been long with you, I will dally no more with God, I beg to be admitted into your blessed Covenant, and pray you all to pray to God for me, that he would forgive me for dallying with him so long. Three others of meaner quality desired the same, and so all those four were presently admitted into their Covenant. These men, at least the Lord Areskyn, were resolved to enter into their Covenant long ago, but were reserved on purpose for doing of it at that hour, for the greater glory of their Covenant: For no sooner had they sworn, and the Moderator received them by the hand, but presently he desired the whole audience to admire God's approbation and sealing of their proceedings, that even at that instant, when they might have feared some shrinking and back-sliding because of the present rupture, He had moved the hearts of these men to beg admittance into their blessed Society.

Immediately after, divers stood up and spake, but all much about one, and to this sense: They had seen how careful and punctual the Lord Commissioner was, like a good servant, faithfully to serve his Master, and to observe his instructions (speaking withal much to his singular commendation;) how much more then ought they to be careful to be found faithful in following his instructions, who was Master, as to all themselves, so even to him who was Our Commissioners Master? These Speeches being ended, two things were immediately put to the question: First, whether notwithstanding the Lord Commissioners departure and protestation they would adhere to their own protestation, and continue the Assembly. They all voiced affirmatively, except the Lord Carnegie Commissioner from the Presbytery of Briehen, Sir John Carnegie Commissioner from the Presbytery of Arbroath, two Ministers Commissioners from the Presbytery of Strabogie, the Lay-Elder and Ministers Commissioners from the Presbytery of Peebles, Dr. Strang Principal of the Colledge of Glasgow, Dr. Baume Commissioner from the University of St. Andrew's, with some others, who refused to sit with them any longer. The second was, whether the Assembly, though discharged by the Lord Commissioner, was competent Judge to the Bishops, and whether they would go on in their trial, notwithstanding the reasons contained in their Declinator: and this passed affirmatively without one contrary voice; and so for that night the Assembly was dismissed.

The Lord Commissioner after he had left the Assembly, that very night, though late, assembled the Council; none were absent except the Earl of Argyle, who made some excuse and pretence for his not coming, and the Lord Almond, who was then sick. Two things the Council resolved on; First, to write unto his Majesty a Letter of thanks for those gracious proffers, which his Majesty by his Commissioner had made at the Assembly. Next, to draw up a Proclamation for the dissolving of the Assembly. Their Letter here followeth:

Most Sacred Sovereign,

IN obedience to your Majesties Royal Commands, we have attended your Majesties Commissioner here at Glasgow since the seventeenth of this instant, and according to our bound duty in so exigent occasion, have not been wanting with our humble and best advices: And although we do remit the particular relation of what is past to his Graces self as best known to him; yet we cannot for truths sake be so silent, as not acknowledge to your Majesty, that never servant did with more industry, care, judgment and patience go about the discharge of so great a trust: And albeit the success hath not answered his desires, neither yet his extraordinary pains, and (as we may confidently affirm) most dexterous and advised courses taken to compass the just command of so gracious a King; yet his deserving herein merits to be remembered to posterity. And since your Majesty hath been pleased to renew to us your former act of Grace expressed in your Proclamation and Declaration anent the maintenance of the true Religion, and us in the defence and profession thereof; we do all in humility and hearty acknowledgment of so great goodness, return to your Majesty the offer of our Lives and Fortunes in defence of your Sacred person, and maintenance of your Royal Authority: and shall in all our actions approve our selves your Majesties most loyal Subjects and humble servants.

TO this Letter the Lord of Argyle refused to set his hand. Next morning the Proclamation was signed by the Lord Commissioner and Council, but the Earl of Argyle refused to sign it, as before he had done the Letter. The Proclamation here followeth:

CHARLES by the Grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith. To Our Lovits

Heralds, Pursuivants, Our Sheriffs in that part conjunctly and severally specially constitute, greeting. Forasmuch as out of the Royal and Fatherly care which We have had of the good and peace of this Our ancient and native Kingdom, having taken to Our serious consideration all such things as might have given contentment to Our good and loyal Subjects: And to this end had discharged by Our Proclamation the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and High Commission, freed and liberate all men from the practising of the five Articles, made all Our Subjects both Ecclesiastical and Civil liable to the censure of Parliament, General Assembly, or any other Judicatory competent, according to the nature and quality of the offence: and for the free entry of Ministers, that no other Oath be Administrate unto them than that which is contained in the Act of Parliament: had declared all by-gone disorders absolutely forgotten and forgiven: and for the more full and clear extirpating all ground and occasion of fears of innovation of Religion, We had commanded the Confession of Faith, and band for maintenance thereof, and of authority in defence of the same, subscribed by our dear Father, and his Household, in anno 1580. to be renewed and subscribed again by our Subjects here: Like as for settling of a perfect peace in the Church and Commonwealth of this Kingdom, We caused indict a free general Assembly to be holden at Glasgow the 21 of this instant, and thereafter a Parliament in May, 1639. By which clement dealing, We looked assuredly to have reduced Our Subjects to their former quiet behaviour and dutiful carriage, whereto they are bound by the Word of God, and Laws both national and municipal, to us their native and Sovereign Prince. And albeit the wished effects did not follow, but by the contrary, by Our so gracious procedure they were rather emboldened, not only to continue in their stubborn and unlawful waies, but also daily add to their former procedures acts of neglect and contempt of authority, as evidently appeared by open opposing of Our just and religious pleasure and command, exprest in Our last Proclamation anent the discharge of the Service-Book, Book of Canons, High Commission, &c. protesting against the same, and striving by many indirect means to withdraw the hearts of Our good people, not only from a hearty acknowledgment of Our gracious dealing with them, but also from the due obedience to those Our just and religious Commands, notwithstanding We had been formerly so oft petitioned by themselves for the same. By their daily and hourly guarding and watching about Our Castle of Edinburgh, suffering nothing to be imported therein, but at their discretion; and openly stopping and impeding any importation of Ammunition, or other necessities whatsoever to any other of Our houses within that Kingdom: Denying to Us their Sovereign Lord that liberty and freedom, which the meanest of them assume to themselves, (an act without precedent or example in the Christian World,) By making of Convocations and Council-Tables of Nobility, Gentry, Burrows, and Ministers within the City of Edinburgh, where, not regarding the Laws of the Kingdom, they, without warrant of Authority, convene, assemble, and treat upon matters, as well Ecclesiastical as Civil, send their injunctions and directions throughout the Countrey to their subordinate Tables, and either under-ministers appointed by them for that effect. And under colour and pretext of Religion exercising an unwarranted and unbounded liberty, require obedience to their illegal and unlawful procedures and directions, to the great and seen prejudice of Authority, and lawful Monarchical Government. And notwithstanding it was evidently manifest by the illegal and informal course taken in the Election of their Commissioners for the Assembly, whereof some are under the censure of the Church of Ireland, and some long since banished for open and avowed teaching against Monarchy, others of them suspended, and some admitted to the Ministry contrary to the form prescribed by the Laws of this Kingdom, others of them a long time since denounced Rebels, and put to the Horn, who by all law and unviolable custom and practick of this Kingdom, are, and ever have been incapable, either to pursue, or defend before any Judicatory, far less to be Judges themselves; some of them confined, and all of them by Oath and Subscription bound to the overthrow of Episcopacy. And by this and other their under-hand working, and private informations and persuasions, have given just ground of suspicion of their partiality herein, and so made themselves unfit Judges of what concerneth Episcopacy. And als it was sufficiently cleared by the peremptory and illegal procedures of the Presbyteries, who at their own hand by order of law, and without due form of process, thrust out the Moderators lawfully established, and placed others, whom they found most inclinable to their turbulent humours; associate to themselves for the choosing of the said Commissioners for the Assembly, a Laick Elder out of each Paroch, who being in most places equal, if not more in number than the Ministry, made choice both of the Ministers, who should be Commissioners from the Presbyteries, as also of a Ruling-Elder, being directed more therein by the warrants from the foresaid pretended Tables, than by their own judgments, as appears by the several private instructions sent from them, far contrary to the Laws of the Countrey, and lawable custom of the Church: by which doings it is too manifest, that no calm or peaceable procedure or course could have been expected from this Assembly, for settling of the present disorders and distractions: Yet we were pleased herein in some sort to blindfold Our own judgment, and over-look the said disorders, and patiently to attend the meeting of the said Assembly, still hoping that when they were met together, by Our Commissioner his presence, and assistance of such other well disposed Subjects who were to be there, and by their own seeing the real performance of all that was promised by Our last Proclamation, they should have been induced to return to their due Obedience of Subjects: But perceiving that their seditious disposition still increases, by their repairing to the said Assembly with great bands and troops of men, all boddin in fear of War, with Guns and Pistols, contrary to the Laws of this Kingdom, custom observed in all Assemblies, and in high contempt of Our last Proclamation at Edinburgh the 16. of this instant: As also by their peremptory refusing of Our Assessors, authorized by Us (although fewer in number than Our dearest Father was in use to have at divers Assemblies) the power of voting in this Assembly, as formerly they have done in other Assemblies; and by their partial, unjust, and unchristian refusing, and not suffering to be read the Reasons and Arguments given in by the Bishops and their Adherents, to Our Commissioner, why the Assembly ought not to proceed to the the Election of a Moderator without them, neither yet to the admitting of any of the Commissioners of the said Commissioners from Presbyteries, before they were heard object against the same, though earnestly required by our Commissioner in our name. And notwithstanding that our Commissioner under his hand, by Warrant from us, gave in a sufficient Declaration of all that was contained in our late Proclamation and Declaration, the same bearing likewise our pleasure of the Registration of the same in the Books of Assembly for the full assurance of the true Religion to all our good Subjects, And yet not resting satisfied therewith, lest the continuance of their meeting together might produce either the like dangerous acts, derogatory to Royal Authority, we have thought good, for preventing thereof, and for the whole causes and reasons above-mentioned, and divers others importing the true Monarchical Government of this Estate, to dissolve and break up the said Assembly. And therefore

OUR will is, and we do discharge and inhibit all and whatsoever pretended Commissioners, and other Members of the said pretended Assembly, of all further meeting and convening, treating and concluding any thing belonging to the said Assembly, under the pain of Treason, declaring all and whatsoever that they shall happen to do in any pretended meeting thereafter, to be null, of no strength, force nor effect, with all what may follow thereupon: Prohibiting and discharging all our Lieges to give obedience thereto, and declaring them, and every one of them, free and exempt from the same, and of all hazard that may ensue for not obeying thereof. And for this effect we Command and Charge all the foresaid pretended Commissioners, and other Members of the said Assembly, to depart forth of this City of Glasgow within the space of twenty four hours after the publication hereof, and to repair home to their own Houses, or that they go about their own private Affairs in a quiet manner. With special provision always, that the foresaid Declaration, given in under our Commissioners hand, with all therein contained, shall notwithstanding hereof stand full, firm and sure to all our good Subjects in all time coming, for the full assurance to them of the true Religion. And our will is, and we Command and charge, that incontinent these our Letters seen, ye pass, and make publication hereof by open Proclamation at the Market Cross of Glasgow, and other places needful, wherethrough none pretend ignorance of the same. Given under our Signet at Glasgow the 29 of November, and of our Reign the fourteenth year. 1638.

THIS Proclamation being very solemnly made with sound of Trumpets, and by Heralds, with Coats of Our Arms on their Backs, at the Market Cross of Glasgow, was received with a Protestation read in the same place by Johnston the then Clerk of the Assembly, assisted by the Lord Areskyn, and divers others, young Noble-men and Gentlemen. The Paper which Johnston read, was not, as it seemeth, that very Protestation which they Printed; for he read something out of a Paper to that purpose, and offered it by the name of a Protestation to him who read his Majesties Proclamation, which Paper the Clerk of the Council offering to receive, Johnston refused to deliver it, saying, He must stay until it were written. By which it is evident, that they who at Glasgow protested against the King's Proclamation, did protest and desired their Protestation to be received, before it was Printed, as it is now Printed, and before they could so much as send to them in whose name it was made, to know whether they would adhere to it or not. But a Protestation against it they afterwards Printed, which here now we do subjoin, that the Reader may see how groundless and unwarrantable it is.

The Protestation of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, &c. Made in the high Kirk, and at the Market Cross of Glasgow, Nov. 28, and 29. An. 1638.

WE Commissioners from Presbyteries, Burghs, and Universities, now convened in a full and free Assembly of the Church of Scotland, indicted by his Majesty, and gathered together in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ the only Head and Monarch of his own Church; And we Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burgesses and Commons, Subscribers of the Confession of Faith, Make it known that where We his Majesties loyal Subjects of all degrees, considering and taking to heart the many and great innovations and corruptions lately by the Prelates and their adherents intruded into the Doctrine, Worship, and Discipline of this Church, which had been before in great purity to our unspeakable comfort established amongst us, were moved to present many earnest desires and humble supplications to his sacred Majesty for granting a free general Assembly, as the only legal and ready mean to try these innovations, to purge out the corruptions, and settle the order of the Church for the good of Religion, the Honour of the King, and the comfort and peace of the Kirk and Kingdom: It pleased his gracious Majesty, out of his Royal bounty, to direct unto this Kingdom, the Noble and Potent Lord, James Marquess of Hamilton, with Commission to hear and redress the just grievances of the good Subjects, who by many Petitions, and frequent conferences, being fully informed of the absolute necessity of a free general Assembly, as the only judicatory which had power to remedy those evils, was pleased to undergo the pains of a voyage to England, for presenting the piteous condition of our Church to his sacred Majesty; And the said Commissioner his Grace returned again in August last, with power to indict an Assembly, but with the condition of such Preliminations, as did both destroy the freedom of an Assembly, and could no waies cure the present diseases of this Church; which was made so clearly apparent to his Grace, that for satisfying the reasonable desires of the Subjects, groaning under the weariness and prejudices of long some attendance, He was again pleased to undertake another journey to his Majesty, and promised to endeavour to obtain a free General Assembly, without any Prelimitation, either of the constitution and Members, or matters to be treated, or manner, and order of proceeding; so that if any question should arise concerning these particulars, the same should be cognosced, judged, and determined by the Assembly, as the only Judge competent: And accordingly by warrant from our Sacred Sovereign returned to this Kingdom, and in September last, caused indict a free General Assembly to be holden at Glasgow, Novemb. 21. to the unspeakable joy of all good Subjects and Christian hearts, who thereby did expect the perfect satisfaction of their long expectations; and the final remedy of their pressing grievances: But these hopes were soon blasted: for albeit the Assembly did meet and begin at the appointed day, and hath hitherto continued, still assisted with His Graces personal presence, yet His Grace hath never allowed any freedom to the Assembly, competent to it by the Word of God, acts and practice of this Church, and his Majesties Indiction, but hath laboured to restrain the same, by protesting against all the acts made therein, and against the constitution thereof by such members, as by all Law, Reason, and Custom of this Church were ever admitted in our free Assemblies, and by denying his approbation to the things proposed and concluded, though most clear, customable, and uncontraveried.

And now since his Grace after the presenting and reading of his own Commission from our sacred Sovereign, and after his seeing all our Commissions from Presbyteries and Burghs produced and examined, and the Assembly constitute of all the Members by unanimous consent, doth now to our greater grief, without any just cause or occasion offered by us, unexpectedly depart and discharge any further meeting, or proceeding in this Assembly, under the pain of Treason; and after seven daies sitting, declare all Acts made, or hereafter to be made in this Assembly, to be of no force nor strength; and that for such causes as are either expressed in his Majesties former Proclamations, (and so are answered in our former protestations) or set down in the Declinator, and protestation presented in name of the Prelats (which are fully cleared in our answer made thereto) or else were long since proposed by the Commissioner his Grace in his eleven articles or demands sent unto us, before the indiction of the Assembly (and so were satisfied by our answers, which his Grace acknowledged, by promising after the receipt thereof to procure a free general Assembly, with power to determine upon all questions, anent the Members, manner, and matters thereof) all which for avoiding tediousness we here repeat not: Or otherwise the said causes alledged by the Commissioner, were proposed by His Grace, in the Assembly; such as first, that the Assembly refused to read the Declinator and Protestation exhibited by the Prelates, which nevertheless was publicly read and considered by the Assembly, immediately after the election of a Moderator and constitution of the Members, before the which, there was no Assembly established, to whom the same could have been read: Next, that ruling Elders were permitted to have voice in the election of Commissioners from Presbyteries, which was known to his Grace, before the indiction and meeting of the Assembly, and is so agreeable to the acts and practice of this Church, inviolably observed before the late times of corruption, that not one of the Assembly doubted thereof, to whom by the indiction and promise of a free Assembly, the determination of that question, anent the members constituent property, belonged.

And last, that the voices of the six Assessors, who did sit with His Grace, were not asked and numbered, which we could not conceive to be any just cause of offence, since after 39 National Assemblies of this reformed Church, where neither the King's Majesty, nor any in his name was present, at the humble and earnest desire of the Assembly, His Majesty graciously vouchsafed His presence either in His own Royal Person, or by a Commissioner, not for voting or multiplying of voices, but as Princes and Emperors of old, in a Princely manner to countenance that meeting, and to preside in it for external order; and if We had been honoured with His Majesties Personal presence, His Majesty (according to the practice of King James of blessed memory) would have only given his own Judgment in voting of matters, and would not have called others who had not been Cloathed with Commission from the Church to carry things by plurality of voices.

Therefore in Conscience of our duty to God and his Truth, the King and his Honour, the Church and her Liberties, this Kingdom and her peace, this Assembly and her freedom, to our selves and our safety, to our Posterity, Persons and Estates, We profess with sorrowful and heavy, but loyal hearts, That We cannot dissolve this Assembly, for the reasons following.

1. For the reasons already Printed anent the necessity of convening a General Assembly, which are now more strong in this case, seeing the Assembly was already indicted by his Majesties Authority, did convene, and is fully constitute in all the Members thereof, according to the Word of God, and Discipline of this Church, in the presence and audience of his Majesties Commissioner, who hath really acknowledged the same, by assisting therein seven daies, and exhibition of His Majesties Royal Declaration, to be registrate in the Books of this Assembly, which accordingly is done.

2. For the reasons contained in the former Protestations made in name of the Noble-men, Barons, Burgeses, Ministers, and Commons, wherunto We do now judiciously adhere, as also unto the Confession of Faith and Covenant, subscribed and sworn by the Body of this Kingdom.

3. Because as We are obliged by the Application and Explication subjoined necessarily to the Confession of Faith subscribed by Us; So the King's Majesty, and his Commissioner, and Privy Council, have urged many of this Kingdom to subscribe the Confession of Faith made in Anno 1580. and 1590. and so to return to the Doctrine and Discipline of this Church, as it was then professed: But it is clear by the Doctrine and Discipline of this Church, contained in the Book of Policy then registrate in the Books of Assembly, and subscribed by the Presbyteries of this Church; That it was most unlawful in it self, and prejudicial to these Priviledges which Christ in his Word hath left to his Church, to dissolve or break up the Assembly of this Church, or to stop and stay their proceedings in constitution of Acts for the welfare of the Church, or execution of Discipline against offenders; and so to make it appear, that Religion and Church-Government should depend absolutely upon the pleasure of the Prince.

4. Because there is no ground of pretence either by Act of Assembly, or Parliament, or any preceding practice, whereby the King's Majesty may lawfully dissolve the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, far less his Majesties Commissioner, who by his Commission hath power to indict and keep it, secundum legem & praxim: But upon the contrary, His Majesties Prerogative Royal, is declared by Act of Parliament, to be no waies prejudicial to the Priviledges and Liberties, which God hath granted to the spiritual Office-bearers, and meetings of this Church; which are most frequently ratified in Parliaments, and especially in the last Parliament holden by his Majesty himself: which Priviledges and Liberties of the Church, his Majesty will never diminish or infringe, being bound to maintain the same in integrity by solemn Oath given at his Royal Coronation in this Kingdom.

5. The Assemblies of this Church have still enjoyed this freedom of uninterrupted sitting, without or notwithstanding any contramand, as is evident by all the Records thereof; and in special by the general Assembly holden in Anno 1582. which being charged with Letters of Horning by the King's Majesty his Commissioner and Council, to stay their process against Mr. Robert Montgomery, pretended Bishop of Glasgow, or otherwise to dissolve and rise, did

Anno 1638. did notwithstanding shew their liberty and freedom, by continuing and sitting still, and without any stay, going on in that process against the said Master Robert, to the final end thereof: And thereafter by Letter to his Majesty, did shew clearly, how far his Majesty had been uninformed, and, upon misinformation, prejudged the Prerogative of Jesus Christ, and the Liberties of this Church, and did enact and ordain, That none should procure any such Warrant or Charge under the pain of Excommunication.

6. Because now to dissolve, after so many Supplications and Complaints, after so many reiterated Promises, after our long attendance and expectation, after so many references of processes from Presbyteries, after the publick indictment of the Assembly, and the solemn Fast appointed for the same, after frequent Convention, formal Constitution of the Assembly in all the Members thereof, and seven days sitting, were by this act to offend God, condemn the Subjects Petitions, deceive many of their conceived hopes of redress of the Calamities of the Church and Kingdom, multiply the Combustions of this Church, and make every man despair hereafter ever to see Religion established, Innovations removed, the Subjects Complaint respected, or the Offenders punished with consent of Authority, and so by casting the Church loose and desolate, would abandon both to ruin.

7. It is most necessary to continue this Assembly for preventing the prejudices which may ensue upon the pretence of two Covenants, whereas indeed there is but one, That first subscribed in 1580. and 1590. being a National Covenant and Oath to God; which is lately renewed by Us, with that necessary explanation, which the corruptions introduced since that time contrary to the same, enforced: Which is also acknowledged by the Act of Council in September last, declaring the same to be subscribed, as it was meant the time of the first subscription: And therefore for removing that shame, and all prejudices which may follow upon the show of two different Covenants and Confessions of Faith in one Nation, The Assembly cannot dissolve, before it try, find and determine, that both these Covenants, are but one and the self same Covenant: The latter renewed by us, agreeing to the true genuine sense and meaning of the first, as it was subscribed in Anno 1580.

For these and many other Reasons, We the Members of this Assembly, in our own name, and in the name of the Kirk of Scotland, whom We represent; and We Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burgesses, and Commons before mentioned, do solemnly declare in the presence of the everliving God, and before all men; And protest,

1. That our thoughts are not guilty of any thing which is not incumbent to us, as good Christians towards God, and loyal Subjects towards our Sacred Sovereign.

2. That all the Protestations general or particular, proponed or to be proponed by the Commissioner his Grace, or the Prelats and their Adherents, may be presently discussed before this General Assembly, being the highest Ecclesiastical Judicatory of this Kingdom: And that his Grace depart not till the same be done.

3. That the Lord Commissioner depart not, till this Assembly do fully settle the solid peace of this Church, cognoscing and examining the corruptions introduced upon the Doctrine and Discipline thereof: And for attaining hereof, and removing all just exceptions which may be taken at our proceedings, we attest GOD the searcher of all hearts, that our intentions, and whole proceedings in this present Assembly, have been,

are, and shall be according to the Word of GOD, the Laws and Constitutions of this Church, the Confession of Faith; our National Oath, and that measure of light, which GOD the Father of Light shall grant us, and that in the sincerity of our hearts, without any pre-occupation or passion.

4. That if the Commissioner his Grace depart, and leave this Church and Kingdom in this present disorder, and discharge this Assembly, that it is both lawful and necessary for Us to sit still and continue in keeping this present Assembly, indicted by his Majesty, till we have tried, judged, censured all the by-gone evils and the introducers, and provided a solid course for continuing God's truth in this Land with purity and liberty, according to his Word, our Oath and Confession of Faith, and the lawful Constitutions of this Church; and that with the grace of God, We and every one of Us adhering hereunto, shall sit still and continue in this Assembly, till after the final settling and conclusion of all matters, it be dissolved by common consent of all the Members thereof.

5. That this Assembly is and should be esteemed and obeyed, as a most lawful, full and free General Assembly of this Kingdom: And that all Acts, Sentences, Constitutions, Censures and Proceedings of this Assembly, are in the self, and should be reputed, obeyed, and observed by all the Subjects of this Kingdom, and Members of this Church, as the Actions, Sentences, Constitutions, Censures, and Proceedings of a full and free General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and to have all ready execution, under the Ecclesiastical pains contained, or to be contained therein, and conform thereto in all points.

6. That whatsoever inconvenience fall out, by impeding, molesting, or staying the free meeting, sitting, reasoning, or concluding of this present Assembly, in matters belonging to their Judicatory, by the Word of God, Laws and Practice of this Church, and the Confession of Faith, or in the observing and obeying the Acts, Ordinances, and Conclusions thereof, or execution to follow thereupon, That the same be not imputed unto us, or any of us, who most ardently desired the concurrence of his Majesties Commissioner to this lawful Assembly; But upon the contrary, that the Prelats and their Adherents, who have protested and declined this present Assembly, in conscience of their own guiltiness, not daring to abide any legal Trial, and by their mis-information have moved the Commissioner his Grace to depart and discharge this Assembly, be esteemed, reputed, and holden the disturbers of the Peace, and overthrowers of the Liberties of the Church, and guilty of all the Evils which shall follow hereupon, and condignly censured according to the greatness of their fault, and Acts of the Church and Realm: And to this end, we again and again do by these Presents cite and summon them, and every one of them, to compeer before this present General Assembly, to answer to the Premises, and to give in their Reasons, Defences, and Answers against the Complaints given in, or to be given in against them, and to hear probation led, and sentence pronounced against them, and conform to our former citations, and according to Justice, with certification as effects; Like as by these Presents we summon and cite all those of his Majesties Council, or any other, who have procured, consented, subscribed, or ratified this present Proclamation to be responsible to his Majesty and three Estates of Parliament, for their counsel given in this matter, so highly importing his Majesty, and the whole Realm, conform to the twelfth Act of King James 4. Parliament 2. And protest for remedy of Law against them, and every one of them.

7. And lastly we protest, That as we adhere to the former Protestations all and every one of them, made in the name of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burghes, and Commons; So seeing we are surprised by the Commissioner his Graces sudden departing, far contrary to his Majesties indiction, and our expectation, we may extend this our Protestation, and add more Reasons thereunto in greater length and number, whereby we may fully clear before God and man the equity of our intentions, and lawfulness of our proceedings: And upon the whole premises the foresaid persons for themselves and in name aforesaid, asked Instruments. This was done in the high Church of Glasgow in publick audience of the Assembly, begun in presence of the Commissioner his Grace, who removed and refused to hear the same to the end, the Twenty eighth day of November: and upon the Mercate Cross of Glasgow, the Twentyninth day of the said Month, the Year of God 1638. respective

The Reader shall not need to look after much reason in this Protestation; for if he do, he will be sure to lose his labour. Much is repeated in it, of that which hath been delivered in their former Petitions and Protestations; all which shall now be passed by, what is new in it, the Reader shall do well to cast his eye upon that, taking along with him this advertisement, That there is little or indeed nothing in it new, which is true. Towards the beginning you find the Protestation made, not only in the name of the General Assembly, but in the name of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burghesses, and Commons, Subscribers of the Confession of Faith. Now how this Protestation could be made at Glasgow in their names, who at that time neither were acquainted, nor possibly could be acquainted, with what passed at Glasgow, being in the several parts of the Kingdom so far distant from it, and many parts having no Commissioners there, except those that were in the Assembly, we leave it to the Readers consideration. They affirm not many lines after, That it was made clear to the Lord Commissioner, that the Assembly which he meant to indict in August, was clogged with such prelimitations, that he undertook another Journey to his Majesty, and promised to endeavour to obtain a free General Assembly without any prelimitation, &c. All which is so far from truth, as nothing can be more; for he did never desire the Assembly to be prelimited; for they themselves by their instructions both publick and private did prelimitate it, he did only desire, that (according to the usual custom before Assemblies) some previous meeting and consultation might be held concerning the forms of the Assembly; which might very well have been forgot, there having been no Assembly held for many years before. Again, in the last words, at the end of the first Section, one would wonder how any man could have the boldness to affirm, That this their Assembly was constituted of such Members, as by all law, reason, and custom of that Church were ever admitted in their free Assemblies, since they in their own Conscience do know, that there is no Law extant for Lay-elders having voice in General Assemblies. And if there be no Law for it, we appeal to the judgment of every man indued with reason, whether there can be any reason found for it, and whether if such a Proposition were to be propounded, and to pass into a Law, he would give his voice unto it if he had power so to do, That Lay-men (especially many of them, being ignorant and mechanical persons) should sit in the highest Ecclesiastical Judicatory, and by their voices determine points of Faith, and other highest points of Doctrine, and to inflict the highest censures of the Church, even excommunication and deprivation, not only of Ministers, but of Bishops, especially when in an Assembly the number of the Lay-voices shall be equal, or very near equal, to those of the Clergy; so that it may fall out, that the voices of the Lay-men, having the voices but of twenty or thirty Clergy-men concurring with them in opinion, may carry the determination of the highest point of Doctrine against the rest of the Clergy, and those perhaps the holiest, ablest, and most learned, though their number exceed a hundred. Sure if such a Proposition were to be past into a Law, few voices would be found to enact it; and therefore if there be no law for it already (as undoubtedly there is none) they might have done well not to have talked of reason for it: And that which they aver of the custom of that Church, is as untrue as what they said either of Law or Reason. For, said the King, we demand if there have been never a free Assembly in Scotland these last forty years? Sure they will confess there hath been; and yet in none of these, Lay-elders chosen by and sent from Presbyteries, had voices in these Assemblies: Nay, since the first Reformation, hath there been any free General Assembly in that Kingdom? No question they will say there hath; and yet We challenge them to name but any one Assembly before this, in which the Ministers chosen Commissioners to it from the several Presbyteries, were chosen by the voices and suffrages of Lay-elders: So that for that point it is impossible they should alledge either Law, Reason, or Custom, or so much as any one instance; and yet the Elections of all the Ministers present at this Assembly were carried by the voices of Lay-men, and in many places in despite of the Ministers.

A little after the beginning of the second Section they do affirm that which they themselves do know not to be so; for when they say that the Lord Commissioner did unexpectedly depart and discharge any further meeting or proceeding in this Assembly, how can that stand with the words of the Earl of Rothes, who when he Lord Commissioner was rising and departing out of the Assembly, told him, that his departure and discharging of the Assembly was a thing not unlooked for, but expected by them; and therefore they were provided for him, and had a Protestation ready written against his discharging of the Assembly, which he desired him to hear (as is before mentioned?) But the Lord Commissioner refusing, the Clerk presently begun to read it, and his Majesties Commissioner and Council at their departure left them reading it; and after his departure it was read out to the end, and presently put to voices, whether all the Members of the Assembly would adhere to it; and the very Title-page of their Protestation affirmeth, That it was first read in the high Church, and afterward at the Market-Cross of Glasgow. Besides, the Moderator made a Speech to the Lord Commissioner upon his departure, which none of the Auditors did conceive to be extemporary; for when it was compared with any other Speeches of his, delivered at any other time of the Assembly, it was agreed that it was so much better penned or premeditated and delivered than any of the rest of his Speeches, that certainly it was provided against the Lord Commissioners departure; and yet these men protest, that the Commissioners departure and discharging of the Assembly 1638. sembly was to them altogether unexpected, when they knew that they had carried themselves, and meant to carry themselves so, that it was impossible but that he should discharge the Assembly. A great mark of the sincerity of their proceedings.

That which immediately after they add; That they have fully cleared in their answer to the Bishops Declinator all the Arguments contained in it against the Assembly, as also those Propositions made by the Lord Commissioner in his 11 Articles or Demands, sent unto them before the induction of the Assembly, and that the Lord Commissioner acknowledged so much, is all of equal untruth with the former; for neither have they satisfied the Bishops Reasons propounded in their Declinator, nor gave they any satisfaction to the Lord Commissioner his eleven Articles or Demands: And that the Commissioner acknowledged that he had received satisfaction to them, is so manifest an untruth, as they themselves do know there is no colour for it. They affirm within a few lines after, that the Kings Commissioner did know, before the induction of the Assembly, that ruling Elders were to have voices in the Election of Commissioners from Presbyteries. He did know it indeed, but could not tell how to help it; and so soon as he did know it, which was immediately before the induction of the Assembly, he did sharply expostulate it with them, and assured them, that it would induce a nullity upon the Elections made to the Assembly; That his Majesty would never allow any for Members of the Assembly who were so chosen; That he had notice of this their intention by the complaints of many covenanting Ministers, who were resolved to protest against all such Elections; but that he did know of any such Elections with approbation of them, cannot be charged upon him. And whereas they say, that these Elections are agreeable to the Acts and practice of that Church, they have received already a sufficient challenge to make that good, which undoubtedly they cannot: And where they add, that not one of the Assembly doubted thereof, it is well known that some of the Ministers of Edinburgh, and many more Ministers of the Assembly did grieve at it, but did not know how to remedy it.

The whole third Section is so derogatory to his Majesties Royal Authority, and indeed doth so unworthily debase the authority of Monarchs, as it is not to be answered any way but by Justice: For it giveth no more power to his Majesty, if he had been present and sitting at the Assembly at Glasgow, then Thomas Paterson a Taylor of Edinburgh had, who sat Commissioner there.

After, they subjoyn some Reasons for their Protestation: In the first, they affirm that the Assembly was constituted by the Word of God; but they do not prove it, and sure never will. Then they affirm, that the Lord Commissioner acknowledged the lawfulness of their Assembly, by assisting therein seven days; but they conceal that he solemnly protested, and entred his particular Protestation against every thing they said or did in it; and if he who protesteth against a thing, may be said to acknowledge the lawfulness of it, then it may be that they themselves do acknowledge the Justice and Equity of all his Majesties Proclamations, and his power and authority in discharging of this Assembly, notwithstanding all their Protestations made against these. And for the Lord Commissioner his exhibition of his Majesties Royal Declaration to be registred in the Books of this Assembly, let the Reader remember the Protestation before mentioned, which the King's Commisner made when he did so, and that scruple is quickly removed.

Their second and third Reasons are of their own fancies: They have lately sworn so, and to that sense they have explicated their Covenant, therefore it must so: But they did wrong in both, and therefore none must follow them in either, for every Oath unlawfully taken is unlawfully kept.

Their fourth Reason hath not one true word in it; for there is Law for the King's authority to dissolve the Assembly, there being an express Act of Parliament which giveth his Majesty the sole power of indicting of an Assembly, viz. the first Act of the 21. Parliament of his Royal Father: And sure, ejusdem est destituere cujus est instituere, whosoever hath the power of indicting hath the power of dissolving. They add that there is no preceeding practice for it. We wonder they can or dare affirm it: Did not his Majesties Royal Father discharge that Assembly at Aberdene? And when some few turbulent Ministers did notwithstanding hold it, were they not convented before the Lords of his Council for it? Who undoubtedly had punished them most severely, if by their declining of the Councils authority, and appealing to a General Assembly, they had not fallen into an act of Treason, and so by the Council were turned over to the Judges in criminal Causes; before whom, by a Jury or Assise, they were found guilty of Treason, for that act of declining his Royal Father and his Councils authority, all which we touched a little before. And that by claiming power to indict or dissolve the Assemblies of the Church, his Majesty does infringe the privilege and liberties of the Church, or do any act not consistent with the Oath which he took at his Coronation in that Kingdom, as is suggested in this fourth Reason, is most falsely and most seditiously affirmed, only for drawing away of the hearts of his good Subjects from him and his Government. The Act of Parliament for his Majesties sole power of indicting Assemblies here followeth.

A ratification of the Acts and Conclusions set down and agreed upon in the General Assembly of the Church, kept in Glasgow in the Month of June 1610. together with an explanation made by the Estates, of some of the Articles of the same.

CHAP. I.

THE Act is long, and hath many Branches, we only recite two: First, it confirms that Act of the Assembly, which acknowledgeth the induction of the General Assembly of the Church, so appertain to his Majesty by the Prerogative of his Royal Crown: And in the last Branch of the Act, Our Royal Father and the three Estates do annul and rescind the 114. Act of the Parliament held in Anno 1592. which did give some power to the General Assembly, in some cases, of themselves to indict a new Assembly.

Their

1638.

Their fifth Reason containeth an instance of an Assembly that would not stay a Proceſs which they had intended againſt Archbiſhop Montgomery the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, nor yet diſſolve it ſelf, notwithstanding they were charged by his Maſties Royal Father and his Council with Letters of Horning and Rebellion to do one of the two: An excellent argument, Becauſe one Aſſembly did wickedly, and that which they could not do, they muſt do ſo likewiſe; as if many years hence, an Aſſembly being charged by one of his Maſties Succeſſors to diſſolve, ſhould not obey, but alledge for their defence, That this Aſſembly of Glaſgow would not diſſolve it ſelf, notwithstanding the Members thereof were charged by his Maſty to do ſo under pain of Treason; as if one unjuſt act could juſtifie another. But they ſhould do well to remember, that thoſe who did but offer to hold an Aſſembly at Aberdene, after it was diſcharged by his Royal Father, were firſt convented before his Council, and afterwards ſeverely puniſhed for it.

In their ſixth Reason there is no reaſon to be found.

In their ſeventh Reason they alledge, that they cannot riſe until they have found his Maſties Covenant and theirs to be all one. If by their Covenant they mean the Confeſſion of Faith and Covenant annexed, which was firſt enjoyned by his Maſties Royal Father, and twice afterwar'd by his Authority renewed, then they needed not to have ſit one hour longer for finding of that; for any man that can read may find the words and ſyllables of both, to be the very ſame without the leaſt alteration: But if by their Covenant they do underſtand their explications, additions, and głoſſes which deſtroy and corrupt the very text of the firſt Covenant, then certainly they ſhould not have riſen yet, nor could have riſen until the end of the World; for they will never find that theſe corrupt głoſſes, and apocryphal additions of their own, can conſiſt with his Maſties Royal Father his Confeſſion and Covenant, upon which they pretend they ground their own. Beſides, as ſhall preſently appear, they have diſcharged all men to ſubſcribe the Confeſſion and Covenant commanded by his Maſties authority; which may be ſuppoſed they would not have done if they had found them to be one; and therefore if they be men of their words, they ſhould have ſate ſtill and not riſen yet, becauſe as yet they have not found them to be one.

After their ſeven Reaſons, they add ſeven Proteſtations of the ſame piece with their Reaſons: The firſt, third, fourth, and fifth are not worth the reading, for they contain nothing but their uſual Tautologies, and taking the ſacred Name of God in vain. In the ſecond, and latter end of their ſixth Reason, there is ſo much boldneſs expreſſed, as could never have been expected from any men who had been acquainted with the names of King, Law, Authority, or Government: For who ever heard that Subjects durſt require their Kings Commiſſioner not to depart out of the Aſſembly, when he himſelf had pleaſed, although he had not been commanded by the King ſo to do? What greater command could they have laid upon the meaneſt Member of the Aſſembly than this, by which they affronted the Lord Commiſſioner, and in him his Maſty and his authority? But their citation of the Council, who ſigned the Proclamation, to appear as Offenders before his Maſty and the three Eſtates of Parliament, (which by the way may be wonder'd how they can be made up without Biſhops) and to answer the Subſcription of the King's Proclamation as a crime, is a boldneſs that calleth more for admiration than refutation. They cite for this their doing the twelfth Act of the ſecond Parliament of his Maſties Royal Progenitor James the fourth. It may be wondered that in his days there ſhould be any warrant found for the allowing the Members of a General Aſſembly in any thing, in whoſe time a General Aſſembly had no exiſtence: But when the Act is lookt into, we may wonder much more; for there is not ſo much as any word to be read there, which can be drawn to any ſhow of conſtruction that way. That Act attributeth rather too much to Privy Counſellors, than diminiſheth them; ſo that upon peruſal of the Act, his Maſty was almoſt inforced to excuſe them, and lay the fault upon the Printer, who had miſtaken the citation, until he remembered that in their citations both of other Acts of Parliament, and many paſſages of holy Scripture, they are as far out as in this, hoping (belike) that the Reader would never peruſe them. That which they affirm about the middle of the ſixth Proteſtation, that the Prelats moved the Lord Commiſſioner to diſſolve the Aſſembly, his Maſty did aver upon his own knowledge to be far otherwiſe; for he did it by his ſpecial commandment, when none of the Prelats were near him to give him any ſuch advice. Their ſeventh Proteſtation is uſual with them, and therefore now not to be taken notice of.

And now when the Reader hath peruſed both his Maſties Proclamation for the diſſolving of that Aſſembly, and their Proteſtation againſt that Proclamation, and hath well weighed all the precedent firſt violences, and then juglings for their obtaining of ſuch perſons only to be elected, as ſhould be ſure to ſtand for ſuch concluſions as they had reſolved upon at their Tables at Edenburgh, we do leave it to the judgment of every man to conſider, whether his Maſty could any longer continue that Aſſembly without indangering his own Royal authority, which they intended to ſupplant, and betraying into the hands and power of their ſworn and combined enemies the Biſhops of that Church, who never declined, nor yet do decline the trial of a General Aſſembly lawfully conſtituted.

They did long call for a free General Aſſembly; his Maſty granted them one moſt free on his part, and in his intentions: But as they have handled and marred the matter, let God and the World judge whether the leaſt ſhadow or footſtep of freedom can in this Aſſembly of theirs be diſcerned by any man who hath not given a Bill of divorce both to his natural light, that is, his Underſtanding, and to his connatural light, that is, his Conſcience. It is a great error to conceive, that liberty and limitation are deſtructive one of another: For that freedom which admitteth no bounds and limits, is not liberty but licentiouſneſs: When therefore they talked of a free General Aſſembly, his Maſty took it as granted that they meant not an Aſſembly in which every one both in the neceſſary preparations preceding it, and in the neceſſary proceedings in it, might ſay and do what he would; but ſuch an Aſſembly, in which no man having intereſt, ſhould be barred either in the proceedings to it, or proceedings in it, of that liberty which the Laws or Cuſtoms of that Kingdom and Church in which that Aſſembly was convoked, do allow him: Which two bounds whoſoever ſhall tranſgreſs, though they pretend liberty and freedom, yet in all 1638. all true intendment and construction, they must be taken either for professed and common, or clandestine Enemies to the freedom of that Assembly. What wresting and wringing was used in their last Protestation made at Edenburgh, to charge the King's gracious Proclamation with prelimitations, is known; and it was detested by many even of their own Covenant: Whether their courses, especially in the Elections of the Members of this Assembly, were not only prelimitations of it, but strong bars against the freedom of it, and such as did utterly destroy both the name and nature of a free Assembly, inducing upon it many and main nullities, besides the reasons contained in the Bishops Declinator, let these few particulars declare.

Car. 14.

Anno

First, Whereas they refused so much as to hear from his Majesties Commissioner of any precedent Treaty for repairing and right ordering of things before the Assembly, alledging that it could not be a free Assembly where there was any consultation before, either concerning the chusers, or those to be chosen, or things to be discussed in the Assembly, but that all things must be treated of upon the place, else the Assembly must needs be prelimited. Whether they did not transgress in all these particulars, is easie to be discerned? For besides these instructions, which it may be are not come to his Majesties knowledge, his Majesty hath seen, and his Commissioner at the Assembly did produce four several papers of instructions, sent from them, who call themselves the Table, all of them containing prelimitations, and such as are repugnant not only to that which they called the freedom, but to that which is indeed the freedom of an Assembly. Two of these papers were such as they were content should be communicated to all their Associates, viz. that larger paper sent abroad to all Presbyteries, before or about the time of his Majesties indiction of the Assembly; and that lesser paper for their meeting first at Edenburgh, then at Glasgow some few days before the Assembly, and for chusing of Assessors: These two papers his Majesties Commissioner delivered not into the Assembly, because they did publicly avow them: But their other two papers of secret instructions were directed, not from the Table publicly, but under-hand, from such as were the prime Leaders of the rest. The one of them was delivered or sent only to one Minister of every Presbytery whom they trusted most, and was only to be communicated to such as he might be confident of, and was quite concealed from the rest of the Ministers, although Covenanters: The other paper was directed only to one Lay-Elder of every Presbytery, to be communicated as he should see cause, and to be quite concealed from all others. These are the two papers, which before you heard were delivered by the Lord Commissioner into the Assembly, and they did contain directions, which being followed (as they were) did banish all freedom from this Assembly; as doth appear before, by the reading of the papers themselves.

The second: Some Presbyteries did chuse their Commissioners before the Assembly was indicted, and therefore those Commissioners could not lawfully have any voice there.

The third: Neither Lay-elder, nor Minister chosen Commissioner by Lay-Elders, could have voice in the Assembly, because such Elections are not warranted by the Laws of that Church and Kingdom, nor by the practice and custom of either; for even that little which seemeth to make for their Lay-Elders, is only to be found in these Books, which they call the Books of Discipline, which were penned by some private men, but never confirmed either by Act of Parliament, or Act of General Assembly; and therefore are of no Authority. And yet in these Elections they did transgress even the Rules of these Books, there being more Lay-elders who gave voices at every one of these Elections; then there were Ministers; contrary to their Books of Discipline, which require that the Lay-Elders should always be fewer. But say there were an Ecclesiastical Order or Law for these Lay-Elders, yet the interruption of that Order for above forty years, maketh so strong a prescription in that Kingdom against it, as that without a new reviving of that Law by some new Order from the General Assembly, it ought not again to have been put in practice: For if his Majesty should put in practice and take the penalties of many disused Laws, without new intimation of them, it would be thought by his Subjects hard usage.

The fourth: In many Presbyteries these Lay-Elders disagreed wholly in their Election from chusing those Ministers whom their own Fellow-Ministers did chuse, and carried it from them by number of voices, although in all reason the Ministers should best know the abilities and fitness of their Brethren.

The fifth: These men elected as Lay-Elders to have voices in this Assembly, could not be thought able and fit men, since they were never Elders before, all or most of them being newly chosen; some of them were chosen Lay-Elders the very day before the Election of the Commissioners to the Assembly, which sheweth plainly they were chosen only to serve their Associates turn.

The sixth: Since the institution of Lay-Elders by their own Principles is to watch over the manners of that people in that Parish wherein they live, how can any man be chosen a Ruling Elder from a Presbytery, who is not an inhabitant within any Parish of the Precinct of that Presbytery? And yet divers such, especially Noblemen, were chosen as Lay-Elders Commissioners from Presbyteries, within the Precincts whereof they never were inhabitants, against all sense or reason, even upon their own grounds.

The seventh: They can shew neither Law nor Practice for chusing Assessors to the Ruling-Elders, without whose consent they were not to give voice to any thing in the Assembly.

The eighth: The introducing of Lay-Elders is a burthen so grievous to the Ministers, as that many Presbyteries did protest and supplicate against them, and many Presbyteries (though they were in a manner forced to yield to it then) yet did protest against it for the time to come.

The ninth: In the Election of Commissioners to this Assembly, for the most part the fittest men were passed by, and few chosen who ever were Commissioners at any Assembly before: The reason was, they conceived that new men would not stand much for their own Liberty in an Assembly, of the Liberties whereof they were utterly ignorant: Besides, some were chosen who were under the censures of the Church, some who were deprived by the Church, some who had been expelled out of the University for reading to their Scholars against Monarchical Government, some who had been banished out of that Kingdom for their seditious Sermons and behaviour, some who for the like offences had been banished out of Ireland, some who were then ly-

Anno 1638. ing under the sentence of Excommunication, some who then had no ordination or imposition of hands, some who had lately been admitted to the Ministry, contrary to the standing Laws of that Church and Kingdom, and all of them were chosen by Lay-Elders. Now what a scandal were it to the Reformed Churches, to allow this to be an Assembly, which did consist of such Members, and so irregularly chosen?

The tenth: Divers Members of this Assembly, even whilst they sat there, were Rebels, and at the King's Horn; and so by the Laws of that Kingdom incapable of sitting as Judges in any Judicatory.

The eleventh: Three Oaths were to be taken by every Member of this Assembly: The Oath to the Confession of Faith lately renewed by his Majesties commandment, the Oath of Allegiance, the Oath of Supremacy, any of which three Oaths whosoever shall refuse, cannot sit as a Judge in any Court of that Kingdom; and yet none of all these three Oaths were sworn by any Member of this Assembly.

Besides these nullities of this Assembly, what indecency and rudeness was to be discerned in it? Not so much as the face of an Ecclesiastical Meeting to be seen, not a Gown worn by any Member of it, unless it were by one or two Ministers who lived in the Town, the appearance in a manner wholly Laical; amongst the Members of it were seven Earls, ten Lords, forty Gentlemen, one and fifty Burgesses; many of them in coloured Clothes, and Swords by their sides, all which did give voices not only in very high points of Controversie (which we are sure very many of them did not understand,) but also in the sentences of Excommunication pronounced against the Bishops and others: Nay and more, all things in the Assembly carried by the sway of these Lay-Elders, insomuch that all the time which the Lord Commissioner stayed in the Assembly, it was a very rare thing to hear a Minister speak; for there was one Earl and one Lord who spake far more than all the Ministers, except the Moderator. And in the Assembly every thing which was put to voices, was so clearly discerned to have been resolved amongst themselves before by a palpable pre-agreement, that it was very tedious to the Auditors to hear the List of the Assembly called, when the conclusion of it was known to them all, after the hearing of his voice, who was first called; which made some present to envy no Member of the Assembly but one, whose fortune it was ever to be first called, his name being set down first in the List; his name was Master Alexander Carse Minister of Polwart, one of the Commissioners from the Presbytery of Dunee: For if the Acts of this Assembly should come out in Latin, and be thought worth any thing in the Christian World, and withal it should be expressed that the List of the Members of it was called to the passing of every Act, and his name should ever be found to be the first, there was never a Father nor Bishop, whose name is in any of the Greek or Latin Councils, so famous as this man should now be: For he would be taken for a man of an unparallel'd judgment both for soundness and profoundness, from whose judgment not one of the whole Assembly (except one, and that but once) did ever swerve in the least particular; for as he begun, all the rest did constantly follow.

All these things being well considered, what hope could be conceived of any good, either for the Church or Kingdom, from an Assembly thus miserably constituted? And therefore his Majesty resolved to dissolve it, as knowing that it would make that Church and Kingdom ridiculous to the whole World, especially to the Adversaries of the Protestant Religion; that it would both grieve and scandalize all the other Reformed Churches, and make his Justice to be universally traduced, if he should have suffered the Bishops his Subjects, in that which concerned their Callings, their Reputations and Fortunes, to be judged by their sworn Enemies thus prepared against them.

After the Lord Commissioners departure from Glasgow, they still continued their Assembly notwithstanding his Majesties dissolving it by Proclamation under pain of Treason: And then immediately the Earl of Argyle, who indeed all this while had been the heart of their Covenant, begun to declare himself openly to be the head of it; for he presently adjoyned himself to them, sat continually with them in the Assembly, although he were no Member of it, nor had suffrage there, but sat only as their chief Director and Countenancer, and indeed like his Majesties Commissioner.

It was not to be expected that after his Majesty had dissolved the Assembly, they would observe any greater moderation in their proceedings than they had done before: Nor did they indeed; for all things passed in a huddling confusion, nothing argued publickly, but every particular referred to some few Committees, who were the most rigidest they could pick out of the whole pack. What they resolved on, was propounded presently to the Assembly, swallowed down without further discussing; Mr. Alexander Carse was called up, what he said first all the rest said the same. In one hour they declared six General Assemblies to be null and void, though two of them were then and are still in force by several Acts of Parliament, and divers Acts of the other four are ratified and confirmed by Parliament. In another hour they condemned, upon the report of a few Ministers, all the Arminian Tenets (as they call them) and, under that name, many things received by all the Reformed Churches: A strange way, to condemn the Arminian Tenets without defining what those Tenets were. In another hour, they deprived the Archbishop of St. Andrews, the Bishops of Galloway and Brachen, and so at other times all the rest of the Bishops, many of whom they likewise excommunicated: Where it is observable, that in the printed Acts of this their (now after his Majesties dissolving of it) pretended Assembly, the Acts of the depositions of the Bishops bear no such odious crimes, as they had made the people believe they were guilty of in that infamous Libel which they caused to be read in the Pulpits against them; for proof whereof we have caused one of their sentences of deposition to be here inserted, whereby it may be seen that not so much as one witness was examined, nor offered to be produced against them for any one of those fearful crimes with which they were slandered in the Libel, but were only deposed for their obedience to Acts of Parliaments and General Assemblies.

Sentence of Deposition against
Mr. John Guthrie pretended Bishop of Murray; Mr. John Grahame pretended Bishop of Orkney; Mr. James Fairly pretended Bishop of Lismoir; Mr. Neil Campbell pretended Bishop of Isles.

THe General Assembly, having heard the Libels and Complaints given in against the foresaid pretended Bishops, to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and sundry Presbyteries within their Diocese, and by the saids Presbyteries referred to this Assembly to be tried, the saids pretended Bishops being lawfully cited, oftentimes called, and not compeering, proceeded to the cognition of the Complaints and Libels against them; and finding them guilty of the breach of the cautions agreed upon in the Assembly at Montrose, Anno 1600. for restricting of the Minister voter in Parliament, from incroaching upon the Liberties and Jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamy, and excommunication; and especially for receiving Consecration to the Office of Episcopacy, condemned by the Confession of Faith, and Acts of this Kirk, as having no warrant nor fundament in the Word of God; and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the High Commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God; and for their refusal to underlye the trial of the reigning slander of sundry other gross transgressions and offences laid to their charge: Therefore the Assembly, moved with zeal to the glory of God, and purging of this Kirk, ordains the saids pretended Bishops to be deposed, and by these presents doth depose them, not only of the Office of Commissioner to vote in Parliament, Council, or convention in name of the Kirk; but also of all functions, whether of pretended Episcopal or Ministerial calling: And likewise in case they acknowledge not this Assembly, reverence not the Constitutions thereof, and obey not the sentence, and make not their repentance, conform to the order prescribed by this Assembly, ordains them to be excommunicated, and declared to be of these whom Christ commandeth to be holden by all and every one of the faithful as Ethnicks and Publicans: And the sentence of Excommunication to be pronounced upon their refusal, in the Kirks appointed, by any of these who are particularly named to have the charge of trying their repentance or impenitency, and that the execution of this sentence be intimate in all the Kirks within this Realm, by the Pastors of every particular Congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next General Assembly, in case of negligence of the Presbyteries and Synods.

IN another hour they declared Episcopal Government to be inconsistent with the Laws of that Church and Kingdom, and so abolished it for ever, though it did then, and doth still stand confirmed by many Acts both of Parliaments and Assemblies: They deprived the Ministers, whose hands were at the Protestations against Lay-Elders and Elections made by them: Some Ministers they deprived for Arminianism; a course never heard of in any place where any rule of Justice was observed, that a Minister should be deprived for holding any Tenet which is not against the Doctrine of that Church wherein he liveth, and that before it be prohibited and condemned by that Church: Now there is nothing in the Confession of that Church against these Tenets. At the Synod of Dort no man was censured for holding any Doctrine against the conclusions of it, before the Synod had determined against them, nor was he to be censured for any thing he had preached or printed, before that Synod did tender unto him their Canons to be subscribed: But at Glasgow no such course was taken, but Ministers were deprived without so much as ever being once asked the question, whether they held any such opinion; or if they did, whether they would now recall their opinions, and conform their Judgments to the judgment of the Assembly in these points. Some of their Ministers being asked the question, With what Conscience or Justice they could deprive their Brethren for holding opinions not condemned by that Church, who perhaps after their Church had condemned them, out of their love to the peace of their Church would have forborn any further meddling with them? They returned this weak answer, That these Tenets were condemned by that Church under the general name of Popery: But they could make no answer when it was told them, That certainly these Tenets could not be counted Popish, concerning which, or the chief of which, as learned Papists as any in the World, viz. the Dominicans and Jesuits did differ as much as the Protestants did; and that those who do adhere to the Augustan Confession, did hold that side of these Tenets which the Arminians do hold; and yet they were very far from being Papists, being the first Protestants; and therefore it was against all sense to condemn that for Popery, which was held by many Protestant Churches, and rejected by many learned Papists. But all would not serve; they would deprive Ministers for holding them, before they themselves had condemned them. In the deprivation of one of these Ministers there did fall out a memorable passage, which was this: The Moderator of the Assembly, after the sentence of a Ministers deprivation, was pleased to move this learned question to the Assembly, Whether, if this deprived Minister should baptize a Child, the Child must not be baptized again? But he was presently taken off by one of his Brethren, who it seemeth was much ashamed of such a question, and told him, That they did never re-baptize those who had been baptized by Popish Priests; and so all further talk of it was hushed. What conclusions were to be expected from an Assembly whose Moderator moved such an ignorant and gross question, is easily to be conjectured.

And the weakness of their Conclusions would easily appear, if all their several Acts were printed; but because the Reader shall be able to make some judgment of them, We have here caused an Index of the Titles of their Acts to be inserted, by which may be seen what they hold.

[This Blair is he who was expelled the University of Glasgow by the Professors there, many years since, for teaching his Scholars, in his Lectures upon Aristotle, that Monarchical Government was unlawful. Now for this man to be made by them Professor of Divinity in the prime University of that Kingdom, whether his Majesty could be ought to indure it, we leave to the Reader to judge.]

BY these it is easie to be discerned what conclusions, tending to Sedition and Rebellion, and the overthrow of the Laws both of Church and Kingdom, were agreed upon; what false, nay and what foolish positions there were established; For instance, had it not been enough to have removed Episcopal Government, the five Articles of Perth, and the other pretended innovations, if they had been furnished with lawful power so to do? No, but they will have it concluded, that all these were abjured in the Confession of Faith when it was first sworn; which no reasonable man can believe, and which they themselves did allow in many not to abjure when they first swore their Covenant, and to which many Ministers, Members of this Assembly, had sworn at their admission into their Benefices, according to the Acts of Parliament, and Acts of General Assembly provided in that case; And so by swearing that these things were abjured in the first Confession, they make them profess that they had perjured themselves in taking the other Oath of their Conformity to these pretended innovations: Upon which Rock one Minister of the Assembly finding himself to be set fast, when that Act was voiced unto which declared Episcopal Government, and the five Articles of Perth to have been abjured formerly, and so to be for ever removed: Mr. Robert Baylie voiced thus, Removed but not abjured, to the great scandal of the rest of the Assembly, he being reputed for one of the ablest men in it: But the Act was drawn up in these terms, Abjured and removed, by the voices of all the Assembly, except his alone, who, knowing that all the Acts were particularly to be read and voiced to again, had drawn up a Supplication to the Assembly in the name of those Ministers, who before had conformed themselves to the five Articles of Perth, for a mitigation of that Act, at least that it might receive a publick hearing and arguing; which the rest having knowledge of, when that Act came to be read and voiced to again, one of the Lords, who was a Lay-Elder, perswaded with the Clerk, that in calling the List this Minister his name should be omitted, and so the Act passed without so much as asking of his voice, who had his supplication ready when he should be called upon by his name, but perceiving that the omission of his name was purposely done, he durst stir no more in it, for fear of publick envy, and some private mischief which might be done unto him; And yet you must think this was a most godly and free Assembly.

Towards the end of their Assembly, they divided themselves into several Committees, which should after their rising see all their Acts put in execution; a thing never heard of before in that Church. The Moderator concluded with thanks to God for their good success, and then to the Nobility and the rest for their great pains, and last of all with a Speech to the Earl of Argyll, giving him thanks for his presence and Council, by which they had been so much strengthened and comforted: The Lord Argyll answered him with a long Speech; First, intreating all present not to misconstrue his too late declaring himself for them, protesting that he was alwaies set their way, but had delayed to profess it so long as he found his close carriage might be advantageous to their cause; but now of late, matters had come to such a height, that he found it behoved him to adjoin himself openly to their Society, except he should prove a Knave, (this was, as we are informed, his own word): Then he went on and exhorted them all to Unity, wishing all, but especially the Ruling-Elders and Ministers, to keep a good correspondence; intreating all the Ministers to consider what had brought the Bishops to ruine, viz. Pride and Avarice, and therefore willed them to shun these two Rocks if they would escape Shipwrack.

The

The Lord who delivered this Speech, delivered indeed the true meaning and sense of the Covenanters: For it was neither the Bishops bringing in the pretended innovations, nor their suspecting them to be guilty of the odious crimes expressed against them in their Libel, which incensed this and the other Covenanting-Lords against the Bishops, but their fear of their daily rising in dignity and place, which in this Speech is called Pride in them; and their fear that the Bishops might recover out of their hands by Law some of the Church-Lands belonging to their Churches, which in this Speech is called Avarice in the Bishops. In the mean time, whether it be not pride in these Lords to envy any mans rising in the Church and Common-wealth, according to that worth and sufficiency which his Prince shall find in him, and whether it be not Avarice in them, not to endure that other men should legally seek to recover their own from them, shall be left to the judgment of the indifferent Reader. But for this revolted Lord who made this Speech, and professeth in it, That if he had now not adjoined himself to them, he should have proved a Knave, his Majesty gave this Testimony of him, That at his last being here in England (at which time his Majesty had good reason to mis-doubt him) he gave his Majesty assurance that he would test fully satisfied, if his Majesty would perform those things which he hath made good by his last gracious Declaration (in which he hath granted more than he did at that time promise) so that the King had little reason to expect his adjoining himself to them, who had given him so great assurance to the contrary, besides that assurance which he gave to the Lord Commissioner when he was in Scotland. And now if by his own Confession he carried things closely for the Covenanters advantage, being then one of the Lords of the secret Council, and that in the end he must openly join with them or be a Knave; what he hath proved himself to be by this close and false carriage, let the World judge.

The Lord Commissioner, after he had by his Majesties Commandment dissolved the Assembly, hearing that they who remained still at Glasgow under the name of an Assembly, went about to put such a sense upon that Confession of Faith and Band annexed, which his Majesty lately had commanded to be renewed, as agreed best with those corrupt glosses and false interpretations, which by their own Covenant they had put upon it, as if Episcopal Government had now by the King's Commandment been abjured; and so did begin to magnifie his Majesties Covenant, and resolved to declare it to be all one with their own, though they had in their Pulpits called it the depth of Satan, and had assured their followers, that it could not be sworn unto without perjury, and that even after that Act of Council, upon which they did ground their interpretation, he having perused the King's instructions which required him not to suffer the Confession of Faith to be sworn in any sense, which might not consist with the Laws of that Church and Kingdom then in force; thought it convenient to Print a Declaration of his Majesties clear meaning and intention in requiring that Oath; which, so soon as it was published, made them quite change their minds, and prohibit the subscription to his Majesties Covenant, which they had immediately before so much extolled: The Lord Commissioners Declaration is here re-printed, together with their Printed answer to it, because (saith his Majesty) We are confident both by Our own Judgment, and the Judgment of others who have perused them both, that the five Reasons contained in Our Commissioners Declaration stand yet unshaken for any thing delivered in their answer unto them; and that as strongly as the Divines of Aberdene's first Queries, Replies and Duplies do. Our Commissioners explanation follows. Car. 12.

An Explanation of the Oath and Covenant.

Whereas some have given out that by the Act of Council, which explaineth the Confession of Faith lately commanded to be sworn by his Majesty, to be understood of the Confession of Faith, as it was then professed and received, when it was made, and that in that Confession, defence both of the Doctrine and Discipline then established is sworn, at which time Episcopal Government being (as they say) abolished, it must needs follow, that the same Government is by this late Oath abjured.

And understanding that even amongst those who continue together still at Glasgow, under the name of a pretended and unlawful General Assembly, this Objection is held to be of some moment, and used by them to the great disturbance of the peace of this Church and Kingdom, and to the great disquieting of the minds of such his Majesties good Subjects as have taken the said Oath, and yet never meant nor do mean to abjure Episcopal Government; and to perswade others, that if they shall take the same Oath thus explained by the said Act of Council, by so doing they must likewise abjure the said Government:

We James Marquess of Hamilton, his Majesties High Commissioner, wondring that any such scrupulous mis-construction should be made of his Majesties gracious and pious intentions, and being desirous to remove all doubts from the minds of his Majesties good Subjects, and to keep them from being poisoned by such as by forced and forged inferences would make them believe, that they had actually by taking that Oath sworn that which neither virtually nor verily they have sworn, or ever intended to swear, or was required by authority to be sworn by them, either directly or indirectly; considering that all Oathes must be taken according to the mind, intention, and commandment of that authority which exacteth the Oath; and that we, by Special Commandment from his Sacred Majesty, commanded the said Oath to be administered, we do hereby freely and ingenuously profess and declare our mind and meaning herein, as we have constantly heretofore done since our coming into this Kingdom about this employment, viz. That by any such words or act of Council we never meant or intended that Episcopal Government should be abjured, nor any thing else which was established by Acts of Parliament, or Acts of the Church of this Kingdom which are now in force, and were so at the time of the taking of the said Oath.

Nor indeed could we have any other intention or meaning, being clearly warranted and expressly commanded by his Majesties instructions, to exact the said Oath, and take order that it should be sworn throughout the Kingdom in that fair and lawful sense, and none other: Neither in this point did we deliver our own words, or his Majesties mind ambiguously or doubtfully, so as any other sense, to our thinking, could be picked or wrung out of either the one or the other; for

Anno
1638. we do attest the Lords of the Council, whether we did not to many, or all of them upon several occasions in conference with them ever since our coming into this Kingdom, constantly declare unto them, that his Majesties resolution was not to suffer Episcopal Government to be abolished: We attest all the Lords of Session, whether before our tendering of that Oath to them, or their Lordships taking of it, we did not fully and freely declare to them, that his Majesties mind in commanding us to see this Oath taken, & our own mind in requiring them to take it, was only to settle and secure the Religion and Faith professed in this Kingdom, but was not to be extended to the abjuring of Episcopal Government, or any other thing now in force by the Laws of this Church and State at the time of administering this Oath, which their Lordships, being the reverend and learned Judges of the Laws, knew well could not be abjured; after which perspicuous predeclaration of our mind, their Lordships undoubtedly in that same sense and none other took the said Oath?

And now, good Reader, having heard his Majesties mind and intention, and in pursuance of them the mind of his Majesties High Commissioner concerning this Oath, the reasons to repel the former Objection seem to be needless (the known mind of the Supreme Magistrate who urgeth an Oath, being to be taken for the undoubted sense of it;) yet forasmuch as that Objection hath of late been mainly urged for alienating the minds of many of his Majesties good Subjects, and well affected to that Government, from adhering unto it, be pleased to know, that the former Objection hath neither show nor force of reason in it, and that by the said Oath and that explanation set down in the Act of Council, Episcopal Government neither was, nor possibly could be, abjured, and that for many reasons, but especially these five, which we having seen and approved, have caused to be here inserted, and leave them to thine impartial consideration.

First, God forbid it should be imagined that his Majesty should command his Subjects to take an Oath which in it self is absolutely unlawful; but for a man to swear against a thing which is established by the Laws of Church and Kingdom in which he liveth (unless that thing be repugnant to the Law of God) is absolutely unlawful, until such time as that Kingdom and Church do first repeal these Laws; and therefore Episcopal Government, not being repugnant to the Law of God, nay, being consonant unto it, as being of Apostolical institution (which shall be demonstrated, if any man please to argue it) and standing fully established, both by Acts of Parliament, and Acts of General Assembly at the time when this Oath was administered; to abjure it before these Acts be repealed, is absolutely unlawful, and against the Word of God: and it is to be hoped no man will conceive that his Majesty meant to command a thing absolutely unlawful. And if it should be said, as it is said by some, (who not being able to avoid the force of reason, do betake themselves to pitiful shifts and evasions) that these Acts of Parliament and Assembly, establishing Episcopal Government, were unlawfully and unduly obtained; certainly if they have any reasons for this their bold assertion, which is of a more dangerous consequence than that it ought to be endured in any well settled Church or Commonwealth; these reasons may be presented lawfully to these Judicatories to entreat them to reduce the saids Acts, if there shall be strength and validity found in them: But to hold, that until such time as these Judicatories shall repeal the saids Laws, they either ought to be, or can possibly be abjured, is a wicked position, and destructive of the very foundation of Justice both in Church and Commonwealth.

Secondly, It cannot be imagined that this Oath should oblige the now takers of it farther than it did oblige the takers of it at first: for Doctrine and Points of Faith it did oblige them then, and so doth it us now, perpetually, because these Points in themselves are perpetual, immutable, and eternal: But for Points of Discipline and Government, and policy of the Church, that Oath could bind the first takers of it no longer than that Discipline and Government should stand in force by the Laws of this Church and Kingdom, which our Church in her positive Confession of Faith Printed amongst the Acts of Parliament, Artic. 20, 21. declareth to be alterable at the will of the Church it self, and so repealable by succeeding Acts, if the Church shall see cause. When a King at his Coronation taketh an Oath to Rule according to the Laws of his Kingdom, or a Judge at his admission sweareth to give judgment according to these Laws, the meaning of their Oaths cannot be that they shall Rule or Judge according to them longer than they continue to be Laws: but if any of them shall come afterwards to be lawfully repealed, both King and Judge are free from Ruling and Judging according to such of them as are thus lawfully repealed, notwithstanding their Original Oath. Since therefore if the first takers of that Oath were now alive, they could not be said to have abjured Episcopal Government, which hath been since established by Laws of this Church and Kingdom, especially considering that this Church in her Confession holdeth Church Government to be alterable at the will of the Church; certainly we repeating but their Oath, cannot be said to abjure that Government now, more than they could be said to do it if they were now alive and repeating the same Oath.

Thirdly, How can it be thought that the very Act of his Majesties commanding this Oath should make Episcopal Government to be abjured by it, more than the Covenanters requiring it of their associates, in both Covenants the words and Syllables of the Confession of Faith being the same? Now it is well known that many were brought in to subscribe their Covenant, by the solemn protestations of the contrivers and urgers of it, that they might subscribe it without abjuring of Episcopacy, and other such things as were established by Law, since the time that this Oath was first invented and made; and the three Ministers in their first answers to the Aberdene Queries have fully and clearly expressed themselves to that sense, holding these things for the present not to be abjured, but only referred to the trial of a free General Assembly: And likewise the adherers to the last Protestation against his Majesties Proclamation, bearing date the ninth of September, in their ninth Reason against the subscription urged by his Majesty do plainly aver, that this Oath urged by his Majesty doth oblige the takers of it, To maintain Perth Articles, and so maintain Episcopacy. Why therefore some men swearing the same words and syllables should have their words taken to another sense, and be thought to abjure Episcopal Government, more than others who have taken the same Oath in the same words, must needs

Fourthly, It is a received Maxim, and it cannot be denied, but that Oathes Ministered unto us must either be refused, or else taken according to the known mind, professed intention, and express command of Authority urging the same: A proposition, not only received in all Schools, but positively set down by the adherers to the said protestation verbis in the place above cited. But it is notoriously known even unto those who subscribed the Confession of Faith by his Majesties commandment, that his Majesty not only in his Kingdoms of England, and Ireland, is a maintainer and upholder of Episcopal Government according to the Laws of the said Churches and Kingdoms, but that likewise he is a Defender, and intends to continue a Defender of the same Government in his Kingdom of Scotland, both before the time, and at the time when he urged this Oath: as is evident by that which is in my Lord Commissioner his Preface, both concerning his Majesties instructions to his Grace, and his Graces expressing his Majesties mind, both to the Lords of Council, and to the Lords of Session, and the same likewise is plainly expressed and acknowledged by the adherers to the said Protestation in the place above cited: their words being these; And it is most manifest that his Majesties mind, intention, and commandment, is no other but that the Confession be sworn, for the maintenance of Religion, as it is already or presently professed (these two being co-incident altogether one and the same, not only in our common form of speaking, but in all his Majesties Proclamations) and thus as it includeth, and continueth within the compass thereof, the foresaid novations and Episcopacy, which under that name were also ratified in the first Parliament holden by his Majesty. From whence it is plain, that Episcopacy not being taken away or suspended by any of his Majesties Declarations, as these other things were which they call novations; it must needs both in deed, and in the judgment of the said Protesters no waies be intended by his Majesty to be abjured by the said Oath. Now both the major and that part of the minor which concerneth Episcopal Government in the Church of Scotland, being clearly acknowledged by the Protesters; and the other part of the minor concerning that Government in his other two Kingdoms being notoriously known, not only to them, but to all others who know his Majesty, how it can be imagined that his Majesty by that Oath should command Episcopacy to be abjured, or how could any one to whom his Majesties mind concerning Episcopal Government was known, honestly or safely abjure it, let it be left to the whole World to judge; especially considering that the Protesters themselves in that place above cited, by a dilemma, which we leave to themselves to answer, have averred, that when that Act of Council should come out, yet that it could not be inferred from thence that any such thing was abjured.

Fifthly, and lastly, If the explanation in that Act of Council be taken in that not only rigid but unreasonable and senseless sense which they urge, yet they can never make it appear, that Episcopal Government at the first time of the administering of that Oath was abolished; The very words of that Confession of Faith, immediately after the beginning of it, being these, Received, believed, defended by many and sundry notable Kirks and Realms, in chiefly by the Kirk of Scotland, the King's Majesty and three Estates of this Realm, as God's Eternal truth and only ground of our Salvation, &c. By which it is evident, that the subscription to this Confession of Faith is to be urged in no other sense than as it was then believed and received by the King's Majesty, and the three Estates of this Realm at that time in being; and it is well known, that at that time Bishops, Abbots and Priors made up a third Estate of this Realm, which gave approbation to this Confession of Faith: and therefore it is not to be conceived, that this third Estate did then abjure Episcopacy, or that Episcopacy was at the first swearing of that Confession abolished. But say that at that time it was abolished by Acts of General Assembly, yet was it not so by any Act of Parliament, nay by many Acts of Parliament it was in force, because none of them was repealed; some whereof are annexed in the sheet immediately after these reasons, which we pray the Reader carefully to peruse and ponder: and at the very time of the taking of this Oath, and after, Bishops, whose names are well known, were in being. Now it is to be hoped that in a Monarchy, or any other well constituted Republick, that damnable Jesuitical Position shall never take place, That what is once enacted by a Monarch and his three Estates in Parliament, shall ever be held repealed or repealable by any Ecclesiastical national Synod.

By all which it is evident, that the explanation of that Act of Council so groundlessly urged, can induce no man to imagine that by the Confession of Faith lately sworn by his Majesties commandment, Episcopal Government, which then did, and yet doth stand established by Acts of this Church and Kingdom, either was, or possibly could be abjured.

And having now (good Reader) heard his Majesties mind in his instructions to us, our mind in requiring in his Majesties name this Oath to be taken, and these few reasons of many, which do evidently evince the inconsequence of that sense, which without any show of inference is put upon it by those who would go on in making men still believe, that all which they do or say is grounded upon Authority, though they themselves do well know the contrary; we suppose that all they who have taken this Oath will rest satisfied that they have not abjured Episcopal Government; and that they who shall take it, will take it in no other sense.

Which timely warning of ours, we are the more willing to give, because we are given to understand, that even they who were wont to call the takers of this Oath (notwithstanding of that explanation by Act of Council) perjured and damned persons, and in their Pulpits called the urging of it the depth of Satan, do now mean to take it themselves, and urge others to take it in that sense which they make men believe (though wrongfully) that Act of Council makes advantageous to their ends.

But we do in his Majesties name require, that none presume to take the said Oath, unless they be required so to do by such as shall have lawful authority from his Majesty to administer it unto them; being confident, that none either will or can take the said Oath or any other Oath in any sense, which may not consist with Episcopal Government, having his Majesties sense, and so the sense of all lawful authority fully explained to them.

HAMILTON.

That

1628.

THat Episcopal Jurisdiction was in force by Acts of Parliament, and no waies abolished nor suppressed in the year 1580. nor at the time of the Reformation of Religion within the Realm of Scotland, doth evidently appear by the Acts of Parliament after mentioned.

First, By the Parliament 1567. cap. 2. whereby at the time of Reformation the Popes Authority was abolished, it is enacted by the said Act, That no Bishop, nor other Prelate in this Realm, use any Jurisdiction in time coming by the Bishop of Romes Authority. And by the third Act of the same Parliament, whereby it is declared, That all Acts not agreeing with Gods Word, and contrary to the Confession of Faith approved by the Estates in that Parliament, to have no effect nor strength in time to come. Whereby it is evident, that it was not the Reformers intention to suppress Episcopacy, but that Bishops should not use any Jurisdiction by the Bishop of Rome his Authority; and seeing they did allow Episcopacy to continue in the Church, that they did not esteem the same contrary to Gods Word and Confession aforesaid: as appears more clearly by the sixth Act of the said Parliament, which is ratified in the Parliament 1579. cap. 68. whereby it is declared, That the Ministers of the blessed Evangel of Jesus Christ, whom God of his mercy hath now raised up amongst us, or hereafter shall raise, agreeing with them that now live in Doctrine or Administration of the Sacraments, and the people of this Realm that profess Christ as he is now offered in his Evangel, and do communicate with the holy Sacraments, as in the Reformed Kirk of this Realm they are publicly administrate, according to the Confession of the Faith, to be the only true and holy Kirk of Jesus Christ within this Realm; Without any exception by reason of Policy and Discipline, declaring only such as either gain-say the Word of the Evangel according to the heads of the said Confession, or refuse the participation of the holy Sacraments as they are now ministrated, to be no members of the said Kirk so long as they keep themselves so divided from the Society of Christ's body. Whereby it is manifest, that it was not the said Reformers mind to exclude any from that Society by reason of Discipline, and that they did not at that time innovate or change any thing in that Policy they found in the said Kirk before the Reformation.

This is likewise evident by the Oath to be Ministred to the King at his Coronation, by the eighth Act of the said Parliament, whereby he is to swear to maintain the true Religion of Jesus Christ, the Preaching of his Holy Word, and due and Right Ministration of the Sacraments now received and Preached within this Realm, and shall abolish and gain-stand all false Religion contrary to the same; without swearing to any innovation of Policy and Discipline of the Kirk.

Secondly, It doth evidently appear by these subsequent Acts of Parliament, that by the municipal Law of this Realm Archbishops and Bishops was not only allowed in the Kirk, but also had Jurisdiction and Authority to govern the same.

First, By the 24. Act of the said Parliament, whereby all Civil Priviledges granted by our Sovereign Lords Predecessors to the Spiritual Estate of this Realm, are Ratified in all points after the Form and Tenor thereof. And by the 35. Act of the Parliament 1571. whereby all and whatsoever Acts and Statutes made of before by our Sovereign

Lord and his Predecessors anent the freedom and liberty of the true Kirk of God, are ratified and approved.

Secondly, By the 46. Act of the Parliament 1572. whereby it is declared, that Archbishops and Bishops have the authority, and are ordained to convene and deprive all inferior persons being Ministers, who shall not subscribe the Articles of Religion, and give their Oath for acknowledging and recognoscing of our Sovereign Lord and his Authority, and bring a Testimonial in writing thereupon within a Month after their admission.

Thirdly, By the 48. Act of the same Parliament, whereby it is declared, that Archbishops and Bishops have authority at their Visitations to design Ministers glebes.

Fourthly, By the 54. Act of the said Parliament, whereby Archbishops and Bishops are authorized to nominate and appoint at their Visitations, persons in every Parochin for making and setting of the Taxation, for upholding and repairing of Kirks and Kirk-yards, and to convene, try, and censure all persons that shall be found to have applied to their own use the Stones, Timber, or any thing else pertaining to Kirks demolished.

Fifthly, By the 55. Act of the Parliament 1573. whereby Archbishops and Bishops are authorized to admonish persons married, in case of desertion, to adhere, and in case of disobedience, to direct charges to the Minister of the Parochin to proceed to the sentence of Excommunication.

Sixthly, By the 63. Act of the Parliament 1578. whereby Bishops, and where no Bishops, are provided, the Commissioner of Diocesses, have authority to try the Rents of Hospitals, and call for the Foundations thereof.

Seventhly, By the 69. Act of the Parliament, 1579. whereby the Jurisdiction of the Kirk is declared to stand in Preaching the Word of Jesus Christ, correction of manners, and Administration of the Holy Sacraments; and yet no other authority nor Office-bearer allowed and appointed by Act of Parliament, nor is allowed by the former Acts; but Archbishops and Bishops intended to continue in their authority, as is clear by these Acts following.

1. By the 71. Act of the same Parliament, whereby persons returning from their Travels are ordained, within the space of twenty daies after their return, to pass to the Bishop, Superintendent, Commissioner of the Kirks where they arrive and reside, and there offer to make and give a Confession of their Faith, or then within forty daies to remove themselves forth of the Realm.

2. By the 99. Act of the Parliament 1581. whereby the foresaids Acts are ratified and approved.

3. By the 130. Act of the Parliament 1584. whereby it is ordained, that none of his Majesties Lieges and Subjects presume or take upon hand to impugn the Dignity and Authority of the three Estates of this Kingdom, whereby the Honour and Authority of the King's Majesties supreme Court of Parliament, past all memory of man, hath been continued, or to seek or procure the innovation or diminution of the power and Authority of the same three Estates, or any of them in time coming under the pain of Treason.

Anno 1638. 4. By the 131 Act of the same Parliament, whereby all judgments and jurisdictions as well in Spiritual as Temporal Causes, in practice and custom, during these twenty four years by-past not approved by his Highness and three Estates in Parliament, are discharged: and whereby it is defended, That none of his Highness Subjects of whatsoever quality, estate, or Function they be of, Spiritual or Temporal, presume, or take upon hand to convocate, convene, or assemble themselves together for holding of Councils, Conventions, or Assemblies, to treat, consult, or determine in any matter of estate, Civil or Ecclesiastical (except in the ordinary judgments) without his Majesties special commandment, or express licence had and obtained to that effect.

5. By the 132 Act of the said Parliament authorising Bishops to try and judge Ministers guilty of Crimes meriting deprivation.

6. By the 133 Act of the same Parliament, ordaining Ministers exercising any Office beside their calling to be tried and adjudged culpable by their Ordinaries.

7. By the 23 Act of the Parliament 1587. whereby all Acts made by his Highness, or his most noble Progenitors anent the Kirk of God, and Religion presently professed, are ratified.

8. By the 231 Act of the Parliament 1597. bearing, That our Sovereign Lord and his Highness Estates in Parliament, having special consideration of the great Priviledges and Immunities granted by his Highness Predecessors to the holy Kirk within this Realm, and to the special persons exercising the Offices, Titles, and Dignities of the Prelates within the same; which persons have ever represented one of the Estates of this Realm in all Conventions of the said Estates; and that the said Priviledges and Freedoms have been from time to time renewed and conserved in the same integrity wherein they were at any time before: So that his Majesty acknowledging the same to be fallen now under his Majesties most favourable protection, Therefore his Majesty with consent of the Estates declares, that the Kirk within this Realm, wherein the true Religion is professed, is the true and holy Kirk: And that such Ministers as his Majesty at any time shall please to provide to the Office, Place, Title, and Dignity of a Bishop, &c. shall have vote in Parliament, sick-like and als freely as any other Ecclesiastical Prelate had at any time by-gone. And also declares, that all Bishopricks vaicking, or that shall vaick, shall be only disposed to actual Preachers and Ministers in the Kirk, or such as shall take upon them to exerce the said Function.

9. By the 2 Act of the Parliament 1606. whereby the ancient and fundamental Policy, consisting in the maintenance of the three Estates of Parliament, being of late greatly impaired and almost subverted, especially by the indirect abolishing of the Estate of Bishops by the act of annexation: Albeit it was never meant by his Majesty, nor by his Estates, that the said Estate of Bishops, being a necessary estate of the Parliament, should any waies be suppressed; yet by dismembring and abstracting from them of their livings being brought in contempt and poverty, the said Estate of Bishops is restored, and redimegrate to their ancient and accustomed Honour, Dignities, Prerogatives, Priviledges, Lands, Teindes, Rents, as the same was in the Reformed Kirk, most amply and free at any time before the act of annexation; rescinding and annulling all acts of Parliament made in prejudice of the said Bishops in the premises, or any of them, with all that hath followed, or may follow thereupon, so the effect they may peaceably enjoy the honors, dignities, priviledges, and prerogatives competent to them or their estate since the Reformation of Religion.

10. By the 6 Act of the 20 Parliament, declaring that Archbishops and Bishops are redimegrate to their former Authority, Dignity, Prerogative, Priviledges and Jurisdictions lawfully pertaining and shall be known to pertain to them, &c. Car. 14.

11. By the 1 Act of the Parliament 1617. ordaining Archbishops and Bishops to be elected by their Chapters, and no other waies, and consecrate by the rites and order accustomed.

This is the Explanation, and now followeth their answer, which needeth no reply, for that there is nothing in it that hath weakened any thing contained in the five reasons. Only, where there is any new or dangerous Position of theirs, or any other thing which may seem with any show fit to be observed, you shall find it noted upon the Margin, as it here ensues, according to his Majesties large Declaration, p. 337.

An Answer to the Profession and Declaration made by James Marques of Hamilton, his Majesties High Commissioner, at Edinburgh, Anno 1638. in December.

THIS ancient Kingdom, although not the most flourishing in the glory and wealth of the World, hath been so largely recompenced with the riches of the Gospel, in the reformation and purity of Religion from the abundant mercy and free grace of our God towards us, that all the reformed Kirks about us, did admire our happiness. And King James himself of happy memory, gloried that he had the honour to be born, and to be a King in the best reformed Kirk in the World. Those blessings of pure Doctrine, Christian Government, and right frame of Discipline we long enjoyed, as they were prescribed by God's own Word; who as the great Master of his Family, left most perfect directions for his own economy, and the whole Officers of his house: till the Prelates, without calling from God, or warrant from his Word, did ingyre themselves by their craft and violence upon the house of God. Their crafty entry at the beginning was disguised under many cautions and caveats, which they never observed, and have professed since, they never intended to observe, though they were sworn thereto. Their waies of promoting their course were subtil and cunning: as in abstracting the Registers of the Kirk, wherein their Government was condemned; in impeding yearly General Assemblies, whereunto they were subject and comptable; and generally in enfeebling the power of the Kirk, and establishing the same totally in their own persons: whereby in a short time they made such progress, that being invested in the prime places of estate, and arming themselves with the boundless power of the High Commission, they made themselves Lords over Gods inheritance: and out of their greatness, without any show of order or Counsel, without advice of the Kirk, but at their own pleasure enterprised to alter and subvert the former doctrine and discipline of this Kirk, and introduce many fearful corruptions and innovations, to the utter overthrow of Religion; and to make us no less miserable than we were happy before. These pressing grievances did at length awake the good Subjects to Petition his Majesty and his Council for redress. And albeit at last, after many reiterated supplications and long attendance,

Anno 1638. his Majesty hath been graciously pleased to grant a free Assembly; yet in the beginning by the credit of the Prelates, and their commodity of access, his Royal ear was long stopped to our cries, and we discharged under the pain of Treason to meet for making any more remonstrances of our just desires.

In this distress none other mean, nor hope of redress being left, we had our recourse to God, who hath the hearts of all Kings and Rulers in his hand; and therefore taking to our heart, that God had justly punished us, for the breach of that national Covenant, made with God, in Anno 1580. We thought fit to reconcile our selves to him again, by renewing the same Covenant. And so in obedience to his * Divine Commandment, conform to the practice of the godly in former times, and according to the laudable example of our religious Progenitors, warranted by Acts of Council, we again renewed our Confession of Faith of this Kirk and Kingdom, as a real testimony of our fidelity to God, in bearing witness to the truth of that Religion whereunto we were sworn to adhere in Doctrine and Discipline, of our loyalty to our Sovereign, and mutual union among our selves in that cause. Which Confession, with a sensible demonstration of God's blessing from Heaven, was solemnly sworn and subscribed, by persons of all ranks, throughout this Kirk and Kingdom, with a necessary explanation and application for excluding the innovations and corruptions introduced in the Religion, and Government of this Kirk, since the year 1580. that so our Oath to God might be clear for maintenance of the Doctrine and Discipline then professed and established, and according to the meaning of that time.

The happy effects of this our resolution and doing, have been wonderful: And since that time God's powerful hand in the conduct of this business hath evidently appeared. For after some time, upon the continuance of our groans and supplications, our gracious Sovereign was pleased to send into this Kingdom, The noble Lord James Marquess of Hamilton, &c. with Commission to hear and redress our heavy grievances: who after many voyages to his Majesty, and long Conferences and treating with us, needful to be related in this place, did in end, by commandment from his Majesty, indict a free General Assembly to be holden at Glasgow the 21 of November last, and proclaimed a Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh the fifteenth of May next to come, for settling a perfect peace in this Kirk and Kingdom: And further to give full assurance to the Subjects, that his Majesty did never intend to admit any change or alteration in the true Religion, already established and professed in this Kingdom: And that all his good people might be fully and clearly satisfied of the reality of his Royal intentions for the maintenance of the truth and integrity of the said Religion, his Majesty did injoin and command all the Lords of his Privy Council, Senators of the Colledge of Justice, and all other Subjects whatsoever, to renew and subscribe the Confession of Faith formerly subscribed by King James of blessed memory and his household in Anno 1580. and thereafter by persons of all ranks, in Anno 1581. by ordinance of the Council, and Acts of the General Assembly, and again subscribed by all sorts of persons in Anno 1590. by a new Ordinance of Council, at the desire of the General Assembly, with a Band for maintenance of the true Religion, the King's person, and each of other in that cause: as the Proclamation of indiction, being dated at Oatlands, the 9 of September, published at the Market-Cross of Edinburgh, the 22 of the said Month, more fully propoerteth.

Upon the hearing of which Proclamation, These who were attending at Edinburgh, and expecting a gracious answer of our former desires, as out of bounden duty they did with all thankfulness acknowledge his Majesties gracious favour: So out of zeal to God and Religion, they did protest, that they who had by the late Covenant and Confession condescended more specially to the innovations and errors of the time, could not after so solemn a specification, return to an implicit and more general Confession enjoined, conform to a Mandat, apparently discrepant from the genuine meaning of the Confession, and wanting both Explication and Application, and did most humbly and earnestly desire the Lords of his Majesties Council, that they would not, in regard of the former reasons, press upon the Subjects the subscription of this Covenant, but that they might be pleased to forbear their own subscribing of it, in respect of the inconveniences might result upon their subscribing thereof, in an ambiguous sense; but their Lordships not having subscribed that Confession, containing our former explanation, and being required by his Majesties Commissioner, to subscribe the Confession, as it was drawn up, and presented to them, without our explanation, with a general Band for maintenance of the Religion in Doctrine and Discipline now presently profest, and of his Majesties person, lest these words (now presently) repeated in this year 1638. should infer any approbation of these innovations, introduced since the year 1580. whereof many did justly complain, after deliberation for removing of this scruple and prejudice, and clearing of their own meaning; they caused make an Act of Council that their swearing and subscribing of the Confession of Faith was according to the Tenor and date the 2 of March 1580. according as it was then profest within this Kingdom: whereupon they rested satisfied, being confident that the general Assembly then indicted, would remove any doubt and differ which might arise anent the meaning and interpretation of the Confession of Faith, and clear what was profest in the year 1580. Yet some having subscribed that Covenant in different senses, others forbearing to subscribe the same, as some of the Lords of Session, till the Assembly should declare the genuine and true meaning of the Confession, upon whose interpretation, as of the only competent Judge, they might acquiesce, and rest satisfied: which now after accurate tryal of the Acts of General Assemblies, and mature deliberation, is fully cleared, and explained in this last General Assembly by God's mercy, and his Majesties gracious favour of indiction, holden at Glasgow: as the Act made thereupon doth proport: whereby Episcopal Government, amongst many other innovations is found upon undeniable evidences of truth and declared to be condemned and abjured in this Kirk, in Anno 1580. There is notwithstanding published in name of his Majesties Commissioner a Declaration, tending to dissuade his Majesties Subjects from receiving the explanation of the Confession made by this Assembly, and affirming that the Confession subscribed by the Council, doth no waies exclude Episcopal Government, nor any thing else established by Laws standing in force, the time of the taking of the said Oath, the ninth of September last; notwithstanding the foresaid Act of Assembly, which

Anno 1638. as the decree of our Mother Kirk ought to be received and revered by all her Children, and Act of Council, whereof the words are so clear, as they cannot admit any mental reservation, which is acknowledged by such of the Councillors then present and subscribers, whose hearts God hath touched, to make the sense of their Oath to God, preponder with them above all other worldly respects and fears.

THis Declaration containeth five Arguments, with a bundle of Acts of Parliament, quoted and drawn up by some persons, whom we know not; but seen and approved by the Commissioner: whereby his Grace endeavoureth to evince his conclusion, that Episcopal Government was not abjured by the Council, nor the Covenant, 1580. Which is so repugnant to the Acts of the Kirk, the Act of Council, and all reason, that we are confident, the same will make no impression in the judgment of any well affected Christian, as shall be evident by our following answers, which we offer to the Readers consideration, after he hath first expended these Generals.

1. This Declaration is only made by his Majesties Commissioner, * and not

Four general considerations of the Declaration.

* The Lords of Council did take and were to take this Oath as well as any other in the known sense of the King who commanded it, and therefore any Act of Council for their explanation was unnecessary, and it is unjustly affirmed that this Declaration or Explanation was made by the L. Commissioner, for it was made by the King, and but published by him at his Majesties Commandment, as is plainly expressed in the Title of it.

by the Lords of Secret Council, who should be fittest Interpreters of their own act, and whose act should be the ample expression of their meaning, else acts of Council, by possibility of admitting the variable commentary of intentions, will lose all force and vigour in themselves. And yet it is evident that the Councillors have not only actually sworn to maintain the Religion and Discipline established in Anno 1580. When Episcopacy was condemned; but likewise intended to do so: because they have distinguished and opposed between the Religion presently professed, 1638. mentioned in the Proclamation, and the Religion professed in Anno 1580. mentioned in their act; and by that opposition of now and then, they reject the one, and swear the other: otherwise they needed no Declaration: which notwithstanding accompanies their subscriptions, and is acknowledged by the Commissioner in the second line, to be an act explaining the Confession, for obedience whereof all those who have subscribed that Covenant, have done the same.

2. Albeit his Majesty did not conceive any difference between the Religion, Doctrine and Discipline now professed, from that which was in Anno 1580. (wherewith his Majesty can hardly be acquainted, without perusing the records of Assemblies) yet his Majesties Real intention was to maintain the Confession of Faith professed in Anno 1580. because his Royal design by that commandment was to maintain true Christian Religion in purity (wherunto Episcopacy by this Kirk was ever judged and condemned as prejudicial) and to remove the fears of his Majesties good Subjects, complaining of by-gone innovations, and apprehending greater changes: which ends are only obtained by subscription of the Confession as it was Anno 1580. and no wise by maintaining the Religion now presently professed; because the corruptions now presently received in this Kirk, are the grounds of our just complaints, as being * contrary to the Word of God, and foresaid Confession in Anno 1580.

* But when shall they be proved to be contrary to the Word of God?

3. We must distinguish between Oathes, tendered by the first framers of the Confession, * the whole * They Kirk, who have power to interpret and explain the same, and Oathes required, to be renewed by the supreme Magistrate the King's Majesty, who as custos utriusque tabulae, and a true * Son of the Kirk, ought to receive the true meaning of the Kirk, and cause it to be received of those whom God hath subjected to him.

feffion was, but by one Mr. John Crag, and commanded by the Authority of King James he did advise with the Church concerning it, but they received it from him, not he from them.

* That the supreme Magistrate should as the Son of the Church only receive the meaning of the Church, and cause it to be received by his Subjects, is not only the Jesuitical tenet, but their very words and syllables, and as they are alledged here very false, for the greatest part of this confession containeth not matters of Faith, but of Government, Discipline and Ceremonies: besides this Confession was first enjoined by King James and his Council before it was approved by the Church: how then King James, if he were now living, should receive the meaning of it from the Church after he had subscribed it, and commanded his household to do so; or His Majesty should now receive the meaning of it from the General Assembly after it was subscribed by his own commandment, we cannot apprehend.

And we are confident that his Majesty, in his just and pious disposition, will never take away the benefit of that holy national Oath, and Confession of Faith subscribed by his Majesties Father of blessed memory 1580. and now lately renewed again, and solemnly sworn by the Subjects of this Kingdom, upon the pretence of any intentions repugnant to the true sense of that Confession: which even as it is subscribed by the Council, doth never import that his Majesty was framing or administering any new Confession or Oath, but only enjoining to renew the old Confession 1580. and therefore unquestionably should be taken in the true meaning of that time. 4. If there were any real opposition betwixt his Majesties Proclamation and the act of explanation made by his Majesties Commissioner and Council, * Yet the last must be observed and preferred before the first, because the first is his private will, the second his publick and judicial will. Et posterior derogat priori, publica privata.

And albeit we do not now express that the Council did subscribe the Confession of Faith in obedience to a Mandat, where there was any contrariety, repugnancy, or ambiguity betwixt the Mandat and the Confession it self, which was commanded, yet the Council making an Act that they did subscribe it as it was professed 1580. and declaring publicly that this was their own meaning, both they and such of his Majesties Lieges, who did subscribe in obedience of their charge, are obliged to observe rem juratam, & the real matter of the Oath (more than the mind and Mandat of the prescriber) especially seeing it is no new Confession, but the renewed Confession of the whole Kirk of Scotland; The meaning whereof cannot be declared nor interpreted by any, but the whole Kirk of Scotland who now upon unanswerable reasons, have clearly found that Episcopal government, was then abolished and abjured: It followeth by good consequence, that the Council did both virtually and verily swear, yea intend to swear the abjuration of Episcopacy, which is found by that confession 1580. and the discipline of the Kirk then established, to be a corrupt government in this Kirk, of human invention, wanting warrant from the Word of God, tending to the overthrow of this Kirk: So that any Declaration in the contrary hereof is protestatio contraria facto, and the reasons thereof cannot be forcible, to brangle the resolution of any judicious well affected Christian, if he will patiently read and ponder, without pre-occupation, these following answers to the five reasons infer in that Declaration.

The

Anno 1638.
Answer to the first Reason.
 The last part of the first Reason is quite omitted, though in it lieth the principal Explanation of this first Reason.*

The first alledged Reason is this, That his Majesty could not command an Oath absolutely unlawful: But it is absolutely unlawful to swear against any thing established by the Laws of the Kirk and Kingdom, if the same be not repugnant to the Word of God, or repealed by posterious Laws*.

The last part of the first Reason is quite omitted, though in it lieth the principal Explanation of this first Reason.

To this we answer, first, The King's Majesty by commanding his Subjects to renew the Confession of Faith for maintaining the Doctrine and discipline profest in Anno 1580. hath commanded them to abjure whatsoever is found by the competent Judge to be introduced since that time repugnant thereto, albeit by the corruption of times it were countenanced with some Law intervening.

Secondly, The Lords of Council and Session and other Subjects have subscribed the Confession of Faith as it was 1580. not only without any restriction of it to the present Laws, but in a direct opposition to what is presently established by returning from the present corruptions in the Profession, tanquam termino à quo, to the Profession 1580. tanquam terminum ad quem: Which a† great part of Counsellors and other Subjects have declared to be their meaning.

† Now many of them have determined so?
They know that they are not comparable in number to those who have determined the contrary.

Thirdly, Episcopacy is found by the Kirk of Scotland in many Assemblies to be an office unwarranted by the Word of God, unlawful and repugnant thereto: So that the abjuration thereof in this Kirk is lawful and necessary.

Fourthly, Episcopacy was never restored by any Assembly of this Kirk, nor these Assemblies wherein it was condemned, repealed, without the which the same could not be established by a Parliament, whose power doth no more reach to the placing Officers originally in the Kirk, than the Kirks power to the making States-men in the Common-wealth.

Fifthly, The Laws which any ways contribute to the introduction of Episcopacy, do only extend to civil privileges, and were always protested against by the Kirk, as contrary to the national Covenant of this Land.

Sixthly, If any Assembly can be pretended to countenance Episcopacy or other Corruptions, it sufficeth to say that the same with all the Acts thereof is declared to have been null and void ab initio for undeniable reasons, as the Act at more length propoerts.

Seventhly, The breach of our National Covenant by introduction of Corruptions thereby abolished, hath undoubtedly in high measure offended God: And therefore at the renovation of that Covenant again with God, we ought not only to abjure all these innovations, but hereafter should be careful not to be relapse in our offence.

Eighthly, In no Covenant Episcopacy is expressly or specific abjured, before all Ecclesiastical Laws favouring the same was repealed, and declared null, but only virtually and generally, as being formerly abjured in Anno 1580. And as the trial hereof was referred to the Assembly, as the only Judge competent, so now when the Assembly hath declared and found Presbyterian Government to have been approved, and Episcopal Government condemned, abolished and abjured in Anno 1580. and in lieu of perceiving that Episcopacy is of an Apostolick institution, have clearly seen that it is justly condemned in our Kirk, as the invention of man wanting warrant or fundament in the Word of God, tending to the overthrow of this Kirk, Therefore albeit Episcopacy had been abjured expressly in the renovation of this Confession commanded by his Majesty, it was not unlawful, but most necessary and incumbent to us all, who are tied by that National Covenant against that unlawful Hierarchical Government, albeit we had never renewed the same: But we are falsely calumniate to have condemned the name of a Bishop, even as it is used in Scripture, which the Act of Assembly it self sufficiently refutes; by allowing St. Paul's Bishops, to wit, Pastors of a particular Flock, and condemning only all other Bishops brought in without the warrant of Scripture.

The second Reason in the Declaration is, That the Oath for preserving the Discipline and Government of the Kirk, cannot oblige after the alteration and change of that Discipline and Government: And seeing the Discipline and Government of the Kirk is not only alterable, but changed in this Kirk, we are not tied by that Oath, after the alteration.

Whereunto we answer, 1. That it is true, that policy and order in Ceremonies is temporary and may be changed, as is meant in that Article of the Confession cited in the Declaration: But a Bishop, or his Office, or the government of God's House, cannot be called a Ceremony, nay, they will be loth to be vilified by that appellation: But if it be a Ceremony, they are of no Apostolick constitution, as is mentioned in the first Reason: So that if they be lawful Governours in God's House, warranted by his Word, they are not alterable; and so this second Reason militates not for them, if their Office be changeable, and accounted among alterable Ceremonies; They are well exploded from our Kirk; and may be so by that second Reason of the Declaration.

2. One cause of general Councils is, for constituting a good order and policy in Ceremonies; which is grounded upon the last verse of the Fourteenth Chapter of the first to Corinthians, willing that all things be done decently and in order, wherein the Lord giveth not power to institute new Officers in his Kirk, but commandeth his own Officers to exerce their functions by his commandments without indecency, or confusion, in the variable circumstances thereof, to be determined according to the present occasions of edification.

3. In the Fifteenth Chapter of the same Confession of Faith, all mens inventions in matters of Religion are condemned: And in the Nineteenth Chapter, Ecclesiastical Discipline uprightly ministered as God's Word prescribeth. Matth. 18. 1 Cor. 5. is set down as the third essential and unchangeable mark of the true Kirk of God; and so is not of that nature with temporary, changeable Ceremonies; though unwarrantably ranked with them in the Declaration.

4. It is evident at our first Reformation what Policy was perpetual, and what Ceremonies changeable; for in the first Book of Policy, compiled that same year with the Confession, in the ninth Head is expressed a twofold Policy of the Kirk: The one absolutely necessary in all Kirks, the other not necessary, but changeable; such as, what day of the week Sermon should be, and the like; like; whereof they established no order, but permitted every particular Church to appoint their own policy, as they thought most expedient for edification; if parity of reason will make Episcopacy of this nature, let all men judge.

5. Our Confession speaketh of an order in Ceremonies; which cannot be appointed for all Ages, as is before said. But when they speak of the Office-bearers in the Kirk, they acknowledge according to the truth, that Christ himself appointed an ordinary constant government of his Kirk by his four ordinary Office-bearers, the Pastor, Elder, Doctor, and Deacon, to administrate the same perpetually; as is set down in the first Book of Discipline, and in the Treatise before the Psalms, which was drawn up at that same time, and allowed by the same persons. Like as in the year of God, 1560. when that Confession was made, and in the year 1567. when it was ratified, and by continual Acts of Assembly, and by the second Book of Discipline: The government of Christ's Kirk by these four ordinary Office-bearers, is set down as founded only upon the Word of God, as constant, unchangeable, and perpetual; and as that holy Discipline without which God's Word cannot be preserved; so that the intruding of any other Officer in God's House was accounted an offence against the Lord of the House.

6. By our Oath we are obliged to continue in obedience of Discipline as well as Doctrine, because they are both grounded on the Word of God, without the warrant whereof, all Traditions that are brought in are abjured, and the Discipline of the Kirk of Scotland is set down in the Book of Policy, as grounded on God's Word, and commanded to continue to the Worlds end, whereunto we have sworn, and cannot without perjury to God, gainsay it, like as the Assembly ordains the Discipline of the Kirk to be subscribed as such, and the Act of Parliament 1592. ratifieth the Discipline of the Kirk, as a privilege granted by God, whereunto the King's Prerogative cannot be prejudicial.

7. It carrieth no show of argument or face of probability, that the Kirk and Reformers of Religion which condemneth all other ordinary Officers in the Kirk, but these four appointed by Christ, did mean under the name of variable Ceremonies, to comprehend and admit Episcopacy, which frequently they condemn, as an invention of man, without the warrant of God's Word, tending to the overthrow of the Kirk and purity of Religion.

8. || The Prelates themselves will not grant Episcopacy to be reckoned in

|| Because in the XXI Article cited, the word Ceremony is used, therefore they would infer that this reason supposeth Episcopal Government to be but a Ceremony: But weakly; for the reason consisteth in the word Policy, which they take no notice of, and Episcopal Government being a part of Ecclesiastical Policy, they hold the one alterable, (as all they do who adhere to that XXI Article) must needs hold the other so to: Nor can it be inferred from any thing in this reason that Episcopal Government is maintained by it to be alterable, but that they themselves, and that XXI Article do hold it to be so.

deriveth its extraction from Divine Apostolick, at the least Ecclesiastical, perpetual and necessar institution, as is averred in the first Reason; and so should ever be unchangeable.

9. This Kirk hath ever condemned all such as held the Discipline and Policy thereof, to be indifferent and changeable; and in particular in Anno 1581. which is the year of the subscription of the Confession of Faith, and Book of Policy, Mr. Robert Montgomery is accused and condemned for that Doctrine.

10. In the Assembly 1596. upon the King's Majesties Proposition, and demand that it might be lawful for him to reason or move doubts, in any point of the external Policy, Government, or Discipline of the Kirk, which are not answered affirmative or negative in the Scripture. The Assembly concluded, That it might be lawful for his Majesty, or his Commissioner, to propound any point to the General Assembly in matters of external Government, alterable, according to the Circumstances, providing it be done in right time and place, Animo edificandi, non temandi: But as for the essential Discipline, in the Book of Policy, * the same Assembly desireth the King's Majesty to declare before his Estates, that he never intended to prejudice the same.

11. Albeit it were granted that Discipline were changeable, yet now seeing by the King's Majesties own consent, we have sworn to maintain the Discipline of the Kirk of Scotland, as it was 1580. we are obliged strictly, interposito juramento, to abide by that Discipline specificè; at least till it be lawfully changed by the Kirk of Scotland, in her free General Assembly, which can never be presupposed: Because in rei veritate, the Discipline, as well as the Doctrine, is acknowledged and sworn to, as unchangeable, wherein we must continue all the days of our life, and defend the same according to our power, under the penalty of procuring deservedly upon our selves, all the curses contained in God's Word.

12. The Doctrine of the Kirk of Scotland, condemned Episcopal, and re-established Presbyterian Government perpetually; which we have acknowledged by joyning our selves in the assertory part of our Oath, unto the Kirk of Scotland in Doctrine as well as in Discipline, and in the promissory part thereof by swearing to continue in the obedience of the Discipline, as well as Doctrine; to shew that Discipline as well as Doctrine is not variable, nor so sworn to by us; But as an immutable Law and Constitution, which we are obliged to maintain perpetually.

The third Reason is that we, who subscribe the Covenant, acknowledged that Episcopacy was not abjured thereby, which is qualified by two instances.

First, That the Ministers in their Answers to the Quæres of Aberdene, expressed themselves in that sense, holding these things for the present not to be abjured, but only to be referred to the trial of a free General Assembly.

Next, That it is averred in our last reasons against the Subscription urged by his Majesty, that this Oath, required by his Majesty, doth oblige the takers of it, to maintain Pearth Articles, and Episcopacy.

This needeth no Answer, if the preceding narration, and the whole passages of the business were considered and known; for in the application of our Covenant, we did not expressly & specificè, abjure Episcopacy, but only generally and virtually, by abjuring whatsoever was abjured in the Confession, 1580. which we found to be a strong Band, lying upon us to bind us straitly to the obedience

Car. 14.

* The Assembly desired it, but did ever his Majesties Royal Father do so?

Answer to the third Reason.

Anno 1638. dience of the Discipline then established: Wherein because there had intervened some alterations, we permitted justly the trial thereof to the Kirk, whether Episcopacy, Pearth Articles, and other Innovations were not condemned and abjured by the said Oath, which now the Assembly after careful search and examination of the Records have clearly found. This is the true meaning and substance of the Answer made to the Quarres of Aberdene, and ought also to be the ingenuous meaning of the Councillors, who by their Act declared they subscribed the Confession 1580. as it was then professed; which is consonant to our general Application, and which being now declared by their mother Kirk, they ought to reverence and obey.

2. For the second instance: It is true that when the Council was urged to subscribe the Confession 1580. conform to the warrants bearing (that they should maintain the Religion now presently profest) we justly feared that the same being subscribed in 1638. would comprehend Episcopacy, Pearth Articles, and all other corruptions introduced since 1580. And therefore both in our written Reasons against that subscription, and in our speeches at the Council Table, and to sundry Councillors in private, we dehorted them upon that reason from that subscription; which was the true cause why the Council being convinced with that reason, made their explanatory Act, declaring that they subscribed the Confession according to the meaning 1580. and as it was then profest, for removing of that doubt.

† We do hereby any man living to produce from any Jesuit, or the greatest Patron of Equivocation yet ever heard of, 3. † Albeit by the meaning of the prescriber of an Oath, the swearer were tacitly bound to maintain Episcopacy, Five Articles of Pearth, and suchlike, yet according to the premitted considerations, he is more obliged to the reality rei jurate, which is now declared and found to abjure Episcopacy, &c. nor to the meaning of the prescriber or his own either, being contrary to the explanation of the Sovereign Judge competent.

of such a wicked position as this, That the swearer is neither bound to the meaning of the exacter of the Oath, nor to his own meaning who takes the Oath, but to the reality of the thing sworn, as it shall be afterward explicated by the competent Judge: For then no man can tell what he sweareth, when he sweareth; if the declaration of the competent Judge shall come after, it were to be wished that he who set down this Proposition, had set his hand to it, that the world might take notice of him for an ignorant Fool, and an arrant Knave: In the mean time, till Johnston find out another, he must be taken for the man, because his hand is at this foolish Pamphlet.

Answer to the fourth Reason. The fourth Reason is Syllogistically urged thus: It cannot be denied but that Oaths ministred unto us, must either be refused, or else taken according to the known mind, professed intention, and expresse command of Authority urging the same. But it is notoriously known, that his Majesty, not only in his Kingdoms of England and Ireland, is a maintainer of Episcopal Government, but likewise is a defender, and minds to continue a Defender thereof in his Kingdom of Scotland. And therefore the Oath being taken, and not refused, must be sworn conform to his Majesties known meaning. The minor is confirmed from our own Assertions.

To this it is answered, 1. That in contradictory Oaths, || the swearer is more obliged to the true meaning of the Oath, clearly exprest therein, then either to his own meaning, or any sense of the prescriber, being contrary thereunto. Expect ally in this case, where there is no new Oath which may receive any new meaning, but the renovation of the old Oath, which can admit no new destructive sense: But must be sworn conform to the genuine original first mending.

2. That Oath was justly refused by us upon that ground of discrepance amongst many others; and such like, was not received by the Council, till they declared their meaning by Act sumul & semel with their subscription.

3. We do not meddle with the Kirks of England or Ireland, * but recommends to them the pattern shewn in the Mount: All our arguments and proceedings being for the Kirk of Scotland, where, from the time of her more pure Reformation than of her Sister Kirks, Episcopacy hath ever been abolished, till the latter

* They do not meddle with the Church of England, but yet in all their Writings declare that the Government of the Church of England is against the Word of God, and the pattern shewed in the Mount: And that their new fancied Government, contained in their imaginary Books of Discipline, is only according unto it.

times of corruption. So that though his Majesty hath hitherto maintained Episcopacy in Scotland, because his Majesty wanted the means to be informed of the Acts of this Kirk, yet we know that God hath so richly replenished his Royal breast, with such Justice and Piety, that when his Majesty shall receive perfect information, we are confident that He will never desire any change or alteration in our ancient Kirk Government and Discipline; especially now when his Majesty hath caused the maintenance thereof to be religiously sworn.

The fifth and last Reason is, That we can never make it appear, that Episcopal Government, at the first time of administering the Oath was abolished; the very words of that Confession of Faith, immediately after the beginning of it, being these; Received, believed, and defended by many and sundry notable Kirks and Realms, but chiefly by the Kirk of Scotland, the King's Majesty, and three Estates of this Realm, as Gods eternal truth, and only ground of our salvation. Whereupon is inferred that Bishops, Abbots and Priors, made up, at that time a third Estate of this Realm, which gave approbation to the Confession of Faith; and therefore this third Estate did not abjure Episcopacy. And albeit it had been abolished by Acts of Assembly, yet it was not so by Act of Parliament, but in force by many of them standing unrepealed, which are annexed to the Reasons. Which being the Acts of a Monarch, and his three Estates, are never repealable by any Ecclesiastical National Synod.

For answer hereunto, 1. It doth appear and is manifest by the Registers and Acts of Assembly, that before the subscription of the Confession at the time thereof, and thereafter: That Abbots, Priors, and Bishops were so clearly, evidently, and expressly condemned in this Kirk, That the best Wits of this Age, opposers of Episcopacy, cannot yet require one syllable to be added for farther assurance, and the most able maintainers thereof could not pick any quarrel to the clearness of the expression.

2. The Clause cited in the Reason, is only anent the Doctrine, and not anent the Discipline, which thereafter is determined, and the Hierarchy detested; and the Discipline of the Kirk sworn unto.

3. Albeit that Clause were of Discipline, yet it maketh nothing for Bishops except by inference, that they are comprehended under the name of the third Estate; which cannot be so understood, for

Anno 1638. for collections by way of inference or ex consequenti, cannot be adduced against the expresse acts of the time; wherein the makers signifie their minds in clear terms, & apertissime dicendo, leaveth no place to presume the contrary, especially in this Kingdom, where these expressions of stylus curie are carefully observed without change; which may be seen in the same case by many Parliaments, where it is * notour that no Prelate was present, or allowed: And yet the Acts proportioning to be made by his Majesty and three Estates, are interpreted by the quoter as made by the Prelates with others.

* But it is most notorious that at those Parliaments which were holden when the Confession of Faith was first sworn unto, Bishops had voices and were present, and so then Episcopal Government could not be abjured; for proof whereof, we refer the Reader to the Parliament Roll inserted at the end of this Answer.

4. Episcopacy was abolished not only by Acts of Assembly, but there is no standing Laws for Episcopal Government, but some against the same, as shall be evident in the Answer made to the Acts of Parliament, subjoyned hereto: But if there be any Acts of Parliament standing for Episcopacy, the King's Majesty, his Commissioner, the Council, the collective Body of the Kingdom, hath actually renounced the same by returning to the Doctrine and Discipline, 1580. whereunto Episcopacy is contrary; which God-willing may also be inacted at the next Parliament, proclaimed to be holden by his Majesty in May 5. The Acts of the Assembly, and the Book of Policy in the first and tenth Chapter, putteth clear marches between Civil and Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction; making every one independent in matters properly belonging to their own

† Let any Kingdom which is acquainted with Parliaments consisting of a Monarch and his three Estates, digest this Proposition, and then the Parliament can be no more the highest Court of the Kingdom.

Judicatory, and every one subject to the other in matters properly belonging to that other. † So that as the Assembly cannot make Civil Laws, nor repeal them, nor impede the Parliament from making or repealing Civil Laws, no more can the Parliament make Ecclesiastical Laws originally, nor repeal, or hinder the lawful Assemblies to repeal the same. For albeit Acts of the Assembly are, and may be ratified in Parliament, that is, only that the Civil Sanction may concur with the Ecclesiastical Constitution, but will not stop the Assembly to recall their own Act; which being adnulled by them, the || Civil ratification and sanction falls ex consequenti. For to maintain that the Kirk may not repeal her own Acts, ratified once in Parliament, is so derogatory to Christ's Prerogative and Ordinance, to the liberty of the Kirk, and freedom of the Assembly, to the nature, end, and reason of all Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, (as we have more largely cleared in the Protestation, Septemb. 22. last) that we believe few or none will be of that opinion. All these five Objections, and many more, was agitate and discussed in the Assembly, before the Act anent Episcopacy was made.

Conclusion.

And seeing the General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, indicted by his Majesty now holden at Glasgow, which is the only Judge competent and fit interpreter to remove and explain all doubts, arising upon the Confession of Faith, hath after long, religious, and mature declaration, exponed the same, and clearly found that Episcopal Government in this Kirk, amongst other corruptions, is abjured by the Confession of Faith, as the same was profest within this Kingdom, hath discharged all subscription to the Covenant, subscribed and interpreted by his Majesties Commissioner, hath commanded the Covenant subscribed in February, with the application, to be now subscribed according to her present determination: Therefore we trust that the knowledge hereof, will be a sufficient warning to all good Christians and Patriots, that they subscribe not the one, and that they subscribe the other, according to the genuine and true meaning thereof, declared by the Kirk allennerly, and of no contrary incompatible sense, as they would eschew the crime and danger of a contradictory Oath; and we would most humbly and earnestly beg of his Sacred Majesty, from the bottom of our hearts, that his Majesty would be graciously pleased to command, that the same may be so subscribed, conform to the declared explanation of the Kirk, which would prove the greatest happiness and joy that ever befell these disconsolated Subjects of this Nation, who (though unjustly branded with many calumnies) yet never have, nor ever shall swerve from our loyalty due to the Lord's anointed: But would readily imbrace any occasion to imploy our lives and fortunes for his Majesties service and honour; who (we heartily pray God) may long and happily ring over us.

* There is annexed to this Declaration a quotation of sundry Acts of Parliament, to prove that Episcopal Government was not abolished in the year 1580. whereunto albeit there is no necessity of answer, seeing the meaning of the Kirk of Scotland in her Anent Acts of Parliament.

* For the Cavils here made against the Acts of Parliament, cited in the explanation, they will be sufficiently confuted, if the Reader will take the pains to read the Acts; for then he shall easily discover that these exceptions are not only weak, but none at all.

Confession of Faith, is only to be sought from her self, and the Registers of her Assemblies, and not from the Parliament, yet the same shall be specially answered in the order that they are alleged, after these two Generals are offered to the Reader his consideration.

1. After the Reformation of this Kingdom, the Kirk was still wrestling against all corruptions, and especially against Episcopacy. But though they clearly and frequently condemned the same, yet the power of the Enemies of Reformation withstood them long: So that her own Policy could not be obtained, ratified expressly & specificè in Parliament, till the year of God 1592. which abrogateth all those preceeding Acts, alleged in the contrary.

2. That Acts of Parliament can no more make Ecclesiastical Offices, nor give Ecclesiastical Priviledges, nor the Acts of Assembly can establish Civil Offices of Estate, or grant to them Civil Priviledges; each Judicatory being properly confined within their own spheres.

But before the Acts of Parliament be particularly marked and cited, there be two Reasons prefixed: The one taken from some Acts of Parliament 1567. cap. 2, 3, 6. and cap. 68. Par. 1579. the other from the Oath ministred to the King, at his Coronation. For the Act of Parliament 1567. bearing that no Bishop nor other Prelate in this Realm, use any Jurisdiction in time coming by the Bishop of Rome's Authority; It is evident hereby that Episcopacy is altogether condemned, as all other Prelacy was; for before that time they had 1638. had no Jurisdiction but from the Pope; and therefore being discharged to execute that, they are discharged by the Act to execute any at all. That this is the true meaning and scope of that Act, is manifest, because the Kirk in the Book of Common Order, and in the first Book of Discipline, at that same time acknowledgeth no other ordinary Office-bearers appointed by Christ in Ecclesia constituta, but the Pastor, Doctor, Elder, and Deacon; and in her Assemblies at that same time, was still censuring these who were called or designed Bishops by reason of their benefices, as is instructed by the Acts printed before the Book of Discipline. And therefore in the Act of Council 1560. made in the same year by these same persons, ratifying the first Book of Discipline, they provided only that Bishops, Abbots, Priors, &c. being Protestants, brook their Revenues during their life times; they sustaining Ministers in the mean time.

2. In the Year 1566. which precedes that Parliament, the Kirk of this Kingdom approved the Confession of Helvetia; wherein the parity of Ministers is preferred as God's Ordinance, warranted by his Word, to Episcopacy, as an human consuetude.

3. Because at that time the Queen had restored the Archbishop of St. Andrews, therefore the Kirk supplicated the Nobility of the Kingdom, against that restitution, which they condemn as the curing of the Head of the Beast once wounded within this Land. Wherein they expressly ground themselves upon the said Act of Parliament, being before made in the Year 1560. as a certain abrogation of the Archbishops authority.

4. In the second Book of Discipline, Chap. 11. the Kirk useth the same Act of Parliament as an abrogation of the Papistical Kirk, and Papistical Jurisdiction, and thereby of Episcopal Jurisdiction and Power.

5. The Kirk thereafter in the same Chapter declareth their uniformity of this meaning by urging the Act of Parliament, 1567. printed amongst the black Acts, and renewed in the Parliament holden 1579. (which immediately followeth the Act here cited) declaring that no other Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction shall be used within this Realm, but that which is and shall be in the Reformed Kirk, and floweth therefrom: And they urge that none under the abused titles in Papistry, of Prelates, &c. attempt to claim the benefit of any Act of Parliament, having no Commission of the reformed Kirk within this Realm, whereby our Kirk declared all Episcopal Jurisdiction to be Papistical; which is the true meaning of the word, his Hierarchy in the short Confession. For their Jurisdiction could flow from none other but from the Pope, seeing it flows not from the Kirk, but was abolished and condemned by them, as is clear by the Registers of the Assembly.

6. The Acts do abolish all Papistical Jurisdiction; and therefore all Episcopal Jurisdiction, because Episcopal Policy and Jurisdiction is Papistical; as is acknowledged by many, and specially by Doctor Poklington, Chaplain to the Bishop of Canterbury, who deduceth a continual lineal succession from Peter, through the whole Popes, unto the present Archbishop of Canterbury; and by the Quoter himself, who alledgeth (albeit falsely) that this Kirk retained the Papistical Policy and Government.

7. Where it is said in the Reason, that our Kirk did not innovate any thing in that Policy which they found in the Kirk before the Reformation; the same is controlled by the Book of Common Prayer, first Book of Discipline, and Acts of the Assemblies.

And for the sixth Act, 1567. and the 68th Act, 1579. the same doth not only not mention Bishops, but declareth the true Kirk to consist only of Ministers of the Gospel then living, and these who thereafter should rise, agreeing with them, in doctrine and administration of the Sacraments, and the People, as the Members thereof, which directly excludeth Bishops, against whom the doctrine and practice of this Kirk, continually sounded, especially at that time: For in the Government of this Kirk by weekly meeting of Ministers, Elders, and Reformed Towns from the Year 1560. to the Year 1576. (except the interim of the pretended Convention at Leith, 1572.) and from the Year 1575. to the Year 1581. the Assemblies for the most part were employed in abolishing the Corruptions of Episcopacy, and in establishing the settled Policy which was agreed upon 1578. in the second Book of Discipline: In the which Acts of Assembly, and Book of Discipline, is set down at large the Doctrine of the Kirk of Scotland, anent that Discipline, as grounded and well warranted in the Word of God, and against Episcopal Jurisdiction, as an unlawful invention: So that Episcopacy being contrary to the Doctrine of the Kirk of Scotland, 1579. the Bishops disagreeing from the Ministers of the Evangel then living, in doctrine and in the use and administration of the Sacraments, are declared by the said Acts to be no Members of this Kirk, and the same Acts cited for them, do sufficiently evince that Episcopacy was still condemned, notwithstanding all opposition made in the contrary.

As for the Kings Oath, the same containeth no mention of Bishops, but by the contrary, the King is obliged thereby to maintain the true Religion of Jesus Christ, the preaching of his holy Word, and right administration of the Sacraments, then received and preached within this Realm. And seeing it is cleared by the preceding Relation, that Bishops were never allowed, but oppugned by the Kirk of Scotland, that Oath doth not allow, but exclude Episcopacy, which is also more perspicuous in the short Confession 1580. and 1581. when the Kirk set down her constant Policy in Doctrine and Discipline, grounded upon the Word of God, wherein the Hierarchy is abjured as contrary thereto; and craved an Oath from his Majesty for maintenance thereof, which now also our gracious Sovereign, in the Judgment of the Kirk of Scotland, is obliged to maintain, as being founded upon the Word of God, and exclusive of Episcopacy, as repugnant thereto. The Acts of Parliament thereafter particularly cited are these mentioned in order.

The 24th Act, 1567. ratifying all Civil Privileges formerly granted to the Spiritual Estate, and the 35th Act, 1571. ratifying all Acts made anent the freedom and liberty of the true Kirk; the same cannot be extended to the establishing of Episcopacy, because it is not mentioned in these Acts, but by the contrary was abolished by the Acts of the Assembly and Parliament before mentioned, so that the Privileges therein mentioned, are granted to such Kirk-men as then were received by the Kirk and Kingdom; and the freedom of the Kirk must be interpreted 1638. by her own judgment: who thought ever Episcopal Jurisdiction an heavy bondage: and yet those Priviledges can infer no Spiritual Jurisdiction, but only Civil Priviledges; some Immunities and Exemptions granted for the goods and persons of Kirk-men as is clear, 1. act James 1. Par. 1. and 26 act Par. 2. James 1. and 4 act Par. 3. James 2. with many others.

It is here to be observed, that the careful evolver of these acts of Parliament, hath omitted to cite the 7 act 1. Parliament of King James 6. bearing the examination and admission of Ministers, to be only in the power of the Kirk, then openly and publickly profest; and presentations to be made to Superintendents, or others having Commission from the Kirk, and appealeth from them, to the Superintendents and Ministers of the Province, and appealeth from these to the General Assembly: in all which gradations no mention of Bishops; but they in effect excluded by that contrare distinction of the Kirk then openly profest: because they were discharged by the foresaid second act 1567. and Superintendents were then permitted like temporary Evangelists for the present necessity, declared in the first Book of Discipline ad ecclesiam constituendam; but was abrogate from 1575. that the constant Policy of Ecclesia constituta began to be established.

1573. As for the acts of Parliament, 1572, and 1573. It is known by the records of the time, that the Regent then laboured hard to bring in Archbishops, and Bishops, who were not dead, but standing de facto provided to the power of these Titulars of Benefices, to fortifie his own designs, and counter-balance the authority of Ministers, pressing the purity of Reformation: and so cannot be Honourably alledged for the Bishops at this time: and yet it was done not by authority, but by warrant of some Ministers of his own party convened at Leith: and was only done for an interim, and protested against by the next Assembly; and yet nevertheless by the said acts of Parliament, the Archbishops, Bishops, Superintendents, or Commissioners of Diocesses or Provinces, are joyned together (which is wrongously omitted in the Quotation) to shew that no Archbishop or Bishop, qua tales, had any power but only being de facto standing provided in the Title, they were capable of a Commission from the Kirk, which sometimes they obtained, and in the Book of Assembly are named such as are called Bishops, and were under the Discipline of the Kirk: and in the same Superintendents Possessors and Titulars of Prelacies, as well as Archbishops and Bishops, are ordained to be called and convened for that effect before the General Assembly of the Kirk: and yet none can say, That the Offices of Abbots, Priors, &c. were then retained; howbeit the Benefices were not extinct; and few will grant that when the Archbishops and Bishops Office was in vigour, they thought themselves subject to the General Assembly: as they are by the said act which is also fraudfully omitted in the quotation.

1579. As for the acts of Parliament 1578, and 1579. It is answered that the Kirk in this mean time, from the year 1575. was buied in abrogating Episcopacy, and establishing the constant Policy, as is clear by the Printed acts of Assembly before the Book of Discipline, and unprinted acts of Parliament: The Kirk by her Commissioners daily reasoning and agreeing with the King's Majesty and his Commissioners upon these heads of Policy, whereupon the Parliament, by the said 69 act 1579. declareth there is none other Jurisdiction Ecclesiastical to be acknowledged, but that which is in this Reformed Kirk; and floweth therefrom, which extinguisheth Episcopacy; because it doth not flow from this Reformed Kirk: neither can produce its Charter from her: for besides that it was abolished by the foresaid acts 1567. It was condemned also in the Book of Policy, and in the General Assembly holden at Dundie, 1580. and their whole estate Spiritual, and Temporal condemned in the Assembly at Glasgow, 1581. and so acknowledged by his Majesties Commissioner in the Assembly at Edinburgh, 1581. so that by this act of Parliament, 1579. The Bishops are so abolished, that unless they be established by lawful Assemblies of the Kirk, no act of Parliament since sen can conduce for their established: seeing this act with the other acts for their abolition, standeth yet unrepealed. And farther, for the act of Parliament 1578. if the same contribute any thing, for Episcopacy, it must either be because Bishops are there mentioned, or for the power thereby conferred upon them: But both these are weak grounds. The first because there is no Bishop there named, but such as stood provided de facto on life: which is an designation of the Benefice, which was not then extinct; and not of the Office which was extinct. The power conferred upon them by the said act can give no strength to the argument: because there is no Jurisdiction granted thereby to them, but only power to visit Hospitals: which the Parliament might have granted to any person: but was most proper to these idle Titulars of Benefices, who might best attend the same, or employ means for their reparation. And this charge is likewise communicate by act of Parliament to all Chancellors of this Kingdom for the time being. And as to the 71 act 1579. we repeat the former answers that Superintendents and Commissioners are there joined with the Bishops; to shew that no power is granted unto them as Bishops, but Commissioners from the Kirk, and the name is still used, because the Benefice was not extinct, but they were known by that appellation.

The acts of Parliament 1581. were better alledged for Assemblies than Bishops, for it is an Annot the Acts 1581. expresse ratification of the former acts of abolition of Bishops, and abrogation of all acts or constitutions, Canons Civil or municipal contrare to the Religion then presently profest within this Kingdom: which is not only clearly exprest in the words: but if they were doubtfull (as they are not) were manifest for these reasons. First, the Assembly holden at Edinburgh, about the very same day, honoured with the presence of his Majesties Commissioner, is acknowledged by him to have condemned Episcopacy whereunto Temporal Jurisdiction is annexed; and the Assembly declaring that Function to be against the Word of God and acts of the Kirk, thereupon did supplicate the Parliament, that they should make no acts repugnant to the Word of God, especially concerning Bishops.

Secondly, The King and Estates by that act ratifieth all acts made for maintenance of the liberty of the true Kirk of God, presently professed within this Realm and purity thereof: which present profession can be no other, than that which was received by the Kirk and Assembly then presently sitting so near the Parliament at Edinburgh, which had approved the Presbyterial Government,
con-

Anno 1638. condemned the Episcopal, and ratified the short Confession simul & semel, wherein the Estates had sworn to the Presbyterial and abjured Episcopal Government.

Thirdly, This ratification of the former Acts of Parliament must be interpreted, according to the words thereof, to be in all points, which are not prejudicial to that purity of Religion and liberty of the Kirk presently professed within this Realm. And at this time the whole Estates had subscribed the short Confession, and so sworn to the Discipline, set down in the Book of Discipline, which by this Act is ratified in the first place, before any special enumeration of particular Acts.

Fourthly, It hath been formerly shewn that in the preceeding Acts of Parliament; where Archbishops or Bishops are named, the same hath been by reason of their Benefice, and not their Office, which the Parliament could not give them, being abrogate by Assembly; or having intended really to give them any place, would not have joyned Superintendents and other Commissioners with them: Or otherwise they are named as having equal power with the Superintendents and other Commissioners, as in the Convention at Leith; and conform to the time, especially 1572. and 1573. wherein some Titulars or Possessors of Prelacies, so called in the 46. Act of the Parliament 1572. had a Commission from the Kirk like unto Superintendents, which was not fully abrogate until 1580. But all this was without prejudice of the Kirk her liberty, to recall her own Commission from these who were provided to Prelacies, and to condemn their Episcopal Offices, whereunto they ascribed the power, which they really had by their Commission; as the Kirk did upon good Reasons abrogate the Office of Superintendents, without impugning of the said Acts of Parliament (which were never rescinded till 1592.) whereby it is evident, that though this Act of Parliament 1581. ratifie the former Acts wherein Archbishops, Bishops, Superintendents, or other Commissioners of the Kirk are named, yet seeing the said Acts are alternative conceived, the vigour and efficacy thereof subsists by this ratification in the last alternative, viz. Commissioners from the Kirk, Diocese or Province; seeing the remanent were formerly condemned, especially by this Assembly of Edinburgh holden the time of the Parliament.

Fifthly, This ratification 1581. of the former Acts made in favours of the true Religion, repeating only the titles of these Acts, and not themselves, cannot import any corroboration of the Offices under the titles mentioned in these former Acts; because this ratification can only be extended to the matter, and not to the designation of the persons, exprest in the former Acts, which is only personal and circumstantial; as for instance, this Act 1581. could not confer any power or employment upon Superintendents, because that Office was then abrogate, and out of the Kirk. But the true meaning of the Act is, that ratifying the substance and matter in favours of the Kirk and Religion, it doth intrust the execution to these whom the Kirk shall lawfully authorize with Commission for that end, which is more manifest in the 114. Act Parl. 12. 1592. wherein this Act 1581. and all the Acts therein contained are ratified quoad materiam; and yet all Archbishops and Commissioners are discharged, and all Ecclesiastical matters subjected to Presbyteries.

Sixthly, It cannot probably agree with reason, that by this ratification the Parliament, above their power, would endeavour to establish in the Kirk any Function so recently condemned of before by the Assemblies at Diindie 1580. and at Glasgow and Edinburgh 1581. immediately before this Parliament.

The Acts of Parliament 1584. are of several natures: But they were protested against by the Ministers of Edinburgh in the name of the Kirk of Scotland, at the Mercate Cross of Edinburgh, when they were proclaimed, and as they were made in that time which was called the hour of darkness in this Kirk, tyrannized by the Earl of Arran, so are they expressly repealed 1592. cap. 114.

Anent the Act of Parliament 1584. for the three Estates, and so forth. To answer; 1. That the Kirk from the year of God 1580, 1581. that the Confession was subscribed, unto the Year 1597. all this time was by continual Acts condemning the Office of Bishops, their Spiritual, their Temporal, their whole Estate, their Confusion of Civil and Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, and craving in Council and Parliament the dissolution of Prelacies, and the erection of Presbyteries.

2. De facto the former Bishops being continually proccessed and sentenced by the Kirk, these who presumed to usurp that Office condemned by the Kirk, namely Mr. Patrick Adamson, and Mr. Robert Mounsgomry, in the Year 1582, 1584, 1586. they were deprived and excommunicate by this Kirk before the Parliament, 1587.

3. De facto no Ecclesiastical Bishop voted in Parliament but Mounsgomry and Adamson, who were taken in by the Earl of Arran, unto the Parliament holden in May at Edinburgh, 1584. wherein the three Estates ratifieth the honour and dignity of the three Estates, so that as these two Bishops cannot be called the third Estate which doth ratifie, so the Estate of Bishops, cannot be called the third Estate, which is ratified; especially seeing by that same Parliament in the 132. Act, Bishops of the Diocese are but nominate the King's Commissioners. And in the last Act of that same Parliament, printed of old in black letter, there is set down the King's Commission granted to the said pretended Bishop Adamson.

4. From 1581. till the Year 1597. the Quoter doth not cite, nor can cite any Act of Parliament expressly nominating any Ecclesiastical Bishop, but that in the 1584. wherein he is named as one amongst other the King's Commissioners, whereof some were meer secular persons.

5. It is clear by the first Act of the ninth Parliament 1584. and the eleventh Act of the tenth Parliament 1585. that Bishopricks, Prelacies, Abbasies, Priories, Nunneries, were then thought to be alike in the Kings hands, were granted to whatsoever persons being his Subjects, albeit they brooked no Office in the Kirk; so that some of these Lordships and Baronies were erected before 1587. and excluded from the annexation.

6. As the Kirk had ever been craving the dissolution of Prelacies, and condemning the Temporal as well as the Spiritual Estate of Bishops, by their Act of the Assembly 1581. and by their censure of the Presbytery of Strivling for admitting Mounsgomry to the Temporality of the Bishoprick of Glasgow, and Censure of Mounsgomry for aspiring thereto, contrary to the Word of God and Acts of the Kirk in the Assembly 1587. Juni. So in the eleventh Parliament of King James the Sixth, 29. of July 1587. Anno 1638. 29. Act. the three Estates of Parliament annexeth to the Crown, all Lordships and Baronies pertaining to whatsoever, Archbishops or Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Nunns, and Monks; reserving always to Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, *Prioresse*s, Commendators, and others, possessors of great Benefices of the estate of Prelates, and which before had or hath vote in Parliament, the principal Castles and Fortalices: Whereby it is clear, that the stylus curie naming three Estates, did no ways include Ministers being Bishops; seeing no Ecclesiastical Bishops sate in that Parliament, nor could sit: Because the only two Bishops of the time, Adamson and Montgomery, were before deprived and excommunicate, and certainly they neither would nor could have sitten as an Estate in Parliament to abrogate their own Estate and Lordships, and temporal Land, whereupon that Act acknowledgeth any right they had, did depend. 2. It is clear that Archbishops or Bishops, Abbots, Priors, &c. all alike voted in Parliament of old, not by reason of their Ecclesiastical Office, but by reason of their great Benefices and Lordships: Which here is said to have had vote in Parliament; for that cannot be relative to the Persons, as unto *Prioresse*s, but unto the Benefices. So that Ministers voted not as Ministers in name of the Kirk, but as possessors of these great Benefices or Baronies: And others, who were not Ecclesiastical persons, being titulars, and possessors of these great Benefices, both communi stylo were called Bishops, Abbots, &c. by vertue of the Benefice without any Office, in the Rolls of Parliament, and in the Act of Assembly 1587. The Bishoprick of Cathnes is said to vaikie by decease of Robert Earl of March, the King's Unkle: And the Assembly, in their Letter to the King, declareth to be against the Word of God, and Acts of the Kirk, to present and admit any Minister to that Bishoprick, as also some of these titulars, and possessors of the Benefices, albeit they had no Ecclesiastical Office, did sometimes ride and vote in Parliament. 3. It is clear that the three Estates, by taking away from Archbishops and Bishops, their Lordships Baronies, and temporal Lands, they took away their vote in Parliament, which doth not subsist, but in and by the Benefice, and therefore Ecclesiastical persons separate to the Gospel for want of their great Benefices, had no vote in Parliament, till the 1597. (albeit all the intervened Acts are made by the three Estates) wherein the King's Majesty restoreth Ministers to the Titles and Dignities of Prelacies, which sheweth that before they were disposed to others then Ministers; and provideth that Ministers presented to these Titles and Dignities, and to the Benefice of Bishopricks, shall have vote in Parliament; which sheweth that the Benefice, and not the Office, giveth right to vote in Parliament, like as the very Act of Parliament 1606. acknowledgeth, that by the Act of annexation of the Temporality of Benefice to the Crown 1587. the estate of Bishops were indirectly abolished; and therefore they behoved to rescind the Act of Annexation anent the Benefice, and restore them to these Titles and Dignities, before Ministers could vote in Parliament; but these Acts also are hereafter answered.

7. But as for 130. Act, 1584. no Bishop is therein mentioned; and yet it is adduced for Bishops, because the three Estates are therein named, under one of which the Prelate claimeth to be comprehended; But why more he than Abbots and Priors formerly abolished, as well as Episcopacy? Car. 14. Why more by that Act, than many former made when Bishops neither rode, sate, nor voted in Parliament, but were expugned out of this Kirk, and yet the Acts were all made by the three Estates? Which albeit it needeth none other demonstration then that it is stylus curie, carefully observed in this Kingdom: Yet the truth is, that the Nobility, Barons, and Burrows, were the three Estates of this Kingdom, many hundred years after Christianity, before any Bishop was in this Kingdom, as is observed by Buchanan and Boetius, and acknowledged by Lefly in his Chronicles; and after the Bishops were abrogate expressly, the three Estates of Parliament did continue, and make all Acts of Parliament. Yea, after the 1592. where Bishops were discharged, for if Bishops were an Estate, there behoved to be four Estates of Parliament, as there are so many named in the Commission granted by King James and King Charles, viz. the Clergy, Nobility, Barons, and Burrows, and that as Ecclesiastical persons separate to the Gospel, since the Reformation, were never warranted to voice in Parliament, while 1597. So on the other part, the Barons are, and have been, as an Estate of Parliament in uncontraverted possession of voting in Parliament, conform to the 101. Act Parl. 7. King James the first, renewed again in the Parliament 1585. and 1587. Act 113. wherein Precepts of the Chancelary are ordained to be directed to the Barons, as unto an Estate of Parliament; even as they shall be direct unto other Estates, to wit, the Nobility and Burrows, which in that Act is mentioned. So in this same Act of Parliament (which in the Narrative relateth the by-gone great decay of the Ecclesiastical Estate) there are exprest three compleat Estates in Parliament, the Nobility, Barons, and Burrows. And as in Law the three Estates are intire without Bishops or Ministers voters in Parliament, so also, it is most expedient and necessary for the liberty of the Kirk, honour of the King, and peace of this Kingdom, that no Ministers vote in Parliament, as is most clearly and largely proved in the Reasons of the Protestation given into Parliament against the same, 1606. and in the Act of this Assembly against Civil places of Kirk-men.

As for the 131. Act, 1584. no Bishop is therein mentioned to get any benefit thereby, and far less can the same reach to the prejudice of the late Assembly, which was indicted by his Majesty, and is an ordinary Judicatory allowed by the Laws of God and man; like as it is answered in our Protestation more largely.

And for the 132 and 133 Act of the said Parliament, 1584. there is no Ecclesiastical Privilege or Authority thereby granted to Bishops as Bishops; but only a power of cognition, wherein the Parliament hath joyned others the Kings Commissioners with them, only as the King's Commissioners; and granted the same unto Secular persons with them: But the King could never provide them to the Office and Jurisdiction of Bishops, which was abolished by many Acts of Parliament and Assemblies before written.

The 23. Act 1587. worketh directly against Bishops, being a general ratification of all Acts formerly made anent the Religion presently profest in this Kingdom, which must include the Acts abolishing Episcopacy; but especially, seeing in the same Parliament 1587. Temporal Livings are taken from the Bishops, as well as the Office

Anno 1638. Office was 1567. And the same Act undoubtedly was granted in the same meaning, wherein the Kirk did crave it; who that same year had often condemned Episcopal Government, as contrary to God's word, and the liberty of the Kirk, and approved Presbyterial Government, as flowing from the pure Fountain of God's Word.

Anno the 114. Act 1592. It falleth in here to be remarked, that the Act is never alledged; and that because it not only revokes in particular the foresaid Acts 1584. but in general all other Acts contrary to that Discipline then established, and in particular the Assemblies, Presbyteries and Synods, with the Discipline and Jurisdiction of this Kirk, are ratified and established, as most just and godly, notwithstanding whatsoever Statutes, Acts, Canons, Civil or Municipal Laws made in the contrary, whereunto his Majesties Prerogative is declared to be no ways prejudicial. Further, the said Act abrogates all Acts granting Commission to Bishops, and other Judges constitute in Ecclesiastical Causes, and ordaineth presentation to Benefices to be direct to Presbyteries, with power to give collation thereupon; and so containeth a ratification of the Heads of Policy set down in the second Book of Discipline. Which Act is renewed Act 60. Anno 1593. and the power of Presbyteries acknowledged 1594. Act. 129. and was never rescinded expressly in totum; but only in part by the ratification of the Act of Glasgow. Which now cannot be respected, but falleth ex consequenti, seeing that Assembly of Glasgow is now upon just and infallible Reasons declared to have been null ab initio: And so this Act of Parliament, wisely omitted by the Collector to the Commissioners grace, might serve alone, without our preceeding special Answers for clearing the whole preceeding Acts.

Anno the The 23. Act, 1597. granteth the priviledge of a voice in Parliament to the whole Kirk; and under that name to Abbots, or other persons provided to Prelacies, as well as Bishops, even as in time of Papistry; so as Sir Robert Spottiswood, Abbot of New-abbey, rood thereafter in Parliament, which was both unwarrantable and unusual. Which doth nothing contribute for the Bishops advantage; because albeit the Benefice was not extinct, yet neither the King nor the Parliament might give them the Office so oft condemned by this Kirk; which is also acknowledged in the same Act: Because after the granting to them of the said voice, the Parliament remitteth them to the King and the Assembly, concerning their Office in their Spiritual Policy and Government in the Kirk. 2. The said Act beareth expressly to be but prejudice of the Jurisdiction and Discipline of the Kirk, established by Acts of Parliament made in any time preceeding, and permitted by the said Acts to all Provincial and General Assemblies, and other whatsoever Presbyteries and Sessions of the Kirk: And so the same cannot derogate from the former Acts ratifying the present Discipline of the Kirk, especially the said Act 1592. nor yet from the Acts of the Assembly abjuring Episcopacy. 3. The priviledge is granted upon condition they be actual Pastors and Ministers. And so we refer to the World and themselves, if with good Consciences they may claim the benefice of that Act. 4. That priviledge was obtruded, and pretended to be introduced in favours of the Kirk, who may and hath renounced the same, as being incompatible with their Spiritual Function; as the Act of the Assembly at more length beareth, upon undeniable Reasons. 5. When voice in Parliament was first plausibly obtruded upon the Kirk, it was neither proponed nor tolerated in other terms then that only such should have vote in Parliament, as had Commission from the Kirk: So that not as Bishops, but as Ministers, Commissioners from the Kirk, they had vote in Parliament; like as the Assembly at Montrose, 1600. being so hardly prest by Authority, that they could not get it altogether refused (albeit in their Conference at Holy-rood-house, 1599. they proponed unanswerable Reasons against this, and all other Civil places of Pastors) set down Cautions, binding the Ministers voters in Parliament, to be insert in the Act of Parliament subsequent; which was omitted notwithstanding of the Bishops Oath and Duty in the contrary: For the breach whereof they are now most justly censured. 6. The ratificatory Acts of the Priviledges of the Kirk and Discipline thereof then profest, are not thereby abrogate, but notwithstanding thereof must stand in force, because it is ever understood, and frequently provided in Parliament, that all Acts thereof are made salvo jure ejuslibet; far more salvo jure Ecclesie & Sponsæ Christi, when she is robbed of her right without audience; especially seeing her right is usually ratified in the first Act of every Parliament. 7. Albeit it were granted, that by this Act of Parliament, or any whatsoever the Prelates had voice in Parliament, yet that doth not exime them from Ecclesiastical Censure, nor forefault the the Kirks right, whereby she may condemn them for their transgressions, as now this Assembly most justly hath done; for by their own Caveats, whosoever is Ecclesiastically censured by Presbyteries and Provincial Assemblies, ipso facto loseth his benefice and vote in Parliament. 8. Further, the Bishops in their Declinatour profess they never had Commission from this Kirk to voice for her in Parliament, according to the Cautions set down in the Assembly at Montrose; for the which Cautions that Assembly was never challenged, as trenching upon the third Estate.

That Act of Parliament 1606. is coincident with the nature of the preceeding Acts; for albeit the King and Parliament might have reponed them to their Rents, Teends, Lands, &c. which were annexed to the Crown; yea, might have disposed to them any part of the Patrimony of the Crown, if lordly Titles and Civil places in the persons of Pastors separate to the Gospel, had been lawful, yet could not give them the Spiritual Office, and Jurisdiction Spiritual, which was abolished and abjured by many preceeding Acts of Assembly and Parliament forecited. Et quod illud tantum agebatur, is evident by the whole strain of the Act, reponing them, for remed of their contempt and poverty to their Dignities, Priviledges, Livings, Rents, Lands, and Teends; and this always limited, as was competent to them, since the Reformation of Religion in the reformed Kirk, from which time their Office and Jurisdiction Spiritual was always extinct. Which is evidently acknowledged in the Act of Parliament 1592. and expressly in the Act of Parliament 1597. granting voice in Parliament to Ministers. Which albeit it was the first step to Episcopacy, yet the Parliament thereby hath remitted the Office of Bishops in their Spiritual Policy and Government (as not pertaining to their Civil place and Jurisdiction) to the King and the General Assembly of Ministers, as properly belonging to them, but prejudice always of the Jurisdiction and Discipline of the Kirk, permitted by many Acts of Parliament, (whereof that 1592. forecited 1638. cited is one) to general Provincial Assemblies, Presbyteries and Sessions of the Kirk, which were never prejudged neither by the Act 1606. nor by the Act 1609. albeit corruption was then fast advancing; till the year 1612. at which time first, and never before, the King and Estates had taken the advice of the pretended Assembly at Glasgow, anent their Office and spiritual Jurisdiction formerly remitted to them; as is clear in the Act of Parliament 1612. relative to that remit in the Parliament 1597. which for that cause is also omitted by the Quoter.

Car. 14.

Anno the Act 1606.

Anno

Anent the Act 1609. Like as also the Act of Parliament 1609. restoreth them only to Temporal Jurisdiction, and Privileges, lawfully pertaining to them and flowing from his Majesty, as any other ordinar Jurisdiction doth; with reservation of the King's Supremacy and Prerogative therein; which can no waies comprehend their Ecclesiastical Office, because the same is not a Temporal Jurisdiction, neither did lawfully pertain to them, but by the law of God, and acts of this Kirk after Reformation; and by the act 1592. was abrogate and taken from them; and the Ecclesiastical power established in Presbyteries. So that if it be an Ecclesiastical Office, it cannot flow from the King, who cannot make a Minister, Doctor, Elder or Deacon in the Kirk; albeit he may present a Minister made by the King of Kings to the Kirk; neither can the Parliament institute originally any Ecclesiastical Office in the Kirk, as is before said. Further the intended scope of that act is only the restitution of Commissariats and Temporal Jurisdiction flowing from his Majesty; as is clear by the act itself, bearing that they shall brook all Privileges and jurisdictions granted to them by his Majesty, and redintegrates them to their former Authority and Jurisdiction, lawfully pertaining to them, alwaies flowing from his Majesty (from whom only Temporal Jurisdiction doth flow) which is only the Jurisdiction of Commissioners in Temporal Causes, and no waies any Spiritual Jurisdiction competent ratione officii: which by God's Word and the Laws of the Kingdom was abjured in them, and established in Assemblies, Presbyteries, &c. as is many times before repeated. But to convince them further it is not our that both 1606, and 1609. they read in Parliament, and by their own voices and the iniquity of the time, made the said acts without inserting the cautions made at Montross, without any Commission from the Kirk, contrare to the said cautions and their own Oath given for observance thereof, against which the Kirk of Scotland did protest solemnly, clearing unanswerably, not only the unlawfulness of the Ecclesiastick Episcopal Function; but also of the Civil places in persons of Pastors, from God's Word, our Confession of Faith, 1580. acts of this Kirk and Kingdom; but this Protestation being rejected by them was Printed to the view of the World.

Anent the Act 1617. And as for the Act of the Parliament 1617. it cannot set down Consecration to the Office, without a preceding act of the Kirk: which is not alledged: but by the contrare, the Kirk, had before condemned that Office, and did particularly protest against that act of Parliament. Moreover this act is builded upon the supposed ground of Glasgow Assembly 1610. which for infallible reasons is now annulled: and so not only this act 1617. but all after acts, ratifying the same, fall ex consequenti; both by the light of Reason, Law and Practice of this Kingdom. For when the princijal act or right ratified doth fall, the subsequent ratification falleth eo ipso: especially in this case, when Civil Laws in Ecclesiastical matters, cannot be made originally, nor subsist after the abolition of the Ecclesiastical constitutions, which they ordain under Civil Sanction to be obeyed: and yet being once annulled they cannot be obeyed. And further even that corrupt Assembly of Glasgow 1610. which is now declared to have been null ab initio, did never restore the Office of a Diocesan Bishop before condemned in this Kirk; but did too far enlarge and extend the power of these who were provided to the Benefice of Bishops; and yet alwaies under cautions and limitations sworn unto: which they never observed; and upon condition of their subjection for censure to yearly General Assemblies: which they have not kepted; but impeded, and so they ought not to clame the Benefice of these acts of Parliament concluded by their own voices, and protested against by the Kirk of Scotland and violated by themselves.

And last, for answer to all Acts of Parliament Conclusion whatsoever, let the Christian Reader consider, if, as the Assembly lately convened by his Majesties indiction in the name of Jesus Christ, should judge (and hath proceeded) by the Word of God alone, and not by Acts of Parliament: so we are obliged by our Oath made to God, to return to the Doctrine and Discipline of this Kirk 1580. and renounce all subsequent Acts contrary thereunto, and prejudicial to the purity of Reformation and the Kirk, in whose favours any pretended privileges is granted, and that out of experience of real prejudice, and the pungent sins of our Oath and danger of Perjury; under which this Kingdom lieth: for the which we ardently deprecate God's wrath, and beg mercy to every one of us who are guilty; and must still continue our earnest and humble supplications to his Majesty for redress; as we shall do our Petitions to God, for preserving the Sacred Person of our Dread Sovereign, and perpetuating his Reign and his Royal Posterity over this Land so long as the World endureth.

Revised according to the Ordinance of the General Assembly, by me Mr. A. Johnston Clerk thereof:

Feb. 1639.

BEcause the Reader shall not need to doubt of the vanity of all these exceptions against the Acts of Parliament here cited, and of the impertinency of their Citations of some Acts of Parliament to the contrary: It will plainly appear to the Reader, that when this Confession of Faith was first framed, and enjoined to be subscribed; Episcopal Government was then in force and strength, which doth appear by the most unquestionable and irrefragable Record of that Kingdom, viz. The Books and Rolls of Parliament. And therefore We have here caused to be inserted out of the Sederunt Rolls of Parliament, the names of such Bishops as sate in Parliament, and represented the third Estate since the Reformation, beginning no higher than the year 1579. In which the Reader must note that the Abbots were secular men who had got the Abbey-lands, but yet retained their names and places in Parliament.

WE shall now take our leave for a while to speak of the Scottish affairs, and mention somewhat of the state of things in England; where in an Assize held at Durham before Judge Berkley, Aug. 6. a demand was made by Claxton Claimant, and Lilburn Defendant or Tenant, concerning a question of Right to be determin'd by Battel: the weapons were Sand-baggs and Battoons, each party producing his Champion in Arms in open Court they cast down their Gantlets with five pence in them and demanded the Battel, which was several times put off, and at last it came to the Council-Board where his Majesty was acquainted with the matter how that there had been several daies appointed for determining by Battel the Question of Right, which had long depended between Claxton Demandant, and Lilburn Tenant, for certain Lands in the County Palatine of Durham. And that by the late Appointment, the same was to be tried by the said Parties Champions the twenty second of December next. It was by his Majesty ordered, That the Judges of that Circuit, upon conference with their Brethren, should be thereby prayed and required to take the same Case into due and serious consideration; and if they could find any just way by Law

how the said Combate might be put off, and the Cause put into another way of Trial; for his Majesty, out of his pious care of his Subjects, would have it so, rather than to admit of a Battel. But otherwise, since Lilburn had a Judgment upon a Demurrer again Claxton, and also Costs from the Board for his Vexation, and since that Claxton had brought a new Action, upon which Lilburn had waged Battel, his Majesty would not deny the Trial of Laws, if it could not be legally prevented.

Afterwards both Parties brought their Champions into the Court of Durham, having Sandbags and Battoons, and so tendred themselves in that fighting posture: But the Court upon the reading the Record, found an Error in it, committed by a mistake of the Clerk. (some thought wilfully done) whereupon the Court would not let them join Battel at that time.

Thus did the Judges several times order to avoid Battel by deferring the matter, though Champions on both sides were appeared in Court at all Meetings to join Battel.

But at last the Judges gave their Opinion that inasmuch as the Champions had confessed in open Court, that they had received Money and were hired by the Parties, for that this exception came after the Battel was gaged, and the Champion allowed the exception ought not to be received, and at last, as before appears, there was found a mistake in the Record.

And now all things appear as tending to an open War betwixt his Majesty and the Scots, who had openly put off all subjection, only in words they would call themselves the King's humble and faithful Subjects; hereupon his Majesty issues out his Letters to the Nobility to attend his Royal Standard at York.

CHARLES REX,

Right Trusty and Right Welbeloved Cousin, We greet you well. The late Disorders in Our Realm of Scotland, began upon pretence of Religion, but now appearing to have been raised by Faction's Spirits, and fomented by some few ill and traiterously affected particular Persons, whose aim hath been by troubling the Peace of that our Kingdom, to work their own private ends, and indeed to shake off all Monarchical Government, though We have often assured them, that we resolved to maintain constantly the Religion established by the Laws of that Kingdom, is now grown to that height and dangerous consequence, that under those sinister pretences, they have so far seduced many of our People there, as great and considerable Forces are raised and assembled in such sort, as we have reason to take into consideration the Defence and Safety of this Realm of England; and therefore upon due and mature consultation with the Lords of our Council, We have resolved to repair in our Royal Person to the Northern parts of this our Realm, there (by the help of Almighty God, and the assistance of our good Subjects) to make resistance against any Invasion that may happen.

And to the end that this Expedition, may be as effectual as we design, to the Glory of God, the Honour and safety of Us, and of this our said Kingdom of England, We have directed that a considerable Army both of Horse and Foot, should be forthwith levied out of all the Shires to attend Us in this Action, wherein we nothing doubt, but the Affection, Fidelity, and Courage of our People shall well appear.

In the mean time, we have thought fit, hereby to give you notice of this our Resolution, and of the state of our Affairs, and withal hereby to require You to attend Our Royal Person and Standard at Our City of York, by the first day of April next ensuing, in such Equipage, and such Forces of Horse, as your Birth, Honour, and your Interest in the publick Safety do oblige you unto, And as we do and have reason to expect from you. And this our Letter shall be as sufficient and as effectual a Warrant and Discharge unto you for the putting of your self, and such as shall attend you, into Arms, and Order as aforesaid, as if you were authorized thereunto by our Great Seal of England. And we do require you to certify Us under your hand within fifteen daies next after the receipt hereof, what Assistance we shall expect from you herein, and to direct the same to one of our Principal Secretaries of State. Given under our Signet at our Palace of Westminster the 26 day of January in the fourteenth year of our Reign.

Exam. P. Warwick.

And also those of the Nobility and Gentry, who had Estates in the North parts to repair thither.

This day was read at the Board (His Majesty sitting in Council) the Draught of the Writ hereafter mentioned, and by His Majesties express Command, it was ordered, That Mr. Attorney-General should be hereby required forthwith to send Writs accordingly to the Lord William Howard, the Lord Clifford, the Lord Wharton, the Lord Grey of Wark, Sir Richard Lumly, Knight, Vicount Waterford in Ireland. Mr. Attorney is to take care not to fail to issue out these Writs.

As also Letters were dispatched to the Majors of Newcastle and Hull, for the fortifying of those Towns according to the usage of former times, and for that divers of the Nobility and Gentry did voluntarily offer their Service to his Majesty to serve him in his Wars, the Privy-Council ordered Letters

Letters of License to all such to train, maintain and discipline their Servants, men and associates which they were ordered to have under the hand of the Earl Marshal of England, as also a place of Rendezvous was appointed at Selby in Yorkshire, and the Lieutenants of the respective Counties were to pay the charge of the Souldiers conduct, and the moneys to be allowed them in the Exchequer. All Lord Lieutenants of Counties were ordered to repair into their Counties respectively, and the Earl of Bridgewater to his Presidency in Wales, and all Governours of Town, City or Castles, to their particular Governments accordingly. And in regard the Scottish Tumults were more than likely to end in a War, the Lord Deputy of Ireland, the Loyal Earl of Strafford, gave his Majesty his Sentiments of that was as followeth:

The Lord Deputy of Ireland's Letter to the King.

May it please your Sacred Majesty,

HAVING of late in a short space written sundry Letters, I chose hitherto to forbear answering those of the 28 of December, lest my Liberty might seem a violence to the modesty and Reverence I ought and shall ever observe, so often as I have the Honour to appear before your Majesty be it in Person or Writing.

But now the Acknowledgments of your Princely Aspect toward your absent Servant break forth from me.

First, In a most humble sense of your gracious admitting me the Honour to perform unto the Queen a small Service, in the Suit I last mentioned, and thereby express my ambition to be commanded something by her Majesty.

And next, the comfort I have to find my self under the protection, and shelter of your Majesties most excellent Judgment and Justice, all along that storm raised in my Country (when I least looked for it) by the Earl of Holland, and others.

The Passages indeed I have understood from Mr. Raylton, for which I most humbly thank your Majesty.

It seemeth the Earl of Holland now saith, That he never refused to be examined; excepting only against the looseness of the Interrogatories. Sure his Lordship hath thought better of it of late; for, either I have been strangely misinformed, or at first his Lordship insisted positively, That by his Privilege of a Peer and Counsellor, he ought not to be examined at all, and laboured to procure an Order at the Council-board it self to fettle it accordingly.

Then your Majesty conceives, I should have looked so into the Interrogatories, as might have rendred them without exception. I have been heretofore thrice Defendant and twice Plaintiff in that Court; and upon my Faith, Sir, never read over any Interrogatory in all my Life, this being the Work of the Solicitor and Counsel, and not of the Client; and so having given Direction, nothing should pass of that kind, but under the Eye of your Majesties Attorney General, and Solicitor; I held my self by that means safer, and in a more perfect way, than any poor advice or skill of mine own could have set me, albeit I had been present upon the place.

As for that which your Majesty with so much tenderness above any merit, or consequences of my poor Services, mentions in the latter part of this gracious Letter concerning Sec. Win. 182. I beseech your Majesty believe, that I have so intirely assigned my Will and Affections to your Pleasure; am so perfectly delighted to follow and serve you your own way, how much soever my private Opinion might else lead me into your Paths; that there is neither Person, nor Thing, that I shall not readily and chearfully join hands withal, where your Majesty is pleased once to signifie it is fit for your Service to have it so, how much more then with this Lady, against whom I protest I never had the least Exception for any private interest of my own.

And here having answered the former, I receive your Majesties other Letter of the 25th of January, this 5th of February.

By the Blessing of Almighty God, these five hundred Men, provided in all respects as becomes your Service, shall be at Carlisle by the first of April, according to your Majesties appointment, nothing but crows Winds to hinder; for that favourable, I have them all on Board, and moving thitherward by the twentieth of the next Month, provided of fifteen daies Bread and Beef, for Cheese this Place affords none: But still, under favour, me-thinks the Garrison of Carlisle would not be less than two hundred Horse and one thousand Foot, and that of Berwick four hundred Horse and two thousand Foot.

I congratulate exceedingly the forwardness of your English Subjects, the readines of your Army, and your gracious Purpose of going in Person to York, as passing wise and noble, will give infinite chearfulness to your Army, countenance and advantage to all your Affairs; yet I trust there is no thought of your going any further, It will be sufficient the rest under your Majesties Directions be managed by such as have that Charge committed to them.

The season of this year is so past, as nothing can be done in present, but against the next Winter. If I knew the proportions, I conceive I might, at good Rates, victual Carlisle with Beef, Butter, Corn, or Bisket, and Herring, to be delivered at Whitehaven, and so carried thirty miles over Land to Carlisle; and after I understand your Pleasure, shall attend that Service, as all other your Gracious Commands, with my uttermost care and pains.

My Lord of Antwerp doth not by one word make known his desire to me for Arms, which is advisedly done; his Lordship perceiving I am not ignorant of his great want of Money; his credit to be so low, as not able to take up, at this very instant, in this Town poor three hundred pounds; therefore his great Undertakings are more like to be believed on abroad, than they would be nearer home. I shall be able to furnish him with Arms, when the Supply comes. We have sent for into the Low-Countries, if it be your Pleasure to have it so: But I crave to know who it is your Majesty purposeth shall pay for them.

Yet I might accuse my self, should I not humbly certify your Majesty, I am altogether of opinion, his Lordship in so great a streight of his own Fortune, is not a Person at all to trouble the Earl of Argle now come back again into Cambray, or in present much considerable to your Majesties Affairs; and confident I am this will appear most true, how great soever his desires on that side are expressed, and I may believe them to be to serve the Crown.

The Secrets your Majesty gives me in charge, shall never be discovered to any Creature; yet that I be not thought upon for other Mens faults, I send inclosed a passage that I my self read in a Letter writ thence to Captain Biron. The Writer is one Mr. Daniel Neal, a very slight and busy Person; His principal dependance on the Earl of Antrim; and if I be not mistaken, very conversant at Arundel-House: Nevertheless my hands once freed of this Packet, I shall so colour the Matter, as to take away all thoughts of going to Carlisle.

Mr. Raylton informs me, There are Summons gone out for all the Nobility to attend your Majesty at York, Letters made ready for me among the rest, which your Majesty was pleased to order the stay of, for which I thus return my most humble thanks.

Were I not really and importunately fixed by my Employment, as a decent Complement at least to the Peace and Safety of the Affairs on this side, I should be most mightily out of countenance to be found in another place, than at your Majesties Feet, to receive and execute your Commands, to the utmost of my Power and Life.

Yet, Sir, I am your most obliged Creature, why should I be cared for, or considered, where your greatest Interests are in question? Hence it is, that I thought of sending thither fifty of my Horse-Troop, but that they are not to be supplied again on this side, nor durst I disfigure your Service of them here, and to furnish so many there, my self absent, and in so short a time, I am out of hope: yet have I thought of another Expedient, which perchance may prove as much for your Service, as good in the Example, which I humbly crave may be accepted.

Therefore, if it shall not please God to put the Scottish Subjects into their right Wits again, that they do not humbly and repentantly conform to your Majesties Will: I shall give order that for this next year, there be paid at York to Sir William Udall, your Treasurer for the Wars, as my Rents come in, one thousand pounds at Midsummer, and one thousand pounds at Christmas; and if this be not sufficient, I do most humbly beseech your Majesty command all I have there to the uttermost Farthing.

Nor have I on this side more Friends than three, that have Lands there; and I am desired, by the Master of the Folls, and Sir George Radcliff, that 500 l. betwixt them may be accepted upon the same terms, and some daies of Payment: And in like manner a young Captain of your Majesties, my Brother, that hath some Fortune by his Wife there, 100 l.

Our Sons are all Children; but if they were able to bear Arms, we should send the young Whelps to be entred in your Majesties Militia, Judge it to be their greatest honour it might be so; and for a Conclusion, so as it might be better for your Service, hang up the old Dogs.

Above all, I beseech your Majesty intend your Horse, and make your self as strong in them as possibly can be effected in this short time: For as it will be no great difficulty to your Majesty to over-top your Rebels, and Master them in Horse; so shall that Point gained, and fortified alone, secure your Kingdom of England from the prejudice it might otherwise sustain, if they went forth to such Insolence, as to make an Offensive War upon the Crown.

My next Work, I fear, will be to trouble your Majesty with a Letter touching my own Particular. I beseech you vouchsafe to read it; and after, rather than disquiet your Majesty, or your Affairs, burn it, and command Mr. Raylton to go on with the Examination, as it is already directed; only, Sir, there is a Credit, which among Men, I ought so far forth to care for, as it may enable me to fulfill your Commands with more Effect and Honour, which I trust howsoever will plead my excuse. The Great God of Battles long and long preserve your Majesty.

Your Majesties

Most faithful, and most humble
Subject and Servant,

WENTWORTH.

And in regard the War was likely to prove very expensive, and more than his Majesties Revenues without Parliamentary Aid would well bear, the Clergy were required to assist his Majesty herein, and the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury wrote to them by his Majesties Command as followeth:

Feb. 11. The Archbishop of Canterbury's Letter to the Clergy.

After my hearty Commendations, &c.

I Have received a Warrant from the Lords of his Majesties most Honourable Privy-Council, which requires me to write to all the Bishops in my Province to call their Clergy together, and put them in mind of the great danger this Kingdom is in, by the Traiterous Conspiracies of some ill-affected in Scotland. These Seditious Persons have begun, and continued hitherto their foul Disloyalty under the pretence of Religion, which by factious Spirits in all times is made the Cloak to cover and hide, (if it might be) their Designs. But now it appears clearly to the State, that they daily strengthen themselves by Arms and Ammunition, and other Preparations for War. And though his Majesty hath graciously condescended to more than they could justly ask in all things concerning their Religion and their Laws, yet they go on still, and are satisfied with nothing but their rebellious Disobedience, and have no less aim than to Invade or annoy England. The Letters to the several Bishops I have sent, as I was commanded, and I doubt not but they and the Clergy in general, will give very freely towards this great and necessary Defence of the Kingdom. And because this great and common Danger cannot be kept off, but by a common Defence; and for that the Reverend Judges, and others of the Common-Law have bountifully expressed themselves already; I am required to write to you also, that you calling to you the rest of the Doctors of the Commons, propose to them now while most of them are together, this great and weighty Business belonging as much to their Defence as to other mens; and let every man set down what he will give to this Service: when this is done, I will acquaint his Majesty with it, and yours and their forwardness herein. And it is expected that you hasten this with all convenient speed. So to God's blessed Protection I leave you, and rest,

You must send to such Chancellors and Officials as are not at the Commons, but at their several Residences; and if you give them a good Example here, I doubt not but they will follow it.

You shall not need to call to Sir Henry Martin, for his Majesty will send to him himself, and looks for a greater Sum than in an ordinary way.

And for that a Parliament was summon'd to meet at Westminster, Apr. 13. 1640. the aforesaid General Assembly of Scotland caused privately to be dispersed in London and elsewhere, their Declaration to assure their dear Brethren of England, of their gude intentions, and of the sincerity of their hearts for the carrying on the Lord's own cause (so they Nick-named their Rebellion) and that they only aimed at the endeavouring a Reformation of and a Conservation of the true Religion in the two Kingdoms, the Purport whereof take as followeth:

An Information to all good Christians within the Kingdom of England, from the Noblemen, Barons, Burroughs, Ministers of the Kingdom of Scotland, for vindicating their Intentions and Actions from the unjust Calumnies of their Enemies, as followeth:

Feb. 4.

in Scotland.

THe work of Reformation now renewed and far advanced in this Kingdom, hath in the whole progress met with all the opposition which the subtil malice of Rome's Emissaries could plot: But God hitherto has disappointed all their Intentions, and turned Achitophel's Wisdom into folly. And now when they cannot beat down the Walls of Jerusalem, they labour to undermine it with Calumnies, according to the damnable Maxim, Calumniare audacter, & semper aliquid habebit. And, like Tobias, Sanballat, and such like, will not be wanting to oppose mightily the building of Ezra and Nehemia, by saying to the King, Why is the rebellious City builded?

The same steps are now traced by the Authors of Innovations in this Church, who taking the advantage of their opportunity (which we want, to our great regret) and being greatly assisted and stirred up by some of their own Coat, who are pernicious and Popishly affected, do thereupon presume to whisper unto his Sacred Majesty, and spread abroad in their Neighbour Kingdom of England most untrue and damnable Aspersions, (over and above the Particulars laid to our charge in the Proclamation of the Eighteenth of December, which are largely answered in our Protestation lately published) venting with equal impudency and malice, that we do only pretend Religion, but do intend to shake off the most lawful yoke of Authority, by changing the form of Civil Government; that we intended to invade our Neighbour Kingdom of England, and enrich our selves with the spoils thereof; although our Consciences bear us Testimony against those untruths, and make us think so charitably, that no man understanding rightly Religion and Policy, will give belief unto these Aspersions, forged against the body of our Church and Kingdom: yet being certainly informed, that the Authors of our Innovations and the Arch-enemies of Reformation, have laboured to poison his Majesties sacred Ears with those Imputations, and have dispersed the same with open mouth among the Subjects of England: We are forced to vindicate our innocency, and wipe away all impressions which those Challenges might make in the behalf of any: First, by our Supplication given in to the Lords of Secret Council, January 31. and now by our Answer, and publick Declaration unto the World, whereby we take God to witness, That Religion is the only Subject, Conscience the motive, and Reformation the aim of our Designs, for attaining whereof, we have never strayed from the humble and loyal way of Petitioning his Majesty for a legal Redress. And do yet according to our bounden Duty, beg the consummation of our happy beginnings by the holding of the Parliament for the Ratification of the Assembly indicted by his Royal Majesty. And as We have often heretofore professed in our Supplications, religiously sworn in our solemn Covenant with God Almighty, and publicly declared before God and Men in all our Protestations made in the view of Heaven and Earth, That We had never the least intention to cast off our dutiful Obedience unto his Majesties most lawful Authority: So We do hereby renounce the same, and solemnly declare, That our Loyal Breasts have never harboured any thought against our gracious Sovereign his Person or Government, for whom We daily and earnestly pray the King of Kings to grant a long and happy Reign over us; and when he shall be crowned with Immortality, that there never want one of his Seed rightly to rule us, and to sit upon his Throne so long as the Sun and Moon endureth: For We acknowledge that he is the Lord's Vicegerent swaying the Scepter of this Land, transmitted to him by the succession of so many Royal Ancestors, as no other King in the World can parallel the same, and no other Nation compare with us in the glory of Antiquity, under that lawful subjection to one Line of Native born Princes, which we will never deface by any unnatural and impious cogitations against the Lord's Anointed, but heartily wish that Shame and Confusion may be Printed upon the face of his Enemies, And that We may be happy in the occasion to expose our Lives and Fortunes to the greatest hazard, for maintenance of the Person and Authority of our dread Sovereign, and increase of his Honour. Let Mercy and Truth preserve the King.

As for our Intention towards England, We attest the ever-living God, (who is conscious of our most secret thoughts) that We never had any such Design or motion to offend, or wrong in the smallest measure any other Nation, much less our Neighbour Kingdom, living in one Isle, under one King, with as little controversy, and with as much affection, as hath been betwixt two Nations once at variance, but now happily reconciled and tyed together by the most strict Bonds, which We desire rather to increase than diminish by any act of unjust Hostility. And albeit we are confident that the improbability of this Challenge will stop the way of all credit to it, yet to confound these Reporters in their malice, we will shortly relate our Anno 1638. Regrets and Fears, our Desires and Resolutions with that freedom and sincerity, which may evidence our brotherly respect to the Subjects of England, and controul the false Surmises of our intentions against them. We regret together with our dear Christian Brethren of our Neighbour Nation, that we should have so evident and sensible experiences of the dangerous Plots set on foot, and entertained by the Church-men of the greatest power in England, for introducing Innovations in Religion, by corrupting the Doctrine, changing the Discipline, daily innovating the External Worship of God, Preaching publicly and maintaining Points of Arminianism and heads of Popery, defending and advancing Preachers and Professors of that Judgment, and allowing Books stuffed with that Doctrine, Fining and Confining and Banishing all such, as in Conscience of their Duty to God labour to oppose the Doctrine, Discipline or Worship of the Church of Rome, by their incroaching and usurping upon the King's Prerogative, tyrannizing over the Consciences, Goods and Estates of Persons of all qualities within that Kingdom: And not being content to keep within their own Precincts, did induce, assist, and encourage the pretended Archbishops and Bishops of this Kingdom, to press not only a Conformity of this our Church, with that of England in matter of Ceremony, but also with the Church of Rome in the Points most substantially erroneous, as appeareth by the Book of Common Prayer and Canons, found to be a mass of Popish Superstition, false Doctrine and Tyranny, which was confessed to have been first plotted, then corrected and interlined in England, and sent down to their Associates the pretended Archbishops and Bishops of this Kingdom, to be Printed, and pressed upon the whole Church here without order or consent, as the only Form of Divine Worship and Government of the Church, to make us a leading Case to England. And by their Letters to Statesmen, Noblemen and Burroughs (to further the advancement thereof) perswaded his Gracious Majesty to declare these Books, which are full of Popish Superstition, to be free of it, and to be fit means of Edifying this Church, and caused his Majesty to prohibit the lawful Meetings and humble Supplications of his Subjects under pain of Treason, and to esteem of his good Subjects as of Traitors and Rebels, for a discovering this wicked Plot, and complaining thereof; And for their renewing of their National Covenant with God and their Allegiance to his Majesty, did threaten them by publick Proclamation with utter extermination and ruin, and have by their Calumny moved his Majesty to discharge under the pain of Treason, the sitting of our free General Assembly, indicted by his Majesty after so many Supplications, and to engage his Royal Word of a Prince, to defend all disobeyers of the Church, to threaten and prepare for an inward War against this his most ancient loyal native Kingdom, to distrust all our Supplications, Oathes and Declarations ingenuously and humbly made, and thereby they have endeavoured, so far as in them lies, to alienate his Majesties heart from his People, and estrange their due bound Affections from him if it were possible. And in the end for the full accomplishment of their wickedness (as we are informed) have made his Majesty follow the advice and counsel of professed Papists, and to intrust them with the chiefeft Offices of the Armies and Arms now preparing, for the threatened Invasion of this Kingdom, and still intend to raise Jealousies in the Body of the one Kingdom against the other, and so to commit them together, which we beseech God to prevent, and hope it shall be above their Malice, the Lord opening the eyes of our Sovereign, and of our Neighbour Nation, to discover that Treachery whereby nothing is intended, but to join the two Kingdoms in bloody War, that so Reformed Religion may be extinguished and Popery introduced, which then may be easily effected when both sides are weakened, and so may be easily suppressed by the Papists, having all Power and Offices in their hands, being already too strong in England, and encouraged with expectation of Foreign help, ready to accept that advantage, so much prejudicial to his Majesties Honour, Power and manifold Declarations for the maintenance of the Reformed Religion, whereof he is the Defender. We have also Reason to regret, that any within the Kingdom should give more credit to false Calumnies, cunningly invented to foment their jealousies, and make them prepare for invading their Brethren, than to our solemn Protestations, Supplications, Declarations and Covenant with God himself; yet we are fully confident that such are drawn thereunto, partly through the Information of our Adversaries, and particularly for lack of clear Information concerning our most Loyal and Christian Proceedings: and therefore do most heartily wish, they may with Wisdom and Charity suspend any further giving credit to things of that kind, till they may have occasion to receive full Information of the truth. And we regret that any should think the standing of Episcopacy in the Church of Scotland just ground for Invading of, and making War against this Nation, and consequently to raise up the Old National Bloodshed and Quarrels, which are now happily changed unto a sweet peaceable conjunction of Hearts and Affections, seeing Episcopacy in this Church is contrary to our Ancient Reformation, Confession of Faith, and Oath of this Church and Kingdom, whereby that Government was abjured, which cannot reasonably offend any other State or Church, who may be ruled by their own Laws and Warrant. But as in every Matter which falleth in deliberation to be put in Execution, Justice should be the Mover and Efficient, and Profit and Honour used to be the End: So especially in this weighty Business it should be well pondered, if this Act of Invading us by War, for keeping our Oath to God, and obeying the lawful Constitutions of our Church and Kingdom, be just upon the part of the Invader; or if the benefit of Re-establishing the Bishops upon us, will recompence the loss of so much Christian Blood, and the hazards of Dissention and War, whereof the Event dependeth upon the Lord of Hosts. But it is obvious to every man's Consideration, That this War is by our Adversaries intended for another end, and hath a more deep and dangerous reach, otherwise the Prelates (if either good Christians or Patriots) would rather quit their Minion, Ambition, and worldly Pomp, than engage two Kingdoms with the hazard of true Religion.

And that none may suspect the sincerity of our Intentions, the lawfulness of our Proceedings, or the truth of our Declarations or Accusations against the Enemies of our Reformation and Peace,

Peace, We are able, and wish to have occasion to justify the same before the World: For unless we should have closed our own Light, and resisted the known Will of God, acknowledged, subscribed, and sworn by his Majesties Father (of ever blessed Memory) to our Predecessors, in a solemn Covenant with God, and so often confirmed and ratified by Acts of this Church and Kingdom since the Reformation, we could not omit any thing which we have done. And albeit we be one Church and Kingdom, as free, ancient, and independent as any other in the World, yet for clearing of the Mind of our Neighbour Nation from all mis-information and mis-construction of our Intentions and Proceedings, and to verifie the lawfulness and absolute necessity of our Actions and Acts of the late Assembly, We do assure our selves, that if the States of the Parliament of England were Convened, and the whole progress of this Business faithfully represented unto them, they would without doubt be so far from censuring or condemning what we do, that they would be moved to become Petitioners to his Sacred Majesty on our behalf, and approve of the equity and loyalty of all our Proceedings in this Cause. And therefore in the mean time we intreat, That no true English Heart entertain any Jealousies of Us, who are confident of the innocency of our Proceedings and Intentions, and free hitherto of all Blemishes against our Sovereign and our Neighbour Nation, as we beg the occasion of manifesting the same to them and to all the World, as we have upon the knowledge of these mis-reports of us, cleared our selves of any such Intention by our great Oathes every one to other, at our most frequent Meetings.

The obtaining of this our so peaceable and just desire, shall not only be comfortable to us their Christian Brethren, serving as a further tye to unite our Affections in time to come, and to stir us up to pour out our hearty Prayers to God on their behalf; but without all question, the Righteous Judge of all the World shall make you reap the Fruit thereof one day; and who knoweth how soon?

In the mean time our care shall be upon all occasions, to make it appear clearly to all the World, how far it hath alwaies been (and by the Grace of God ever shall be) from our Intention first or last, to offer the least Act of Hostility to our Neighbour Kingdom, excepting so far as we shall be necessitate in our own Defence. And though (as God forbid) we should be forced thereunto, yet shall we remain unwilling to conceive things of that kind to flow from the Body of that Kingdom, with whom we intend no National Quarrel, neither mind to wrangle with them, except in the case of Invasion from them, but rather that this Stir hath been contrived and set forward by some ill-affected Persons to both Kingdoms; with whom only our question is, and to whom alone we may justly intend according to their desert, as men who are set to engage both Kingdoms in so bloody a War for their own base ends. And although a Party be raised from among our selves, that are fomented and maintained from abroad, whence we find the Sinews of that body within our selves to be derived and maintained which might justly stir us; yet the vanity and weakness of our Intestine Adversaries, even in this case of Offence, is so far from making us take Fire, without manifest Hostility offered, or engaging us in any violent course that may interrupt the Brotherly Love and Concord of these two Kingdoms, or blemish our holy Profession in the least degree, as we are confident no malicious mis-reports of our common Adversaries, will induce our dear Brethren to quarrel with us for seeking to enjoy our Religion in purity, and our Laws and Liberties, according to the Fundamental Constitutions of our Church and State, when we are so well affected to them, as we are truly sensible of their grievous burdens, and intolerable sufferings from the Tyranny of their Hierarchy, and the fearful bondage they undergo from the wicked Counsel of that Clergy suggested from Rome, and producing so dangerous Innovations both in Religion and Policy.

The sincere manifestation of our real intentions, We find our selves obliged to publish, for satisfying all good Subjects in our Neighbour Nation, being confident they are also desirous to be confirmed in their good opinion of us, and so to be armed against all Slanders and Calumnies of those that endeavour the final over-throw, and utter extermination of the Kingdom of Christ Jesus from this whole Island, where of we pray God to avert the Danger, and grant us Peace and Purity, which is the height of our desire; for procuring whereof we shall employ no other Weapons (except we be forced) but Fasting and Prayer to God Almighty, and humble Supplications to our Gracious Sovereign.

Revised according to the Ordinance of the General Assembly, by Mr. Archibald Johnston, Clerk there. At Edinburgh the 14th of February, 1639.

About this time the Lord Commissioner resolved to ask his Majesties leave for his return to England, seeing there was no good to be expected from the King's fair and gracious proceedings with them of the pretended Assembly, and wrote unto his Majesty accordingly. When he had received his Majesties leave for his return, he hearing of the great stirs which were now raised at Edinburgh, and the strong and great Guards which were since his leaving of Glasgow put upon his Majesties Castle there, repaired thither to the King's Palace at Holy-wood-house, where he found the people of that City horribly abused by the mis-reports of all the passages of the Assembly, whilst he continued at Glasgow; especially with a false information that his Majesty had there made good nothing of all which was contained in his last gracious Declaration made at Edinburgh the twenty second of September last past: herewith he made the King presently acquainted, which moved the King by a very speedy dispatch to command him by Proclamation to make known to all his Subjects at Edinburgh, the sum of his whole proceedings at Glasgow; which the Lord Commissioner presently performed, by causing this the ensuing Proclamation to be published at the Market-Cross of that City.

CHARLES

1638.

Charles R.

CHARLES by the Grace of God, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith. To our Lovest

Messrs, Heraulds, Pursuivants, Our Sheriffs in that part conjunctly and severally specially constitute, greeting. Whereas for the removing of the disorders which had happened of late within this Our Kingdom, and for settling of a perfect peace in the Church and Commonwealth thereof, We were pleased to cause indict a free General Assembly, to be holden at Glasgow the one and twentieth of November last: And for Our Subjects their better content and assurance that they should be freed of all such things as by their Petitions and Supplications given in to the Lords of Our Privy Council, they seemed to be grieved at, We in some sort prevented the Assembly, by discharging by Our Proclamation the Service-Book, Book of Canons, and high Commission, freed and liberate Our Subjects from the practising of the five Articles, eximied all Ministers at their entry from giving any other Oath then that which is contained in the Act of Parliament, made all persons, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, liable to the censure of Parliament, General Assembly, or any other Judicatory competent, according to the nature of their offence; had declared all by-gone disorders absolutely forgotten and forgiven: And last, for securing to all Posterity the truth and liberty of Religion, did command the Confession of Faith, and Band for maintenance thereof, and of Authority in defence of the same, subscribed by Our dear Father, and his household in Anno 1580. to be renewed and subscribed again by Our Subjects here: And albeit that this Our gracious and pious command, instead of obedience and submission, rancountred open and publick opposition and protestation against the same: And that they continued their daily and hourly guarding and watching Our Castle of Edinburgh, suffering nothing to be imported therein, but at their discretion, stopping and impeding any importation of Ammunition, or other necessities whatsoever to any of Our Houses within this Kingdom: Denying to Us their Sovereign Lord that liberty and freedom, which the meanest of them assume to themselves (an Act without precedent or example in the Christian world). Like as they spared not boldly and openly to continue their Conventions and Council Tables of Nobility, Gentry, Ministers, and Burgeses within the City of Edinburgh, where, not regarding the Laws of the Kingdom, without warrant of Authority, they convened, assembled, and treated upon matters, as well Ecclesiastical as Civil, sent their Injunctions and Directions throughout the Country to their subordinate Tables, and other under Ministers appointed by them for that effect. And under colour and pretext of Religion, exercising an unwarranted liberty, required obedience to their unlawful and illegal directions, to the seen prejudice of Authority, and lawful Monarchical Government. And notwithstanding it was evidently manifest by the illegal and informal course taken in the election of the Commissioners for the Assembly, whereof some of them were under the Censure of this Church, some under the Censure of the Church of Ireland, some long since banished for open and avowed teaching against Monarchy, others of them suspended, and some admitted to the Ministry contrary to the form prescribed by the Laws of this Kingdom; others of them Rebels, and at the Horn, some of them confined, and all of them by Oath and Subscription bound to the overthrow of Episcopal Government. And by this and other their under-hand working, and private informations and persuasions, have given just ground of suspicion of their partiality, and so made themselves unfit Judges of what concerneth Episcopacy. And als albeit it was sufficiently cleared by the peremptory and illegal procedures of the Presbyteries, who at their own hand by order of Law, and without due form of Process, thrust out Moderators lawfully established, and placed others whom they found most inclinable to their turbulent humours, associate to themselves, for choosing of the Commissioners to the Assembly, a Laick-Elder out of each Parish, who being in most places equal, if not more in number than the Ministry, made choice both of the Ministers, who should be Commissioners from the Presbyteries, as also of a Laick-Elder, (which in time will prove to be of dangerous consequence, and import a heavy burthen to the Liberty of Church and Churchmen) being more directed therein by the warrants of the foresaid pretended Tables, then by their own judgments; as appeared by the several instructions sent from them (far contrary to the Laws of this Country, and lawable custom of this Church) some whereof were produced and exhibit by Our Commissioner, and publicly read: One whereof, direct to the Noblemen and Barons of each Presbytery, doth, among many other odd passages, require diligence, lest (say they) by our own silliness and treachery we lose so fair an occasion of our liberty both Christian and Civil; a strange phrase to proceed from dutiful or loyal hearted Subjects. The other to the Moderators of the several Presbyteries, under the Title of Private Instructions, August 27. First, containeth that these private instructions shall be discovered to none, but to Brethren well affected to the cause: Secondly, order must be taken, that none be chosen ruling Elders but Covenanters, and those well affected to the business: Thirdly, that where the Minister is not well affected, the ruling Elder be chosen by the Commissioners of the Shire, and spoken to particularly for that effect: Fourthly, that they be careful that no Chapel-men, Chapter-men, or Minister Justice of Peace, be chosen, although Covenanters, except they have publickly renounced, or declared the unlawfulness of their places: Fifthly, that the ruling Elders come from every Church, in equal number with the Ministers; and if the Minister oppose, to put themselves in possession, notwithstanding of any opposition: Sixthly, that the Commissioner of the Shire cause convene before him the ruling Elder of every Kirk chosen before the day of the Election, and enjoin them upon their Oath, that they give vote to none but to those who are named already at the meeting at Edinburgh: Seventhly, that where there is a Nobleman in the bounds of the Presbytery, he be chosen, and where there is none, there be chosen a Baron, or one of the best quality, and he only a Covenanter: Eighthly, that the ablest man in every Presbytery be provided to dispute de potestate supremi magistratus in Ecclesiasticis, praesertim in convocandis conciliis, &c. Whereby it is most evident what prelimitations, indirect and partial courses, and dangerous propositions have been used in the preparations and elections to this pretended Assembly. By which unlawful doings, although We had sufficient reason to discharge the meeting of the said Assembly, yet We were pleased patiently to attend the same, still hoping that when they were met together, by the presence of Our Commissioner, and assistance of some well-affected Subjects, who were to be there, and by their own seeing the real performance of what was promised by our Proclamation, they should have been induced to return to the due obedience of Subjects. But when we perceived that their turbulent dispositions did increase, as was manifest by their repairing to the said pretended Assembly with great troops and bands of men, all bidden in fear of War, with Guns and Pistolets, contrary to the Laws of this Kingdom, and in high contempt of Our Proclamation at at Edinburgh the sixteenth day of November last: And also by the peremptory refusing to the Assessors, authorized by Us, (although fewer in number than Our dearest Father was in use to have) the power of voting in this Assembly, as formerly they had done in all others, openly averring that We, nor Our Commissioner, had no further power there than the meanest Commissioner of their number: And by their partial and unjust refusing, and not suffering to be read the Reasons and Arguments given in by the Bishops, and their Adherents to Our Commissioner, why they ought not to proceed to the election of a Moderator, neither yet to the trying and admitting of the Commissioners, before they were heard, though in Our name they were earnestly required thereto by Our Commissioner: And notwithstanding that Our Commissioner by warrant from Us, gave in under his hand a sufficient Declaration of all that was contained in Our late Proclamation, bearing likewise Our pleasure of the registration of the same in the Books of Assembly, for all assurance of the truth and purity of Religion to all Our good Subjects, as doth clearly appear by the declaration it self; whereof the tenor follows. The King's Majesty being informed that many of his good Subjects have apprehended that by the introducing of the Service-Book, and Book of Canons, the inbringing of Superstition hath been intended, hath been graciously pleased to discharge, like as by these he doth discharge the Service Book, and Book of Canons, and the practice of them, and either of them, and annuls and rescinds all Acts of Council, Proclamations, and other Acts and Deeds whatsoever, that have been made or published for establishing them, or either of them, and declares the same to be null, and to have no force nor effect in time coming. The King's Majesty, as he conceived, for the ease and benefit of the Subject, established the high Commission, that thereby Justice might be administrate and the faults and errors of such persons as are made liable thereto, taken order with, and punished with the more conveniency, and less trouble to the people. But finding his gracious intention therein to be mistaken, hath been pleased to discharge, like as by these He doth discharge the same, and all Acts and Deeds whatsoever made for establishing thereof. And the King's Majesty being informed, that the urging of the five Articles of Perth assembled hath bred distraction in the Church and State, hath been graciously pleased to take the same into His Royal consideration, and, for the quiet and peace of this Country, hath not only dispensed with the practice of the saids Articles, but also discharged all and whatsoever persons from urging the practice thereof, upon either Laick or Ecclesiastical person whatsoever, and hath freed all His Subjects from all censure and pains, whether Ecclesiastical or Secular, for not urging, practising, or obeying them, or any of them, notwithstanding of any thing contained in the Acts of Parliament, or General Assembly in the contrary. And his Majesty is further contented, that the Assembly take the same so far to their consideration, as to represent it to the next Parliament, there to be ratified as the Estates shall find fitting. And because it hath been pretended, that Oaths have been administrate different from that which is set down in the Acts of Parliament, his Majesty is pleased to declare by me, that no other Oath shall be required of any Minister at his entry, nor that which is set down in the Act of Parliament. And that it may appear how careful his Majesty is that no corruption nor innovation shall creep into this Church, neither yet any scandal, vice, or fault of any person whatsoever, censurable or punishable by the Assembly, go along unpunished, his Majesty is content to declare by me, and assure all His good people, that General Assemblies shall be kept so oft, and also oft as the affairs of this Church shall require. And that none of His good Subjects may have cause of grievances against the proceedings of the Prelates, his Majesty is content that all and every one of the present Bishops, and their Successors, shall be answerable, and accordingly from time to time censurable, according to their merits by the General Assembly. And to give all His Majesties good People full Assurance, that He never intended to admit any alteration or change in the true Religion profest within this Kingdom, and that they may be truly and fully satisfied of the reality of His intentions and integrity of the same, his Majesty hath been pleased to require and command all His good Subjects to subscribe the Confession of Faith, and Band for maintenance thereof, and of his Majesties person and Authority, formerly signed by His dear Father, in Anno 1580. and now also requireth all these of this present Assembly to subscribe the same. And it is his Majesties will, that this be insert and registerate in the Books of Assembly, as a testimony to Posterity, not only of the sincerity of His intentions to the said true Religion, but also of his Resolutions to maintain and defend the same, and His Subjects in the profession thereof.

Which Declaration was by Our special command and direction given in, and subscribed by Our Commissioner, upon protestation made by him, that his assenting to the registration hereof, should be no approbation of the lawfulness of this Assembly, nor of any of the Acts or Deeds done, or to be done therein. And finding them in like sort no ways to be satisfied therewith, and that nothing else was able to give them contentment, except at their own pleasure they were permitted to overthrow all Episcopal Government in the Church, and thereby to abrogate Our publick Laws standing in vigour by the space of many years by-gone, and to alter the fundamental Government of this Kingdom, in taking away one of the three Estates, contrary to express Acts of Parliament: And lest the continuance of their meetings might have produced other the like dangerous Acts so derogatory to Royal Authority, We were forced for preventing thereof, and for the Reasons and Causes abovementioned, and divers others importing true Monarchical Government, to dissolve and break up the said pretended Assembly, and to discharge them of all farther meeting, treating and concluding any thing therein: And yet in that calm and peaceable way, as Our Commissioner before his removing desired their pretended Moderator for that time to have said prayer, and so concluded that days Session, that so they might have had time to think upon the just Reasons of his refusing to assist, or be any longer present at the said pretended Assembly, and of the causes moving Us to the dissolving thereof; and notwithstanding his earnest urging the same, and being willing to return the next morning to hear their answer; in place of all other satisfaction to his so reasonable and moderate desires, it was refused, and met with a Protestation of an high and extraordinary strain, thereby presuming to cite and call Our Council in question, for their dutiful assistance and obedience to Us and Our Commissioner. And finding their disobedience thus to increase, We were constrained to discharge them of new again the next day thereafter, by publick Proclamation, under the pain of Treason. And albeit that their contumacy is such as hath not been heard of in former times, yet they shall never move us to alter the least point or article of that We have already declared by Proclamation, or Declaration under Our Commissioner's hand: All which was publickly read, and by Our Commissioner required to be insert and registerate in the Books of Assembly, therein to remain as a testimony to Posterity, not only of the sincerity of Our intentions to the true Religion, but also of Our resolution, to maintain and defend the same, and Our Subjects in the profession thereof: And per-perceiving likewise that in contempt of Our Proclamation at Glasgow the 29. of Novemb. they go still on to convene, meet, and to make illegal and unwarrantable Acts, We have conceived it fitting to forewarn all Our good Subjects of the danger that they may incur by being insnared by these their unlawful proceedings. And to this purpose do not only liberate and free them from all obedience to any of the pretended Acts, made, or to be made at the said pretended Assembly, or Committees direct therefrom, but do also free them from all pain and censure which the said pretended Assembly shall inflict upon them, or any of them. And therefore do discharge and prohibit all Our Subjects, that they nor none of them acknowledge nor give obedience to any pretended Acts nor Constitutions, made, or to be made at the said pretended Meetings, under all highest pains. And We command, charge, and inhibit all Presbyteries, Sessions of Kirks, Ministers within this Realm, that none of them presume nor take upon hand privately nor publicly in their Sessions and Meetings, nor in their Conferences, Sermons, nor no other manner of way, to authorize, approve, justify, or allow the said unlawful Meeting or Assembly at Glasgow: Neither yet to make any Act thereupon, nor to do any other thing private or publick, which may seem to countenance the said unlawful Assembly, under the pain to be repute, holden and esteemed and pursued as guilty of their unlawful Meeting, and to be punished therefore with all rigour: And siclike We command all and sundry Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Magistrates, and all other Our lieges who shall happen to be present and hear any Ministers either in publick or private Conferences and Speeches, or in their Sermons, to approve and allow the said unlawful Assembly, rail and utter any Speeches against Our Royal commandments, or proceedings of Us, or Our Council, for punishing or suppressing such enormities, that they make relation and report thereof to Our Council, and furnish probation, to the effect the same may be accordingly punished, as they will answer to Us thereupon: Certifying them who shall hear and conceal the said Speeches, that they shall be esteemed as allowers of the same, and shall accordingly be taken order with, and punished therefore without favour. And to this effect We likewise straitly charge and command all Judges whatsoever within this Realm, Clerks and Writers, not to grant or pass any Bill, Summons, or Letters, or any other execution whatsoever, upon any Act or Deed proceeding from the said pretended Assembly, and all Keepers of the Signet from signeting thereof, and that under all highest pains. And because We gave order and warrant to Our Commissioner to make open declaration, not only of Our sense, but even of the true meaning of the Confession of Faith, in Anno 1580. by which it may clearly appear, that as we never intended thereby to exclude Episcopacy, so by no right construction can it be otherwise interpreted, as is more nor evident by the Reasons contained in the said Declaration, and many more, which for brevity (the thing it self being so clear) are omitted. Herefore We do not only prohibit and discharge all Our Subjects from subscribing any Band, or giving any Writ, Subscription, or Oath to, or upon any Act, or Deed that proceeds from the foresaid pretended Assembly, but also do require them not to subscribe, nor swear the said Confession in no other sense than that which is contained in the said Declaration, and manifestly committed by Our Commissioner, under all highest pains. And that none of Our good Subjects, who in their duty and bound Obedience to Us shall refuse to acknowledge the said pretended Assembly, or any of the pretended Acts, Constitutions, Warrants, or Directions proceeding therefrom, may have just ground of fear of danger or harm by doing thereof, We do by these promise, and upon the word of a King, oblige Our selves by all the Royal Authority and Power wherewith God hath endowed Us, to protect and defend them, and every one of them, in their Persons, Fortunes, and Goods, against all and whatsoever person or persons who shall dare or presume to call in question, trouble, or any ways molest them, or any of them therefore. And Our will is, and We charge you straitly, and command, that incontinent these Our Letters seen, you pass, and make publication hereof by open Proclamation at the Market Cross of Edinburgh, and other places needful, wherethrough none pretend ignorance of the same.

Given from Our Court at Whitehall the Eighth day of December, and of Our Reign the Fourteenth year, 1638.

Per Regem.

THIS his Majesties Proclamation, published only to make the People acquainted with his gracious proceedings at Glasgow, which by the malice of their Leaders had either been concealed from them, or misreported to them, was received, as all His former gracious proffers, with a very undutiful, windy and blustering Protestation, so full of words, but withal, so void of truth and sense, as (saith the large Declaration) we were once resolved not to have inserted it here, neither indeed is it necessary it should, for it is stuffed with the idle and superfluous repetitions of those things which are contained in their former Protestations, especially their last Protestation made at Glasgow, with which indeed it is for the most part the same verbatim: Yet, because We know that if it should be left out they would not stick to assure their followers, that it was omitted because of the unanswerable pregnancy of the Reasons contained in it, here you shall have it, but without any answer to it, as to their former Protestations hath been given; there being very little in it which is new, and so not answered before, or what is in it new being either very false or very impertinent, both which falsities and impertinencies shall only be observed on the Margent, being assured that the Reader will easily find that there is nothing in it worthy of any larger Answer.

The Protestation of the General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, made at the Market Cross of Edinburgh the 18. of December, 1638.

WE Commissioners from Presbyteries, Burghs, and * Universities, now convened, and yet sitting in a full and free Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, indicted by his Majesty, and gathered together in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, the only Head and Monarch of his own Kirk: And we Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burgeses and Commons, Subscribers of the Confession of Faith, make it known; That where we his Majesties loyal Subjects of all degrees, considering and taking to heart the many and great Innovations and Corruptions lately by the Prelates and their Adherents introduced into the Doctrine, Worship, and Discipline of this Kirk, which had been before in great

* For as there was not after the King's Commissioners leaving of the Assembly, any one Commissioner from any University of that Kingdom, which did not dissent great great purity, to our unspeakable comfort, established among us, were moved to present many earnest desires and humble supplications to his Sacred Majesty, for granting a free General Assembly, as the only legal and ready mean to try these innovations, to purge out the corruptions, and settle the disorder of the Kirk, for the good of Religion, the honour of the King, and the comfort and peace of the Kirk and Kingdom: It pleased his gracious Majesty out of his Royal bounty, to direct unto this Kingdom, the Noble and Potent Lord James Marquess of Hamilton, with Commission to hear and redress the just grievances of the good Subjects; who, by many Petitions and frequent Conferences, being fully informed of the absolute necessity of a free General Assembly, as the only Judicatory which had power to remedy those evils, was pleased to undergo the pains of a Voyage to England, for presenting the pitiful condition of our Kirk to his Sacred Majesty: And the said Commissioner his Grace returned again in August last, with power to indict an Assembly, but with the condition of such * prelimitations, as did both destroy the freedom of an Assembly, and could no ways cure the present Diseases of this Kirk. Which was made so clearly apparent to his † Grace, that for satisfying the reasonable desires of the Subjects, groaning under the weariness and prejudices of longsome attendance, he was again pleased to undertake another journey to his Majesty, and promised to endeavour to obtain a free General Assembly, without any prelimitation, either of the constitution and members, or matters to be treated, or manner and order of proceeding: So that if any question should arise concerning these particulars (whereof the power of ruling Elders as a part of the constitution, and the examination of Episcopacy as a present question to be moved, was express, albeit now the Commissioner hath pretended the famine for the greatest causes of his rising and away going from the Assembly) the famine should be cognosed, judged, and determined by the Assembly, as the only Judge competent: And accordingly by warrant from our Sacred Sovereign returned to this Kingdom, and in September last caused indict a free General Assembly to be holden at Glasgow, the 21. of November last, to the unspeakable joy of all good Subjects and Christian hearts, who thereby did expect the perfect satisfaction of their long expectations, and the final remedy of their pressing grievances. But these hopes were soon blasted; for albeit the Assembly did meet and begin at the appointed day, and for the space of seven days sitting was countenanced with his Graces personal presence, yet his Grace did never allow any freedom to the Assembly, competent to it by the Word of God, acts and practice of this Kirk, and his Majesties indiction, but did labour to restrain the famine during the time of his abode there, by protesting against all the Acts made therein, and against the Constitution thereof by such Members, as by all Law, Reason, and Custom of this Kirk, were ever admitted as Members constituents of our free Assemblies, and by denying his approbation to the things proponed and concluded, though most clear, customable, and uncontroverted.

And further, his Grace after the presenting and reading of his own Commission from our Sacred Sovereign, and after his seeing all our

Commissions from Presbyteries, Burghs, and Universities, produced and examined, and the Assembly constitute in all the Members by unanimous consent, did, to our great grief, without any just cause or occasion offered by us, || unexpectedly depart, and discharge any further meeting or proceeding in this Assembly, under the pain of Treason; and after seven days sitting, declare all Acts made, or thereafter to be made in this Assembly, to be of no force nor strength; and that for such causes as were either then express verbally by his Grace, or contained in a Proclamation made by his Grace at Glasgow, † without any warrant of an Act of Council, contrary to the Law and Custom of this Realm: Whereunto we answered by our Protestation of the 29. of November, or otherwise for such Reasons as his Grace thought meet to alledge, which are since superadded in this late Proclamation, now made at Edinburgh, this 18. of December, wherein, for our greater surcharge of sorrow, we are heavily and wrongously blamed and taxed of many great Offences.

And first for making Protestation against the Proclamation made at Edinburgh the 22. of September last, whereas our Reasons contained in that our Protestation are so forcible and just, to demonstrate the necessity and lawfulness of our Act, that we judge all good men and Christians will be satisfied therewith; whereanent we remit our selves to our Protestation printed, and will not for shortness repeat the same Reasons here.

And where we are reproached and blamed in this new Proclamation for guarding and watching the Castle of Edinburgh, and impeding to import Ammunition, or other necessities, to any of his Majesties Houses; an Act which is exaggerate to be without an example in the Christian World, seeing we deny that liberty to our Sovereign, which the meanest of us do assume to our selves: For answer hereunto, we confidently affirm that we are unjustly challenged of all the said points, except for preventing dangers evidently threatned unto us, by circumspect attendance about the Castle of Edinburgh; which afterward we shall shew to be warrantably done: * For we declare that we have never made the least stop or hindrance to the importation of any Ammunition, Victual, or thing whatsoever, into any other of his Majesties Houses or Castles: Nor for carrying all necessary sustentation into the Castle of Edinburgh. Neither hath any of us fortified, or provided any of our private Houses for warlike defence; so that all those are heavy and unjust imputations: But we confess and grant, that there being some Provision and Ammunition quietly imported into this Kingdom, for furnishing the Castle of Edinburgh, and intended secretly to have been put therein, we have carefully prevented the famine by our diligent attendance; and that for such Reasons, grounded upon Equity, the Law of Nature, and municipal Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, and the lowable example of our Predecessors: For the truth is, that having petitioned his Majesty for redress of our just grievances,

† It is a wonder that men can be found who dare aver such an untruth, when the Proclamation at Glasgow is subscribed by the hands of the Councillors: let the Reader turn back to it and be Judge.

Anno
1638. vances, and a legal trial thereof, before we received any answer thereunto, all possible means were used to dissolve that union which was made amongst us for that good cause, and to impede all our meetings from deliberating thereupon, wherein the Town of Edenburgh made a considerable part, not only as an important member of this conjunction, but as a most commodious and ordinary place of our meetings; so that when all other means of perswasion had failed, the means of terrour was not left unassaid: And for that effect a great quantity of ammunition was brought by Sea from Foreign parts, to have been clandestinely imported into the Castle of Edenburgh, as no doubt it was intended, seeing the famine was unloaded in the dead time of the night. And we considering that in case the famine had been imported into the Castle, with other provision and store formerly therein, the famine might have been used and imployed for the overthrow of that place, and tended to our great prejudice, by withdrawing them, upon that terrour, and displacing us from our ordinary meetings; upon these reasons and considerations we prevented the famine by such a loyal way as

cannot be offensive to Authority: * For the safety of the publick is the end of all lawful power, and supream Law. And the adversaries of our Religion having formerly boasted by that provision so to furnish the Castle, that it might beat down the Town of Edenburgh, and bar the supplicants from meeting therein, we had just reason to hinder that fetter of slavery to be put upon the Town; and that the Castle of Edenburgh, which is amongst the first strengths of the Land against Foreign Forces, might be turned as a special engine of constraint against the Subjects, to hinder their lawful meetings, or to force the Town of Edenburgh to separate from the rest of the supplicants: Which great prejudice the Law of Nature teacheth us to avoid; and yet we have not proceeded therein without the warrant of the Acts of Parliament.

For first, where there is any violent presumption of spoiling of the Country, it is ordained that the Lieutenant raise the Country, and pass to such Castles and Fortalices where there is any unruly men, and take soverty of the persons within these houses, that the Country and all the King's lieges be unharmed and unskathed of the saids Houses, and of them who inhabits the famine from time forth: And if any make difficulty to be arrested, and find soverty as Law will, they shall be streined thereto, James 2. Parliament 2. Act 3. And therefore now seeing there is not only violent presumption, but great menacing, from the Adversaries of the Truth and Country, and their adherents, of the breaking of the Country and harming of the famine; and especially his Majesties lieges within Edenburgh, by the extraordinary provision of munition to the Castle of Edenburgh, and that by the saids Bishops plots from his Majesties prime Officers, who in his Majesties absence should prevent that inconvenient by the ordinance of that Act: Therefore upon their default the Country it self and the King's Lieges, in whose favours the Act is made, may provide for their own safety, and keep themselves unharmed by that Castle, or any inhabitants thereof, and so prevent the importation any unruly men, and take soverty of the persons within these houses, that the Country and all the King's lieges be unharmed and unskathed of the saids Houses, and of them who inhabits the famine from time forth: And if any make difficulty to be arrested, and find soverty as Law will, they shall be streined thereto, James 2. Parliament 2. Act 3. And therefore now seeing there is not only violent presumption, but great menacing, from the Adversaries of the Truth and Country, and their adherents, of the breaking of the Country and harming of the famine; and especially his Majesties lieges within Edenburgh, by the extraordinary provision of munition to the Castle of Edenburgh, and that by the saids Bishops plots from his Majesties prime Officers, who in his Majesties absence should prevent that inconvenient by the ordinance of that Act: Therefore upon their default the Country it self and the King's Lieges, in whose favours the Act is made, may provide for their own safety, and keep themselves unharmed by that Castle, or any inhabitants thereof, and so prevent the importation of Ammunition thereunto, conform to the said Act of Parliament.

† Secondly, as the Castle of Edenburgh and certain other Castles and Lands are the King's undoubted annexed Property, so it is to be considered for what cause they were annexed, by whom annexed, upon what condition, and how to be disposed upon. For the only cause exprest in the annexation thereof 41. Act James 2. Parliament 11. is, that the poverty of the Crown is oftentimes the cause of the poverty of the Realm: Which Act makes no mention that the King was annexer of the Castles and Lands to the Crown, but only that by the advice of the full Council of the Parliament it was so statute and ordained, and appoints that they may not be disposed upon without advice, deliverance, and decreet of the whole Parliament, for great, seen, and reasonable causes of the Realm: So that being thus annexed to the Crown by the Realm it self, for avoiding an inconvenient to the Realm, and being annexed with condition not to be disposed upon without the advice and decreet of the whole Parliament, and for great, seen, and reasonable causes of the Realm; justice and equity will require, that these Castles should not be made an instrument of the poverty and defolation of the capital Town of the Realm, and of the harm of the most considerable part of the body of the Realm there convened for supplicating his Majesty and the Council, and preparing overtures to the future Parliament, for redress of our just grievances: But now by this extraordinary provision to the Castle, being threatned with ruin and extermination, they may stop the misimploying of that benefit granted to the Realm eo animo & ad hunc finem, for the well of the Realm, while the Parliament of the Kingdom give their humble advice to his Majesty thereanent.

Thirdly, by the 9. Act 9. Parl. James 6. it is acknowledged that the Castle of Edenburgh, Dumbartane, Stirling, and Blaknesh, are four chief strengths of the Realm, which ought to be safely kept to the King's behove, and welfare of the Realm: And for keeping the Castle of Edenburgh, there is assigned, with consent of the Estates, both money and victual, a great part whereof is forth of the thirds of Benefices, which thirds in December 1561. were decerned and ordained by Queen Mary, with advice of her Council and others of the Nobility then present, to be uptaken and imployed for these two uses: viz. Sustaining of Ministers, and entertaining and setting forward the common and publick affairs of the Country and Commonwealth of the Realm; which was also enacted, Act 10. Parl. 1. James 6. and thereafter ratified Act 121. Parl. 12. James 6. Whereby it doth appear that as the Castle is the King's undeniable annexed property, so it is also a strength of the Realm, which should be safely kept to his Majesties behove, and welfare of the Realm, having for the keeping thereof rents assigned with consent of the three Estates of the Kingdom forth out of the thirds of Benefices, estimate by the Estates in eum usum, for entertaining and setting forward the publick Affairs of the Country and Commonwealth of the Realm. And consequently the most loyal part of the Body of the Realm hath main interest to divert the converting of this strength to the weakning or ruin of the Realm or any member thereof, threatned by this unusual provision, and openly denounced by our said enemies.

Fourthly,

Car. 1. All this which followeth concerning the guarding of his Majesties Castles and Forts, and keeping him out of them, containeth no less than Treason, and is not to be answered with a Pen.

* Which the Covenanters are not.

Anno 1638. Fourthly, by the 125. Act 7 Parl. James 6. it is acknowledged that the King's Castles and strengths are the keys of the Realm: And the only use of keys is for keeping together in safety and preservation, and not for spartling, dispersing, or perdition. So that the Realm and collective Body thereof can hardly be disallowed for contributing their loyal endeavours to the good keeping of their * own keys, when contrary to the right end these keys are used against the Country and Realm, whereof they should be, and are the keys of safety; as by the said Act is declared.

Whether should the King or his Subjects keep the keys of his own Kingdom?

But the Covenanters are the worst part.

† We do not take them to be such fools as to expect thanks from his Majesty for their proceedings; if they do, they are like enough to go without them.

* The worst and most disloyal part of all his Majesties Subjects.

† In what History be these words? Is poscenti traderent. as well as Conventui ordinum? Or can there be a Convention of the three Estates called without the King or his Authority?

Fifthly, by the same Act, all violent detainers of the Kings Castles from him, or constrainers of the Kings Regents do redeem his own Houses, and all makers of any such bargain, merchandise, or market of the King's Castles, are only ordained to render and deliver again what they have received for reddition of the said Castles, and that the King shall have action for repetition thereof as necessarily given for the time, and wrongously received for unlawful causes. And our proceedings being compared with the subject of that Act of Parliament, cannot deserve so harsh constructions, where the || best part of the Body of the Realm being constrained for indemnity of their persons and goods, do neither take nor detain the Castle, but only with-hold importation, first clandestinely intended, and thereafter openly threatened, of all kind of warlike and invasive furniture, which could be useful to no purpose, but to the harm and annoyance of those who were conveyed for the just occasions forefaids, who deserve and expect approbation and † thanks from his Majesty in his own due time, for keeping his evil Counsellors, and bad Patriots, from putting hand in his best Subjects.

Sixthly, by the 25. Act 6. Parliament James 2. sundry points of Treason are enumerate: And amongst the rest, one is the assailing, without consent of the Estates, the Castles or places where the King's person shall happen to be: And now the King's person not being in this Castle, but out of the Country, and the * best and most loyal part of his Subjects both for number and fidelity, imploring his Majesties Authority, for convocating the Estates to take order with these, who, presuming upon his Majesties absence, are bold to give him sinister information and counsel, these who do no ways assail the Castle, but barrs these evil Patriots from putting in execution their damnable suggestions by their superchery violence and terrifications from that Castle, before the convention of Estates, cannot in Law and Equity be challenged in their carriage, so necessary to them in the interim, while the Estates convene in a Parliament, which now his Majesty hath been graciously pleased to proclaim.

Seventhly, it is known by our Chronicles and Records, that the Castle of Edinburgh was given in keeping to the House of Erskin by the King and Estates of Parliament, † hac lege expressa & conditione, ut nulli nisi conventui ordinum re-

Christian World; but hath many Presidents both in the History of other Kirks and Kingdoms, and of our own, which hath many such examples; even done by the Estates themselves; whose fact doth make our right, and whose authority is ratified conform to the ancient and lawable custom, in punishing rebellious Subjects, and preserving the faithful, Act 130. Par. 8. James 6.

Car. 14.

In the next place we are upbraided for our meetings, which in the Proclamation are called Council Tables only by that name which by ordinary expression is due to Judicatories, to make it believed, that we have arrogate to our selves some unwarrantable power and authority; (which we neither have nor intends to do God willing) whereas the truth is, that in a matter so highly importing all of us, as the preservation of Religion and purity of God's worship, it was most necessary for us to meet, and that in a sober, modest, and quiet way, for deliberating with joint advice upon those weighty businesses for the good of the Kirk, his Majesties honour, and peace of the Kingdom: And those * meetings did never emit nor send forth any authoritative command or injunctions, but conclude upon such advices as might be most expedient for advancing that great business, and facilitating the way of supplication to his Majesty, and overtures for the Assembly and Parliament; which was an Act lawful and approveable in the self, albeit the conclusions thereof did not carry the force or validity of a binding law or command, which was never aimed at, nor intended: Which meetings they might warrantably keep for that end, being for God's glory, and removing the just grievances of the Subjects, no ways prohibited by any of our municipal Laws, which disapproveth such Conventions as are for disturbance of the peace, or usurpation against Authority, whereof neither of the two can be alledged against these meetings: Not the first, because no invasion, violence, offer of wrong by word or deed, to any person, no even to those upon whom they justly complain, ensued upon the same, notwithstanding of their provocations, and their fears falsely represented to his Majesty, and maliciously pretended for their stay out of the Country: Not the second, because their meetings was to consult in manner foresaid upon the fitting and humble way of supplicating his Majesty, and for the most convenient Propositions to be represented to his Majesty, the Parliament, and Assembly: All which Acts are most compatible with the loyalty and duty of good Subjects, and do no ways intrench upon Authority, seeing they can never be challenged to have assumed to themselves any judicial determination in any matter of State, Civil nor Ecclesiastical, but by voluntary instructions & opinions every one to another in a common cause of Religion, did resolve what might be most conducive to their lawful and just ends; and yet those conventions want not the warrant of Law and Authority, because they consist of the Nobility, Barons, Burrows, and Ministry, which by the fundamental Laws of the Land, have place of proponing, reasoning, and voting in Parliament and Assemblies, Act 113. K. James the 6. Parl. 11. wherein is acknowledged that it is necessary to the King and his Estates to be truly informed of the needs and causes pertaining to His loving Subjects in all estates, and therefore ratifieth the Act made by King James 1. Anno 1427. giving power to Barons, to propone all and sundry needs, and causes, and to hear, treat, and determine all Causes to be proponed in Parliament; which about the meeting and alledged Council Tables.

* Many letters have been sent down from Commissioners of Shires then resident at Edinburgh to them living in the Country, requiring them to do such things as they would answer the contrary to the Table.

Anno 1638. necessary and true information cannot be made to his Majesty and Estates, † without privy meeting and consultation: And consequently it being granted to them, to inform the King and Estates, and to propone, hear, treat, and finally determine all needs and causes to be proponed in Parliament, there must be necessarily understood to be a sufficient power granted to them for meeting and advising upon that information: Quia aliquo concessio, omnia concessa videntur, sine quibus concessum expediri nequit. And as to the Ministers they have likewise power granted to them, not only by the Word of God and Constitutions of the Kirk, but by the King and Laws of this Land, to propone, reason, and vote in Assemblies, and be the same parity of reason to keep preceeding Meetings, not to determinate or execute, but to consult upon their necessary Propositions: So that these lawful Meetings, for the religious end, suffer wrongously the invidious designation of Council Tables: Which is only done for procuring misconstruction against them; because at these Meetings and Consultations they sate about a Table, which posture is no ways prejudicial to Authority, the meanest of Mechanick Crafts having their own Tables where about they sit, when they consult upon the smallest business importing their Trade. And farther, these same Meetings, consisting of Commissioners from each Sheriffdom and Body of this Estate, were allowed by his Majesties || Council first, and thereafter by the Commissioner his Grace; in so far as the whole Subjects of this Kingdom out of their resentment of the weight of this cause, having numerously convened at Edenburgh, from all the parts of the Kingdom, that confluence of people was desired to be dissolved, and directed to make choice forth of that great number of some Commissioners from each Shire, who might meet to represent their just grievances and desires, and attend the answers thereof.

Anent some Members of the Assembly alledged to be under censure.

* Who have made the Covenanters Judges of the lawfulness either of the Judiciary or the Cause; especially, what an intolerable presumption is it in them to judge the Kings Judicatories in Ireland?

The third particular Challenge in the Proclamation, is for the illegal and unformal course taken in the election of Commissioners to the Assembly, whereof some are alledged to have been under the censure of this Kirk, some under the censure of the Kirk of Ireland, some banished for teaching against Monarchy, others being suspended, some admitted to the Ministry contrary to the Laws of this Kingdom, others at the Horn, some confined, and all by Oath bound to the overthrow of Episcopacy: Whereunto although no answer be requisite, seeing the persons thereby meaned, are not specially condemned upon, yet for clearing all mens minds, and shewing the warrantableness of our proceedings, it is of truth that the Assembly, after particular trial which they took upon some such surmises, could not find any censured by the Kirk of Scotland or Ireland, by a lawful manner, in a lawful * Judicatory, or for a lawful cause: But on the contrary, the Assembly, after careful searching and examination, found, that any censure inflicted upon any of these persons in Scotland was only by a Bishop (who ought to be punished for taking arrogantly on him the name of the Kirk of Scotland) and that without the advice of any Presbytery, but sitting in his high Commission (which was condemned by the Laws of this Kirk and Kingdom, is discharged by the Kings Proclamation, is one of our just grievances, and a part of the Bishops ditty) and that only for refusing the innovations and corruptions abjured by the Confession of Faith 1580. For the censure of the Kirk of Ireland; it was not notified to the Assembly by any such Objection, and yet out of their zeal and care to satisfy all these misinformations, whereof they heard some whisperings, they sate after trial, that these censures inflicted were for the same causes foresaid, and yet could not militate out-with the bounds of that Diocie where they were censured in their own law and practise, and none of them were ever banished for any cause, let be for that odious cause pretended in the Proclamation: Wherein the mention of Horning against some of the Commissioners could not be a lawful exception against them, because Horning can neither take away their Ministerial Function, nor deprive the Presbyteries of their voice by their Commissioners: But in special this Horning against the Commissioners to the Assembly cannot be respected; because it was done in Edenburgh upon a † suddenly (upon what intention, we permit every one to consider) after all the Members of the Assembly were gone to Glasgow, and yet Protestation was taken against the same, and suspension craved upon the real offer of consignation, which, contrary to the Common Law and practise of this Kingdom, was unexampledly refused, and publick instruments taken thereupon: All which Objections are only now remembered to blemish the proceedings of this Assembly, but were never urged nor proponed in the Assembly; but on the contrary, the Commissions of all persons were produced, examined, discussed, and approved in my Lord Commissioners own audience, without any contrary voice of the Assembly: And yet upon these Challenges much is built against the Assembly, and the same are aggravate from a preceeding Oath, whereby it is alledged that the Commissioners were bound to overthrow Episcopal Government, which is of the same stamp and metal with the rest: For the truth is, that there was never any Oath given, nor exacted, but that which is contained in the Covenant, whereby all was abjured, only in general, which was contrary to the Confession of Faith 1580. leaving to the trial and determination of the Assembly, whether Episcopacy and some other innovations were repugnant to the said Confession, or not? And at the best, it is a bad inference, that one who hath maintained Orthodox Opinions, and preached against Heresie and Error, may not in the lawful Judicatory voice for condemnation of these Errors. And as for the election of Moderators, admission of Ministers by Presbyteries, and restitution of Elders; the same needeth no answer in this place, being sufficiently cleared by us before in our answers to the Eleven Articles exhibit unto us by the Commissioner his Grace: Which answers were so satisfactory, that after the receipt of the same, his Grace promised to procure a free General Assembly, with power to determine upon all questions anent members, matter, and manner of proceeding. And are further cleared in the Book of Policy, and other Acts already cited in our particular answer to the Declinator of this Assembly, produced by the Bishops. All which is approved by this general Assembly, and all Acts carrying appearance of contrariety thereto upon undeniable grounds are declared to be null ab initio.

Car. 14

† But they know that many Members of that Assembly were denounced the Kings Rebels, and put to the Horne, long before his Majesties Assembly was thought on.

Anno 1638. The fourth Act rubbed upon us to our prejudice by the Proclamation, is the sending from the Tables of instructions, whereof the heads are summarily exprest, which his Grace indeed did shew to the Assembly, and then the members of the Assembly declared, that neither of these Papers were ever sent from the (a) Meetings at Edenburgh to any man in their knowledge; and yet for the first (which possibly might have been some private direction of one Friend to another, without common advice) it doth not contain any thing offensive or partial. For the phrase of losing of our Christian and Civil Liberty might be warrantably exprest in relation to our former bondage and slavery under the Prelates, Tyrannizing in their High Commission, whereby most summarily, at their own pleasure, they deprived, fined, and confined all Persons and Professours, with such an high hand as justly we might affect deliverance from that servitude, which was likely more to interests by the unlimited power usurped in their Canons. So that the desire of this Liberty cannot be judged an affectation of licentious living without subjection to lawful Authority, which in our solemn Covenant with God we have sworn to maintain. And as for the same was produced by the Commissioner, the same was not only cleared to be no draught sent by publick advice, but the Members of the Assembly, and even those whom his Grace most suspected, denied the same, and offered to controul it by production of the true Paper of their instructions, altogether disagreeing from that other produced by the Commissioner, except in the Two Points following, which had been craftily intermixed with the saids untruths, to give them some countenance of probability. Like as they professed to his Grace upon their (c) Oath, that they had never seen the same before, nor ever read any of the Articles therein contained in any other Paper, except the fourth and the eighth Articles, whereof the fourth was for eschewing (as far as might be) Chapel-men, Chapter-men, and Ministers Justices of Peace, from being chosen Commissioners to the Assembly: which was so reasonable, that none could be offended thereat, because (d) Chapel-men had approved,

(c) There was no man in the Assembly who offered any such Oath as is here alleged. We doubt not but there were many members of the Assembly who might have taken that Oath safely, because they were indeed never acquainted with these Papers; but the Commissioner (if he had been put to it by the Assembly) could have named many especially some of the Nobility, Gentry, and Ministers, who could not have taken that Oath without Perjury; and since it is now denied, they shall be named in due time and place.

(d) First, This (nor the eighth) was not published in their publick instructions (for it would have offended many Covenanters who were both Chapter-men and Chapel-men) and therefore they acknowledging it to be one of their instructions, must needs confess it to be amongst their private ones. But a wonder it is that men should not be ashamed to avow in Print this their false and partial dealing; for this instruction concerning Chapter-men and Chapel-men was only given to bar some moderate Covenanting Ministers from being chosen Commissioners; for, notwithstanding this instruction, Mr. Ramsay, who both was one of the Chapter of Edenburgh, and Sub-Dean of our Chapel, and Roller, who was Prebend of the same Chapter, and one of the King's Chaplains, who duly Preached his turns in the King's Chapel, and some others, fierce and fiery revolved Chapter-men and Chapel-men, were chosen Commissioners, though the reason here exprest was as strong against them as against the rest.

and without warrant of this Kirk practised the innovations introduced of late; the Chapter-men had practised the book of Ordination, and (contrary to the Acts of the Kirk discharging Chapters and their Election of Bishops 1578.) had approved the corruptions of Kirk Government, and Ministers Justices of Peace had likewise accepted that Civil Office upon them, whereunto they were promoted for the most part as Creatures and Dependents of Bishops. And the eighth, wherein some are desired to study the points which were likely to be agitate in the Assembly, as, de Episcopatu, de senioribus, and among other Points, de potestate supremi Magistratus in Ecclesiasticis, praesertim in convocandis conciliis; whereat none can take just exception, because it was the duty of every member of that Assembly to instruct and enable themselves for agitating every point, which might occur to be spoken of there by any, or been proponed by the Doctors of Aberdene, who were expected there, and commanded to study these points: So that this ought not to be wrested to their prejudice, seeing it was incumbent to the Assembly to know the Precinct of the Kirks Jurisdiction, especially anent their own Assemblies, and to distinguish it from the Civil Jurisdiction of the supreme Magistrate giving to God what is God's, and to Cesar what is Cesar's, whereby the Sovereign Magistrate hath no prejudice, but great benefit, to know the extent of his power in matters Ecclesiastical, lest either he should come short of what is due to him, or, for want of true information, inroach upon the liberties of Christ's Kirk: Whereby it is most evident, that no indirect nor partial courses, nor dangerous Propositions, have been used in the preparations and Elections to this Assembly, but such as are most legal, peaceable, ordinary, and warrantable.

In the next place the Proclamation charges our innocency for repairing to the Assembly with great Troops and Bands of men boddin in fear of War, and furnished with forbidden Arms, in contempt of a preceding Proclamation: where-as the truth is, that our going and repairing to Glasgow was in the most peaceable, quiet, and single way which might serve for our security and indemnity against sundry Out-laws, Clangregors, and their Followers, who shortly before the Meeting of the Assembly had done sundry Out-rages, and committed many insolencies upon the King's good Subjects in these Western parts, both to private men, whom by their number they might enforce, and by exacting Moneys at publick Mercats near Glasgow, whereof many were advertised by their private Friends from these places, and to come thither prepared for eviting all affront or hazard which they might incur by that Rascally multitude: So that being firmly resolved of before to go thither every one accompanied with his own ordinary private Train, we yet continued in that resolution, and went thither in most sober and quiet way, only with this change, that for preventing that hazard we went not every man alone with his own ordinary servants, but some few together went in company; which is not only ordinary in going out the way, but was most expedient at that time for avoiding the foresaid hazard and prejudice: which moved us all so to carry with us some offensive Weapons, where- with not only these Rebels were provided, but likewise such who went to Glasgow with his Majesties Commissioners, who upon that same necessity were likewise * provided with those prohibited Weapons, and yet their carriage nothing thought to deboard from the duty of good Subjects. Upon these Reasons some of the Supplicants being present in Edinburgh, at the making the said Proclamation the sixteenth of November last, did protest that it might be lawful for them to carry Weapons for their own defence, and preservation against any such lawless Invasion or violence as might threaten them, and that they might incur no prejudice by carrying such weapons as those who followed Councillors and many others did, promising to carry themselves peaceably and irreproveably during the time of the Assembly, which accordingly they have done: and seeing our said carrying of weapons was for defence of our lives, against the Invasion of these barbarous Sorners, we are not censurable therefore by the Act of Parliament prohibiting the saids weapons, because we was repairing to, or returning from the Assembly at command of his Majesties Letters and Authority, which is in special words exprest in the Act of Parliament, Act 18. Parliam. 1. James 6. which is thereafter ratified with the same provisions, Act 87. Parliam. 6. James 6. and thereafter also ratified, Act 248. Parliam. 15. James 6. like as by the 227. Act, Parliam. 14. James 6. all honest men, and good Subjects Free-holders, are Authorized with a Commission to take and apprehend the persons and goods of those Sorners and and Thieves, keep themselves in Prison, and execute them to the death: And therefore far more to carry weapons for resisting of their savage violence.

And where the formal and orderly proceeding of this Assembly is challenged in the Proclamation, as peremptory, for refusing voice to the six Assessors assumed to himself by the Commissioner, and for not suffering the Declinator by the Bishops to be read before the Electing of a Moderator, We cannot conceive the same to be a just cause of offence, because albeit according to our bound duty, We defer all humble respect to his gracious Majesties Commissioner, and to the persons and places of the prime Noble-men, and Councillors his Graces Assessors, yet for preservation of the liberty of the Kirk of Jesus Christ, We did in all humility remonstrate that his Majesties Commissioner and Assessors, how many soever (whose place is not to vote, but to assist the Commissioner by their Counsel for his orderly proceeding) could have but only one voice in the Assembly: Since after thirty nine National Assemblies of this reformed Kirk, where neither the King's Majesty, nor any in His name were present, at the humble and earnest desire of the Assembly, his Majesty graciously vouchsafed His presence, either in his own Royal Person, or by a Commissioner, not for voting or multiplying of voices, but as Princes and Emperours of old, in a Princely manner, to countenance that Meeting, and to proceed in it for external order: And if we had been honoured with his Majesties personal presence, his Majesty (according to the practice of King James of blessed memory) would only have given his own judgment in voting of matters, and would not have called others who had not been clothed with Commission from the Kirk, to carry things by plurality of voices, Which is also imported by his Graces Commission produced, wherein he his nominate sole Commissioner. Like as also his Majesties Father never had Assessors voicing in (a) lawful Assemblies, nor challenged the same to his Commissioners, but only of late daies in these corrupt Assemblies, which for undeniable reasons are declared to have been null ab initio. And as to the refusing of the reading of the Declinator, and Protestation, exhibite by the Prelates, The same was publickly read, and the first Act of the Assembly, immediately after the Election of a Moderator and Constitution of the Members, before the which time there was no Assembly established, to whom the same could have been read, or by whom it could be judged; Like as we desired his Grace to bring in the Prelates themselves, and we should both answer for their safety, and give them a full audience.

(a) It is a bold and impudent Speech to affirm that Our Royal Father kept unlawful Assemblies, especially when some of them are confirmed by Parliament.

And further, whereas his Grace under his hand, gave in his Majesties Declaration, mentioned in this Proclamation, the same being considered by the Assembly, gave them matter of great joy, to find his Majesties Royal heart so far enlarged towards them, as willingly to untie some of those grievous bands wherewith they had been fettered by the means of some who abused their own places, and trust with his Majesty; But the same was not found satisfactory, nor sufficient for establishing of a legal security of the points therein mentionate, nor yet for purging the corruptions, and settling the peace of this Kirk, as was promised, whereof the Commissioner his Grace would not stay to be informed, but did unexpectedly and suddenly remove, to the great grief of the Assembly, who thereby was necessitate to use the power † God had put in their hands, for removing all innovations, and settling the purity, and peace of this Kirk. And seeing in this Proclamation his Majesties Declaration is insert ad longum, and the Assembly taxed for not being fully satisfied therewith, we are enforced to repeat here the reasons which moved the Assembly not to think the same satisfactory, in hope that they, coming to his Majesties Sacred ears, may procure the continuance of his benigne favour, so acceptable to this Kirk, by the indiction of this Assembly, and production of the said Declaration, and obtain his Royal approbation to the whole Acts and proceedings of this Assembly, which is heartily wished, and would replenish the hearts of all good Subjects with abundant joy and contentment. And

First, Where his Majesty hath discharged the Service-Book, and Book of Canons, and practice of both, and all Acts, Proclamations, and Ordinances made for establishing thereof, upon Information that by the introduction of them, the Subjects have apprehended the in-bringing of Popery, and Superstition to have been intended: Neither the discharge nor the ground thereof are satisfactory; Not the first, because as some Acts and Proclamations did serve for their establishing, so others gave them an high approbation, as fit means to maintain Religion and beat down all Superstition: And therefore though those which established them be rescinded, yet those which approved them do remain, and may bring forth other Acts and Proclamations for restoring them or the like hereafter, if these Books receive not a publick censure by the General Assembly as the only judge competent to bar them and the like in all

Anno 1638. all time coming: Seeing Acts of Council, and Proclamations, are frequent and variable, and yet are no legal valid mean either to introduce or abolish any thing concerning the Doctrine and Discipline of the Kirk, wherein they neither can meddle nor secure the Subjects. Next, seeing by the constitutions of this Kirk (a) the General Assembly hath only power to determine concerning the matters of God's publick Worship; And that the framers of these Books, who called themselves the representative Kirk, made them to be practised in sundry places of the Country by their own Authority, and that which they borrowed from (b) the Lords of Secret Council: Therefore it was most necessary that the same should be discharged by the General Assembly (the only true representative Kirk of this Nation) for vindicating her just right from violent Usurpation, and preventing the like in time coming; Not the second, for the Subjects have just grounds of perswasion that the Prelates and their followers (the framers and followers of those Books) intended the introducing of Popery and Superstition by the introducing thereof, because, 1. Many gross points of Popery and Superstition are not only closely couched under the cover of ensnaring ambiguities (the most insinuating way of Errours and best mask for Superstition) but also expressly contained in the Books themselves; as was made manifest by sundry Treatises read and considered in the Assembly, and is now so declared by the Assembly. 2. The framers and favourers of these Books in their Sermons and Conferences have vented sundry Popish Errors, and approved Popish Superstitions: which fully detecteth, and leaveth no doubt of their intention, in the introducing of Books so full of Popery and Superstition.

(a) But never without the Authority of Us and Our Successors. (b) The Confession of Faith and Band annexed, upon which their Covenant is grounded, were enjoined at the first only by the Authority of King James and his Council, and so these Books were commanded by as good Authority as those.

Secondly, The discharge of the High Commission by his Majesties Proclam. or Declaration cannot be sufficient; because first, his Majesty declareth that he established the same for the ease and benefit of the Subjects, that Justice might be administrate with the more conveniency and less trouble of the people, And now dischargeth it, because the Subjects have mistaken his gracious intention: So that if the mistaking be removed, that which is conceived of it self to serve for administration of Justice, with ease and benefit to the Subjects, may be established upon pretention of the removal of all such mistakings. Secondly, Though the acts and deeds made fore establishing thereof be rescinded, yet the acts past heretofore by the High Commission are not rescinded: And so the Subjects censured by it, are still esteemed under these censures, as appeareth by the Tenour of the Proclamation, wherein the Assembly is taxed, as consisting of some Members that are under the censures of this Kirk, meaning the Bishops censure in the High Commission. Thirdly, It being found contrary to the Acts of Parliament, and Acts of General Assembly, and extremely derogatory to them and all other subalterne Judicatories both Civil and Ecclesiastical (which is made clearly manifest by a Treatise presented to the General Assembly,) and it being devised and brought in by the suggestion of Bishops, as a mean whereby they might and have unlawfully Tyrannized over all the Subjects, Therefore it is necessary that the Parliament and General Assembly, the highest Civil and Ecclesiastical Judicatories that have been wronged, should by their several sentences utterly abolish it as unlawful and hurtful.

Thirdly, Whereas his Majesty dispenseth with the practice of Pearth Articles, dischargeth all from urging the practice thereof, freeth from censures for not urging or practising them, notwithstanding of any thing contained in the Acts of Parliament, or General Assembly to the contrary, and is content that the Assembly take the same so far to their consideration, as to represent it to the next Parliament, there to be ratified as the Estates shall find fitting: These cannot satisfy; because first, a dispensation with the practice, without a simple discharge, leaveth it still Arbitrary to those who will practise, and so continueth the Rent and distractions in this Kirk. Secondly, Although his Majesty had discharged the Practice of them by his Proclamation or Declaration, yet the Subjects had not been put in security thereby, except the General Assembly (to whose Trial they belong and were referred by all the Subscribers of the Confession in March) do either repeal the Articles of Pearth, or upon good reason declare that Assembly null, since his Majesties Proclamation or Declaration, is not a sufficient warrant to infringe an Act of Assembly or Parliament made to the contrary. Thirdly, By tying the Assembly to take the same no further unto their consideration than to represent it to the next Parliament, the Assembly is both prelimited (whereanent refers to the six reasons against prelimitation insert in our Protestation, Septemb. 22.) and weakened in power, (a) as if it might not judge and determine in matters merely Ecclesiastical without a licence from his Majesty, or a reference to the Parliament, whereas the General Assembly is supreme and independent in matters Ecclesiastical, as the Parliament is in Civil; so that when the Acts of Assembly are ratified in Parliament, the same is for adjoyning the Civil Sanction to the Ecclesiastick constitution for the great terror of Transgressors.

Fourthly, Anent the Oathes administrate to Ministers at their entry, it hath not only been pretended, but is certain, and will be made manifest to the Assembly, (which also now is done) that Oathes have been exacted different from that which is set down in the Acts of Parliament, and in many several waies according to the pleasure of the Prelates: And where his Majesty declares that no other Oath shall be required of a Minister at his entry, nor that which is set down in the Act of Parliament, (b) the same is of fearful consequence, because the Act bears an Oath to be given unto the Bishop by Ministers intrants, and so supposeth the Office of a Bishop to be unchangeable and uncontroverted, whereby the Assembly is prelimited (against the reasons before mentioned) which may find that Office useles and unlawful in this Kirk, and which now they have found upon most infallible reasons.

Fifthly, That his Majesty assureth General Assemblies shall be kept as oft as the affairs of this Kirk shall require, doth not satisfy, because first, by leaving the time indefinite, it prejudgeth the liberty of the Kirk of holding yearly General Assemblies at least, and oftner pro re nata, ratified by the Act of Parliament 1592. the disuse whereof hath been a main cause of our evils, which should be prevented in time coming, by renewing

Car. 14.

(a) It may not; and the holding of the contrary is a false and Jesuitical Position.

(b) A fearful Proposition indeed it is, to hold Episcopal Government to be an uncontroverted Government, which hath continued in the Church ever since the time of Christ and his apostles, without the least suspicion of controversy until within these few years.

newing that ancient necessary Custom and Liberty. Secondly, By the same Act of Parliament it is provided that the King, or his Commissioner being present, shall appoint the time and place of the next Assembly: And in case his Majesty or his Commissioner be not present for the time in the Town where the Assembly is holden, it shall be leave to the said General Assembly by themselves to appoint the time and place of the next Assembly, as they have been in use in times past: But this Declaration not only leaves all indefinite but totally everts that power and liberty competent to them by Law and Custom. Thirdly, As it doth not determine how oft the ordinary affairs of this Kirk require an Assembly (which the Custom of this Kirk and act foresaid evidently manifest to be yearly once at least) so neither doth it determine who shall judge when the necessity of extraordinary affairs require an Assembly pro re nata: whereas undoubtedly the Kirk will be most sensible of her own necessities, and is the most proper Judge of her own affairs: And therefore should have freedom to appoint her own times when she finds her self pressed with present exigences, as his Majesty hath also power when he perceives any necessity requiring the same.

Sixthly, Whereas his Majesty is content that all the present Bishops and their Successors be answerable to, and censurable by the General Assembly, it doth not satisfy; because, First, it bears a prelimitation of the Assembly in the matter of trying that Office, and presupposes the continuance thereof by Succession as unquestionable. Secondly, They have been formerly made censurable by the General Assembly in the straightest way that the Kirk could enjoy, or they could assure: And yet these thirty years they have shunned all censure (though all their actions deserved it) by procuring General Assemblies to be prorogate, and then suddenly indicted when they had cunningly prepared both persons and purposes to their mind: Like as now they have by their Declinator refused to answer, and be censured by this present Assembly indicted by his Majesty, convened in the name of Christ, and perfectly constitute in the members thereof: And therefore it lyeth upon this present Assembly to take some solid course, for securing the Kirk, in all time coming, against the prejudices of their former and frequent breaches contrary to their Oathes given.

Seventhly, Whereas his Majesty requireth this present Assembly to subscribe this Confession of Faith formerly signed by his Royal Father 1580. and late commanded by his Majesty to be subscribed by all his Majesties Subjects: The reasons contained in the Protestation September 22 last (whereto we adhere and repeats the same) do sufficiently evidence that we cannot subscribe the same: to which we add; First, That his Majesties Commissioner hath declared to the Lords of Session when their subscriptions was required, that it might subsist with the Innovations introduced since the year of God 1580. which * some of the said Lords then did, and all of us do now conceive to repugne to the genuine and true sense of the Confession of Faith as it was first made: Secondly, That his Grace hath protested divers times in this Assembly, that nothing done or to be done therein prejudice the Archbishops and Bishops in their Priviledges, places, power and jurisdiction: whereby he declareth that these may subsist with the Confession of Faith, notwithstanding they be novations introduced upon this

Kirk, contrary to the same, since the year aforesaid, as is now found by the Assembly. Thirdly, That to the Assembly presently convened and perfectly constitute in the Members thereof, it pertaineth properly according to the Word of God, Constitutions of this Kirk, and Book of Policy, ratified in divers Assemblies, to determine what is the true meaning of the Confession of Faith, and to make the same known to all the Members of this Kirk, who thereafter without scruple or danger may subscribe the same. And although the Assembly could not find this Declaration satisfactory for these and the like weighty reasons, yet were they willing the same should be insert in their Books for obedience to his Majesties desire: and thankfully acknowledging his Majesties pious affection to true Religion, and Royal resolution to defend the same and his Subjects in the profession thereof, exprest in the closure of his Royal Declaration, they were confident that when his Majesty shall be fully informed that the novations introduced since the year 1580. are incomparable with the Confession of our Faith, he will be pleased graciously to vouchsafe his comfortable protection upon those, who (adhering to the true meaning of that Confession now fully cleared by the Assembly) have abjured all the Innovations introduced, and by their great Oath and subscription have bound themselves to maintain the true Religion, and his Majesties Person and Authority in defence of the same. And this true Religion being the Channel which Convoyleth both duties to their proper object, the evidence of God's Image in our Dread Sovereign his Depute shall be terrible to all the enemies of his Majesty and of his Loyal Subjects who stand for the Confession of Faith, and the true meaning thereof, and shall raise up the affections of his Religious Subjects towards his Majesty above all earthly respects.

And where it is subjoined in the Proclamation that nothing was able to give contentment, except we were permitted to overthrow Episcopal Government and to abrogate publick Laws standing, and take away one of the three Estates, we are sufficiently cleared thereof by the Acts of the Assembly, abrogating, and abolishing Episcopal Government in this Kirk for † infallible reasons contained in the said Act, and also by our answer published to the Declaration emitted in the Commissioners name (which for brevity we forbear to insert herein) whereby we have sufficiently evinced that our proceedings are not contrary to the Laws of the Kingdom, or destructive of any lawful third Estate, and which part of the Proclamation doth close, with an undeserved imputation to our Loyalty, bearing that for the like dangerous Acts so derogatory to Royal Authority, and for other Reasons importing true Monarchical Government, the Commissioner was forced to dissolve the Assembly; but the same is so generally expressed, that it appears evidently to be done of plain purpose to make us hateful, which we hope will not work that end, unless some special Act of disloyalty or malversation could be specially condescended upon (which undoubtedly had not been omitted if it had been possible) otherwise that dark cloud of general terms cannot obfuscate the pure brightness of our sincere intentions, unless our true representation of Grievances, and earnest humble pressing legal redress thereof at his Majesties hands, may deserve that aspersions in the eyes of these Councillours, who think themselves obliged rather in absolute obedience, than a dutiful dutiful representation to their Sovereign of what is just and warrantable; wherein we appeal to all the World, if either our proceedings, or opinions be any waies derogatory to the true power of Monarchical Government or his Majesties Authority, which we are obliged to defend with our lives and fortunes by our Covenant.

And where in the Proclamation, in that part thereof, anent the Commissioners discharge of the Assembly, is insinuate some expression of his Graces willingness to return the next morning to the Assembly, we declare that we were most sensible of the benefit of his Graces presence, and received great contentment by that countenance of Royal Authority in representation, whereof we would never have deprived our selves, if we had had the least signification of any such intention: but the truth is, that having called our selves to our best remembrances, we heard no word or expression tending that way; but by the contrary * we did humbly require his Grace to give in the reasons of his discontentment in writ, and to return the next day again, at which time we should give in sufficient answers thereto which might wipe away all his Graces objections, and move him to continue his wished presence to that Assembly, whereat he had publickly professed he could no longer assise: but this being refused, and the Assembly discharged by him, we were necessitate to protest both that day and the day following upon the Market-Cross of Glasgow, and to shew, that in conscience of our duty to God and his truth, the King and his Honour, the Kirk and her Liberties, this Kingdom and her peace, this Assembly and her Freedom, to our selves and our safety, to our Posterity, Persons, and Estates, we could not dissolve the Assembly for the reasons following: First, For the reasons already Printed anent the convening a General Assembly, which are now more strong in this case, seeing the Assembly was already indicted by his Majesties Authority, did convene and is fully constitute in all the Members thereof, according to the Word of God and Discipline of this Kirk, in presence and audience of his Majesties Commissioner, who hath really acknowledged the same by assisting therein seven daies, and exhibition of his Majesties Royal Declaration to be registrate in the Books of this Assembly, which accordingly was done. Secondly, For the reasons contained in the former Protestations made in name of the Noble-men, Barons, Burgesses, Ministers, and Commons, whereunto we did then judicially, and do now actually adhere, as also unto the Confession of Faith and Covenant subscribed and sworn by the Body of this Kingdom. Thirdly, Because as we are obliged by the Application and Explication subjoynd necessarily to the Confession of Faith subscribed by us, so the King's Majesty, and his Commissioner, and Privy Council, have urged many of this Kingdom to subscribe the Confession of Faith made in Anno 1580. and 1590. And so to return to the Doctrine and Discipline of this Kirk as it was then professed; but it is clear by the Doctrine and Discipline of this Kirk, that it was most unlawful in the self, and prejudicial to these Priviledges, which Christ in his Word hath left to his Kirk to dissolve or break up the Assembly of this Kirk, or to stop and stay their proceedings in constitution of Acts, for the welfare of the Kirk or execution of Discipline against Offenders, and so to make it appear that Religion and Kirk Government should depend absolutely upon the pleasure of the Prince. Fourthly, Because there is no ground of pretence, either by act of Assembly, or Parliament, or any preceding practice, whereby the King's Majesty may dissolve the General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, far less his Majesties Commissioner, who by his Commission hath power to indict, and keep it secundum legem & praxim, but upon the contrary his Majesties prerogative Royal is declared by act of Parliament to be no waies prejudicial to the Priviledges and Liberties which God hath granted to the Spiritual Office-bearers and meetings of this Kirk, which are most frequently ratified in Parliaments, and especially in the last Parliament holden by his Majesty himself; which Priviledges and Liberties of the Kirk, his Majesty will never diminish or infringe, being bound to maintain the same in integrity by solemn Oath given at his Royal Coronation in this Kingdom. Fifthly, The Assemblies of this Kirk have still enjoyed this freedom of uninterrupted sitting, without or notwithstanding any contramand, as is evident by all the Records thereof, and in special by † the General Assembly holden in Anno 1582. which being charged with Letters of Horning by the King's Majesty his Commissioner, and Council, to stay their process against M. Robert Montgomery pretended Bishop of Glasgow, or otherwaies to dissolve and rise, did notwithstanding shew their liberty and freedom by continuing and sitting still, and without any stay going on in that process against the said M. Robert, to the final end thereof, and thereafter by Letter to his Majesty did shew clearly, how far his Majesty had been misinformed, and upon mis-information prejudged the prerogative of Jesus Christ and the liberties of this Kirk, and did enact and ordain that none should procure any such warrant or charge under the pain of Excommunication. Sixthly, Because now to dissolve after so many Supplications and Complaints, after so many reiterated promises, after our long attendance and expectation, after so many references of Processes from Presbyteries, after the publick Indiction of the Assembly, and the solemn Fast appointed for the same, and after frequent Convention and formal Constitution of the Assembly, in all the Members thereof, and seven daies sitting, were by this Act to offend God, contemn the Subjects Petitions, deceive many of their conceived hopes of redress of the Calamities of the Kirk and Kingdom, multiply the Combulitions of this Kirk, and make every man despair hereafter ever to see Religion established, Innovations removed, the Subjects Complaint respected, or the Offenders punished with consent of Authority, and so by casting the Kirk and Estate loose and desolate, would abandon both to ruin. Seventhly, It was most necessary to continue this Assembly, for preveening the prejudices which might ensue upon the pretence of two Covenants, whereas indeed there is but one: that first subscribed in 1580. and 1590. being a National Covenant and Oath to God, which is lately renewed by us, with that necessary explanation which the corruptions introduced since that time contrary to the same, enforced: which is also acknowledged in the Act of Council in September last, declaring the same to be subscribed as it was meant the time of the first subscription; and therefore, for removing that shame and all prejudices, which may follow upon the shew of two different Covenants and Confessions of Faith in one Nation, the Assembly could not dissolve before it had tryed, found, and determined that both these Cove-

Anent our citation of Councillors. And further in the said Proclamation, the strain of our Protestation is Taxed, because we have thereby presumed to cite those of his Majesties Council who have procured, subscribed, or ratified this Proclamation, to be responsal to his Majesty and three Estates of Parliament ; whereas the same cannot be justly quarrelled, because it is grounded upon the Law of the Kingdom, and warranted by the Act of Parliament therein cited, 12. Act. Par. 2. James 4. which Act is grounded upon good reason : for it were strange to think that Councillors giving bad Counsel, to the evident prejudice and ruine of the Country, and publick detriment of the good Subjects, should not be countable therefore to his Majesty and his Estates : and it is not without instance in our Laws, that perverse Counsel hath been given in misguiding the King's and common good of this Realm, Act 6. Par. 1. James 4. which is also acknowledged by the reduction of Grants made by Kings to these perverse Councillors, act 3. Par. 4. and act 5. Par. 1. James 4. The perverseness of which misguiding Counsel, hath been assuredly the cause why in the next Parliament in the year immediately subsequent, the King's Council was chosen in Parliament, and sworn in presence of the King and three Estates, and ordained to be responsal and accusable to the King and three Estates for their Counsel : Which cleareth that both evil Counsel may be given, and that the Council may be accused before the King and Parliament for malversation in their charge. Like as his Majesty in the Proclamation, makes all persons liable to the Parliament and General Assembly, and so giveth way to this previous citation, which may serve for a forewarning and intimation that they may be accused if they be guilty, as we know all are not, and wish that none were.

Anent the injunctions and Proclamation, and our answer thereto. All which heavy Objections and Imputations are premittid in the Proclamation to the Conclusion and Command thereof, which resolveth into two Heads ; the first discharging obedience to the acts of Assembly, and liberating all, who shall disobey, from censure, and promising Protection to the disobeyers, and inhibiting all Presbyteries, Sessions of Kirks, Ministers within this Realm in their Sermons, Sessions, and Meetings or any otherwaies, to authorize, approve, or allow the Assembly at Glasgow, or do any deed which may countenance the same, under pain to be punished with all rigour. And commanding all who shall hear them, to delate the same, under pain of the like punishments ; likewise straitly charging and commanding all Judges within this Realm, Clerks, and Writers, not to grant or pass a Bill, Summon'd, or Lettters, or any other Execution whatsoever, upon any Act, or Deed, proceeding from the said Assembly ; and all Keepers of the Signet from Signeting thereof, under all highest pain. And the Second Head, Commanding all Subjects to subscribe and swear the Confession commanded by his Majesty conform to the sense and meaning of the Declaration published by the Commissioner, whereunto we need not here make any answer, but remits the same to a special answer, published in Print made to that (a) Declaration. But for the first, the same is so far repugnant to the Word of God, practice of the Primitive Kirk, the Laws Civil and Canonical, the Custom of all Nations, the constitutions of our General Assemblies, acts of Parliament, practice of other Judicatories within this Kingdom, to the Confession of Faith and Discipline of this Kirk, as we cannot believe any such Commandments to proceed from our gracious King, but from the malice and mis-information of our Adversaries, the Conscience of whose guiltiness affrighteth them to undergo their deserved censure, which is (b) clear, first, That the same is contrary to the Law of God, from that place of Scripture, Mat. 18. wherein the Kirk is commanded absolutely to inflict censures, 1 Cor. 5. wherein the Kirk did execute that Commandment. And the Kirks of Pergamus and Thyatira, are reprov'd for not executing Ecclesiastical censures against those who held the Doctrine of Balaam, or of Jezebel, Rev. 2. So that the power of the Keys in Ecclesiastical censures is so intrinsically and so essentially competent to the Kirk and General Assembly Jure Divino, as obedience to her Decrees and Executions thereof, cannot be suspended, far less taken away and discharged by human Authority, more nor the power of Preaching and Administration of the Sacraments. Secondly, It is contrary to the practice of the Apostolick and Primitive Kirks, whose constant practice was to execute the Spiritual Functions and censures ; and, notwithstanding human prohibitions, to obey God rather than man. Thirdly, It is contrary to the Civil Law, Si contra jus vel utilitatem publicam, vel per mendacium fuerit aliquid postulatum vel impetratum ab Imperatore. Et titulo de diversis rescriptis & pragmatice sanctionibus. Fourthly, The same is contrary to the (c) Canon Law decret. decretal. extravagant. titulo de rescriptis. Fifthly, It is contrary to the universal Custom in all Nations ordaining their Judicatories to do Justice, notwithstanding their Princes prohibition, as is clear by Convarruia in Spain, Pappon in France, Suedwyne in Germany, &c. upon the title de rescriptis aut constitutionibus principum. Sixthly, To the constitutions of General Assemblies, because in sundry General Assemblies upon Complaints made that the King's Majesty and his Council by their Letters offered some stop to the Kirk from going on in her Ecclesiastical censures, especially by act of the General Assembly convened in the new Colledge of Sanctandrews, April 20. 1582. it is ordained that none being received to any Ecclesiastical Function, Office, or Benefice, seek any way by the Civil Power to exeeme and withdraw themselves from the Jurisdiction of the Kirk, or procure, obtain, or use any Letters, or Charges, either by themselves, or any other in their name, or at their command and instance, to impair, hurt, or stay the said Jurisdiction, Discipline, correction of Manners, or punishment of their Offences and enormities, or to make any appellation from the General Assembly, to stop the Discipline, and order of the Ecclesiastical Policy, and Jurisdiction granted by God's Word to the Office-bearers within the said Kirk, under the pain of Excommunication summarily, without any Process, or Admonition to be pronounced by the judgment of the Eldership, by the Minister, or Ministers which shall be appointed by them, how soon it is known that any of the saids Heads are transgressed ; Like as both the King's Majesty and his Council promised that none thereafter should have that cause to complain

And in the Assembly holden at St. Andrews, April 24. 1582. being charged with Letters of Horning not to proceed against Mr. Robert Montgomery; the Assembly did write to his Majesty that this discharge was extraordinary, as a thing that was never heard nor seen since the World began, and was directly against the Word of God, and Laws of the Kingdom. And yet notwithstanding of the said charge the Assembly did proceed and Excommunicate the said Mr. Robert. Further, In the Assembly at Edenburgh, the twenty seventh of June 1582. Seff. 7. amongst the grievances presented by the Kirk to the King, The first is, That his Majesty by device of some Counsellours is moved to take upon Him that Spiritual Power and Authority which properly belongeth to Christ as only King and Head of his Kirk, the Ministry and Execution whereof is only given to such as bear

† Nay, but the pretended Assembly hath erected a Popedom, and for their Authority go upon the same grounds, and use the very same Arguments, and abuse the very same places of Scripture which the Pope and the learnedest Patrons of the Pope do for robbing of Princes their Authority over all Ecclesiastical persons, and causes in their several Dominions: The words which next follow are meer babbling

Office in the Ecclesiastical Government of the same; so that in his Majesties Person some men prease to erect a † Popedom, as though his Majesty could not be full King and Head of this Commonwealth, unless also the Spiritual as Temporal Sword be put in his Majesties hands, unless Christ be rest of his authority, and the two Jurisdictions confounded, which God hath divided, which directly tends to the Wrack and Overthrow of all true Religion, &c. And in the Assembly holden at Edenburgh in Octob. 1582. Seff. 15. Summons are direct by the General Assembly against the King's Advocate, for drawing up the King's Proclamation of that strain. 7. The foresaid command is also contrary to the acts of Parliament: because as the acts of Parliament appoint every matter for its own Judicatory, and to all Judicatories their own freedom, so much more doth this liberty belong to the National Assembly, being the supreme Judicatory Ecclesiastick of this Kirk, and only competent Judge in matters so important, and so nearly concerning God's Honour and Worship immediately, the Salvation of the Peoples Souls, the settling of the purity of God's Worship, the purging away the corruptions thereof, and right constitutions of the Kirk, whose liberties and privileges are confirmed, Parl. 12. King James 6. and Parl. 1. King Charles. Like as by the 12 Parl. 114. Act K. James 6. Anno 1592. the Liberty and Discipline of the Kirk, especially in her Presbyteries and Assemblies, are fully and firmly ratified, with Declaration that the Act of the King's Majesties Prerogative Royal over all Estates and Persons, shall no waies be prejudicial to the Priviledges which God hath given to the Spiritual Office-bearers in the Kirk, concerning Heads of Religion, matters of Heresie, Excommunication, Collation, and Deprivation of Ministers, or any such like essential censures, especially grounded and having warrant of the Word of God, with full power even to the Particular Presbyteries to put order to all matters and causes Ecclesiastical within their bounds, according to the Discipline of the Kirk. 8. The Lords of Council and Session by Act 92. Parl. 6. King James 6. are ordained to proceed in all Civil Causes intended or depending before them, or to be intended, and to cause execute their Decrees, notwithstanding any private writing, Charge, or Command from the King's Majesty, or His Council in the contrary, and by the 47 act, 11. Parl. King James 6. all Licences and Superfederees purchas'd from his Majesty, are discharged as contempt done to the Law, as great hurt to the Lieges, and contrary to Justice, and declareth the same to be null of the Law, and not admittible by any Judge, nor effectual to the purchaser any waies, and ordaineth all Judges within this Realm to proceed and do Justice; siclike, and in the same manner as if the said Superfederees and Licences never had been purchased nor produced. Like as by the 106. Act Parl. King James 6. all Licences granted by his Majesty to hinder the execution of Acts against Papists and other Adversaries of the true Religion are discharged and declared to be of no force. According to which it hath been the ordinary custom both in Civil and Ecclesiastical Judicatories (notwithstanding of privy Warrants or Prohibitions contrary to Law which commonly are impetrate from his Majesty upon mis-information) to proceed and minister Justice. 9. To discharge obedience to the Acts of the Assembly, stop the execution thereof, protect and defend such as are delinquents and under the Kirks censure, doth directly repugne to the large Confession of Faith of this Kirk. Wherein, Cap. 19. the third mark of the true Kirk is affirmed to be upright Ministration of Ecclesiastical Discipline, as God's Word prescribes, for establishing good order and repressing of vice: and so no more can be impeded nor justly taken from the Kirk than any of her other two marks, viz. The right Preaching of the Word and Ministration of the Sacrament: And therefore in the Oath at the King's Coronation, he sweareth to maintain this Confession, and these three marks of the Kirk, and particularly that he shall be careful to root out of his Empire all Hereticks and Enemies to the Worship of God, that shall be Convict by the true Kirk of God of the foresaid Crimes. 10. In the short Confession of Faith sworn, 1580. and 1590. and renewed by the greatest and † best part of this Kirk and Kingdom, with an Explication renewed also at his Majesties Command by his Council, and are bound to continue in obedience of the Doctrine and Discipline of the Kirk, and defend the same according to their vocation and power. So that seeing this general Assembly hath proceeded in their Constitution, Acts, and whole proceedings according to the Discipline of this Kirk of Scotland 1580. and 1590. contained in the second Book of Discipline: which in both these years were ordained to be registrate and sworn to by all the Ministers of this Kirk, as the Discipline thereof, and wherein the Civil and Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction are so clearly distinguished in the 1. c. l. 2. as the power of the Sword may no waies stop or impede the power of the keys: and in the 7. c. the Eldership and Assemblies hath power to execute Ecclesiastical punishment upon all Transgressors and proud contempters of the Kirk: and in the 10. c. the Office of the Christian Magistrate is described to assist and maintain the Discipline of the Kirk, and punish those civilly who will not obey the censures thereof, without confounding alwaies the one Jurisdiction with the other: and this order of Ecclesiastical Discipline, condescended upon in General Assemblies, as warranted by Divine Authority to be execute notwithstanding any humane inhibition, is set down before the Psalms in Meeter: and therefore we can never expect that his Majesty, who Judicatory competent, will now stay the execution of the † lawful and grave sentences of this National Kirk, so comfortable to us, and so necessary for maintaining the purity of Religion: which his Majesty in the end of the Articles before mentioned hath promised to defend, and his Subjects in the profession thereof, which is incompatible with the defence of Excommunicate and obstinate persons. But therefore we are assured that his gracious Majesty will be pleased to allow that reverence and all ready obedience may be deferred to the whole Acts, Constitutions, and Censures of the said General Assembly, by all his Subjects, who undoubtedly and necessarily are obliged to obedience of all the lawful commands and injunctions of the Mother Kirk, if they would be accounted Members or Sons thereof.

First, By all which (a) cloud of weighty reasons the warrantableness of

(a) It seems indeed that these reasons are wrapped up in a cloud, for both they are so dark as they cannot be discerned, and they do portend a storm, but have no weight in them at all.

our just proceedings doth evidently appear, notwithstanding of all the Arguments of challenge adduced against us in the said Proclamation: And therefore for these and many other reasons, We the Members of this Assembly, in our own names, and in the name of the Kirk of Scotland, whom we represent: And we Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, Burgesses, and Commons, before mentioned, do solemnly declare in the presence of the everliving God, and before all men; and protest (b) That our thoughts are not guilty of any thing which is not incumbent to us, as good Christians towards God, and loyal Subjects towards our Sacred Sovereign: And we attest God the Searcher of all hearts, that our intentions and whole proceedings in this present Assembly have been and shall continue according to the Word of God, the Laws and Constitutions of this Kirk, the Confession of Faith, our National Oath, and that measure of light, which God the Father of light hath granted unto us, and that in the sincerity of our hearts, without any pre-occupation or passion.

Secondly, That it was and is most lawful and necessary for us to sit still and continue in keeping this present Assembly indicted by his Majesty, until after conclusion of all matters it be dissolved by common consent of all the members thereof, and that for trying judging and censuring all the by-gone evils and the Introducers, and providing a solid course of the continuance of God's truth in this Land with purity and liberty, according to his Word, our Oath and Confession of Faith, and the lawful constitutions of this Kirk.

Thirdly, That this Assembly is and should be esteemed and obeyed as a most lawful, full and free General Assembly of this Kingdom, And that all Acts, Sentences, Constitutions, Censures, and Proceedings of this Assembly (whereof the general and principal Acts are to be published,) are in the self, and should be reputed, obeyed, and observed, by all the Subjects of this King, and Members of this Kirk, as the Acts, Sentences, Constitutions, Censures and Proceedings of a full and free General Assembly of this Kirk of Scotland: And to have all ready execution, under the Ecclesiastical pains contained, or to be contained therein, and conform thereto in all points, and such like, that whosoever presumeth to utter any undutiful Speech against the same, may be duly censured and condignly punished.

Fourthly, We protest that all and every Member of this Reformed Kirk efoldly and faithfully joyn and concur in their several Callings and Stations, to advance further and assist the execution and obedience of the whole Acts of this Assembly, by all means which their ability can afford, as they affect the advancement of God's glory and the work of Reformation in this Land.

Fifthly, We protest against all the Challenges and Alpersions laid upon us in the said Proclamation, and that our whole answers are not only true in every point, but likewise sufficiently forcible to deliver us from all unjust imputations, and to justify the lawfulness and necessity of our whole proceedings and carriage, which hath been so unreasonably blamed. Like as by these presents we summon'd and cite all those of his Majesties Council, or any other, who have procured, consented, subscribed, or ratified this present Proclamation, to be responsible to his Majesty and three Estates of Parliament, for their Counsel given in this matter, so highly importing his Majesty, and the whole Realm; conform to the 12 Act Parl. 2. King James 4. And protest for remedy of Law against them and every one of them.

Sixthly, We protest that it is and may be lawful unto us to defend and maintain the Religion, Laws, and Liberties of this Kingdom, the King's authority in defence thereof, and every one of us another in that cause, according to our power, vocation, and Covenant, with our best Counsel, Bodies, Lives, Means, and whole strength, against all persons whomsoever; and against all external, and internal invasions, and that in the obedience and observance of the Acts of this Assembly and National Mother Kirk.

Seventhly, That whatsoever inconvenients shall fall out by impeding, molesting, or staying the observance and obedience due to the Acts, Ordinances, and Conclusions of this Assembly, or execution to follow thereupon, that the same be not imputed unto us, or any of us in our lawful defence and maintenance thereof, who most ardently desired the concurrence of his Majesties Commissioner to this lawful Assembly, and do yet still with humble vehemency beg his Majesties gracious approbation thereunto, but on the contrary that the Prelates and their adherents, who have protested, and declined this present Assembly, in conscience of their own guiltiness, not daring abide to any legal trial, and by their misinformation did move the Commissioner his Grace to depart and discharge this Assembly, be esteemed, repute and holden (as they truly are) the disturbers of the peace, and overthrowers of the Liberties of the Kirk, and guilty of all the evils which shall follow hereupon, and condignly censured according to the greatness of their faults and Acts of the Kirk and Realm.

Eighthly,

W Eighthly, We protest that none hereafter subscribe the Covenant formerly subscribed by the Anno. Commissioner his Grace in Council, as they will 1638. eschew the danger of a contradictory Oath, but that all and every one subscribe the Covenant renewed in February last; and that with this sense, meaning, and condition, that they subscribe the same conform to the determination and declaration of this Assembly at Glasgow allanerly.

Nimbley, We protest that as we adhere till all former Protestations, and every one of them made in the name of the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Ministers, and Commons respective for the time; So we may have his Majesties Royal approbation to this present Assembly, whole Acts and Constitutions thereof, and all our proceedings and behaviour in this business, which we assuredly expect from his Majesties imbred piety, justice, and bounty, notwithstanding the sinistrous, untrue informations, whispered in his Royal ears in the contrary.

Upon all which Premises and Protestation foresaid (which is the same with the former made by us at Glasgow, the 29. of November last, but so far differing as was necessary for answer to the new additions contained in this Proclamation; and clearing us of the aspersions wherewith we are charged therein, which we might lawfully do, having protested for this Liberty in respect of our surprisal) one certain number of all qualities and ranks for themselves, and in name foresaid, asked instruments. This was done in presence of a great confluence of people upon the Mercate Cross of Edinburgh, the 18. day of December.

Revised, according to the ordinance of the General Assembly, by me Master Archibald Johnston, Clerk thereto.

At Edinburgh, Jan. 8.

Not long after his Majesties Proclamation, and their Protestation, the Lord Commissioner (seeing all things tending to a present rupture) began his journey according to the leave which his Majesty had granted him for his return: After which time, and ever since, they have throughout the whole Kingdom by threatnings made the Acts of their unlawful Assembly to be received, in many places have perswaded the reception of them by Force and Arms, have levied Souldiers, and imposed Taxes upon his Majesties Subjects for payment of them, have required of the Judges or Lords of the Session to approve their Acts, though none of them consented to it, have threatned and menaced them for refusing of it, have raised divers Fortifications in his Majesties Kingdom, have blocked up the Castles and Forts, and now at last forcibly taken the Castle of Edinburgh, have at home got their Preachers most seditiously and rebelliously to teach the people, that there is a necessity of their carrying Arms against the King, under pain of Perjury and Damnation, have scattered abroad, especially here in England, divers infamous Libels justifying their own wicked and rebellious courses, inciting the people here to attempt the like Rebellion, and to deface the Ecclesiastical Government.

When the Contrivers of that wicked Covenant first framed and devised it, and perswaded others who were well perswaded of their Piety, to enter into it, 'We dare appeal (saith his Majesty in the larger Declaration) even to their own Consciences, whether they did ever make the seduced people acquainted with their intentions of abolishing Episcopal Government, and introducing of Lay-elders, which are the only two things they make the seduced people believe they now stand upon: And We do wonder there should be any man found in the World, who can hold it a sufficient Warrant for Our Subjects to take Arms against Us their lawful Sovereign, because We will not give them leave to abolish some things which stand fully established by Our Laws and Acts of Parliament of that Kingdom, and to introduce other things which are interdicted and prohibited by the same: But much more have We reason to think Our Subjects did then no whit believe that (though We should relieve all their grievances, just or pretended, as now We have done) they should yet be forced to Acts of Rebellion, and carrying of Arms against Us, as now they are. But such hath ever been the constant course of the Heads of all Rebellions, to engage their Followers by degrees, to conceal from them their main and wicked ends, which being at the first discovered, would be abhorred and detested, until they have gone on so far in following their Leaders, as afterward they are easily perswaded by them, that there is no hope of pardon left, and so nothing but danger, if they shall offer to retreat: The very same course hath been held in this Rebellion for seducing of our Subjects of that Kingdom. The specious pretence used by the contrivers of the Covenant to the People was Religion, but that which was intended by them was a Rebellion, grounded upon the Discontents of some few: And the very means whereby they have fomented their Factious ways, and kept up in Our People a belief that they intended only Religion as they pretended, have been the very same which have been usually practised by other discontented Mutineers. But yet We find, that the principal means used to foment this Rebellion by the Heads of it, have been these three.

First, The Seditious Prayers and Sermons of some Preachers suborned by them for that purpose, who made the people still believe, that all they said was Gospel, and they crying up in their Pulpits that Covenant, and most bitterly exclaiming against all Opposers of it with the most vile and reproachful terms they could devise, wrought the people to an incredible good opinion of all that favoured the Covenant, and a bad one of all those who opposed it: So that such things were delivered in their Pulpits, as cannot be related without both shame and horror. One of them upon Our Commissioners coming home, prayed God to deliver them from all crafty compositions. Another refused to pray in the Church for Sir William Nesbitt, late Provost of Edinburgh; when he was lying upon his Death-bed, only because he had not subscribed the Covenant. Another prayed God to scatter them all in Israel; and to divide them in Jacob, who had counselled Us to require the Confession of Faith to be subscribed by Our Authority. Many Ministers would not admit to the Communion those who had not subscribed their Covenant, but in their exhortation before it, barred them in express terms with Adulterers, Slanderers, and Blasphe-mers, &c. Others would not suffer Children to be baptized in the Churches of those Ministers who were not of the Covenant, though they were

Car. 14.

were their own Parish Churches, but carried them sometimes many Miles to be baptized by Covenanting Ministers. One preached, That all the Non-subscribers of the Covenant were Atheists; and so concluded, That all the Lords of Our Council, and all the Lords of Our Session were such: For none of them had subscribed it. Another preached, That as the wrath of God never was diverted from his people, until the seven Sons of Saul were hanged up before the Lord in Gibeon; so the wrath of God would never depart from that Kingdom, till the twice seven Prelates (which makes up the number of the Bishops in that Kingdom) were hanged up before the Lord there; which is extream, foul and barbarous. Another preached, That though there were never so many Acts of Parliament against the Covenant, yet it ought to be maintained against them all. Another delivered these words in his Sermon: Let us never give over till we have the King in our power, and then He shall see how good Subjects we are. Another in his Sermon delivered this, That the bloodiest and sharpest War was rather to be endured then the least Error in Doctrine or Discipline. Another in his Sermon wished, That he and all the Bishops in that Kingdom were in a bottomless Boat at Sea together; for he could be well content to lose his life, so they might lose theirs. Thousands more such beastly, barbarous, and profane speeches were delivered by them, not only in their Pulpits, but in their Sermons: For the Reader must know, that in these times of Tumult, where the Churches were not able to contain the great Multitudes, they did usually preach in common and profane places, in rooms which are yet in building and not finished (intended for Lawyers to plead in,) in the Halls of the Taylors, and other Mechanical Tradesmen of Edinburgh, in some private Houses, in the Hall of the Colledge of Edinburgh, where one Sunday, Kollock being to preach, but finding the Crowds of people to be too great for that place, mounted upon the top of a pair of Stairs which went up to an upper ground, in an open place which was only covered by the Heavens, and from thence preached to a great Troop or Multitude, whose breath is the only Air he desireth to live in, being shot quite through the head with popularity. Others preached in the Free-School at Edinburgh, where Boys use to play and be punished. If these speeches, and many as bad or worse then these, and delivered in such places, be fit to persuade the people that their Covenant comes from God, the Reader may easily discern.

The second means which they used for blinding the eyes of the people, were, their many false Reports, which both in their Pulpits, and out of their Pulpits, they vented amongst the people, which their Leaders knew in their own Consciences to be most false. They gave it out, that We intended to bring in Popery in all Our Kingdoms, or at least a toleration of it. It was preached that the Service Book was framed at Rome, and brought over by a Country-man of theirs; when they do know that every Papist by the Popes Bull is prohibited to hear the Service-Book read. Others preached that all England was of their Opinion and Judgment, and that they had good intelligence from hence, that no man would adhere to Us against them. Another preached that no man would have protested against the General Assembly but for money, and that none had protested but they who had received some, when they did know that many had protested who had received none. It is true indeed, that some poor Ministers being thrust out of their Benefices by them for adhering to Us, were Petitioners to Our Commissioner for relieving the necessities of them and their Families; some of those who were most necessitated, he did a little relieve; but some of that number were none of the Protesters, and many who were Protesters were none of that number. It was preached ordinarily in their Pulpits, that neither We, nor Our Commissioner in Our name, did ever intend to hold the General Assembly, or if We did hold it, did never intend to perform any thing which We had promised in Our gracious Declaration; though they now know that We have performed both. Within these few days, some desired the people publickly in their Pulpits to give thanks to God for that overthrow which the Hollanders had given to the Spanish Fleet before Dunkirk; assuring their Auditors that it was no less to be celebrated by them, then their deliverance from the Spanish Invasion in 88. because all that Fleet was prepared at Our charge, for their ruin and subversion: Besides many thousands more such reports and counterfeited Letters scattered by them, of which some no doubt were devised by themselves, whereby they kept Our people in that ignorance in which at the very first they had resolved to involve them. Now what a fearful and terrible thing is it for men in the House of God, and in those places of these Houses of God which they call the Chairs of Truth, to deliver such things as either they do not know to be true, or do know to be false? Besides these discourses of the Ministers, the Lay-Elders, since they came to think themselves Ecclesiastical persons (for so now they do, and will not be called Lay, but Ruling-Elders) they have found new inspirations, and delivered Doctrines as like their Divines as may be: One of them We cannot choose but rehearse. An ancient Knight and a Lay-Elder intruded himself and his Fellows upon a Presbytery for choosing the Ministers Commissioners for the Assembly; and the Ministers of that Presbytery not being able to keep them out, though they earnestly desired it, fell to intreat these Lay-Elders, that if they would needs intrude themselves in their Election, they would have a special care to choose the ablest Ministers, and who were most inclined to moderation and peaceable courses, because the Church at this time stood in great need of such Commissioners: The old Knight in great zeal replied, That whosoever at this time gave his voice to a moderate or peaceable minded Minister, he was a betrayer of Christ and his Cause; because these times required no luke-warm Commissioners. Which barbarous and unchristian speech of his being related by way of complaint to the Tables at Edinburgh, was so far from being censured, as it was approved for a high and heroicall Ejaculation.

The third means whereby they have perverted Our people, and continued them in their disobedience to Us and Our Laws, have been their strange and damnable positions, whereby they have impoysoned Our Subjects; some whereof We shall now declare unto you.

First, What subjects do of their own heads is much better than what they do in obedience to Authority; the one favouring of constraint, but the other being voluntary and cheerful obedience.

Car. 14.

Anno
1638. dience. This proposition is delivered in their Protestation, bearing date the 22. of September, 1638. made against Our gracious Declaration; it is in their fifth reason against the subscription to the Confession of Faith urged by Us.

A second, The Parliaments power doth no more reach to the placing of Officers originally in the Church, then the Church hath power to make States-men in the Commonwealth. This Position is in their Answer to Our Commissioners Declaration, concerning Our sense and meaning, in commanding the Confession of Faith to be subscribed: Where they have added the word Originally only to puzzle the Reader. For certainly their meaning must be, That the Parliament hath no power for confirming of Officers placed in the Church by the Church it self; for no Act of Parliament in that Kingdom doth make any Officers in the Church originally, but only ratifieth and confirmeth such as were established by the Church in her General Assemblies.

A third Position is this: The Parliament can make no Law at all concerning the Church, but only ratifie what the Church decreeth: And after it hath ratified it, yet if the Assembly of the Church shall prohibit it, and repeal that decree of the Church, all the Subjects are discharged from yielding obedience to the Act of Parliament, which either made any such Law, or ratified any such decree of the Church. This Position they deliver in their Answer to the five Reasons in the said Declaration; and would be well weighed.

A fourth Position is this: The Assembly hath power to discharge all subscription to the Confession of Faith commanded to be subscribed by Us, and as it is interpreted by Us or Our Commissioner; so leaving Us no power at all in Ecclesiastical causes, which all Reformed Churches give their Princes, according to God's Law. This Position is in the same place in their conclusion of their Answers to the five Reasons.

A fifth Position is this: The Assembly without Us is the Church, and the only Judge competent fit to interpret and explain all doubts arising upon the Confession of Faith commanded by Us; which they put in practice, by explicating Our Confession of Faith against Our own meaning, and after We had dissolved the Assembly. This Position is set down in the beginning of their conclusion, after their Answers to the five Reasons.

A sixth Position is this: Though the Law be interpreted, yet if it be interpreted in a sense disliked by most of the Kingdom, the Body of the Kingdom, for whose good the Law was made, may crave the lawful redress of the Grievances sustained by that Law. This Position is in the fifth of their ten Articles propounded before the induction of the Assembly. A strange Position, that they shall crave redress of a Law, and before a Parliament which only can redress it; and though they call it a craving to redress it, yet they mean an actual redressing of it: For they (before a Parliament was at this time indicted) have actually done many things against Acts of Parliament, and stand upon their justification that they may lawfully do so.

The seventh Position is this: The Assembly is dependant, either from King or Parliament in matters Ecclesiastical. This Position is in their Protestation against Our Proclamation of the 18th of December 1638. in their third Reason against Our gracious offers delivered into the Assembly by Our Commissioner; and is a Position delivered not only in the sense, but in the very words of the Jesuits. The other Positions following, generally dispersed throughout their Protestations and Pamphlets, are so obvious to any one who hath read them, as the particular citation of them may be forborn; such as are these following.

An eighth Position is: That in all matters determined in an Assembly, We are to receive them as the Son of the Church, and have no further interest in them, though they be not matters of Faith but matters of Government, and those concluded by them against Acts of Parliament established by Us and Our three Estates; nay, though they concern Secular business, as making of Salt, and fishing for Salmons on Sundays, changing of Markets from one day in the week to another, and such like: For in their late pretended Assembly they have determined of many such things, as doth appear by the Index of their Acts. They will not find many Papists who have said so much for the Church of Rome, nor any Jesuits which have said more.

A ninth Position is this: It is lawful for Subjects to make a Covenant and Combination without the King, and to enter into a Band of mutual defence against the King and all persons whatsoever, though by two Acts of Parliament before cited, all such persons as shall be found either contrivers of, or adherers to any such League, are punishable with death.

A tenth Position is this: That it is lawful for themselves sitting in an Assembly, to indict a new Assembly without Our consent, as they have now indicted a new Assembly to be held in July next; or out of the Assembly when they please, as they professed that now they would have done, if We had not indicted one, though this be directly and expressly against two Acts of Parliament before cited.

An eleventh Position is this: If Subjects be called before Us and Our Council for any misdemeanour, if they who are called do any way conceive that the matter for which they are called, doth concern the glory of God, or the good of the Church (and a wonder it is if any cause can be found which doth not concern one of these two) then they may appeal from Us and Our Council to the next General Assembly and Parliament; and in the meantime, before these Appeals be either heard or discussed, they may disobey Us and Our Council, although by an Act of Parliament before cited, it is expressly made Treason: And the Ministers who appealed from Our Royal Father and his Council, were upon that Act arraigned and found guilty of Treason.

The twelfth Position is this: That when we are intreated to indict a General Assembly, it is not that there is any need of Our induction, but rather to do Us honour, and to beget some countenance to their proceedings; alledging that the power of induction is in Us but cumulative, not prevalative, which if We shall refuse, then that power is suppletive in the collective Body of the People, as it is always (say they) in all other cases, if the Prince shall either neglect or refuse to do his duty: Nor are they ashamed to aver, that all Sovereign Authority was originally in the collective Body of the People, by them conferred with their own consent upon the Prince; and therefore if the Prince shall omit to do his du-

Car. 14.

ry, he either falls from his right, or his right is interrupted, until he return to his duty: But that in the mean time the Sovereign Right and Authority doth return to, and remain with the People, from whom it was at the first derived upon the Prince: A pretty matter it were if Princes Crowns and Sovereignities should depend upon such notional and pedantical distinctions, and wonder it is that these men who profess themselves to be the greatest enemies to Popery in all the World, should borrow the very words and terms of this ridiculous distinction from the Jesuits; which distinction, if it had ever been used in those primitive and purest Councils of the Church; all of which were only called by the Emperours, and in which all matters were ordered and disposed by their Presidents and Deputies, it would have made those Emperours out of love with the Councils and Assemblies of the Church: But they were never robbed of that special Prerogative of their Crown until the Bishops of Rome by their tyranny and usurpation, and by animating and arming their own Subjects against them, dispossessed them of it: And now We and Our Successors being repossessed of it again by the Laws of that Our Kingdom, and the usurpation of the Pope, in that very particular, being by many of Our Acts of Parliament excluded, wonder it is to see these men take upon themselves that usurped and cashiered Papal Authority.

The thirteenth Position is this: If We or Our Commissioner sitting in Assembly shall deny Our voice to any thing, which to Us appeareth to be unjust and repugnant to Our Laws, yet if that shall be concluded by most voices of the Assembly, that then We are bound jure divino, to see all these conclusions made in despite of Us, obeyed by all Our Subjects, and by Our Authority to enforce obedience to these Acts; and if Our Counsellors or Judges shall refuse to do the like, then they shall be liable to the Sentence of Excommunication, and so be deprived not only of their places, but of their estates: A Position to which We suppose they will never gain the consent of Princes, or Magistrates put in Authority under them.

A fourteenth Position is this: An Assembly may abrogate Acts of Parliament, and discharge Our Subjects from obedience to them, if they any way reflect upon business of the Church; which we wonder that the Nobility, Gentry, and Burrows can endure: For as it doth derogate principally from Our Authority, so doth it proportionably from theirs when they are assembled in Parliament: And indeed it is to be wondered at, how any man that is acquainted with government can indure it; for it destroyeth not only the nature, but the very name of the High Court of Parliament: For how can that be called the Highest Court of the Kingdom, if a General Assembly may rescind the Acts of it? And that power which may repeal one Act of it may repeal more, nay all Acts of it, when it shall be pleased to exercise that power, and say it is in order to the glory of God and the good of his Church.

A fifteenth Position is this: The Protestation of Subjects against Laws established, whether it be made coram Judice, or non Judice, before the Judges of the people, or the people themselves who are born to be judged, doth void all obedience to these Laws, and dischargeth all the protesters from any obligation to live under them, before ever these Protestations and the validity of them shall come to be discussed before the competent Judges of them; nay, although they be repelled by the Judges before whom they are made: All which (since these troubles begun in that Kingdom) have been usually practised by the Covenanters, who having sometimes made Protestations against Our Laws before Our Council, sometimes before Our Commissioner, sometimes before the Lords of Our Session who repelled them all, then they made them before the people their own associates in the publick Market-places, and by that means held these Protestations sufficiently admitted, and themselves discharged from obedience to all these Laws against which they protested, alledging (perhaps) that they were unjustly and unduly enacted: which course, if it may be allowed in any Commonwealth, and that Protestations before they be discussed, may discharge Subjects from obedience to Laws, what Subject will yield obedience to any Law, by which he findeth himself pressed or inconvenienced, when the remedy of a Protestation, whether admitted or not admitted, is so ready at hand?

A sixteenth and last Position is this; which indeed is the worst of all: For it is both the Mother and Nurse of all the rest, and is such a shameful one, that they have not printed it in terminis; but it followeth by an unavoidable consequence upon many of their printed Positions, as all of them do follow upon, and flow from it: And the practice of it is so current with them, as it appeareth almost in every one of their particular actions; and it is thus: A number of men, being the greater part of the Kingdom, because they are the greater, (and in that sense (say they) the more considerable part) may do anything which they themselves do conceive to be conducive to the glory of God and the good of the Church, notwithstanding any Laws standing in force to the contrary; and that this great part, especially met in a representative Assembly, may, without the Authority of Us, against the express commandment of Us and Our Council, and Our Judges declaration of it to be against the Laws of Our Kingdom, choose some few Noblemen, Gentlemen, Ministers and Burgeses, who, under the name of Committees or Commissioners from the General Assembly, to be chosen from Assembly to Assembly, shall sit and determine of things concerning the Church and State, as if there were neither King, Council, nor Judge in the Land. They complain of a High Commission erected by Us and Our Authority, but whether this be not a higher Commission than that, We leave it to every impartial Judgment.

They answer for themselves only this, That they do it as being put in Authority by the General Assembly, which is (say they) a Court independent from Us, and therefore may erect what Court it will without Us, and may appoint what Commissioners it will to sit for that Court, so they meddle with nothing but Ecclesiastical business: But let the Reader consider how many wicked and insufferable absurdities this their Answer carrieth along with it.

First, By what Authority did they do the same things which they now do, before the Assembly was indicted? They could not be then Commissioners from the General Assembly.

Secondly, Who gave the General Assembly power to erect any such Table of Commissioners? They found themselves aggrieved with the high Commission established by Us, upon this ground, that 1638. that there was no such Court established either by Acts of General Assembly or Parliament: And now we desire them to shew any Act of Parliament giving the Assembly power to erect any such Table of Commissioners.

Thirdly, In the erection of this Table, they out-do any thing which yet hath been either said or done by the Jesuits in defence of the Churches Authority, and the Authority of her visible Head over Kings and Princes: For they did never yet affirm, that the Ecclesiastical Authority could be exercised but by Ecclesiastical persons: But these men do hold, that Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Burgeses may execute this Authority: But they say, they do not exercise it, as any such Lay-men, but as Ruling-elders, and so in the capacity of Ecclesiastical persons; but can there any Child be found who will not laugh at this, if ever he have heard but the common names, of Church-men and Lay-men? Can these two be confounded? Can the calling of a man by the name of an Elder make him an Ecclesiastical person, if by his place and calling he is never to discharge any office of a Church-man? They have declared it to be unlawful for Bishops to have voices in Parliament, Council, or any secular Judicatory, because these places are incompatible with the places of Ecclesiastical persons: And shall not Lay-persons be as incapable at least to meddle with Divine and Ecclesiastical businesses? Or if they shall, then let these Ecclesiastical Elders renounce their places in Parliament and other secular Courts of Justice, and become Ruling-elders only.

Fourthly, They alledge that they meddle only in Ecclesiastical causes; Although it be unlawful for them to do that, yet it were the more tolerable, if they did as they say: But they do make good what they say, by telling the World what they mean by things Ecclesiastical, and their meaning they do express in the very terms of the Jesuits; for by Ecclesiastical, they mean, as their practice sheweth, any thing which is in ordine ad Ecclesiastica: Nay more, in ordine ad Spiritualia, whatsoever may be thought conducive to the good of the Church, or to any spiritual good, and yet more vastly to the glory of God; by which latitude of the word Ecclesiastical, we would know, what they have left without the compass of their cognisance? Just nothing: For in this sense they may set the price on victuals, they may censure the actions of all men in what kind soever, because St. Paul biddeth us, Whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, do it all to the glory of God. And truly, from this false and Jesuitical interpretation of this word Ecclesiastical, have issued most of all their acts of Sedition and Rebellion: They have provided Arms for our Subjects, they first blocked up all our Forts and Castles, and since have taken them, stopped our Officers from carrying victuals or ammunition into them, they have raised Forts, taxed our Subjects, levied Souldiers against us, not only turned us out of the possession of our Castles, but, so far as in them lies, defeated our title to them, by declaring that they are not our Castles but the Kingdoms; they have incroached upon the undoubted bounds and marks of our Sovereignty, by sending Warrants to our Sheriffs for choosing Commissioners for the Shires for the next Parliament; they have discharged our own Printer for printing any thing which concerneth these Troubles, or may make against them, though commanded by us and by our Council, so that if we have any thing to print there, we must first be a suiter to Johnston their Clerk for his hand to it, else it cannot pass; they have injoyed, or at least suffered, the Preachers of their own side to pray and preach most bitterly against us and our Authority: Those Preachers who continued in their loyalty towards us, they have most unjustly against our Laws deprived of their Benefices, and most unmercifully and unchristianlike exposed them to misery and beggery, they have most contemptuously and rebelliously used our Councillors and Judges: When they are asked, why they do these things, and by what Authority they do them?

To the first they answer only, That they do them for the good of the Church, and the glory of God, that Religion may be preserved, the honour of God maintained, and his glory increased: Who would think that there should be men found in the world, who call themselves after the name of Christ, and invoke the name of God, and yet dare profane and abuse the names of Religion, God, and his glory, and to intitle those glorious names to such lewd actions of Treason and Rebellion, as can proceed from none but the Devil?

To the second: By what Authority do they these things, which are expressly against the Acts of Parliament, Acts of Council, and Acts of General Assemblies? They answer, that these Acts of Assembly were unduly obtained, and that now they have rescinded them. For Acts of Parliament and Acts of Council, they express great wonder and admiration, that any man should question their Authority over them: For that Question they use to answer with another of their own, viz. Whether any man doth hold Christ or us to be Supream? And being answered that Christ is Supream, then they conclude, That they being his Council, must likewise be Supream; That the Parliament is but the Council of the Kingdom, That our Privy Councillors and Judges are but the Council and Judges of the King; but that they themselves are the immediate and independent Councillors of, and Judges under Christ, who is the King of all Kings and Kingdoms; and that therefore in all causes which they conceive to concern Christ and his Kingdom, which is his Church, they are Supream and independent, above us, our Parliament, our Council, our Judges: And that if our Councillors or Judges do not obey their commandments, they will proceed to the Sentence of Excommunication against them, and by the same reason (though as yet they have not said it) they may proceed against us with the same Sentence: For we acknowledge Christ to be the Supream King, as much as our Councillors and Judges do acknowledge him to be the Supream Lord and Judge. These furious frensies have not been heard of in the world, since the Anabaptists madnes reigned in Germany in Charles the Fifth his time, which was most strongly and vehemently opposed by the Protestant Princes, who adhered to the Augustan Confession; and if Luther and Melancthon, whom God used as the chief Instruments in reforming the abuses of the Church of Rome, had not shewed themselves in their Sermons; Lectures in the Universities, and publick writings which they published, stout Champions against them, and thereby had drawn all Protestations to detest and persecute them, undoubtedly the Reformation of the Church, falling out to be about the same time when these Anabaptists raged most in their madness, had laboured and suffered extremely under the scandal of their frensies, in the opinion of all those who were attending and looking after the issue of that Reformation: And yet these same fooleries and frensies are daily acted by these who call themselves Commissioners of the Table, and presented to the Readers of their Pamphlets and Protestations, with the Titles of irrefragable, undeniable, convincing, unquestionable, Sun-shine truths, and twenty more such false impudent epithets, as one would wonder from whence they fetch the faces that can bear them out in saying so, when the whole Christian World who shall read them, upon the very first view or reading, must discern that there is not the least step or shadow of truth to be found in them. We confess we were amazed at, and aggrrieved with their horrible impudence, expressed in their last Petition sent unto us, in which they did invoke the name of God, calling him not only as a Witness, but as an approver of their actions; at their pretended assurance of our justification of them all, when they undoubtedly know, that we do abhor and detest them all as rebellious and treasonable; at their shameless asseveration of their confidence that their neighbour Churches will approve all their proceedings, that they are afraid they should be thought to have offended in nothing so much as in lenity, when they have proceeded to the deposition and excommunication of the Bishops and others their opposers, which is the utmost of that power which ever any Church did yet challenge to it self; and many more such audacious untruths, which after we once heard read, we resolved never to answer, and now do answer it only thus, That in the main points of it there is not one true word. To say nothing of the boldness of this Petition, which expecteth our Answers in such terms, as it doth not only seem to require our approbation of their wicked proceedings, but almost to command it. And lastly, it is subscribed only by the hands of the Moderator and Clerk of the Assembly, as if it were an ordinary citation served upon the meanest Subject of that our Kingdom. And besides all these, we would know what Ecclesiastical Assembly, just or pretended, did ever use any coercive power, but that which was Ecclesiastical, viz. suspension, deprivation, degradation, or excommunication. But this pretended Assembly hath, besides all these, enforced her Acts with Arms and all manner of violence both against the persons and fortunes of such as do not agree unto them, but continue loyal unto Us.

BY this time we hope the Reader is well satisfied that we have been from time to time well acquainted with, and rightly informed concerning all the particular passages of these Troubles: For since we produce their own original foul and black Acts, and the Counsels which we took, and courses which we held for meeting with them, and hindering them, so far as then on the sudden We could, every man will now hold their ordinary and so often repeated calumny sufficiently confuted, viz. That all the proceedings and proffers on their parts were quite concealed from us, That their Petitions, Remonstrances, and Grievances were kept from us, That we understood no more of the estate of the affairs of that Kingdom, then the malice of their Adversaries and bad Patriots were pleased to impart unto us; That our Commissioner in his several journeys between us and them never made us acquainted with the true state of the business, or with their requests and protestations; That he at his several returns did do that which he thought fittest to be done, and not what we had commanded him, or, that if we did command him, our commandments were according to the information which he had given unto us of their counsels and confes; which information was never true nor right, but only such as he and the Bishops had contrived for mis-informing of Us: All which most wicked calumnies, invented only to keep our people unsatisfied, as they are attended with want of truth, so they are accompanied with a most undeserved ingratitude. For we do profess, that there was no man since the time of these Troubles, who hath more zealously stood between our wrath and them, then our Commissioner, and who hath more constantly laboured us to admit any probable construction which might be made of their actions, ever until such time as they came to that height, that they could neither probably nor possibly receive any good construction; and yet even then all his persuasions were to pardon and forgiveness, if they should acknowledge their errors, and with a submissive humility return to our obedience. And here we must needs justify all his proceedings with them, as being punctually and exactly ordered and performed according to our instructions and commandments to him, and condemn their ingratitude to him, not doubting but ere long they will heartily wish that they had some such about us, who might sollicit us for their peace and pardon so carefully as he did, so long as he had any hope of their amendment.

The same course which they held with him their own Country-man, they held likewise with some of this Kingdom of great place, especially some of the Prelates near us, and intrusted with the greatest business of this Church and Kingdom: For, during the time of all these Troubles, they have likewise slandered them amongst our Subjects of that Kingdom, both for mis-information of us, and giving us counsel and advice to shun all ways of peace; whereas we must profess that those Prelates, whom (in their last seditious and treasonable information to the good Christians of England) they have traduced for their greatest enemies, and chiefly some of them whom they especially glance at with our Commissioner, have been their greatest friends; their counsels were always counsels of peace, and their solicitations to us were vehement and earnest for granting unto them those unexpected and undeserved favours, which we were graciously pleased to bestow upon our people, published in our Proclamation at Edinburgh the 22. of September 1638. and afterward made good to them in our name by our Commissioner at the Assembly in Glasgow: These Prelates and our Commissioner advising us rather to descend to these particulars, then to be put to the effusion of any drop of our Subjects blood.

But the misery and misfortune of many of our well meaning Subjects in that Kingdom, hath in all this business been this, that they trusted the mis-informations of their Leaders, even in those things of which their Leaders themselves

‘ selves did not believe so much as one word: Such were their false reports of Our inclination to Popery, of Our intentions never to hold an Assembly, although We had indicted it, of Our intention of never performing any thing in that Assembly which We had promised in Our gracious Proclamation of the indictment of it: All which false reports We have since sufficiently confuted by Our commanding the renovation of the subscription of that Confession of Faith which cannot subsist with Popery, by Our indicting a free General Assembly (the freedom whereof they quite destroyed by their proceedings both before it and in it) by Our making good in that Assembly (such as it was) all Our gracious promises; and therefore We cannot now but hope and expect, that all Our good and loyal Subjects of that our ancient and native Kingdom, will, by their former experience of the falshood of their Seducers and Leaders, learn to give no trust or credit to their posterious and new mis-informations, which by their last seditious Pamphlets, printed or written, and by many intercepted Letters We find to be these three especially, but all of them most notoriously false.

‘ First, They go about to perswade Our good Subjects, that We intend an invasion of that Our Kingdom: But they must have a great power over the faith of such as they can make believe that a King would invade his own Kingdom: Invasions made by Princes of other Princes Dominions have been usual; but for a Prince to invade his own Kingdom is a prodigious untruth. But they tell Our people that We are coming thither attended with English troops: We wonder if they should be afraid of them whom Our people in their Pulpits, and elsewhere, have been made believe were all of their own party, and would take Arms with them in their defence against Us. But the truth is, these English Troops go along to secure this Our Kingdom of England from invasion by them, which they have so frequently threatned; and if for the securing of Our person they should offer themselves to be Our guard wheresoever We go, what do they else but shew themselves to be true and loyal Subjects, and lay an obligation on Us to continue in our breast that full assurance of their loyalty and fidelity towards Us, of which We have always by unanswerable demonstrations been fully perswaded; as also upbraid the disloyalty of many of Our Subjects of that our native Kingdom, amongst whom they are loth to trust Us without offering their persons to be our Guard?

‘ But these two things we do desire all our good Subjects of that Kingdom firmly to believe: First, We are confident that we shall not much stand in need of English Troops to chastise the Heads of this late Rebellion, as being fully perswaded that our loyal Subjects, who have all this while adhered unto us; and our misled Subjects, who upon this our Declaration will adhere unto us, but above all the Justice of the Cause of God and of Us his Anointed, shall be strength enough to bring those principal Rebels to undergo the trial of our Laws. Next, We desire all our good Subjects there, to believe that we are so far from intending any Invasion of that our native Kingdom, as that according to our Duty and Oath taken at our Coronation, we shall by the grace of God always be ready with our whole power, estate, and expence of our blood (if the case shall so require) to defend that our Kingdom and Subjects thereof against all invasions whatsoever. For we do at this time only intend to reduce the principal Heads of these Tumults to the obedience of Us and our Laws, and in case of their Rebellious obstinacy, to bring them to those deserved punishments, which in such cases the Laws of that our Kingdom have provided: Nor can this either be called or accounted an Invasion, more then the Judges sentencing Malefactors to punishment, can be called an invasion of them.

‘ The second mis-information whereby we find the Heads of this Rebellion go about to keep our people from returning to our obedience, is this: They make them believe, that since they have not accepted of our gracious offers, made in our Declaration at Edinburgh the 22. of September last, and made good by our Commissioner in our name at the Assembly in Glasgow, that now we will certainly perform none of them: But these wicked mis-reporters speak both according to their own defects (as knowing that their rebellious misdemeanours have indeed deserved no such favour at our hands) and likewise, according to their own desires (as fearing that if we should make them good, then our people might and must receive satisfaction thereby) but they do not speak according to our Royal intentions, which are to assure our Subjects, that (as we have before expressed in our Preface) their faults and disloyal courses shall not make us go back from any thing which we have promised in either of those two our gracious Declarations made at Edinburgh and Glasgow, but that we will perform them all for the securing of all our good Subjects from any further fears of these pretended innovations.

‘ The third mis-information whereby the Heads of this Rebellion go about to continue our people in disobedience to us, is this: They would make them believe, that if they shall now yield, we do intend to make that our native Kingdom a Province, and to dispoile them of all their Laws and Liberties, and to give them new Laws, as if they were a conquered Kingdom: A most devillish and false suggestion; for we profess we never harboured any such thought in our Royal breast, but do intend by the grace of God to continue that our native Kingdom in the government of our Laws, and confirm unto them all their liberties, and when it shall please God to translate us, to leave the same in charge to our Successor.

‘ These foul, but false aspersions, being thus wiped off, we are now desirous to remove their grand and main calumny, whereby they do at once endeavour both to disparage our just, and to justify their own most unjust proceedings. They give out that we have no quarrel against them but Religion; and when they are asked in what points of Religion we will not yield to them, they do not name any one of which they have complained in their Petitions, and which in them they called innovations in Religion (for they know, that in our gracious Declarations we have given full satisfaction concerning them) but they instance in other two particulars: First our not admitting the introducing of Lay-elders into their Presbyteries, and that in equal number with the Ministers, and that these Lay-elders shall have voices, and always the casting voice in the election of the Ministers Commissioners from the Presbyteries to the General Assembly.

Dd d d d 2 The

1638.

'The second, That we will not give way to the abolishing of Episcopal Government. For the former, We profess that we cannot give way to it, it being a course unheard of, not only in that Church of Scotland, but in any Church in any age: For how can We yield, that Noblemen, Gentlemen, Commoners shall be made Ecclesiastical persons, which must needs bring in a confusion of these two Ecclesiastical and Secular persons, which have always been distinguished? Next, how can We betray the Ministers of that Kingdom unto perpetual slavery? For if Episcopal Government should be gone (which they intend) and the Ministers in their Presbyteries shall be over-swayed by the voices of the Lay-elders, what face of Ecclesiastical Government can remain, when it shall be quite pulled out of the hands of Ecclesiastical persons? And therefore We cannot choose but account it a great ingratitude in those Ministers who oppose Us, for whose maintenance as We first stood against the Laity, so We are now resolved to stand against them for their Liberty. For the second, which is the abolishing of Episcopal Government, We profess we cannot yield unto it (though it were not warranted by Apostolical institution at the first, and since by the perpetual practice of the Church of Christ in all ages and places, as We hold it is warranted by both.)

'First, Because it is established in that Kingdom, and hath ever been by Acts of Parliament, and is so now, and hath been for many years by Acts of the General Assembly.

'Secondly, Because of the course which they have taken to abolish it, to wit, by an Assembly, holding that an Assembly may abolish Acts of Parliament; a Proposition which must not be endured in any Monarchy: For then the Convocation in England, or General Assembly in Scotland, might introduce in either of these Kingdoms, Popery, and the Popes authority if they had a mind to do so, notwithstanding the Acts of Parliament in both Kingdoms which have ejected them, and which Acts of Parliament were posterior to the Acts of these Ecclesiastical Assemblies, and were confirmations of what was passed before in them.

'Thirdly, We cannot destroy Episcopal Government without destroying one of the three Estates of Parliament, which We will not do: But these men in an Ecclesiastical Assembly, without Our consent, or consent of Parliament, have gone about to destroy the first of the three Estates of Parliament.

'But say that none of these things were so, yet We would be satisfied in this point, Whether Our refusing of the intrusion of Lay-elders, and the extrusion of Episcopal Government, can be to the Conscience of any man a sufficient warrant or ground for his taking Arms against his lawful King and Sovereign? For now their very Leaders, acknowledging that We have given them satisfaction in the rest, make these two the only ground of all their Arms. And We appeal to the Consciences of most of Our Subjects Covenanters, if, when they entered into that Covenant at the first they did ever imagine that they should be persuaded to take Arms against Us, for these two points of Lay-elders and Episcopal Government, if they should receive satisfaction from Us in their other Grievances, and feared innovations, as We have before declared. We are confident that no such matter was then within the compass of their thoughts: We then having fully removed those

'pretended fears which occasioned their Covenant, We cannot but hope that Our seduced Subjects will return to their former obedience; but for their seducers, We know that some of them, from the very first, were resolved never to receive any satisfaction.

'This grand imposture and calumny, with the other three, being removed, We will now declare fully and freely to all Our Subjects of our three Kingdoms, and to all Forreigners besides, the true and only causes which do enforce Us at this time to use force for the repressing of the insolencies of such of Our Subjects in that Kingdom as shall stand out against Us; first protesting that none of the causes before mentioned, suggested by their Leaders, have settled in Us this resolution, but only these causes which now follow.

'First, We will never endure that any of Our Subjects, say that all Our Subjects (if they could possibly be all of one mind) out of Parliament shall ever abolish or destroy any Act of Parliament, especially not Noblemen and others assembled in an Ecclesiastical Assembly: For to hold that any Assembly of Subjects out of Parliament, or in Parliament without Our consent, may abolish any Act of Parliament, destroyeth the very foundation of Government and Justice in all Monarchies; and the doing of it by Ecclesiastical persons in their Councils and Synods, hath been the cause of infinite Calamities and miserable Wars and devastation of Kingdoms in the Christian World, since the Pope and his Conclave did usurp that unlawful and unlimited power; which, being in that Our Kingdom in all these late Troubles practised against the express Laws of the same, We are resolved to punish, unless the Offenders betake themselves to Our mercy.

'Secondly, We are resolved not to endure that any of Our Subjects, without our consent, and the consent of the Parliament, shall destroy any of the three Estates of Parliament; which they in their late pretended Assembly have gone about to do.

'Thirdly, We are resolved not to endure that any General Assembly shall be called but by Our indiction, according to an express Act of Parliament in that case provided; or that it shall continue after that We by our Authority have dissolved it; and are resolved to punish them who shall do so, as Our Royal Father punished those who did the like at Aberdene.

'Fourthly, We are resolved to punish those who have imposed Taxes upon Our Subjects, levied Men or Arms, raised any Fortifications in that Our Kingdom without our leave, and first blocked up, and then taken Our Castles and Forts, and by violence dispossessed our Loyal Subjects of their Houses and Castles, detaining them by force; for all these, by the express Laws of that our Kingdom, are acts of Treason and Rebellion.

'Fifthly, We are resolved not to endure that the Protestations of Subjects against Us, Our Council, Our Judges and Laws, shall discharge the obedience of the Protesters unto these Laws, unless they be admitted before the competent Judges, and legally discussed before them; the contrary whereof hath been practised by the Covenanters all the time of these Tumults.

Sixthly,

Anno. 1638. Sixthly, We are resolved not to endure that Our Subjects shall enter into any Covenant or Band of mutual defence, Without Our leave asked and obtained, it being expressly forbidden by divers Acts of Parliament of that Our Kingdom; for this hath been, and still is, the ground of all this Rebellion.

Seventhly, And principally, We are resolved not to endure that any of Our Subjects, under the name of a Table, or Committees of the General Assembly, or under any other name, title or pretence whatsoever, shall sit without Our consent and Authority, and order business of the Church and Kingdom at their Pleasure; and if they shall be called in question for the same by Us, Our Council, or Judges, shall appeal from Us and them, and refuse to be judged by either, alledging that they will be judged by none but by the general Assembly, which is Christ's own immediate Council, and therefore hath no dependency from, or subordination either to Our Council or Judges, or Our Parliament, which is the Council of Our Kingdom, and so that both Church-men and Lay-men under Ecclesiastical names shall exempt themselves from the Authority of Us and Our Laws, and the Assembly it self shall hold the Members of it free from being judged in all matters of Assembly by any but by it self; which by the Laws of that Our Kingdom is Treason, as appeareth by the Act cited in the body of this Narration: Now all this hath been practised, and is practised by those which call themselves of the Table.

From all which We hope it is evident, that the offences, which We resolve to punish in some of Our Subjects, do not concern Religion: So that the question is not, Whether there shall be a Service-Book, Book of Canons, High Commission; nay, nor whether there shall be no Lay-Elders in Assemblies, or no Episcopal Government, (though We are resolved to reject the one, and retain the other:) But the question indeed is neither more nor less than this, Whether We and Our Successors shall be any more Kings of that Kingdom: For if these traitorous Positions shall be maintained and made good by force of Arms, then We and Our Successors can be no more Kings there, Our Parliament, Council, and Judges have no more authority there; So that unless We will give over to be King, and so betray and desert that charge wherewith God hath intrusted Us, We must use that power which God hath put in Our hands, and by fair, just and legal waies, to Our great grief, force them to obedience.

These are the true reasons which have forced Us to undertake this Journey, and to make use of the Arms and aid of Our loyal Subjects here, for the security of this Kingdom, and safeguard of Our person, as likewise of the Arms and aid of Our Subjects of that Kingdom for the same purposes.

And here first, We call God to witness what an unwelcome Journey this is unto Us, and how unwillingly We do undertake it.

Secondly, We do profess and protest, that as We (like God himself, whose Vicegerent We are) have shewn Our Self all this while slow to anger; so now like him We shall shew Our selves ready to forgive, upon the repentance of such of Our Subjects as have been misled, their deserting the Heads of their Rebellion, and returning to Our obedience.

Thirdly, That We intend to use no Arms against that Our Kingdom, but only against some Rebels in it, for their apprehension and bringing them to Justice.

Fourthly, That such even of those who shall be apprehended, shall have their fair and legal Tryals according to the Laws of that Our Kingdom, without the denial of the least favour which can be allowed them by the course of Justice, if they will offer and submit their persons to a legal Tryal.

Fifthly, That all Our Subjects of that Kingdom, who shall now adhere unto Us, shall be protected and defended by Us in their Persons and Fortunes, with the uttermost of Our power: For We profess that We do not hold it a National defection, but a revolt of some Rebels, who have misled a great many of the rest, We having a great many Subjects of all ranks in that Our Kingdom, who for their constancy in their Loyalty and Fidelity towards Us, shall justly expect both protection and reward from Us.

Sixthly, That whosoever shall go about to make any of Our Subjects believe that this is a National quarrel between these two ancient Kingdoms, both now being under Our Government, shall be punished as a disturber of the peace of both: and therefore We exhort and require all Our Subjects of both Kingdoms, who shall accompany Us in this Journey, to live and converse peaceably and lovingly, whereby as they shall do Us most singular and acceptable service, so they shall notably disappoint the Heads of that Rebellion, who now labour no point so much as this, to make Our Subjects of that Kingdom believe, that this Journey of Ours bringeth along with it a National Invasion; and if Our Subjects of both Nations shall keep that Friendly and Loving correspondence in their attendance upon Us in this Journey, We do not doubt but it will be a means to tye them in a stronger band of Love for ever hereafter, when Our Scottish Subjects shall here see the alacrity and forwardness of the English, and the English shall there perceive the alacrity and forwardness of the Scottish, both of them meeting in this point and center, viz. the defence of Our Person, and of Our Royal Crown and Dignity.

To Conclude: As We have found the Aid and Assistance of Our loving Subjects here towards this Journey, so We do heartily desire their Prayers all the time of Our absence for a good success unto it, and that if it be possible We may return with peace, and without the effusion of any drop of Our Subjects blood: And We do require all Our good Subjects of that Our Kingdom of Scotland, especially the Ministers who should be the Messengers of Peace, to frame and settle Our Subjects minds to the courses and waies of Peace, and to lead them on in the way of returning to Our obedience, who doth resolve to maintain them in the Religion now established amongst them, that so We be not forced to draw Our Sword of Justice against any of them, which in case of their obstinacy how unwillingly We shall do, We call the King of Kings to witness: But if nothing else will serve, it must be, and their blood will rest upon their own Heads.

DR. Williams Lord Bishop of Lincoln being in disgrace, and a Prisoner in the Tower of London, having no kindness for the Archbishop of Canterbury, was about this time solicited by his Friend Mr. Osbaldstone, School-master of Westminster to assist the Lord Treasurer Weston as one of his Faction, against the Lord Archbishop, whom he reproachfully called, The Little Urchin, and meddling Hocus Pocus, and the Lord Treasurer was Nick-named the great Leviathan, betwixt whom (said Mr. Osbaldstone in a Letter to the Lord Bishop) I find for certain, and report it sub sigillo, there is a very great distance, insomuch that your Lordship hath been enquired for more than once, if you were come, and when you will? And the great Man was heard to justify the words which you were questioned for, namely, That you had as good a right to the Deanery of Westminster, as the King to his Crown. And he was heard to say, That they were no more than he himself would say. The jealousie grows great and sharp between the Leviathan, and the little meddling Hocus Pocus; and if it increase, there is hopes your Lordship will enjoy the Blessing of the King's Grace. Your Lordship will hear, that the Lord's Grace of Canterbury is come to lodge in Court, so is the Lord Treasurer; Your Lordship, I hope, will pick out my meaning.

And in another Letter.

My dear Lord,

I Cannot be quiet but I must write to your Lordship. The Sport is grown Tragical, any thing would be given for a sound and thorough Charge to push at and confound the little Urchin. The Spaniards and the Hollanders are both approvedly and firmly joined to effect the same, if your Lordship lend your Assistance, which I am bound to implore and require. Let them in the mean time scratch one another to the Bones. I use freedom of heart, it is something of revenge that a brave Soul (as your Lordship is) hath some hopes of support in the midst of a Flood of Destruction.

Westminster-School,
Jan. 30. 1633.

These Letters being received by the Bishop of Lincoln, who had wrote privately to his Friend to enquire of that difference, and whether any advantage might accrew to him thereby, It was desired that I should contribute my endeavours to be useful to the Lord Treasurer against the little great Man, and assured me that they were mortal Enemies. But for my part I refuse to meddle with any such thing; yet I pray you learn whether it be so or no, lest some have gullied Mr. Osbaldstone in his three last Letters. If the Lord Treasurer would be served by me, he must free me from the Bonds of the Star-Chamber, otherwise let them fight it out for me.

Mr. Osbaldstone denied he meant by the Little Hocus Pocus his Grace of Canterbury, or by the Great Leviathan the Lord Treasurer Weston, and affixed these appellations on one Spicer, a mean and obscure person; and that by the Great Leviathan, he meant the Lord Chief Justice Richardson, betwixt whom and the said Spicer there had been Jarrings, &c. but these things were only evasive. The Bishop denied the receipt of any such Letters from Osbaldstone, and said that he was the fittest Interpreter of them, if any such were sent; but the receipt of the Letters were proved by the Bishops Servants, &c. And hereupon their Sentence was, That Osbaldstone should be amerced 5000 l. to the King's Majesty, and pay to the Archbishop 5000 l. damages, be deprived of all Spiritual Dignities and Promotions; imprisoned during the King's Pleasure, and make Submission.

That the Bishop of Lincoln be fined in Five thousand pounds to the King, and Three thousand pounds to the Archbishop; to be imprisoned during the King's Pleasure, and to make Submission.

And Osbaldstone was Sentenced to stand in the Pillory in the Deans-Yard, before his own School, and his Ears to be only nailed to the Pillory.

And in regard something was found in his Study reflecting upon the Archbishop, Mr. Rushworth, who is ever a faithful Collector of such stuff, he faith (take the Relation from himself;) That it so happened, though the report was that Osbaldstone was run away, that he was in Court standing in the Croud at the Censure; and when he heard the said Censure of some of the Lords, he guessed the Cause would go against him, and knowing the Rule of the Court, That if the Warden should espy him in Court, he might command his Tipstaff to apprehend him; as soon as the major part of the Court had past Censure upon him, although the Lord Keeper had not then given his sense; therefore he got out of Court, went to his Study at the School, burnt some Papers, and writ on a Paper, which he left on his Desk, That if the Archbishop inquire after me, tell him, I am gone beyond Canterbury. Whereupon Messengers were sent to the Port-Towns to apprehend him; but he lay hid in a private House in Drury-Lane, till the Parliament met in November 1640.

The Scotch Rebellion grew more worse and worse, his Majesty puts forth his Proclamation Royal for the Nobility to attend his Person and Standard at York as followeth:

Carolus Rex.

Right trusty and wel-beloved Cousins and Councillors, We greet you well.

The late Disorders in Our Realm of Scotland, begun upon pretence of Religion, but have been raised by factious Spirits, and fomented by some few ill treacherous affected Persons, whose aim hath been, by troubling the Peace of that Our Kingdom, to work their own particular Ends, and indeed to shake off all Monarchical Government; although We often assure them, that We resolve to maintain constantly their Religion established by the Laws of that Kingdom; is now grown to so high and dangerous Consequence, that under their sinister Pretences, they have so far seduced many of Our People there, that great and considerable Forces are raised and assembled in such sort, as We have reason to take into Our consideration, the Defence and Safety of this Our Kingdom of England: And therefore upon due and mature consultation with the Lords Lords of Our Privy-Council, We have resolved to repair, in Our Royal Person, to the Northern Parts of this Our Kingdom, there by the help of Almighty God, and the assistance of Our loving Subjects, to make Resistance against any Invasion that may happen. And to the end that this with expedition may be effected as We desire, to the Glory of God, and the Safety of Us and this Our Kingdom of England, We have directed, that a considerable Army, both of Horse and Foot, shall forthwith be levied out of all the Shires of this Our Kingdom, to attend Us in this Action; wherein We nothing doubt, but that the Affection, Courage, and Fidelity of Our People will appear. We in the mean time have thought fit to give you notice of this Our Resolution and of the State of these Affairs: And withal hereby do require you to attend Our Royal Person and Standard at Our City of York, the first day of April next ensuing, with such Equipage, and such Forces, as your Birth, Honour, and Interest in the Commonalty both oblige you to, &c. And We do, and have reason to expect from you a performance hereof; and these Our Letters shall be as sufficient and effectual a Warrant and Discharge unto you, to put your self and such as shall attend you, into Arms and Order as aforesaid, as if you were authorized thereunto under Our Great Seal of England. And We do hereby require you to certify under your Hands, within fifteen daies after the receipt hereof, what Assistance We shall expect from you herein, and to direct the same to one of Our Principal Secretaries of State.

Given under Our Signet, at Our Palace of Westminster, the 15 day of February, in the 14 Year of Our Reign.

And during that interval of Parliaments, for that his Majesty could have no Parliamentary Aids for the Supplies of his necessities for the carrying on of the War, the Clergy being called upon by his Majesty for their Contribution for his assistance herein, they did in most places cheerfully answer his Majesties expectations herein; whereat the discontented Party amongst us were clamorous enough according to their accustomed manner; but they were sensible enough of the endeavours and attempts that then were on foot to undo both King and Kingdom. And in like manner the Queens Majesty did endeavour as much as in her lay to sollicite and importune the Romanists to Contribute to the charge of the War likewise, which some Parliament-men of the Parliament in 1640. seemed to be much concerned, as if by all Obligations both Sacred and Civil she had not been obliged to promote so honest, so lawful, and so just a Cause and Design as then his Majesty had undertaken. A Copy of her Majesties Letter here under followeth:

Henrietta Maria R.

WE have so good a belief in the Loyalty and Affection of his Majesties Catholic Subjects, as we doubt not but upon this Occasion, that hath called his Majesty into the Northern Parts, for the Defence of his Honour and Dominions, they will express themselves so affected, as we have alwaies represented them to his Majesty: So in this common consent which hath appeared in the Nobility, Judges, Gentry, and others, to forward his Majesties Service by their Persons and States; we have made no difficulty to answer for the same correspondence in his Catholic Subjects, as Catholics: Notwithstanding they all have already concurred to this his Majesties Service, according to the Qualities whereof they are, when others of the same Quality were called upon: For we believe that it became us, who have been so often interested in the Solicitation of their Benefits, to shew our selves now in the perswasion of their Gratuities. Therefore having already, by his Majesty and by other means, recommended to them this earnest desire of Ours, to assist and serve his Majesty by some considerable sum of Money freely and cheerfully presented: We have thought fit (to the end that this our desire may be the more publick, and the more authorized) hereby to give you Commission and Direction, to distribute Copies under your hand of this Testification thereof, unto those that have met in London by our Direction about this Business, and unto the several Collectors of every County. And as we presume the sum they will raise, will not be unworthy our presenting to the King; so shall we be very sensible of it, as a particular respect to our selves, and will endeavour, in the most efficacious manner as we can, to improve the Merit of it, and to remove any apprehension of Prejudice, that any (who shall employ themselves towards the Success of this Business) may conceive by this, and be assured, That we will secure them from all such objected Inconveniences. And we are very confident, that this our first Recommendation will be so complied withal, as may not only afford us particular satisfaction, but also facilitation towards their own Advantages.

Sir Kenelm Digby, and Mr. Walter Montague wrote to the Popish Recufants in each County to the same effect.

IT is sufficiently already known to every one, the extraordinary Graces and Protections we owe the Queens Majesty, to whose favourable Intercession we must ascribe the happy Moderation we live under; so as we doubt not but an occasion of the expression of our Gratuities will joyfully be embraced by every Body, which the present estate of his Majesties Affairs doth now offer us. We have already, by our former Letters, endeavoured to prepare you to a cheerful Assistance of his Majesty, in his declared Journey to the Northern Parts, for the securing of his Kingdom, and such other purposes as his Royal Wisdom shall resolve of; that so you may really demonstrate your selves as good Subjects as God and Nature requires of you. Now her Majesty hath been graciously pleased to recommend unto us the Expressions of our Duties and Zeal to his Majesties Service, by some considerable Gift from the Catholics. And to remove all Scruples, (that even well-affected Persons may meet with) she undertakes to secure us, and all that shall employ themselves in this Business, from an inconvenience that may be suspected, by their or our forwardness and Declaration in this kind; it will easily appear to every Body how much it imports us, in our sense of his Majesties Desires, to press every Body to strain himself, even

Car. 14.

Anno 1638. even to his best Abilities, in this Proposition, since by it we shall certainly preserve her graciousness to us, and give good Characters of our Devotion to the King and State; of whose benignity we have all reason to give Testimonies, and to endeavour to produce Arguments for the prosecution and increase of it.

Now for the best Expedition of this Business, (which is the chief Circumstance that importeth in it) we have thought fit to recommend it to your nominations of such Persons as shall in your Opinions be agreed, for the ablest and best disposed in every several County, not only to solicit, but to collect such voluntary Contributions, as every Bodys Conscience and Duty shall proffer. And we shall desire you to give us an account of what acceptance it receives from Friends, which we cannot but expect very successful, and answerable to the forwardness we meet with here about London; for which we shall offer up our Prayer to God.

Wal. Montague.

Ke. Digby.

And in regard exceptions had been taken hereat by Mr. Pym and others of that way in the Parliament 1640. her Majesty did then by the Comptroller give the House to understand, 'That her Majesty has been ready to use her best endeavours for the removing of all misunderstanding between the King and Kingdom.

'That at the request of the Lords, who Petitioned the King for a Parliament, her Majesty at that time writ effectually to the King, and sent a Gentleman expressly to perswade the King to the holding of a Parliament.

'That she hath since been most willing to do all good Offices between the King and the People, which is not unknown to divers of the Lords, and so shall ever continue to do, as judging it the only way of happiness to the King, her Self, and Kingdom.

'That all things be justly settled between the King and his People; and all Causes of misunderstanding taken away and removed.

'That her Majesty having taken into consideration, that one being sent to her from the Pope, is distastful to the Kingdom, she is desirous to give satisfaction to the Parliament within convenient time, and will remove him out of the Kingdom.

'That understanding likewise, that exception hath been taken at the great resort to her Chapel at Denmark-House, she will be careful not to exceed that which is convenient and necessary for the exercise of her Religion.

'She further taketh notice, That the Parliament is not satisfied with the manner of raising Money for the Assistance of the King in his Journey to the North, in the Year 1639. at her entreaty from the Catholics; she saies, That she was moved thereunto, meerly out of her dear and tender affection to the King, and the Example of other his Majesties Subjects, she seeing the like forwardness in others for the Assistance of the King.

'If any thing be illegal, she was ignorant of the Law, and was carried therein only out of a great desire to be assisting to the King in so pressing an Occasion; but promiseth to be more cautious hereafter, and not to do any thing but what may stand with the established Laws of the Kingdom.

'Her Majesty being desirous to employ her own Power to unite the King and People, de-

'sireth the Parliament to look forwards, and pass by such Mistakes and Errors of her Servants as they may be guilty of formerly; and this your respect she promiseth, shall be repayed with all good Offices she can do to the House, which you will find with real Effect as often as there shall be occasion.

And in regard it is not to be doubted but that the Popish Party were then acting their part, and had also their Game to play, for that we find one Mortimer then Superiour of Scotland acting upon that Stage, as likewise one Chambers, said to be Chaplain to Cardinal Richlen, and then sent by him to observe the posture of our Affairs, and to blow the Coals amongst us, that great Statesman knowing well it did not only import the good of his Master the French King, but of their Religion also, to keep things in as bad a condition as they could make them, and to exasperate all Parties towards a Rupture, for that the Jesuite, the cunning Angler, ever fisheth best in troubled Waters; nay, some have been so curious and so knowing herein as publickly to avouch that Walo Messelinus the famous Salmassius his Book against Episcopal Government was Printed in the King's Printing-house in Paris, and that thence many thousand Copies thereof were dispersed both into England and Scotland, to inflame the Presbyterian Party, and arm them with Arguments against Episcopal Government; and for that I find Mr. Rushworth expressly avowing the same endeavour of the Papists, who saith, At this time the Church of Rome had Agents in Scotland as well as in England, one of them who subscribes a Letter, probably was Cardinal Richlen's Chaplain, by name Chambers, or Chamberlain, who was then present in Scotland, blowing the Coles of Fire there kindled; which Letter concerned the Affairs of Scotland, and wasto the effect following, dated June 28.

My Reverend Father,

I Have not been at London five daies in all since I came from France, else I had not failed to salute your Reverence, &c. I know not what to say of Mortimer the Superiour of Scotland, as knowing not whether he hath leave to go or not, nor yet their Procurer who resides in this Court. Scotland is in a very ill posture, and in evident danger to sever it self from this Crown.

And in another Letter of the same date, the same Party writes this ensuing Letter.

S I R,

BY all these Proceedings, the King evidently seeth, that they (the Scots) will not submit themselves to Reason, by fairness or sweetness, and therefore he hath taken a Resolution to tame them by Force, and to this purpose goeth about to raise an Army in Ireland, nor daring to trust himself with the English, who already are much irritated against him, by reason of the † Monies which he pretends to raise to maintain his Fleet, the which they refuse down-right to pay. This counsel of raising an Army, has been suggested unto him by the Bishop of Canterbury, and the President of Ireland, which are they alone that Govern him, for he hath never yet opened his Mouth, or spoken one sole word of it to his Council of State, but seeks very much to keep all close from them. The which highly displeaseth all these Lords; and Men hold Anno 1638. hold this Counsel of the Army for Ireland, a most pernicious Counsel: But I know not what better he could take, for it is most dangerous to raise it in England, where all the World is discontent; and for to raise an Army here, it were to give them the Sword in their hands to defend themselves; for the part of the Puritans is so great, and they have such a correspondence with the Scots, that they begin already to break the Altars which the Bishops had erected, and to accuse the Bishops of Crimes, and to demand the re-establishment of many silenced Ministers, with a thousand other Insolences, &c.

Your humble and most obliged Servant.

At the same time there was another Letter of the same date writ to one Monsieur Ford, by some Priest or Romish Recusant, to the effect following: All which said Letters were found amongst the Papers of one of his Majesties Privy-Council.

OUR Scots Business troubles us shrewdly, and grows worse and worse; they will have a Parliament, and the King (for the Consequence of it in this Kingdom) will never permit it, and so they have taken a Resolution to levy an Army in Ireland, so to trouble them and subdue them; which is held there by wise Men to be a very desperate Counsel. But the King consults with none but the Arch-Bishop and the Deputy of Ireland; which disgusts all, and makes Men see more weakness in him than was ever imagined: other News we have none. Fitten (the Agent for the Secular Priests at Rome) is here, and was presented to the King by my Lord Arundel, to whom he had sent from Italy many little Toys, but now he knows he is a Priest. Pray tell my dear Amiable, I thank him heartily for his Note, and have seen his Man Jaques Depuis, who is a good Cutter or Graver in Stone, and continues Catholick, Honest, and known to the Capuchins.

Yours,

Will. Heill.

The Scots all this while were not idle, but made secret Conventions herein, with those of the Presbyterian strain, as plainly appeared in the ensuing Parliament in 1640. when the miseries of the Northern Countries lay under, by reason of the Scots quartering in those Countries, and the danger to England in general thereby were complained of openly in that Parliament, some of the Lower-House saying, there were no dangers or inconveniencies to be feared from that Scotch Army, his Majesty wisely foreseeing and understanding these conserreations of the Scotch and English Presbyterians, caused a Proclamation and Declaration to be emitted to inform his loving Subjects of his Kingdom of England of the seditious practices of some in Scotland, seeming there to over-throw his Royal Power, and here also to raise Sedition and Disturbance under false pretence of Religion.

Reciting, That whereas We have endeavoured now, for a long time together, by all calm and fair waies, to appease the Disorders, and Tumultuous Carriages caused by some evil-affected Persons in Our Realm of Scotland, but hitherto all in vain; We have now thought it not only fit, but necessary in general, to inform all our loving Subjects in this our Realm of England, what the Truth is of our Proceedings, what our lenity and gentleness hath been towards them, and what froward and perverse Returns they have made to us, notwithstanding all their specious Pretences, the better to insinuate themselves and their odious Cause, into the minds of our Loyal Subjects here. These Disorders and Tumults have been thus raised in Scotland, and fomented by Faction Spirits, and those traiterously affected, began upon pretences of Religion, (the common Cloak for all Disobedience) but now it clearly appears, the aim of these Men is not Religion, as they falsely pretend and publish, but it is to shake all Monarchical Government, and to vilifie our Regal Power, justly descended upon us over them: Nay, their Malice reaches so far, both against our Power and Person, as that in a most cunning and subtil way they have endeavoured to poison the Hearts of our good and Loyal Subjects of this our Kingdom, and to seduce them (were it in their power) to the like Rebellious Courses with themselves. Now though we are most confident of our Peoples Affections towards us (of which they have given us a clear testimony, by their ready and chearful assistance in this Cause) and have not the least thought that those turbulent Spirits shall any way prevail with them, yet we cannot but hold it requisite to give them timely notice of their traiterous Intentions, which very many waies appear unto us.

As First, By the multitude of their Printed Pamphlets, or rather indeed infamous Libels, stuffed full of Calumnies against our Regal Authority, and our most just Proceedings, and spreading of them in divers parts of this our Kingdom.

Secondly, By their sending of Letters to private Persons, to incite them against us; and sending some of their Fellow-Covenanters to be at private Meetings in London and elsewhere, to pervert our good People from their Duty; and some of these Meetings we know, and some of those Letters (lewd enough) we have seen.

Thirdly, By their publick contemning of all our just Commands, and their mutinous protesting against them, a course not fit to be endured in any well-ordered Kingdom.

Fourthly, By their rejecting of the Covenant commanded by our Authority, because it was commanded by us; whereas no Covenant or Band of that nature, in that Kingdom, hath ever been, or can be legal and warrantable, which hath not been commanded, or at least assented unto by Royal Authority. As for instance, That Covenant in our dear Father's time was condescended unto by him, and so the Subject (at the humble Petition of the General Assembly it self) permitted by him to sign it; We say it again, That our Covenant was rejected by them, because commanded by us; and this is manifest, because for Matters of Religion ours agreed in all things with their own Covenant. By which Covenant of theirs, they have traiterously induced many of our People to swear to a Band against us: which Band and Covenant (or rather Conspiracy) of theirs, could not be with God, being against us the Lord's Anointed over them. And it was, and is, a Band and Covenant pretended to be with God, that they may with the better countenance do the Works of the Devil, such as all Treasons and Rebellions are.

And Lastly, By their most Hostile Preparations in all kinds, as if we were not their King, but their sworn Enemy. For what can their Intentions be, being thus prepared, but to invade this Kingdom, should they nor find us ready, both to resist their Force, and to curb their Insolences? For many, and some of the chiefest amongst them, are Men, not only of unquiet Spirits, but of broken Fortunes, and would be very glad of any occasion (especially under the colour of Religion) to make them whole upon the Lands and Goods of our Subjects in England, who we presume (besides their Allegiance to us) will look better to themselves and their Estates, than to share them with such desperate Hypocrites, who seek to be better and cannot well be worse. We demand again, What Intentions else they can have? For we have already often assured them by our published Proclamations, That we are so far from thinking of any Innovation or Alteration of Religion, that we are resolved to maintain the same constantly, and as it is established by Law in that our Kingdom. Nay, so desirous have we been to give content unto them, as that we have in a manner condescended to all which they Petitioned for: Nay, our Princely Clemency in these produced no better effect, than increasing and daring Insolencies, to our dishonour both at Home and Abroad; Yet we passed by all, till they struck at the very Root of Kingly Government, for they have now assumed to themselves Regal Power. For where as the Print is the Kings in all Kingdoms, these seditious men have taken upon them to Print what they please, though we forbid it; and to prohibit what they dislike, though we command it; and with the greater affront, have forbid and dismissed the Printer whom we established. Besides, they have taken upon them to convene our Subjects, raise Armies, block up and besiege our Castles, to lay Impositions and Taxes upon our People, threatening such as continue in Loyalty to us, with Force and Violence. To this we shall add, That they have slighted the Directions and Power of our Council-Table in that Kingdom, and have set up Tables of their own, at which some of their Leaders sit under the Name of Committees, from the late pretended General Assembly, or their Deputies; and thus they meet when and where they please, Treat and Conclude what they please, and send their Edicts through all parts of the Kingdom without any consent, nay, without all knowledge of Us, our Commissioner, or Council, and directly contrary to many standing Laws at this day in force in that Kingdom, and yet pretend Violation of their Laws, as one of the main Causes of their Brain-sick Distempers.

Here therefore we take God and the World to Witness, we hold our Self forced and constrained to Arm, not only to reclaim them, and to set our Kingly Authority right again, in that our Ancient and Native Kingdom, but also for the Safety of this Kingdom, our Loyal Subjects in it, with their Wives, Children, and Goods, as well as our own, against the Rage and Fury of these Men and their Covenant. And this we think fit to let you further know, that we hope in Time to make the best of them see, that we will endure no such Covenant and Band in our Kingdom to which we shall not consent. So the Question is not now, Whether a Service-Book is to be received or not? Nor whether Episcopal Government shall be continued, or Presbyterian admitted? But whether we are their King or not? For though in some of their Libels they give us good words, and speak us fair for their own ends, especially in the last Printed at Edenburgh, Februarii quarto 1639; yet some of them refused both the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, and publickly maintain, That they are not obliged to take the same. Now how can we think these Men are Dutiful and Loyal in their Hearts, that broach such dangerous Opinions? Or religiously minded, that teach such rebellious Doctrine, and so contrary to all, which Protestant Divines teach towards the King and the Civil Magistrate? Nay, they have infected divers of their Country-men which are come into other Parts with the same Venom; for three Scotch-men taken in Wales, are at this day imprisoned, for direct denial of our Supremacy and their Allegiance, saying, They cannot take those Oathes, because they have sworn to the Covenant. But though we have been thus mild towards them, and continued so long, yet we would not have any of them, or any of our other Subjects think, that we can or will permit Episcopal Government, established by many Acts of Parliament in that our Kingdom, to be abolished, seeing it is known to the whole Christian World, that the same is most Christian in it self, and most peaceable for the Civil State, and most consonant to Monarchical Government.

And we would have our Subjects of that Kingdom consider, what will become of the third Estate there in Parliament, if Episcopacy should be abrogated?

And further we think fit to declare unto you, and to the Christian World, That by our Intention of introducing the Service-Book into that Kingdom, we had not the least thought of Innovation of Religion in this or that, but merely to have a Conformity with that Worship of God, which is observed within both our other Kingdoms, though ill minded Men have wrested some things in it to a sinister sense.

We further give you to understand, That there is a large Declaration coming forth, containing all the particular Passages which have occurred in this Business, from the very beginning, attested with their own foul Acts, to disanul and shame their fair, but false words. But because this cannot so soon be made ready, we hold it most expedient to let this short Declaration fore-run it, that our Loyal Subjects here and elsewhere, may not be infected with their false, wicked, specious, but most seditious Informations: For Example sake, in their last Pamphlet (besides divers other false, base, and fawning Passages) there are these scandalous and most notorious Untruths: As first, they say, That we have committed the Arms we now take, and the Armies we now raise, into the Hands of professed Papists; which is not more dishonourable to our Self, and the Noble Persons intrusted by us, than odiously and notoriously false. Again they say, That some of Power in the Hierarchy of England, have been the Cause of our taking Arms to invade our Native Kingdom, and of meddling with their Religion: whereas it is most certain, that no one of them have done any thing therein, but by our own Princely Direction and Com-

Car. 14.

 Command. And for Arms, it is notoriously known to all our Council then present, that their counsels were for Peace, and have been the persuaders (as much as in them lay) of the undeserved Moderation wherewith we have hitherto proceeded towards so great Offenders.

And further they say, That they intend no Act of Hostility against England, unless they shall be necessitated in their own Defence. We would fain know, Defence of what? Is it of Disobedience? Defence against whom? Is it not against us their True and Lawful Sovereign? If they will defend against us, it ought to be by Law, and not by Arms; that Defence we shall never deny them, this by Arms we shall never permit them. Now our Laws which they seem so much to value, are in a manner oppress'd by them, in so much that our Judges are so awed, as that they dare hardly proceed according to Law.

With these and the like mutinous Libels, we desire our good Subjects should not be infected, but that all of them might know the present necessity we have to Arm our Self, which is for no other End, save only for the Safety and Security of this our Kingdom, the re-establishment of our Authorities in that, and the suppressing of such as have misled and abused our Subjects there, and would (if not prevented) do the like here, but is no way to enforce any Innovation of Religion established in that Kingdom, or any waies to infringe the Laws thereof, or any of their Liberties whatsoever, which are according to Law.

These are therefore to Will and Command all our Loving Subjects of this our Kingdom, that they receive no more of their seditious Pamphlets sent from Scotland, or any other place concerning those Affairs, which can have no other use or influence, than to draw the Hearts of our Loyal People to the like Rebellious Courses; and that such of our Subjects here, as have already received any of these Rebellious Pamphlets, do presently deliver them to the next Justice of Peace, that he may send them to one of our Secretaries; as both they and the Justices of Peace will answer it at their utmost perils.

And our further Will and Pleasure is, That this our Proclamation and Declaration be read in time of Divine Service in every Church within the Kingdom, that all our People, to the meanest, may see the notorious Carriages of these Men, and likewise the Justice and Mercy of all our Proceedings.

Given at our Court at White-Hall the 27th day of February, in the four and twentieth Year of our Reign, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland.

To the preceding Declaration the Scots answer in their Canting manner, by theirs of the 22 of March, 1638. That though the secrets of Gods way cannot be sounded, yet considering his Providence in their personal affairs, the Lord is about some great Work on Earth, for the Cup of Affliction propined to other Reformed Kirks is now presented to them, for instead of a gracious Return of their humble Petitions from time to time, the Return is a late Declaration of the seven and twentieth of February last Libelled against them, though the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against their Cause and the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, now in question; which Declaration proceeds from the unchristian Prelates and their party, inserting the image of their Hierarchy into the Kings Portrait, and by their unequal poise over-turn the Boat of all the Passengers, and the Steer-man himself to perish. And in good earnest they rip up their Reasons, first by their long suffering of the Prelates insolency, against their Ministry, purity of Doctrine, their Reformation, the wonderful Work of Gods Mercy to that Nation: and so most falsly setting down the aforesaid Passages to their own ends; fearing Popery to be introduced; and because all the particular Mischiefs, Calamities, and Curses recited, shall not fall upon them, to prevent the after-quelling of their childrens return, wherefore hath the Lord done thus and thus against them? Then the men shall say, because they have forsaken the Covenant of the Lord, therefore have all these Evils come upon them.

And for doing any harm to England, cursed be their breasts if they harbour any such thought. Improve the good opinion of their well affected Brethren in England. And so to conclude their War Defensive, they cite the Law Natural and Civil, that Ad defensionem sufficit quod præcedat offensa, vel justus timor offensæ, nec debet quis expectare primum istum; melius enim jura intacta servare, quam post vulneratam causam remedium querere; quando præcedunt signa & actus manifestæ offensionis, & quando aliter nosmet tueri non possumus, tum inculpata & necessaria dicitur tutela, ac in dubia; insultus quicquid facit in incontinenti, præsumitur ad sui defensionem facere. It is enough for defence, that the offer of offence, or just fear of offence go before, as we profess it to be our case at this present, even the defence of God and his Religion. Edinburgh the 22 of March, 1639.

Both the English Clergy, as well as the Nobility and Gentry, contributed freely and largely to that War, whereby his Majesty was enabled to raise a gallant Army, and to Equip a competent Fleet to enter the Fryth of Edinburgh, which they did under the Command of the Lord Marquess of Hamilton, who entertaining his Mother a most rigid Covenanting Lady on Board gave great umbrage of discontent to some that wished well to his Majesties Affairs, as likewise did frequent entertaining correspondence with some of the hottest of the Scottish Lords, then in actual Rebellion against his Majesty, nay, the very Scots themselves are reported to have said thus much, That the Son of so gude a Mother would not hurt them. Moreover, he was said to have given a very unfaithful account to the King in his Leaguer at Barwick of the Scotch Army, representing their strength and power to have been much greater than it was, as that the Army was twenty five thousand effective under General Lesley, that they had twenty thousand marching as a Supply and Recruit for the other; however by his Letters to his Majesty as well as those he wrote to the Earl of Rothes, and other the Covenanting Scotch Lords, that time, others would have us to have a much better opinion of him.

And thus we have largely given you an account of the Scotch Rebellion, and of the Causes and progress thereof, the Covenanters of Scotland, and some here also of the same Leaven, gave it the name of Episcopale Bellum, The Bishops War; but how falsly, you may gather from what hath been said; for his Majesty was by those undutiful and rebellious courses of these Scots put upon a necessity of that War; For, first of all, they without, nay positively against his Majesties Command, enter into a Combination or Covenant being no other than Subjects to Subvert and overthrow the Government of the Church of Scotland by Bishops ever owned and acknowledged by sundry Acts of their Parliaments then in force to be one, and the first of the three Estates of their Kingdom, as they are here undoubtedly with us. Secondly, To reform Religion (so they call'd it) without, nay against the Command of their Prince, who hath the same power (maugre the Scotch Assembly) in the Kingdom of Scotland, as they have here in England. Thirdly, They besieged and attacked his Majesties Castles and Houses, seized his Magazines and Stores of War. And Lastly, Arrayed, Raised and Armed that people against his Command to act according to Ordinances of a General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland actually dissolved by his Majesties Command, so that it was not so much a War of his Majesty to maintain the Bishops Hierarchy however established by Law, or the Scottish Liturgy, and Service-Book, though to establish these is his Majesties undoubted right, as to assert, maintain, and justify his own Kingly Power, derived from his Ancestors, and not from the People; The plain truth (saith one) Religion was the Vizard to their Rebellion, but Covetousness, Sacrilege, and Rapine of the Church Revenues, the things mainly aimed at by the great ones in that Rebellion, who took in the Ministers only as their Instruments to vent their spite and malice against the Bishops, their legal Governours, and Superiours.

Before we conclude this year, we shall make bold to insert a very strange and Prodigious Eruption of a Sulphurous flame out of the bottom of the Sea in the Ferrara Islands in the Atlantique Ocean, in the height of eight and thirty Degrees and an half, North Latitude, there is a site of Water called Ferrara, distant two Leagues from the Ile of St. Michael; from the bottom of that Sea, an hundred and fifty Fathoms deep, there arose with an horrible noise a space of Earth, half an Acre, with a vehement force of an impetuous fire, against which the Sea could not make resistance, disgorging into the Air the height of three Pikes length both Water and Stones, with an hideous clattering noise, the broken pieces thereof being carried into the Neighbour Island, and taken up mouldred into black Ashes, all the circuit of the Water thereabout covered with the same sulphurous matter, appeared like black Cinders, and became of an Aliment continually burning; and by the multitude of stones mixing, it became a new Island, which is increased to a League and an half in length, and sixty Fathoms high, continually burning for ten daies, choaking all the Fish within eight Leagues, which were cast up by the force of the Sea upon the Coasts of the Neighbour Islands, in number sufficient to lade many Ships, and were buried from infecting the Air. The Sea round about boiling up, the smoak and rubbish in the Air darkened the light of the Sun.

There preceded this Fire an Earthquake for eight daies, the Inhabitants of the Neighbour Islands fled into the Fields from the danger, and had not the Wind blown the Fire from the Islands, it might have endangered their Habitations into another Cineration, which happened eight years there before.

The Counties that were appointed to set forth Horfe and Foot against the Scots, were

The General Officers take from His Majesty Commission to the Earl Marshal, &c. here following.

K Now we, that We reposing special trust and confidence in your approved Wisdom, Fidelity, Valour, and great Ability, have assigned, made, constituted, and ordained you to be the General of Our Army intended forthwith to be raised: And over all Our men, which be, or shall be levied in all Our Counties of this Our Realm, or Dominion of Wales; and assembled, or to be assembled to any Army, or Armies, to resist and withstand all Invasions, Tumults, Seditions, Conspiracies, or Attempts that may happen to be made against Our Person, or State; and to Rule, Govern, Command, Dispose and Employ the same Army, and all Officers so employed, or to be employed concerning the same, with all such farther forces, of what Nation soever, as shall be hereafter joyned thereunto for their supply, for the accomplishment of such Executions, Defences, Offences, and other Services as are or shall be by Us from time to time directed, limited, and appointed, in or by such private Instructions as are herewith delivered unto you under Our Signet Manual. And farther, We have given you full Power and Authority, That the same Persons so levied or assembled, or so to be levied or assembled by you, or sent, conducted, or brought, or that otherwise shall come to you, either by Our several Orders, or by Authority of this Our Commission as aforesaid, to try, array, and put in readyness; and them, and every of them after their Abilities, Degrees, and Faculties, well and sufficiently cause to be Weaponed and Armed, and take, or cause to be taken, the Masters of them, or any other our Trained Bands, which within this Our Realm of England, and Dominion of Wales, from time to time, in places most meet for that purpose, after your good Discretion. And also the same Our Subjects so Arrayed, Trained, and Armed, as well Men of Arms, as Horsemen, Archers, and foot-men of all kinds and degrees, meet and apt for the Wars, to Govern, Lead, and Conduct, against all and singular our Enemies attempting any thing against Us, Our Crown and Dignity; and Our said Army to divide, distribute, and dispose, and the same, or any part thereof, to convey by Land, or by Water, as occasion shall require, according to your good discretion; and with the same Enemies, Rebels, and Traitors, to fight, and them to Invade, Resist, Repulse, Pursue, and follow into any Our Dominions; and them to subdue, and to do, fulfil and execute all and singular other things which shall be requisite for the Leading, Government, Order, and Rule of Our said Armies and Subjects, and for conservation of Our Person and Peace. And farther to do, offer, and execute against the said Enemies, Rebels, Traitors, and their Adherents, and

and other Delinquents and Offenders, as need shall require, by your Discretion, by the Law Martial, as our General: And of such apprehended and brought into subjection, to save whom you shall think good to be saved, and to slay, destroy, and put to execution of Death, such and so many of them as you shall think meet by your discretion, to be put to death by any manner of means, to the terror of all other Offenders. And We do farther give unto you Our General, full Power and Authority, for Us, and in Our Name, as occasion shall require, according to your good discretion, by publick Proclamation, to make tender of Our Royal Grace and Pardon, to all such Traitors, Rebels, and all other Offenders as shall submit to Us, and design to be relieved by Our Mercy. And further, Our will and pleasure is, and by these Presents We do give you full Power and Authority, that in case any Invasion of Enemies, Insurrection, Rebellion, Riots, Riots, or unlawful Assemblies, or any like Offences shall happen to be moved, That then, as often as you shall perceive any such Misdemeanors to arise, You, with all the Power you can make, shall with all diligence repair, and send convenient Forces to the Places where any such Attempt, Invasion, unlawful Assembly, Insurrection, or Rebellion shall happen to be made; and subdue, repress, and reform the same, as well by Battel, or other kind of force, as otherwise by the Law of the Realm, or the Law Martial, according to your good discretion. And for the better execution of this Our Commission, &c. And farther, for your better assistance in this Our Service, We do hereby assign, make, constitute, and ordain, Our Right Trusty, and Right well-beloved Cousin, Robert Earl of Essex and Eme, Vicount Hereford and Bouchier, Lord Ferrers of Chartley, Lord Bouchier, to be Our Lieutenant General of this Our Army; and our Right Trusty, and Right well-beloved Cousin and Councello, Henry Earl of Holland, Lord Chief Justice and Justice of Eyre of all the Forests, Chaces, Parks, and Warrens on this side Trent, first Gentleman of Our Bed-chamber, and Knight of the most noble Order of the Garter, to be Our General of our Troops of Horse, to serve in Our said Army for the Execution of this Our Commission, according to such Directions as from time to time you shall think fit to give unto them. And farther, We do give you Power and Authority, to appoint within Our said Army, a Provost-Marshal, to use and exercise that Office, in such case as you shall think fit to use the said Law-Martial, &c.

His Majesty on the 27th of March, being the day of his Coronation, sets forward from London towards York, where the general Rendezvous of the Army Royal was to be where the Nobility & Gentry assembled to the Standard Royal in very great numbers, and very well appointed, and stomachly enough for an Encounter, had not some General Officers of his Majesties Army, as well as some Court Lords, been at that time in their hearts and thoughts of the Scorized and Presbyterian Faction; but before the King's departure from London; it was in his Majesties breast, for the general good and satisfaction of his People, and it was afterward at York, April 13. publickly proclaimed, That a Revocation should be made of sundry Grants, Licences, obtained from his Majesty upon false and untrue suggestions, we shall give you an account of them in the ensuing Proclamation; only desiring the Reader to take notice that the persons mostly concerned in all those Monopolies, were the Lord Marquess of Hamilton, and some other Scotch Courtiers, whom we shall not now name.

The Proclamation.

CHARLES R.

Whereas divers Grants, Licences, Priviledges, and Commissions, have been procured from his Majesty, some under his Great Seal of England, and some others under his Privy Seal, Signet, or Sign Manual, upon pretences that the same would tend to the common Good and Profit of his Subjects: Which since upon experience have been found prejudicial and inconvenient to his People, contrary to his Majesties Gracious Intention in granting the same. And whereas also upon like suggestions, there hath been obtained from his Majesty, and the Lords, and others of his Privy Council, divers Warrants and Letters of Assistance for the execution of those Grants, Licences, Priviledges, and Commissions, according to his Majesties good intention and meaning therein. Forasmuch as his most Excellent Majesty (whose Royal care and providence is ever intentive on the publick Good of his People) doth now discern that the particular Grants, Licences, and Commissions hereafter expressed, have been found in consequence far from these Grounds and Reasons whereupon they were founded, and in their execution have been notoriously abused, He is now pleased of his meer Grace and Favour to all his Loving Subjects (with the Advice of his Privy Council) by his Regal Power to publish and declare the several Commissions and Licences hereafter following, whether the same have passed his Great Seal, Privy Seal, Signet, and Sign Manual, or any of them, to be from hence utterly void, revoked, and hereby determined, that is to say,

A Commission touching Cottages and Inmates.

A Commission touching Scriveners and Brokers.

A Commission for compounding with Offenders touching Tobacco.

A Commission for compounding with Offenders for transporting of Butter.

A Commission for compounding with Offenders in the importing or using of Log-wood.

A Commission to compound with Sheriffs, and such as have been Sheriffs, for selling their Under-Sheriffs places.

A Commission for compounding for destruction of Woods in Iron Works.

A Commission for Concealments and Incroachments within twenty miles of London.

A Licence to transport Sheep-Skins and Lamb-Skins.

A

1639. A Commission to take men bound to dress no Venison, Pheasants, or Partridges in Inns, Ale-houses, Ordinaries, and Taverns.

A Commission touching the licensing of the use of Wine-Cask.

A Commission for licensing of Brewers.

A Licence for the sole transporting of Lampers.

And that all Proclamations, Warrants, or Letters of Assistance for putting in execution any of the said Commissions or Licences, be from henceforth declared to be void, determined, and hereby revoked to all Intents and Purposes.

And his Majesty in like labour and ease of his Subjects, is further pleased to declare his Royal Will and Pleasure to be, that the particular Grants hereafter mentioned (upon feigned suggestions obtained from him to publick damages) whether the same have passed his Majesties Great Seal, Privy Seal, Signet, or Sign-Manual, or any of them, shall not hereafter be put in Execution, viz:

A Grant for weighing Hay and Straw in London and Westminster, and three Miles compass.

An Office of Register to the Commission for Bankrupts in divers Counties of the Realm.

An Office or Grant for gauging of Red Herrings.

An Office or Grant for the marking of Iron made within the Realm.

An Office or Grant for Sealing of Bone-Lace.

A Grant for marking and gauging of Butter Casks.

A Grant of Priviledge touching Kelp and Sea-Weed.

A Grant for Sealing of Linen-Cloth.

A Grant for the gathering of Rags.

An Office or Grant of Factory for Scottish Merchants.

An Office or Grant for searching and Sealing of Foreign Hops.

An Office and Grant for the Sealing of Buttons.

All Grants of Fines, Penalties, and forfeitures before Judgment, granted, or mentioned to be granted, by Letters Patents, Privy Seals, Signet, Sign-Manual, or otherwise.

All Patents for new Inventions, not put in practice within three Years next after the date of the said Grants.

And the several Grants of Incorporation made unto Hatband-makers, Guttering-makers, Spectacle-makers, Comb-makers, Tobacco-Pipe-makers, Butchers, and Hozeners.

And his Majesty doth further Require and Command, that there shall be a proceeding against the said Patentees by quo Warranto, or Scire Facias, to recall the said Grants and Patents, unless they will voluntarily surrender and yield up the same.

And also all Proclamations, Warrants, or Letters of Assistance obtained from his Majesty, or the Lords and others of his Privy Council for execution thereof, from henceforth utterly to cease and be determined, and are hereby absolutely revoked and recalled.

And his Majesty doth further expressly Charge and Command all and singular the Patentees, Grantees, or others any ways interested, or claiming under the aforesaid Grants, Licences, or Commissions, or any of them, and their Deputies, that they or any of them do not at any time hereafter presume to put inure or execution any of the said Grants, Commissions, or Licences, or any thing therein contained, or any Proclamations, Warrants, or Letters of Assistance obtained in that behalf, upon pain of his Majesties Indignation, and to be proceeded against as contemners of his Majesties Royal Commands, whereof he will require a strict account.

Given at Our Mannor at York, the 9th day of April, in the 15th Year of Our Reign, 1639.

And how grievous these Projects of Monopolies were to the people, an honest Gentleman of Kent, Sir John Culpeper, Kt. a sufferer for his Majesties Cause in the late Rebellion which followed, may sufficiently inform the World in his Speech to the Parliament begun Novemb. 3. 1641. The purport thereof hereafter followeth.

Mr. Speaker,

Seeing I have been thus long speaking of Grievances to you, I shall take leave to mention hitherto this Honourable House but one more; but this one is the Trojan-Horse, and compriseth many: It is a Nest of Wasps, or Swarm of Verming, which have over-crept the Land, I mean the Monopolies and Polers of the People; these, like the Frogs of Egypt, have gotten possession of our Dwellings, and we have scarce a Room free from them. They sup in our Cup (a.) They dip in our Dish (b.) They sit by our Fire (c.) We find them in the Dye-Fat, Wash-Bowl (d), and Powdring-Tub (e). They share with the Butler in his Box (f). They have Marked (g), and Sealed (g) us from Head to Foot. Mr. Speaker, they will not bate us a Pin (h). We may not buy our own Cloaths without their Brokage. These are the Leeches that have sucked the Commonwealth so hard that it is almost become Hectical. And Mr. Speaker, some of these are ashamed of their Right Names; They have a Vizard to hide the Brand, made by that good Law in the last Parliament of King James, they shelter themselves under the Name of a Corporation, they make By-laws, which serve their turn to squeeze us, and fill their Purses: Unface these, and they will prove as bad Cards as any in the Pack. These are not Petty-Chapmen, but Whole-Salemen. Mr. Speaker, I have echoed to you the Cries of the Kingdom, I will tell you their Hopes, They look to Heaven for a Blessing upon this Parliament. They hang upon his Majesties exemplary Piety and great Justice, which renders his Ear less open to the just Complaints of his Subjects; We have had lately in his Speech a Gracious Assurance of it. The other great Affairs of the Kingdom, and this our Grievance of no less import, may go hand in hand, in preparation and resolution. Then by the blessing of God, we shall return home with an Olive Branch in our Mouths, and full Confirmations of the Priviledges which we received from our Ancestors, and owe to our Posterity, which every Free-born English man hath received with the Air he breathed in.

These are our Hopes, these are our Prayers.

His Majesty by slow Marches approacheth Berwick upon Tweed, where upon the 29th of May the Earl Marshal, Lord General, caused the Army Royal to be drawn up in Battalia, where it was viewed by his Majesty; and according to the Opinion of all able Judges upon the place, it was as gallant and well accoutred an Army, and as fit, and as ready and willing to act, as ever any Army that attended any King of England; I speak as to the Inferiour Commanders and Officers as well as Common Souldiers, whose unanimous Voice it was, after the Earl of Holland's retreat from Dunc and Kelsey, Let us march on in the Name of God, and rather be in action than lye here idle in the Fields, where at last we may want Provisions, or perhaps otherways contract Diseases. An infallible assurance of English courage and an undoubted success, had but the Counsel of General Officers, and others of the Court Lords, concurred therewith, which in all human probability had prevented the ensuing Troubles in both the Kingdoms of England and Scotland. In short, theirs was the most unfortunate advice and counsel that ever was given to an English King. Nay yet more particularly, That some great persons were not over-hearty to his Majesties Service in that Expedition, will appear by a Letter wrote by Sir Henry Vane to the Marquess of Hamilton, which followeth.

Sir Henry Vane's Letter to Marquess Hamilton concerning the March to Kelsey.

My Lord,

By the Dispatch Sir James Hamilton brought your Lordship from his Majesties Sacred Pen, you were left at your liberty to commit any Act of Hostility upon the Rebels, when your Lordship should find it most opportune. Since which my Lord Holland with 1000 Horse and 3000 Foot marched towards Kelsey, himself advanced towards them with the Horse (leaving the Foot three miles behind) to a place called Maxwell-heugh, a height above Kelsey; which when the Rebels discovered, they instantly marched out with 150 Horse, and (as my Lord Holland says) eight or ten thousand Foot; five or six thousand there might have been. He thereupon sent a Trumpet, commanding them to Retreat, according to what they had promised by the Proclamation. They asked whose Trumpet he was? He said, My Lord Holland's. Their Answer was, He were best to be gone. And so my Lord Holland made his Retreat, and waited on his Majesty this night to give him this Account.

† That some of the Officers in that Army were not, would not, perhaps be too forward to engage the Scots.

This morning Advertisement is brought his Majesty, That Lesley with 12000 Men is at Corkburnspath, that 5000 Men will be this night or to morrow at Dunc, 6000 at Kelsey; so his Majesties Opinion is, with many of his Council, to keep himself upon a Defensive, and make himself here as fast as he can; for his Majesty doth now clearly see, and is fully satisfied in his own Judgment, that what passed in the † Gallery, betwixt his Majesty, your Lordship, and my self, hath been but too much verified on this occasion. And therefore his Majesty would not have you to begin with them, but to settle things with you in a safe and good posture, and your self to come hither in Person, to consult what Counsels are fit to be taken, as the Affairs now hold. And so wishing your Lordship a speedy Passage, I Rest,

From the Camp at Huntley-field, this 4th of June, 1639.

Your Lordships
most humble Servant,
and faithful Friend,
H. Vane.

Sum of the Horse 3260

The Scots hearing of his Majesties advance, design'd first to try what they could do upon his Majesty by the way of Treaty, and the rather for that Marquess Hamilton being now in the Frith with 5000 Land Souldiers on board him, they were fearful of his descent, and so not being willing to have their Enemies in their Front and in their Rear, they first tamper with the Marquess to write to his Majesty on their behalf, which he did as followeth.

Marquess Hamilton's Letter to the King, May 29.

Most Sacred Majesty,

Every day may produce new Counsels, and if I alter in them, impute it not to fickleness, but to the reality of my Intentions to your Majesties Service, that writes what I think.

Hearing for certain that the Covenanters have given Obedience to your Majesties last Proclamation, and will not come within ten miles of the Borders, there is now no more doubt to be made, but that you will be so fast in your Leaguer, that it will not be in their Power to do the least affront to your Army. So as my farther Treary in these Parts where I am is to no end, since that is effected which was only labour'd for, your Majesty being in security. So I conceive it will now be time to speak other Language than hitherto hath been done, and they to be enjoyned a total Obedience to your just Commands. This will be best put in execution by your own immediate directions, you being now so near the Rebels; for if your Pleasure should be sent to me, the Winds being uncertain, and I more uncertain how to put the same in execution, (I mean, if they be Commands of Treaty) your Service might receive prejudice by delays, and to deal really with your Majesty (which I humbly desire your Majesty to pardon me for expressing) I have no desire at all to be employ'd in Treary with this People, for many Reasons: Amongst which this is not one of the least, That as I hear the Earl of Traquaire, and Southesk are desirous to have leave to come to me, which (whatsoever course your Majesty shall be pleas'd to take) I beseech you not to grant; for the effects of their coming to me, will produce no great good to your Service, and prove infinitely prejudicial to me; for so unhappy am I still, that if by the Faults of others your Service miscarieth, the Fault is still laid on me, by those whom I have not deserved it from.

Norwithstanding my oversense of farther Treary, I have not refus'd as yet to admit any that shall be sent with their Petitions; but this I only do till the return of Sir James, by whom I expect the signification of your Majesties Pleasure: In the interim, if any desires of theirs be sent me, my Answers shall be such as your Majesty shall be no ways engaged by them.

I have writ of some other Particulars to Mr. Treasurer, so your Majesty shall be no more for the present troubled by

Your Majesties

Most Loyal Subject

and humble Servant,

Hamilton.

His Majesty willing to prevent as much as in him lay the effusion of his Subjects blood, caused the Marquess of Hamilton to cause to be published his Majesties Proclamation Royal, commanding the Scotch Army to disband, promising pardon to all who should peaceably depart and accept of this his Majesties Grace; but withal denouncing the pain of high Treason upon all those who should continue in Arms. This Proclamation the Marquess sent on shore (lying then in the Frith of Edinburgh) to the Magistrates thereof, commanding the publication thereof of those Magistrates in due form of Law, and that the Clerk of the Council be assistant according to his place herein. The Magistrates desire a respite of some few days to return an Answer; and in the mean time the chief Lords and others engaged in their Covenant, wrote the following Letter to the Lord Marquess.

Please it your Grace,

Being here convey'd to attend the Parliament indicted by his Majesty, the Provost of Edinburgh presented unto us your Grace's Letter to him, and the Magistrates here to cause to be published his Majesties Proclamation, which we having perused, we find it doth contain divers points not only contrary to our National Oath to God, but also to the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom, for it carries a denunciation of the high Crime of Treason, against all such as do not accept the offer therein contained; albeit it be only a Writing put in Print without the Kingdom, and not warranted by Act and Authority of the Council, lawfully convey'd within this Kingdom. And your Grace in your Wisdom may consider, whether it can stand with the Laws, Liberties, and Customs of this Kingdom, that a Proclamation of so great and dangerous consequence, wanting the necessary Solemnities, should be published at the Market-cross of this City. Whereas your Grace knows well, that by the Laws of this Kingdom, Treason and Forfeiture of the Lands, Life, and Estate of the meanest Subject within the same, cannot be declared but either in Parliament, or in a Supream Justice Court, after Citation and lawful Probation; how much less of the whole Peers and Body of the Kingdom, without either Court proof or Trial. And albeit we do heartily and humbly acknowledge and profess all dutiful and civil Obedience to his Majesty, as our Dread and Gracious Sovereign; yet since this Proclamation does import in effect the renouncing of our Covenant made with God, and of the necessary means of our lawful Defence, we cannot give Obedience thereto, without bringing a Curse upon this Kirk and Kingdom, and Ruin upon our selves and our Posterity; whereby we are perswaded, that it did never proceed from his Majesty, but that it is a deep Plot contrived by the Policy of the devillish Malice of the known and cursed Enemies of this Church and State, by which they have intended so to dis-joyn us from his Majesty, and among our selves, as the Rupture, Rent, and Confusion of both might be irreparable; wherein we hope the Lord (in whom we trust) shall disappoint them. And seeing we have left no means possible unessayed since his Majesties coming to York (as before) whereby his Majesties Ear might be made Patent to our just Informations, but have used the help (to our last Remonstrance) of the Lord Gray, the Justice Clerk, the Treasurer, and the Lord Da-liel, as the Bearer can inform your Grace, and yet have never had the happiness to attain any hopes of our End, but have altogether been frustrate and disappointed; and now understanding, by the sight of your Grace's Letter, That your Grace, as his Majesties High Commissioner, is returned with full Power and Authority to accommodate Affairs in a peaceable way, we will not cease to have recourse to your Grace, as one who hath chief Interest in this Kirk and Kingdom; desiring your Grace to consider, (as in our judgment we are perswaded) That there is no way so ready and assured to settle and compose all Affairs, as by holding of the Parliament according to his Majesties Indiction, either by his Sacred Majesty in Person, (which is our chiefest desire) or by your Grace, as his Majesties Commissioner, at the time appointed; wherein your Grace shall find our Carriage most humble, loyal, and dutiful to our Sovereign, or to your Grace, as representing his Majesties Person; and in the mean time, That your Grace would open a safe way, whereby our Supplications and Informations may have access to his Majesties Ears:

And we are fully perswaded, that we shall be able to clear the lawfulness and integrity of our Intentions and Proceedings to his Majesty, and make it evident to his Majesty and to the World, that our Enemies are Traitors to the King, to the Church and State; and that we are, and ever have been, his Majesties Loyal and Obedient Subjects. So we Rest,

To this Letter the Lord Marquess returned Answer, directing his Letter to the E. of Rothse.

My Lord,

I Received a Letter yesterday morning, signed by your Lordship, and divers Noblemen and others, wherein you alledge you are come to attend the Parliament; but considering your Preparation and Equipage, it appears rather to fight a Battel, than to hold a civil Convocation for the good of the Church and Commonwealth. You may perceive by his Majesties Gracious

Proclamation, That he intended, in his own Sacred Person, to be present at the Parliament, so soon as with honour and safety he might do it, and for that end express therein what was fit to be done. But these courses which you and your adherents take, and your disobedience to his just Commands, daily more and more shewed, will necessitate him to have them put in execution another way. It is true, That his Majesty sent me hither to accommodate these Affairs in a peaceable manner, if it were possible, which I have laboured to do, and accordingly my deportment hath been, which hath been met with that Retribution, as if I had been your greatest Enemy; but your refusing to publish his Majesties Grace to his People, signified in his Royal Proclamation, hath taken away that Power which otherwise I had, that being a Liberty taken to your selves, which never any loyal Subjects assumed in any Monarchy. You alledge many Reasons for your selves of the Illegality of that Proclamation: But you cannot be ignorant that your Carriage hath forced many of these principal Councillors, for safeguard of their lives, to forsake the Kingdom, out of which they remain; yet for the same cause you have suppressed the printing of all Writings, but what is warranted by Mr. Alexander Henderfon, and one Mr. Archibald Johnston.
Neither was the Clerk of the Council, whom I sent for twice to give him Directions in this Business, permitted to come aboard to me; upon conference with whom (for anything you know) I might have resolved to come ashore and convened a Council for the publication thereof in the ordinary way. But your extraordinary proceedings in all things, must needs force from his Majesty some things which perhaps you may think not ordinary. Whereas you desire me to be a means that your Supplications may have free access to his Majesties Ears: It is a work of no difficulty, for his Majesty hath never stopt his Ears to the Supplications of any of his Subjects, when they have been presented to him in that humble and fitting way which became duiful Subjects: Nor did I ever refuse any, all the time I was among you, or conceal any part of them from his Majesty; so that your Allegation of not being heard, is grounded upon the same false Foundations that your other Actions are, and serves only for a means to delude the simple People, that by making them believe what you have a mind to possess them with,
they may become backers of your unwarranted Actions;
which as it is generally lamented by all his Majesties good Subjects, so it is more particularly by me, who have had the honour to be employed in this Business with so bad success.

May 10.

My Lord,

Your humble Servants,

Hamilton.

To this Letter from the Lord Marquess, the Earl of Rothse, in behalf of himself and the rest of his Confederates, rejoyns as followeth.

May it please your Grace,

WE should have taken far more satisfaction to have seen your Grace here in Parliament with his Majesty, then with your Navy and Army in the Frish, to constrain us beyond the limits of our Religion and lawful Obedience, which we are always willing to perform to his Majesty. It was far by my expectation, and your Grace's oath and promise, that you should never come in any chief Command against your Native Country. Whereas your Grace doth

Anno.
doth challenge our coming in such numbers to attend this Parliament, I hope you conceive that this Navy and Army upon the Borders, and the Invasion threatned in the West, do sufficiently warrant our preparations to defend these places, and divert such dangers. That Proclamation that is said to carry so much Grace and Goodness, is as destitute of that, as your Invasion is of a good Warrant; which perswades me, That neither of the two proceeds from his Majesties own Gracious disposition. I cannot stand here to answer all these misconceived Particulars contained in your Grace's Letter; but if I had the honour to see your Grace, before any more mischief be done, I dare engage my Honour and my Life, to clear all these Imputations laid on our proceedings; and I can demonstrate how hardly we have been used, without any just reason. I dare not be answerable to God Almighty, and to that Duty I owe my Prince and Country, if I do not shew your Grace, that your going a little further in this violent and unjust way, will put all from the hopes of Recovery; from which both a great deal of blame from Men, and Judgment from Above shall attend you as the special Instrument, which I wish you labour to evite. If our destruction be intended, we are confident in that Majesty who owns this Cause, and is able to defend it; and if only Terrors to fright, and prepare us to accept of any Conditions, will be offered, that intention is already as far disappointed, as any of these many former: But as we are ready to defend, so ever to insist in supplicating, in using all humble and lawful means as becomes us.

Mr. Borthwick will deliver to your Grace our Supplication to his Majesty, and both his and my Mind, till I shall have the occasion to disburthen my self, surcharged with grief at your proceedings, being most desirous (as I have been formerly) to have all these Occasions removed, that may divert me from being still

Your Grace's humble Servant,

Rothes.

Some days following the Marquess returns his Answer to the foregoing of the Earl of Rothes.

My Lord,

I Have received your Lordships's Letter, signed by you, but I cannot conceive it of your Lordship's inditing; for I believe you would not have sent such an one to me, if you had not had some malignant Spirits busied in the framing of it: For you cannot but remember that my words were never other, then that I would dye at my Master's feet; and that I would prove an Enemy, to the uttermost of my power, to this Kingdom, if my Country-men continue in their Obstinacy: And here I set it under my hand, That I will (by God's grace) make it good. It is true, knowing my own inability, I neither desired, nor indeed willingly did accept the Conduct of an Army against this Nation; but my backwardness proceeded not out of a desire not to be employed against such in this Country as were disobedient, but that his Majesty might have found many more able to have served him; but since he hath been pleased to trust me, I will not deceive him.

You pass by many Particulars in your Answer to my Letter untouched, saying, You cannot stand here to answer them. It is most true, they are not to be answered, and so I take it.

As for your own Justification, it is the same which you have ever used, and so continue; but the best is, Car. 15. none that were ever truly informed of your Proceedings, doth or can give any approbation of them.

You say, If I go any further in a violent Course, it will be past all hope of Remedy. If I do, none can blame my Master; for that can never be called Violence, which is only to suppress Rebellion: And if I proceed to execute his Commands therein, you are the Cause of it. As Mr. Borthwick told me, I expected to have heard further from you before now; but nothing coming, I would forbear no longer to give you this Answer under my hand, that both you and all the World may take notice what my Inclinations are: Which notwithstanding I do infinitely desire they may be stopt, by your speedy and real submission to his Majesties just Commands. And this is the Prayer of him, that wisheth it may be still lawful for him to call himself

Humble Servant,

Hamilton.

Upon the 4th of June his Majesty mustered his own Guards, where was a gallant Appearance of the Nobility and Gentry, who were no sooner dismissed, but word was brought by Sir John Byron that the whole Scots Army was on their March on this side Dunce-hill, which proved to be a mistake, for that they were then encamped, as his Majesty afterwards discovered, who as he had great cause was much offended with Mr. Widdrington the Scout-Master, for not giving notice of their advance, which it seems was caused by the Earl of Hollands march to Kelsy in Scotland, else (say the Scots) they had not come within 10 miles of the Borders, [you may believe them if you please.] And now the Armies were in view of each other, expecting action every moment, when comes the Earl of Dunfermling with a Trumpet from the Scotch Camp to the King's Pavilion, and brings with him a Petition from the Scots following;

To the King's most Excellent Majesty,

The humble Petition of his Majesties Subjects of Scotland.

Humbly Sheweth,

That whereas the former means used by us have not yet been effectual for receiving your Majesties favour, and the Peace of this your Native Kingdom, we fall down again at your Majesties feet, most humbly supplicating, That your Majesty would be graciously pleased to appoint some few of the many worthy Men of your Majesties Kingdom of England, who are well-affected to the True Religion, and our Common Peace, to hear, by some of us, of the same Affection, our humble Desires, and to make known unto us your Majesties gracious Pleasure; That as by the Providence of God we are here joyned in one Island, under one King; so by your Majesties great Wisdom and tender Care, all Mistakings may be speedily removed, and the two Kingdoms may be kept in peace and happiness under your Majesties long and prosperous Reign. For the which we shall never cease to pray, as becometh your Majesties most faithful Subjects.

1639.

To which his Majesty commands the Secretary to return the following Answer :

The King's Majesty having read and considered the humble Supplication presented unto him by the Earl of Dunfermling, commanded Sir Edmond Verney, Knight-Marshal, to return with the Messenger this Answer.

That whereas his Majesty hath published a Gracious Proclamation to all his Subjects of Scotland, whereby he hath given them full assurance of the free enjoying both of the Religion and Laws of that Kingdom; as likewise a free Pardon, upon their humble and dutiful Obedience. Which Proclamation hath been hitherto hindered to be published to most of his Majesties Subjects; therefore his Majesty requireth, for the full information and satisfaction of them, that the said Proclamation be publickly read. That being done, his Majesty will be graciously pleased to hear any humble Supplication of his Subjects.

Signed, John Cooke.

Sir Edmond Verney, Knight-Marshal, was sent along with the Earl of Dunfermling, to see his Majesties Proclamation proclaimed accordingly in the Scotch Army; which done, the aforesaid Earl returns to his Majesty with another Petition, much to the same purpose with the former: To which his Majesty gave Answer :

That his Majesty having understood of the Obedience of the Petitioners in reading his Proclamation, as was commanded them, is graciously pleased so far to condescend unto their Petition, as to admit some of them to repair to his Majesties Camp upon Monday next, at eight of the Clock in the Morning, at the Lord General's Tent; where they shall find six Persons of Honour and Trust appointed by his Majesty to hear their Desires.

His Majesty nominated the Lords following his Commissioners; The General, the Lieutenant-General Essex, the Earls of Holland, Salisbury and Berkshire, and Mr. Secretary Cooke: And the Scotch Commissioners were the Earls of Rothes and Dunfermling, the Lord Lowdon, Douglass Sheriff of Tivendale, Henderson and Johnston, two Ministers, who being come to the King's Camp, they were entertained by the English Commissioners; where it pleased his Majesty to come in Person, who viewing the Scotch Deputies, said, I am informed that you complain you cannot be heard, and therefore I come hither myself to know what you would say. To his Majesty the Earl of Rothes makes a profession of their Loyalty to his Majesty, and that their Desires were to be secured in their Religion and Liberties; who was succeeded by Lowdon, who began an Harangue in excuse of their former rebellious courses and actions. But the King told him, Sir, I will not admit of any of your excuses for your by-past Actions; but if you come to sue for Grace, set down your desires particularly in writing, and you shall receive your Answer. Whereupon after some short Conference amongst themselves, they exhibited their Desires in the Paper following.

The humble Desires of his Majesties Subjects of Scotland.

Car. 15.

First, It is our humble desire, That his Majesty would be pleased to assure us, that the Acts of the late Assembly holden at Glasgow by his Majesties Indiction, shall be ratified in the ensuing Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh, July 23. since the Peace of the Kirk and Kingdom cannot endure further Prorogation.

Secondly, That his Majesty, out of his tender Care of the preservation of our Religion and Laws, will be graciously pleased to declare, and assure, That it is his Royal Will, that all Matters Ecclesiastical be determined by the Assemblies of the Kirk, and Matters Civil by Parliament. Which for his Majesties Honour, and keeping Peace and Order amongst his Subjects, in the time of his Majesties personal Absence, would be holden at set times, once in two or three years.

Thirdly, That a blessed Pacification may be speedily brought about, and his Majesties Subjects may be secured; Our humble Desire is, That his Majesties Ships and Forces by Land be recalled; That all Persons, Ships, and Goods Arrested, be restored, and we made safe from Invasion. And that all Excommunicate Persons, Incendiaries, and Informers against the Kingdom, who have out of malice caused these Commotions for their own private Ends, may be returned to suffer their deserved Censure and Punishment, and some other Points, as may best conduce to this happy Pacification.

As these are our humble Desires, so it is our Grief that his Majesty should have been provoked to Wrath against us his most humble and loving Subjects. And it shall be our delight, upon his Majesties gracious assurance of the Preservation of our Religion and Laws, to give example to others of all Civil and Temporal Obedience which can be required or expected of Loyal Subjects.

To which his Majesty said, For the clearing of Particulars, I require you to set down the Grounds and Reasons of your Desires. Which the Lord Lowdon did in hæc verba.

Memorandum, That our Desires are only the enjoying of our Religion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws of his Majesties Kingdom.

To clear by sufficient Grounds that the Particulars are such, we shall not insist to crave any Point which is not so warranted. And we humbly offer all Civil and Temporal Obedience to your Majesty, which can be required or expected of Loyal Subjects.

Signed, Lowdon.

To which his Majesty answered, That whereas his Majesty, the 11. of June, received a short Paper of the general Grounds and Limits of their humble Desires; his Majesty is graciously pleased to make this Answer.

That if their Desires be only the enjoying of their Religion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws of his Majesty's Kingdom of Scotland, his Majesty doth not only agree to the same, but shall always 1639. protect them to the uttermost of his Power: And if they shall not insist upon any thing but that is so warranted, his Majesty will most willingly and readily condescend thereunto; so that in the mean time they pay unto him that Civil and Temporal Obedience which can be justly required and expected of Royal Subjects.

Anno

At his Majesties Camp, the 13th of June, 1639.

And accordingly the Scotch Commissioners exhibit the Reasons and Grounds of their desires in writing, as followeth:

Reasons and Grounds of our humble Desires, delivered the thirteenth of June.

WE did first humbly desire a Ratification of the Acts of the late Assembly in the ensuing Parliament.

First, Because the Civil Power is Keeper of both Tables; and where the Kirk and Kingdom are one Body, consisting of the same Members, there can be no firm Peace, nor stability of Order, except the Ministers of the Kirk in their Consultations may press the obedience of the Civil Laws and Magistrate, and the Civil Power add their Sanction and Authority to the Constitutions of the Kirk.

Secondly, Because the late General Assembly indicted by his Majesty, was lawfully constituted in all the Members, according to the Institution and Order prescribed by Acts of former Assemblies.

Thirdly, Because no Particular is enacted in the late Assembly, which is not grounded upon the Acts of preceding Assemblies; and is either expressly contained in them, or by necessary Consequence may be deducted from them.

That the Parliament be kept without Prorogation, his Majesty knows how necessary it is, since the Peace of the Kirk and Kingdom calls for it without further delay.

We did secondly desire, That his Majesty would be pleased to declare and assure, That it is his Royal Will that all Matters Ecclesiastical be determined by the Assemblies of the Kirk, and Matters Civil by the Parliament, and other Inferiour Judicatories established by Law; because we know no other way of the preservation of our Religion and Laws.

And because Matters so different in their Nature, ought to be treated respectively in their own proper Judicatories, it was also desired, That Parliaments might be holden at set Times, as once in two or three Years, by reason of his Majesties personal Absence, which hindreth his Subjects in their Complaints and Grievances, to have immediate access unto his Majesties Presence.

And whereas his Majesty requires us to limit our Desires, to the enjoying of our Religion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws respective, We are heartily content to have the occasion to declare, That We never intended it farther than the enjoying of our Religion and Liberties.

And that all this time past, it was far from our Thoughts to desire to diminish the Royal Authority of our Native King and Dread Sovereign, or to make an Invasion upon the Kingdom of England, which are the Calumnies forged and spread against us by the Malice of our Adversaries; and for which we humbly desire, That in his Majesties Justice they may have their own Censure and Punishment.

Thirdly, We desire a blessed Pacification, and did express the most ready and powerful Means which we could conceive for bringing the same speedily to pass, leaving other Means serving for that End, to his Majesties Royal Consideration and great Wisdom.

To this Paper, his Majesties Commissioners answer, That the King would give them his answer on Saturday following, and so the Scots ending with the English General, departed to their Camp.

On Saturday the fifteenth of June following the Scotch Commissioners in the forenoon came to the Lord General's Tent, whither his Majesty after a while came also, and commanded to be read his gracious answer to their desires, which with a few alterations, the Scots agreed to carry to their Camp, and, on Monday following, returned from their fellow Covenanters with their most humble [Formal] thanks to his Majesty for his most gracious answer to their Petition by his Declaration which with the Articles of accommodation hereafter follow.

His Majesties Declaration.

WE having considered the Papers, and humble Petitions presented unto us by those of our Subjects of Scotland, who were admitted to attend our Pleasure in the Camp; and after a full hearing by our Self of all that they could say or alledge thereupon, having communicated the same to our Council of both Kingdoms, upon mature deliberation, with their unanimous Advice, We have thought fit to give this just and gracious Answer.

That though we cannot condescend to ratify and approve the Acts of the pretended General Assembly at Glasgow, for many grave and weighty Considerations which have happened before and since, much importing the Honour and Security of that true Monarchical Government lineally descended upon us from so many of our Ancestors: Yet such is our gracious Pleasure, That notwithstanding the many Disorders committed of late, we are pleased not only to confirm and make good whatsoever our Commissioner hath granted and promised in our Name, but also we are further graciously pleased to declare and assure, that according to the Petitioners humble Desires, all Matters Ecclesiastical shall be determined by the Assembly of the Kirk, and Matters Civil by the Parliament, and other inferiour Judicatories established by Law. Which Assemblies accordingly shall be kept once a Year, or as shall be agreed upon at the General Assembly.

And for settling the general Distractions of that our Ancient Kingdom, our Will and Pleasure is, That a free General Assembly be kept at Edinburgh, the sixth day of August next ensuing,

Anno 1639. fuing, where we intend (God willing) to be personally present. And for the legal Indiction whereof, we have given Order and Command to our Council; and thereafter a Parliament to be held at Edenburgh the twentieth day of August next ensuing, for ratifying of what shall be concluded in the said Assembly, and settling such other things as may conduce to the Peace and Good of our Native Kingdom; and therein an Act of Oblivion to be passed.

And whereas We are further desired, that our Ships and Forces by Land be recalled, and all Persons, Goods, and Ships restored, and they made safe from Invasion, We are graciously pleased to declare, That upon their disarming and disbanding of their Forces, dissolving and discharging all their pretended Tables and Conventicles, and restoring unto us all our Castles, Forts, and Ammunition of all sorts; as likewise our Royal Honours, and to every one of our good Subjects, their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatsoever, taken and detained from them since the late pretended General Assembly, we will presently thereafter recall our Fleet, and retire our Land-Forces, and cause restitution to be made to all Persons of their Ships and Goods, detained and arrested since the aforesaid time. Whereby it may appear, that our intention of taking up of Arms, was no waies for invading of our Native Kingdom, or to innovate the Religion and Laws, but meerly for the maintaining and vindicating of our Royal Authority. And since that hereby it doth clearly appear, that we neither have nor do intend any alteration of Religion or Laws, but that both shall be maintained by us in their full Integrity, we expect the performance of that humble and dutiful Obedience which becometh Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, as in their several Petitions they have often professed. And as we have just reason to believe, that to our peaceable and well affected Subjects this will be satisfactory, so we take God and the World to witness, That whatsoever Calamities shall ensue by our necessitated suppressing of the Insolences of such as shall continue in their disobedient Courses, is not occasioned by us, but by their own procurement.

Articles agreed upon.

I.

THE Forces of Scotland to be Disbanded and Dissolved within eight and forty hours after the publication of his Majesties Declaration, being agreed upon.

II.

His Majesties Castles, Forts, Ammunitions of all sorts, and Royal Honours to be delivered after the said publication, so soon as his Majesty can send to receive them.

III.

His Majesties Ships to depart presently after the delivery of the Castles, with the first fair Wind, and in the mean time no interruption of Trade or Fishing.

IV.

His Majesty is graciously pleased to cause to be restored, all Persons, Goods, and Ships, detained and arrested since the first day of November last past.

V.

There shall be no Meetings, Treatings, Consultations, or Convocations of his Majesties Lieges, but such as are warranted by Act of Parliament.

VI.

All Fortifications to desist, and no further working therein, and they to be remitted to his Majesties Pleasure.

VII.

To restore to every one of his Majesties good Subjects, their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatsoever, taken or detained from them by whatsoever means since the aforesaid time.

The next day the Scotch Commissioners came to his Majesties Pavilion, where the King signed the foregoing Declaration which the Scotch Commissioners did accordingly, and two Copies thereof were made interchangeably signed, one by Mr. Secretary Cook and the Earl of Sherland remaining with the Scots, and the other signed by them, remained with the Secretary; the former by his Majesties Command was published openly in their Army by Lyon King at Arms of Scotland, on Thursday, June 20. which day their Army also was Disbanded according to their promise and submission hereafter following.

In the Camp, June 18. 1639.

IN Obedience to his Majesties Royal Commands, We shall, upon Thursday next the twentieth of this June, dismiss our Forces, and immediately thereafter deliver his Majesties Castles, &c. And shall ever in all things carry our selves like Humble, Loyal, and Obedient Subjects.

All your gracious Directions, tending to an univerſal and laſting Peace, ſhall be on this ſide punctually purſued and fulfilled; may all Affections be rightly ſet and inclined for the accompliſhment of ſo bleſſed a Work.

Yet admit my attention to your Sacred Perſon, and proſperity of your Affairs, moſt humbly to beſeech your Maſteſty, not only to keep your Garrisons of Berwick and Carlisle ſtrong, and well provided of all kind of Stores, but to perfect the Fortifications at Leith; and if poſſible, to put in a good Power there alſo, of men approved for their Faith and Zeal to the Service of your Crown, for ſo total a defection as hath appeared in that People, is not to be truſted with your Sacred Perſon over-early, if at all; and this the rather, for that I conceive your Deſigns, and Royal Purpoſes thus ſuſtained, will have alſo an excellent furtherance and operation amongſt the Subjects in England.

I ſhould not write thus much, but that I full well know the Goodneſs, Wiſdom, and Secreſie of my Maſter, having otherwaies ſufficiently contracted already the ill-will of many of the Scottiſh Nation: Howbeit for which Tranſgreſſions, in good Faith I know not, the beſt is I apprehend not much, being already ſeated ſo low, as I have not far to fall. God long preſerve your Maſteſty.

A Parliament and General Aſſembly being to be convened in Auguſt following, his Maſteſty Commanded fourteen of the Principal Covenanting Lords to attend him at Berwick, but they being conſcious to themſelves, and fearing Confinement, or the like, ſend only three, Montroſs, Lowdon, and Lothian, who being conferred with by ſome appointed by his Maſteſty, were very much wrought upon, and ſome of them came to ſee their own Errors and danger, and never after ſided with the Covenanters. His Maſteſty appoints the Earl of Traquair, Lord High Commiſſioner for Scotland, and his Inſtructions were as followeth:

CHARLES REX,

AT the firſt meeting of the Aſſembly, before it be brought in diſpute who ſhall preſide, you ſhall appoint him who was Moderator in the laſt Aſſembly, to preſide in this till a new Moderator be choſen.

We allow that Lay-Elders ſhall be admitted Members of this Aſſembly; but in caſe of the Election of Commiſſioners for Presbyteries, the Lay-Elders have had Voice, you ſhall declare againſt the informality thereof; as alſo againſt Lay-Elders having Voice in Fundamental Points of Religion.

Car. 15.

At the firſt opening of the Aſſembly, you ſhall ſtrive to make the Aſſembly ſenſible of our Goodneſs, that notwithstanding all that is paſt, whereby we might have been juſtly moved not to hearken to their Petitions, yet we have been graciously pleaſed to grant a free General Aſſembly; and for great and weighty Conſiderations, have commanded the Archbishops and Bishops not to appear at this Aſſembly.

You ſhall not make uſe of the Aſſeſſors in publick, except you find you ſhall be able to carry their having Vote in the Aſſembly.

You ſhall labour to your utmoſt, that there be no Queſtion made about the laſt Aſſembly; and in caſe it come to the worſt, whatever ſhall be done in Ratification, or with relation to the former Aſſembly, our Will is that you declare the ſame to be done as an Act of this Aſſembly, and that you conſent thereto only upon theſe terms, and no waies as having any relation to the former Aſſembly.

You ſhall by all means ſhun the Diſpute about our Power in Aſſemblies; and if it ſhall be urged, or offered to be diſputed, whether we have the Negative Voice, or the ſole Power of Indicting, and conſequently of Diſſolving; except you ſee clearly that you can carry the ſame in our Favour, ſtop the Diſpute; and rather than it be decided againſt us, ſtop the courſe of the Aſſembly until we be advertiſed.

For the better facilitating of our other Services, and the more peaceable and plauſible Progreſs in all Buſineſſes recommended to you, we allow you at any time you ſhall find moſt convenient, after the opening of the Aſſembly, to declare, That notwithstanding our own Inclination, or any other Conſiderations, we are contented, for our Peoples full ſatisfaction, to remit Episcopacy, and the Eſtate of Bishops to the freedom of the Aſſembly; but ſo, as no reſpect be had to the determination of the Point in the laſt Aſſembly.

But in giving way to the abolishing of Episcopacy, be careful that it be done without the appearing of any Warrant from the Bishops; and if any offer to appear for them, you are to enquire for their Warrant, and carry the Diſpute ſo, as the concluſion ſeem not to be made in prejudice of Episcopacy as unlawful, but only in ſatisfaction to the People for ſettling the preſent Diſorders, and ſuch other Reaſons of State: But herein you muſt be careful that our Intentions appear not to any.

You ſhall labour, that Miniſters depoſed by the laſt Aſſembly, or Commiſſions flowing from them, for no other cauſe but the ſubſcribing the Petition or Declinator againſt the laſt Aſſembly, be upon their ſubmiſſion to the determination of this Aſſembly, reponed in their own Places; and ſuch other Miniſters as are depoſed for no other Faults, that they be tried of new; and if that cannot be, ſtrive that Commiſſions may be directed from this Aſſembly for trying and cenſuring them, according to the nature of their Proceſs.

That immediately upon the concluſion of this Aſſembly, you Indict another at ſome convenient time, as near the expiring of the Year as you can; and if you find that Aberdeen be not a Place agreeable, let Glaſgow be the Place; and if that cannot give content, let it be elſewhere.

The

Anno 1639. The General Assembly is not to meddle with any thing that is Civil, or which formerly hath been established by Act of Parliament, but upon his Majesties Special Command or Warrant.

We will not allow of any Commissioner from the Assembly, nor no such Act as may give ground for the continuing of the Tables, or Conventicles.

In case Episcopacy be abolished at this Assembly, you are to labour that we may have the Power of choosing of so many Ministers as may represent the fourteen Bishops in Parliament; or if that cannot be, that fourteen others whom we shall present be agreed to, with a power to choose the Lords of the Articles for the Nobility for this time, until the Business be further considered upon.

We allow that Episcopacy be abolished, for the Reasons contained in the Articles, and the Covenant 1580. for satisfaction of our People be subscribed, provided it be so conceived, that thereby our Subjects be not forced to abjure Episcopacy as a Point of Popery, or contrary to God's Law, or the Protestant Religion; but if they require it to be abjured, as contrary to the Constitution of the Church of Scotland, you are to give way to it rather than to make a breach.

After all Assembly-Business is ended, and immediately before Prayers, you shall, in the fairest way that you can, protest, That in respect of his Majesties Resolution of not coming in Person, and that his Instructions to you were upon short advertisement, whereupon many things may have occurred, wherein you have not had his Majesties Pleasure; and for such other Reasons as occasion may furnish, you are to protest, That in case any thing hath escaped you, or hath been condescended upon in this present Assembly prejudicial to his Majesties Service, that his Majesty may be heard for redress thereof in his own Time and Place.

At Berwick the 27th of July, 1639.

To these Instructions were added these following:

CHARLES REX.

Right Trusty,

The King writes to Traquair, and gives him positive Instructions how further to proceed.

WE have hitherto commanded Hamilton to answer several of your Letters, but that of the sixteenth of August being of more weight than any of your former, we have thought fit to answer it our Self.

And whereas you say, That nothing will satisfy them, except in Terminis, the last Assembly be Named and Ratified, or that way be given to the discharging of Episcopacy as abjured in that Church, as contrary to the Confession of Faith, 1580. and the Constitutions of the same, you being yet in some hope that the word Abjured may be got changed; and that in drawing up the words of the Act, it be only condemned as contrary to the Constitution of the Church: We in this point leave you to your Instructions, they being full, if you consider what we have said concerning Episcopacy, and subscribing the Confession of Faith, 1580. We thinking it fit to declare hereupon unto you, That let their madness be what it will, further than we have declared in our Instructions, in these Points we will not go.

For the Service-Book, and Book of Canons, though we have been and are content they be discharged, yet we will never give our Voice nor assent that they be condemned, as containing divers Heads of Popery and Superstition: in like manner, though we have been, and are content that the High-Commission be discharged, yet we will never acknowledge that it is without Law, or destructive to the Civil and Ecclesiastical Judicatories of that our Kingdom: Nor that the Five Articles of Perth, though discharged with our Approbation, be condemned, as contrary to the foresaid Confession. As concerning the late Assemblies, we cannot give our consent to have them declared Null, since they were so notoriously our Father (of happy Memory) his Acts; it seeming strange, that we having condescended to the taking away of these things that they complained of, which were done in those Assemblies, they will not be content therewith, without laying an Aspersions on our Father's Actions. Wherefore if the Assembly will, in despite of your endeavour, conclude contrary to this, you are to protest against their Proceedings in these Points, and be sure not to ratify them in Parliament.

Concerning the yearly Indiction of General Assemblies, and the Confession of Faith, we commanded Hamilton, in his of the sixteenth, to Answer that Point to this effect, That we think it infinitely to our prejudice that we should consent to tie our Self for the keeping yearly of their Assemblies, not needing to repeat the Reasons, they being well enough known to you; seeing at Berwick it was conceived upon debate of that Point, That your having Power to Indict a new one within the Year, would save that Dispute, which you are by all means to eschew. But if this will not give satisfaction, you are by no means to give your Assent to any such Act, nor to ratify the same in Parliament.

The Article in your Instructions, which is only that the Covenant, 1580. shall be subscribed, you must have an especial care of, and how you proceed therein; That the Bond be the same which was in our Father's Time, Mutatis mutandis; and that you give your assent no other waies to the interpretations thereof, than may stand with our future Intentions well known to you; nor is the same otherwise to be Ratified in Parliament.

Thus you have our Pleasure fully signified in every particular of your Letter; which you will find no waies contrary to our Resolution taken at Berwick, and our Instructions given to you there. But if the madness of our Subjects be such, that they will not rest satisfied with what we have given you Power and Authority to condescend to, which notwithstanding all their Insolencies we shall allow you to make good to them, we take God to witness, That what misery soever shall fall to the Country hereafter, it is no Fault of ours, but their own procurement. And hereupon we do Command you, That if you cannot compose this Business according to our Instructions, and what we have now written, that you Prorogue the Parliament till the

the next Spring; and that you think upon some course how you may make publickly known to all our Subjects, what we had given you Power to condescend to. And because it is not improbable that this may produce a present Rupture, you are to warn and assist Rushwien for the Defence of the Castle of Edenburgh; and to take in general the like care of all our Houses and Forts in that Kingdom; & likewise to advertise all such who are affected to our Service, that timoussly they may secure themselves; and so we bid you heartily farewell.

And his Majesty being ever careful of the concerns of Christ, writes the following Letter to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, to be communicated to the rest of his Brethren.

Right trusty and well-beloved Counsellor, and Reverend Father in God, We greet you well.

YOur Letter, and the rest of the Bishops (sent by the Elect of Cathness) to my Lord of Canterbury, hath been by him communicated to us: And after serious consideration of the Contents thereof, we have thought fit our Self to return this Answer to you for Direction, according to our Promise, which you are to communicate to the rest of your Brethren.

We do in part approve of what you have advised, concerning the prorogating of the Assembly and Parliament, and must acknowledge it to be grounded upon Reason enough, were Reason only to be thought on in this Business: but considering the present state of our Affairs, and that we have promised in the Articles of Pacification, we may not (as we conceive) without great prejudice to our Self and Service condescend thereunto; wherefore we are resolved (rather necessitated) to hold the Assembly and Parliament at the Time and Place appointed; and for that end we have nominated the Earl of Traquair our Commissioner: to whom we have given Instructions, not only how to carry himself at the same, but a Charge also to have a special care of your Lordships, and those of the Inferiour Clergy, who have suffered for their Duty to God and Obedience to our Commands. And we do hereby assure you, That it shall be still one of our chiefest Studies, how to rectifie and Establish the Government of that Church aright, and to repair your Losses, which we desire you to be most confident of.

As for your Meeting to treat of the Affairs of the Church, we do not see at this Time how that can be done; or within our Kingdom of Scotland, we cannot promise you any place of Safety; and in any other of our Dominions we cannot hold it convenient, all things considered; wherefore we conceive that the best way would be for your Lordships to give in, by way of Protestation or Remonstrance, your Exceptions against this Assembly and Parliament to our Commissioner, which may be sent by any mean man, so he be trusty, and deliver it at his entring into the Church; but we would not have it to be either Read or Argued in this Meeting, where nothing but partiality is to be expected, but to be represented to us by him; which we promise to take so into Consideration, as becometh a Prince sensible of his own Interest and Honour, joined with the Equity of your Desires; and you may rest secure, that though perhaps we may give way for the present to that which will be prejudicial both to the Church and our own Government, yet we shall not leave thinking in time how to remedy both.

We must likewise intimate unto you, That we are so far from conceiving it expedient for you, or any of my Lords of the Clergy to be present at this Meeting, as we do absolutely discharge your going thither; and for your absence, this shall be to you, and every of you, a sufficient Warrant: In the interim, your best course will be to remain in our Kingdom of England, till such time as you receive our further Order, where we shall provide for your Substantance; though not in that measure as we could wish, yet in such a way as you shall not be in want.

Thus you have our Pleasure briefly signified unto you, which we doubt not but you will take in good part: You cannot but know, that what we do in this, we are necessitated to, so we bid you farewell.

Whitehall, Aug. 6.

And in obedience to the Kings command the Bishops of Scotland presented their Declinator following to the Lord Commissioner the Earl of Traquair.

Whereas his Majesty, out of his surpassing Goodness, was pleased to Indict another National Assembly for rectifying the present Disorders in the Church, and repealing the Acts concluded in the late pretended Assembly at Glasgow against all Right and Reason, charging and commanding us the Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of Scotland, and others that have Place therein, to meet at Edenburgh the twelfth of August Instant, in hopes that by a peaceable Treaty and Conference, Matters should have been brought to a wished Peace and Unity: and that now we perceive all these hopes disappointed, the Authors of the present Schism and Division proceeding in their wonted Courses of Wrong and Violence, as hath appeared in their presumptuous Protestation against the said Indiction; and in the business they have made throughout the Country, for electing Ministers and Laicks of their Faction to make up the said Assembly; whereby it is evident that the same or worse Effects must needs ensue upon the present Meeting, than were seen to follow the former. We therefore the Underscribers, for discharge of our Duties to God, and to the Church committed to our Government under our Sovereign Lord the King's Majesty, Protest, as in our former Declinator, as well for our Selves, as in the Name of the Church of Scotland, and so many as shall adhere to this our Protestation, That the present pretended Assembly be holden and reputed null in Law, as consisting and made up partly of Laical Persons that have no Office in the Church of God, partly of Refractory, Schismatical, and Perjured Ministers, that contrary to their Oaths and Subscriptions, from which no human Power could absolve them, have filthily resiled, and so made themselves to the present and future Ages most infamous, and that no Church-man be bound to appear before them, nor any Citation, Admonition, Certification, or Act whatsoever proceeding from the said pretended Meeting, be prejudicial to the Jurisdiction, Liberties, Privileges, Rents, Possessions, and Benefices belonging to the Church, nor to any Acts of former General Assemblies, Acts of Council or Parliament made in favour thereof; but to the contrary, that all such Acts and Deeds, and every one of them, are and shall be reputed Unjust, Partial, and Illegal, with all that may follow thereupon.

And this our Protestation we humbly desire may be presented to his Majesty, whom we do humbly supplicate, according to the Practice of Christian Emperours in Ancient Time, to Convene the Clergy of his whole Dominions, for remedying of the present Schism and Division, unto whose Judgment and Determination we promise to submit our Selves and all our Proceedings.

Given under our Hands, at Morpeth, Berwick, and Holy-Island, the 10th and 11th of August, 1639.

In pursuance of the forgoing Pacification a General Assembly sate at Edinburgh in the Month August; the Principal matters Transacted there were (for you may know the Assembly was to prepare the preliminaries that were after to pass into Laws, if by any means the Royal assent could be procured thereto.)

First. Mr. George Graham's, Bishop of Orkney and of the Illes, his Abjuration of Episcopacy, having, for wordly respects, embraced the same, that it had no warrant from the Word of God, that it drew along with it many evil consequences more particularly here in the Kirk of Scotland, and more particularly for that it had been abjured by the whole Kirk there by vertue of the National Oath, and yet more particularly by the Acts and Consultations of the late Assembly holden at Glasgow 1638. &c. In testimony of all which he subscribed his hand, &c.

Secondly, An Act containing the causes and remedies of the by-gone evils of the Kirk; with Observations Marginal thereon.

The King's Majesty having graciously declared, That it is his Royal Will and Pleasure, that all Questions about Religion, and Matters Ecclesiastical, be determined by Assemblies of the Kirk; having also by publick Proclamation indicted this Free National Assembly, for settling the Distraction of this Kirk, and for establishing a perfect Peace, against such Divisions and Disorders as have been sore displeasing to his Majesty, and grievous to all his good Subjects.

And now his Majesties Commissioner, John Earl of Traquair, intrusted and authorized with a full Commission, being present, and sitting in this Assembly, now fully Convened, and orderly Constitute in all the Members thereof, according to the Order of this Kirk, having at large declared his Majesties Zeal to the Reformed Religion, and his Royal Care and Tender

Affection to this Kirk, where his Majesty had both his Birth and Baptism, his great displeasure at the manifold Distractions and Divisions of this Kirk and Kingdom, and his desires to have all our Wounds perfectly cured, with a fair and fatherly Hand: And although in the way approved by this Kirk, trial hath been taken in former Assemblies before, from the Kirk-Registers, to our full satisfaction; Yet the Commissioner's Grace making particular enquiry from the Members of the Assembly, now solemnly convened, concerning the real and true Causes of so many and great Evils as this time past had so sore troubled the Peace of this Kirk and Kingdom, it was represented to his Majesties Commissioner by this Assembly, that besides many other, the main and most material Causes were;

First, The pressing of this Kirk by the Prelates with a Service-book, or Book of Common-Prayer, without Warrant or Direction from the Kirk; and containing, besides the Popish Frame thereof, divers Popish Errors and Ceremonies, and the Seeds of manifold gross Superstitions and Idolatry, with a Book of Canons, without Warrant or Direction from the General Assembly, establishing a Tyrannical Power over the Kirk in the Persons of Bishops, and overthrowing the whole Discipline and Government of the Kirk by Assemblies; with a Book of Consecration and Ordination, without Warrant or Authority Civil or Ecclesiastical, appointing Offices in the House of God, which are not warranted by the Word of God, and repugnant to the Discipline and Acts of the Kirk; and with the High-Commission, erected without consent of the Kirk, and subverting the Jurisdiction and ordinary Judicatories of this Kirk, and giving to Persons meerly Ecclesiastical, the power of both Swords; and to Persons meerly Civil, the power of the Keys and Kirk Censures.

A Second Cause was the Articles of Perth, viz. The Observation of Festival Daies, Kneeling at the Communion, Confirmation, Administration of the Sacraments in private Places, which are brought in by a null Assembly, and are contrary to the Confessions of Faith, as it was meant and subscribed Anno 1580. and divers times since, and to the Order and Constitutions of this Kirk. Observations thereupon.

Thirdly, The changing of the Government of the Kirk from the Assemblies of the Kirk, to the Persons of some Kirk-men, usurping Priority and power over their Brethren, by the way and under the name of Episcopal Government, against the Confession of Faith in 1580. against the Order set down in the Book of Policy, and against the Intention and Constitution of this Kirk from the beginning. It was ratified by Parliament.

Fourthly, The Civil Places and Power of Kirk-men, their sitting in Session, Council, and Exchequer; their riding, sitting, and voting in Parliament; and their sitting in the Bench as Justices of Peace: Which according to the Constitutions of this Kirk are incompatible with their Spiritual Sanction, lifting them up above their Brethren in worldly Pomp, and do tend to the hindrance of the Ministry. A Spurious piece and never ratified by Parliament. † Never prohibited by any Act of Parliament. (a) These were confirmed by Parliaments and never repealed, and now first most illegally called in question without authority of Parliament.

Fifthly, The keeping and authorizing corrupt Assemblies at Linlithgow 1606, and 1608; at Glasgow, 1610; at Aberdeen, 1616; at St. Andrews, 1617. at Perth, 1618. (a) Which are all null and unlawful, as being called and constituted quite contrary to the Order and Constitutions of this

'this Kirk, received and practised ever since the Reformation of Religion; and withal labouring to introduce Novations into this Kirk, against the Order and Religion established.

* Is this Assembly without the King's consent of more validity than six former Assemblies confirm'd by King and Parliament?

'A Sixth Cause, Is the want of lawful and free General Assemblies, rightly constitute of Pastors, Doctors, and Elders, yearly or oftner, pro re nata, according to the Liberty of this Kirk, expressed in the Book of Policy, and acknowledged in the Act of Parliament, 1592. After which * the whole Assembly in one heart and voice did declare, That these and such other, proceeding from the neglect and breach of the National Covenant of this Kirk and Kingdom made in 1580. have been indeed the true and main Causes of all our Evils and Distractions: And therefore ordain, according to the Constitutions of the General Assemblies of this Kirk, and upon the grounds respective above specified, That the aforesaid Service-Book, Books of Canons, and Ordination, and the High-Commission, be still rejected: that the Articles of Perth be no more practised; that Episcopal Government, and the Civil Places and Power of Kirk-men, be holden still as unlawful in this Kirk; That the above-named pretended Assemblies, at Linlithgow, 1606. and 1608. at Glasgow 1610. at Aberdeen 1616. at St. Andrews 1617. at Perth 1618. be hereafter accounted as null, and of none effect. And that for preservation of Religion, and preventing all such Evils in time coming, General Assemblies right-ly constitute, as the proper and competent Judge of all Matters Ecclesiastical, hereafter be kept yearly, and oftner, pro re nata, as occasion and necessity shall require; the necessity of these occasional Assemblies being first remonstrated to his Majesty by humble Supplication: As also, that Kirk-Sessions, Presbyteries, and Synodal Assemblies, be constitute and observed according to the Order of this Kirk.

After the voicing of the Act (anent the Causes of our by-gone Evils) his Majesties Commissioner consented [verbally] to the said Act, and promised to give in to the Clerk in Writ, the Declaration of his Consent, and that he should ratifie this Act in the ensuing Parliament.

Thirdly, An Act for the keeping of the Lord's Day, by prohibiting the going of Milnes, Salt-pans, Salmon Fishing, or any such like labour, and accordingly the Act of the Assembly holden at Holy-wood-House thereanent was revived.

Fourthly, The Supplication of that Assembly to the Lord Commissioner against a Book call'd the large Declaration (whereat they were much troubled, and with good reason for that therein their actions were laid open and exposed to their perpetual Infamy to the whole World) that the said Book might be called in, and that the suspected Author Dr. Bolcanqual, Dean of Durham, a Native of their Kingdom, might be sent thither to abide his Trial [which would have been more than Ordeal] &c. Herewith the Lord Commissioner said he would acquaint his Majesty.

Fifthly, The Supplication of the Assembly to the Lord Commissioner, and the Lords of the Secret Council.

WE the General Assembly, considering with all humble and thankful acknowledgment, the many recent Favours bestowed upon us by his Majesty; and that there resteth nothing for crowning his Majesties incomparable Goodness towards us, but that all the Members of this Kirk and Kingdom be joined in one and the same Confession and Covenant with God, with the King's Majesty, and amongst our selves. And conceiving the main Let and Impediment to this so good a Work, and so much wished by all, to have been the Informations made to his Majesty, of our Intentions to shake off Civil and Dutiful Obedience due to Sovereignty, and to diminish the King's Greatness and Authority: And being most willing and desirous to remove this, and all such Impediments which may hinder and impede so full and perfect an Union, and for the clearing of our Loyalty, We in our own Names, and in the Names of all the rest of the Subjects and Congregations whom we represent, do now in all humility represent to your Grace, his Majesties Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majesties most Honourable Privy-Council, and declares before God and the World, that We never had nor have any thought of withdrawing our Selves from that humble and dutiful Obedience to his Majesty, and to his Government; which by the descent, and under the Reign of one hundred and seven Kings, is most cheerfully acknowledged by us and our Predecessors; and that we never had, nor have any intention or desire to attempt any thing that may tend to the dishonour of God, or the diminution of the King's Greatness and Authority: But on the contrary, acknowledging our quietness, Stability, and Happiness, to depend upon the safety of the King's Majesties Person, and maintenance of his Greatness and Royal Authority, who is God's Vicegerent set over us, for the maintenance of Religion, and ministration of Justice, we have solemnly sworn, and do swear, not only our mutual Concurrence and Assistance for the Cause of Religion, and to the uttermost of our power, with our Means and Lives, to stand to the defence of our Dread Sovereign, his Person and Authority, In preservation and defence of the true Religion, Liberties, and Laws of this Kirk and Kingdom; but also in every Cause which may concern his Majesties Honour, shall accordingly to the Laws of this Kingdom, and the Duties of good Subjects, concurr with our Friends and Followers, in quiet manner, or in Arms, as we shall be required of his Majesty, his Council, or any having his Authority. And therefore being most desirous to clear our selves of all Imputation of this kind, and following the laudable Example of our Predecessors, 1589. do most humbly supplicate your Grace, his Majesties Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majesties most Honourable Privy-Council, to enjoin by Act of Council, that the Confession and Covenant, which, as a Testimony of our Fidelity to God, and Loyalty to our King, we have subscribed, be subscribed by all his Majesties Subjects, of what rank and quality soever.

Not otherwise if they did imagine their Religion or Liberties invaded.

Anno

1639. The King's Majesties Commissioners Declarations.

THE which day his Majesties Commissioner, and Lords of Council, after the receiving of the Supplication of the General Assembly, anent the subscribing of the Covenant, having returned to the Assembly, his Majesties Commissioner, in Name of the Council, declared, That he had received the Supplication of the Assembly, desiring that the Covenant might receive the force of an Act of Council, to be subscribed by all his Majesties Subjects, that they had found the Desire so fair and reasonable, that they conceived themselves bound in duty to grant the same, and thereupon have made an Act of Council to that effect; and that there rested now the Act of Assembly. And that he himself was so fully satisfied, that he came now as his Majesties Commissioner, to consent fully unto it; and that he was most willing that it should be Enact here in this Assembly, to oblige all his Majesties Subjects to subscribe the said Covenant, with the Assemblies Explanation. And because there was a third Thing desired, his Subscription as the King's Commissioner, unto the Covenant, which he behoved to do, with a Declaration in Writ; and he declared as a Subject, he should subscribe the Covenant as strictly as any, with the Assemblies Declaration: But as his Majesties Commissioner, in his Name behoved to prefix to his Subscription, the Declaration following, which no Scots Subjects should subscribe, or have the benefit of, no nor himself as Earl of Traquair; the Tenour whereof follows.

SEeing this Assembly, according to the laudable Form and Custom heretofore kept in the like Cases, have in an humble and dutiful way, supplicate to us his Majesties Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majesties most Honourable Privy-Council, That the Covenant, with the Explanation of this Assembly, might be subscribed. And to that effect, that all the Subjects of this Kingdom, by Act of Council, be required to do the same; and that therein, for vindicating themselves from all suspicions of Disloyalty, or derogating from the Greatness and Authority of our Dread Sovereign, have therewith added a Clause, whereby this Covenant is declared one in substance with that which was subscribed by his Majesties Father (of blessed Memory) 1580, 1581, 1590, and often since renewed. Therefore as his Majesties Commissioner, for the full satisfaction of the Subjects, and for settling a perfect Peace in Church and Kingdom, do, according to my foresaid Declaration and Subscription, subjoined to the Act of this Assembly, of the Date the seventeenth of this Instant, allow and consent that the Covenant be subscribed throughout all this Kingdom. In Witness whereof I have subscribed the Premises.

Like as his Majesties Commissioner Car. 15.
read and gave in the Declaration following, of his consent to the Act of the Assembly, August 17, anent
the Causes of our By-gone Evils.

John Earl of Traquair, his Majesties Commissioner in this present Assembly, do in his Majesties Name declare, That notwithstanding of his Majesties own Inclination, and many other grave and weighty Considerations, yet such is his Majesties incomparable Goodness, that for settling the present Distractions, and giving full satisfaction to the Subject, He doth allow, like as I his Majesties Commissioner do consent to the foresaid Act, and have subscribed the Premises.

Like as his Majesties Commissioner read and gave in the Declaration following.

IT is alwaies hereby declared, by me his Majesties Commissioner, That the Practice of the Premises, prohibited within this Kirk and Kingdom of Scotland, shall never bind nor infer Censure against the Practices without the Kingdom. Which when the Commissioner desired to be Insert in the Register of the Kirk, and the Moderator, in the Name of the Assembly, refused to give Warrant for such practice, as not agreeable with a good Conscience. His Grace urged, that it should be recorded at least that he made such a Declaration, whatsoever was the Assemblies Judgment in the contrary; and so it is to be understood to be insert here only recitative.

Act ordaining the Subscription of the Confession of Faith and Covenant, with the Assemblies Declaration.

THE General Assembly considering the great Happiness which may flow from a full and perfect Union of this Kirk and Kingdom, by joining of all in one and the same Covenant with God, with the King's Majesty, and amongst our Selves, having by our great Oath declared the Uprightness and Loyalty of our Intentions in all our Proceedings; and having withal supplicated his Majesties High Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majesties Honourable Privy-Council, to enjoin by Act of Council, all the Lieges in time coming to subscribe the Confession of Faith and Covenant, which is a Testimony of our Fidelity to God, and our Loyalty to our King, We have subscribed. And seeing his Majesties High Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majesties Honourable Privy-Council, have granted the desire of our Supplication, ordaining by Civil Authority, all his Majesties Lieges in time coming, to subscribe the foresaid Covenant that our Union may be the more full and perfect, We by our Act and Constitution Ecclesiastical, do approve the foresaid Covenant, in all the Heads and Clauses thereof, and Ordains of new under all Ecclesiastical Censure, That all the Masters of Universities, Colledges, and Schools; all Scholars at the passing of their Degrees; all Persons suspect of Papistry, or any other Error; and finally, all the Members of this Kirk and Kingdom subscribe the same, with these words prefixed to their Subscription. The Article of this Covenant, which was at the first Subscription referred, the Determination of the General Assembly being determined, and that thereby the Five Articles of Perth; the Government of the Kirk by Bishops; the Civil Places and Power of the Kirk upon the Reasons and Grounds contained in the Act of the General Assembly, declared to be unlawful within this Kirk, We subscribe, according to the Determination aforesaid; and ordains the Covenant, with the Declaration, to be insert in the Registers of the Assembly of this Kirk, General, Provincial, and Presbyterial, ad perpetuam rei memoriam; and in all humility humbly supplicates his Majesties High Commissioner, and the Honourable Estates of Parliament, by their Authority to ratifie and enjoyn the same under all Civil Pains, which will tend to the Glory of God, Preservation of Religion, the King's Majesties Honour, and perfect Peace of this Kirk and Kingdom.

Sess. 24. 30 Aug. a meridie.

The Assemblies Supplication of the King's Majesty.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE your Majesties most humble and loyal Subjects, the Commissioners from all the parts of this your Majesties ancient and native Kingdom, and Members of the National Assembly, convened at Edinburgh by your Majesties special Indiction, and honoured with the presence of your Majesties High Commissioner, have been waiting for a day of Rejoycing, and of solemn Thanksgiving to be rendred to God by this whole Kirk and Kingdom, for giving us a King so Just and Religious, that it is not only lawful for us to be Christians under your Majesties Government, which sometime hath been the greatest praise of great Princes, but also that it hath pleased your Gracious Majesty to make known, That it is your Royal Will and Pleasure, that all Matters Ecclesiastical be determined in free National Assemblies, and Matters Civil in Parliament; which is a most noble and ample expression of your Majesties Justice; and we trust shall be a powerful means of our common Happiness under your Majesties most blessed Reign. In the mean while we do most humbly from our hearts, bless your Majesty for that Happiness already begun in the late Assembly at Edinburgh; in the Proceedings whereof, next under God, we have laboured to approve ourselves unto your Majesties Vicegerent, as if your Majesties Eyes had been upon us; which was the desire of our Souls, and would have been the Matter of our full rejoycing; and do still continue your Majesties most humble Suppliants for your Majesties Civil Sanction and Ratification of the Constitutions of the Assembly in Parliament; that your Majesties Prince's Power, and the Ecclesiastical Authority joyning in one, the mutual Imbracements of Religion and Justice, of Truth and Peace, may be seen in this Land, which shall be to us as a Resurrection from the Dead; and shall make us, being not only so far recovered, but also revived, to fill Heaven and Earth with our Praises, and to pray that King Charles may be more and more blessed, and his Throne established before the Lord forever.

Car. 15.

And the Assembly (without asking the Commissioners leave) appoint the next Assembly to convene at Aberdeen, the last Tuesday of July next, in the Year 1640.

And now we come to the Parliament which met in August, at the time appointed, where the Covenanters deny to his Majesty the most essential and inherent Prerogatives of his Crown; as that no Coyn should be medled with, but by advice of Parliament; a Prerogative peculiar to the Crown, and in any other person High Treason in all Kingdoms in the World: No Stranger to be admitted to command any of the King's Towns, Cities, or Castles, but by advice of Parliament; as if the King had been an Infant, or not an absolute Prince. That no Honour should be given by the King in Scotland to any Stranger, but to such who had a competency of Land there; and this they did to cry Quit with the English Nobility, who had formerly petitioned against the Scots. That no Lieutenantcy or Justiciary should be granted by the King to any, but for a limited time; whereas many of themselves, at that instant, had Hereditary Rights Judiciary, &c. and now they will limit their Prince for the future. Lastly, they protested against the precedency of the Lord Treasurer and Lord Privy Seal, for which there was no Act of Parliament: Nor for the Chancellor neither. The King is the Fountain of Honour; and 'in the first Branch of his Crown to distribute Honours and Precedency as he pleaseth.

In the next place they strove to alter the Constitutions of Parliament, and frame of Government, as appears by their first Act, which was, that nothing done, or to be done in Parliament, should be valid, except the form of electing the Lords of the Articles (heretofore observed) were altered, contrary to former Parliaments, and the power of the Articles, which have been ever since King David Bruce, more then 300 years. (For the Lords of the Articles prepare all business, bring them to the Parliament, as appears, the fourth Parliament of King James the sixth, cap. 218. and indeed for eschewing impertinent confusion, all Propositions and Motions are to be delivered to the Clerk Register, and by him presented to the Lords of Articles, which now they will not endure.) They urge to confound the third Estate in Parliament, of Bishops, formerly called the first Estate, which King James the sixth, and all his Predecessors before and since the Reformation, were careful to preserve, as appears Anno 1560. when all Church Jurisdiction in the persons of Bishops is alledged to be dissolved. And in Anno 1587. when all Temporalities of Benefices were annexed to the Crown, the Clergy retained still their Vote in Parliament, and represented the third Estate; see the first Parliament of James the sixth, 1587, 1597, 1609. Nay, by a special Act, the eighth Parliament of King James the sixth, it is declared Treason to impugn the three Estates, or to procure the Innovation of the Power and Authority 1639. Authority of the same three Estates, or any of them; and so these men are thereby now guilty of Treason. And to the Act of Oblivion, they seek to justify themselves, and all their former proceedings, and urge an Act of Justification to be recorded in Parliament, which in truth is contrary to the nature of an Act of Oblivion, as appears in that Act of Oblivion 1563. And whereas by their Article of Pacification, they were to restore to the Subject, Liberty, Lands, Goods, &c. the binding part of the Act, never intended (it seems) to restore Bishops and Ministers, &c. They urge that all Scots assistant to the King shall be made equal, if not more liable to the defraying of their pretended charge in the late Expedition; so that in this point, the King must not only justify his Subjects Rebellion, but contribute his consent to pay their wages.

His Majesty having knowledge of these Extravagancies, commands Traquair, his Commissioner, to prorogue the Parliament till the 14th of November following; which was done accordingly: But he had instruction from his Majesty, That if they should presume to sit still, he should discharge them upon pain of High Treason; but if they should yield obedience thereto, his Majesty would be graciously pleased to admit such persons to his presence, to represent their Desires as they should send. Against this Command they protest, and style it a Declaration of the Parliaments 18. Decemb, 1639.

Whereas John Earl of Traquair, his Majesties Commissioner, having closed the Assembly, and sitting in Parliament with them, did now take upon him, without their Consent, or Offence given, to Prorogue the Parliament upon a private Warrant; this being a new and unusual way, without President in this Kingdom heretofore, once being convened, have continuation by the express consent of the Estates. We therefore declare, That any Prorogation made by the Commissioner's Grace, without consent of Parliament, shall be of no Force, and the Actors to be censured in Parliament. And knowing that Declarations have been published against us, and our Proceedings made odious to such as do not consider that we are not private Subjects, but a sitting Parliament: We therefore declare, That whatsoever we might do lawfully in sitting still, yet we have resolved for the present to make Remonstrance to his Majesty, and some of each Estate to remain still at Edinburgh to attend his gracious Answer. And if it shall happen that our malicious Enemies do notwithstanding prevail against us, we profess our selves free of the Outrages and Insolencies that may be committed; in the mean time we do our best to prevent Confusion and Misery.

And the Committee appointed to expect the King's Answer, were, the Earls of Lothian and Dalhousie; the Lords Yester, Balmerino, Cranston, and Napier; for the Barons, the Commissioners of the Lothians, Fife, and Tweedale; the Burroughs named the Commissioners of Edinburgh, Lithgow, Steyning, Haddington, and Dunbar, to attend at Edinburgh the return of his Majesties Answer.

Their Deputies, the Earl of Dunfermling and the Lord Lowdon, coming to Whitehall, but without warrant from the King's Commissioner Traquair, were refused Audience, and commanded home again: After this the Covenanters send their Petition to his Majesty for Audience, by one Cunningham, which his Majesty granted; and accordingly the foregoing Lords, together with Sir William Douglass and Berkley of Derreyn, were commanded to attend the King.

In this Interval his Majesty commands Traquair to come to Court, and to give an account of the proceedings in the late Assembly and Parliament, with whom certainly his Majesty was much displeased, for that he had subscribed the Covenant offered him by the Covenanters, he being his Majesties Commissioner, without his leave or approbation, and had permitted likewise the Lords of the Secret Council to do the like. Traquair to rid himself of this trouble, and to obtain his Majesties good Opinion, lays open to his Majesty the secret Practices and Intentions of the Scots, adviseth him to invade Scotland in Person, that there was no other way to deal with those Scots: Counsel perhaps plausible enough; in which, 'tis said, he had the assistance and concurrence of Hamilton, both of whom the Covenanters hereafter hated, and termed them Incendiaries; however, Traquair performed (be his Instructions what they will) one good piece of Service, in delivering to his Majesty a Letter which he had got from the Covenanters, written to the French King, desiring his Protection and Assistance. Absolute Treason by the Laws of Scotland, for any of his Subjects to treat with a Forreign Prince without his knowledge or permission; but of this Letter more hereafter: Notwithstanding all Traquair's endeavours to beget in his Majesty a good Opinion of his Fidelity, many persons did not stick openly to lay no less than Treason to his Charge, more particularly the Archbishop of St. Andrews, the Bishops of Ross and Breichen, Peers of Scotland, subscribed the Charge sub pena talionis, according to the Laws of Scotland, if they should not make good the Matters they accused him with: But this matter fell to the ground by reason of the Troubles which ensued.

It may not perhaps be amiss in respect frequent mention hath been made in this Collection of the Articles of Perth, to give the Reader an account of them: They were made 1618. and were these following:

First, Kneeling in the taking of the Communion, and out of the Ministers hands, whereas it was before taken sitting on their breech, and the Bread taken by themselves out of a Bason, and the Cup from one another, as if they were drinking to others, and the Beadle filling up the Cup, as it was emptied, out of a Flagon, which he filled in the Belfrey, as it was spent.

Secondly, Private Communion to sick persons that were not able to come to Church, to be given with three or four Communicants besides.

Thirdly, Private Baptism, in case of necessity that the Child is so sick, or weak, that he cannot be brought to Church without eminent danger of death, and to declare it to the Congregation the next Sunday thereafter.

Fourthly, Confirmation of Children after the Primitive way, which was, the bringing of them at eight, nine, or ten years of age, to the Bishop of the Diocese, to give him account of their Christian Faith, and receive his encouragement, commendation and benediction, to make them continue careful in it, as they were

Car. 15.

Anno 1639. carefully catechised by their Parents, and Parish Priests; and if any were not well instructed in their Faith, the Bishop sends them back without blessing, and some rebuke, to be better instructed.

Fifthly, Festival days, only five to be kept, viz. The Days of our Saviour's Birth, Passion, Resurrection, Ascension, and Descent of the Holy Spirit.

Now let any man of reason judge, Whether any of these could truly fall under the Censure of Popery; and if any man of any Reason or Learning would not rather follow the practice of the purest Primitive times in these, as likewise in those that were condemned for Arminianism by the Council of Dort, than new Calvinistical, Presbyterian Inventions, contrary to all Antiquity.

If you desire to be further informed there-anent, see the four and twenty Demands or Questions of the six Divines of Aberdeen, and their Replies and Duplies never sufficiently answered; against Alexander Henderson, David Dickson, and Andrew Gaunt, the three leading Covenanting Ministers.

We have mentioned the Articles of Pacification subscribed in the King's Camp, which were afterwards falsified by the Scots, at their return home, that they might the better satisfy their own people. The false Paper was burnt here by order of Council, by the hand of the Common Hangman in Smithfield; and hereafter followeth.

The Scots false Paper which was burnt.

AS for the Preface and Conclusion of his Majesty's last Declaration, although it contained hard expressions of the Subjects in Scotland, yet his Majesty declared, that he had no such opinion of them, but required this Paper to stand for his credit, and for a point of honour with Foreign Nations, and required they should not stand with him for words and expressions, so be that they obtained the Matter.

Secondly, As for his calling the late Assembly, pretended; seeing the Subjects of Scotland professed they would never pass from the said Assembly and Decrees thereof, his Majesty professed, as he did not acknowledge that Assembly further than as it was registrate His Declaration, so would he not desire the Subjects to pass from the same.

Thirdly, Concerning the Constitution of the Assembly, it was shewn to his Majesty that none could be Members of the Assembly, but such as had a Commission, viz. two or three Ministers from every Presbytery, with a ruling Elder, one from each Burrough and University, and his Majesty's Commissioner. His Majesty contended that his Assessors had Vote, and upon an Expression in his Majesty's Declaration, that referred to some Reasons contained in former Proclamations, which were totally against the lawfulness of Ruling Elders; It was desired that according to the customs of this Kirk, all Controversies arising should be remitted to the Assembly it self. His Majesty had some Expressions craving these to be remitted to himself; but being told that it was against the Constitutions of the Kirk, to have any other Judge but the Voicer of the Assembly, where his Majesty or his Commissioner should be present, and give the first voices. It was concluded, that the word free Assembly in his Majesty's Declaration, did import the freedom in judging all questions arising there, concerning Constitution, Members or Matter.

Observations. Then the King had no Negative Voice, only one Affirmative, as the meanest Ruling Elder had.

By the second Article of Pacification, all Acts were to be delivered presently to the King.

The fourth and seventh Articles of Pacification are absolute, and the King accordingly performed the fourth, but the Covenanters invented a backdoor to elude the seventh, contrary to the words of it.

Fourthly, Concerning the restitution of the Castles, as the Subjects did it freely, so did they express, that what might concern the safety of the Countrey they referred to the time of the Parliament, at which time they should signify their desires by Petition to his Majesty. As also they told, it had cost much Charges in fortifying and keeping thereof; the representation whereof to his Majesty they referred to that time.

Fifthly, Concerning the restitution of Persons Goods and Houses required by his Majesty, it was promised, providing that the great Sums contracted to the publick were repaid in an equal way by all, which behoved to be done either by Commission from his Majesty, or by Parliament. And when it was objected, That much Goods were already spent, the King answered, That as for Goods or Ammunition that was spent, they could not be restored, but these that are extant must be rendered.

Sixthly, His Majesty not allowing of the late Assembly, for the Reasons contained in the several Proclamations, being excepted against as a Declaration of his Majesty's Judgment against Ruling Elders, which prejudged the right Constitution of a free Assembly, his Majesty after a full Hearing deleted that Clause.

Seventhly, That part of his Majesty's Declaration which bears, that no other Oath be exacted of Jurants then that which is contained in the Act of Parliament; as also that Clause bearing, that the pretended Bishops, &c. shall be censurable by the General Assembly, being excepted against as presupposing and importing the continuance of Episcopacy, which we could not acknowledge as being incompatible with the Confession of Faith, and Constitution of the Kirk. His Majesty was pleased to delete both these Clauses.

Eighthly, And it being with all humility and instance pressed, Saturday, June 15. that his Majesty would satisfy that main desire of his Subjects, by declaring, that his Majesty would quit Episcopacy, did answer, That it was not sought in our Desires. And when it was replied, That our first desire to have the Acts of our General Assembly ratified, imported the same, His Majesty acknowledged it to be so, and averred, That he did not refuse it, but would advise till Munday the seventeenth. At which time his Majesty being pressed to give some signification of quitting Episcopacy, and it being shewn to his Majesty, that if he would labour to maintain Episcopacy, it would breed a miserable Schism in this Kirk, and make such a rupture and division in this Kingdom, as would prove incurable: And if his Majesty would let the Kirk and Country

Country be freed of them, his Majesty would receive as hearty and dutiful obedience as ever any Prince received of a People. His Majesty answered, That he could not prelimit and forestall his—voice, but had appointed a free Assembly which might judge of all Ecclesiastical Matters, the Constitutions whereof he promised to ratify in the ensuing Parliament.

His Majesties Declaration gives us the true Articles, and hereafter followeth.

That though we cannot condescend to ratify and approve the Act of the pretended General Assembly at Glasgow, for many grave and weighty considerations, which have happened both before and since, much importing the security and honour of that true Monarchical Government lineally descended upon us; yet we are pleased to confirm and make good whatever Our Hamilton Commissioner granted. And that all Matters Ecclesiastical shall be determined by the Assemblies of the Kirk, and Matters Civil by the Parliament, and other inferiour Judicatories established by Law, which Assembly shall be kept once a year, or as shall be agreed upon by the General Assembly, and Our Commissioner for the time being.

That a free and General Assembly be kept at Edinburgh the sixth of August next, where we intend, God willing, to be personally present, and thereafter a Parliament the twentieth of August, and there an Act of Oblivion to be passed.

And that upon their disarming and disbanding of their Forces, dissolving and discharging all their pretended Tables and Conventicles, and restoring to the King all his Castles, Forts, and Ammunition, as also his Royal Honours, and to every one of his good Subjects their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatsoever, taken and detained since the late pretended General Assembly; the King will presently thereafter recall his Fleet, and retire his Forces, and cause restitution of their Ships and Goods since the aforesaid time.

And since hereby it appears, His Majesty intends not any alteration of Religion or Laws, He expects their dutiful obedience. And he takes God to witness, That whatever Calamities shall ensue, by his necessitated suppressing of the Insolent Disobedience, is not occasioned by him, but by their own procurement.

The Articles of Pacification were these, the Seventeenth of June, 1639.

1. The Forces of Scotland to be disbanded and dissolved, within twenty four hours after the agreement of the King's Declaration.

2. The King's Castles for Ammunition and Royal Honours to be delivered after the said Publication, so soon as he should send to receive them.

3. His Ships to depart presently after the delivery of the Castles, and in the mean time no interruption of Trade.

4. All Persons Goods and Ships detained by the King, since the first of November, to be restored.

5. No Meetings, Treatings, Consultations, or Convocations of any of the Scots, but such as are warranted by Act of Parliament.

6. All Fortifications to desist, and to be remitted to the King's Pleasure.

7. To restore to every one their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatever, taken and retained from them by whatsoever means, since the first of November last.

The Eighteenth of June, the Declaration was signed by the King, and these Articles by the Scots, with this Submission.

IN Obedience to his Majesties Royal Commands, We shall upon Thursday next, the Twentieth of June, dismiss our Forces, and immediately thereafter deliver His Majesties Castles, &c. and shall ever in all things carry our selves like humble and loyal Subjects.

Signed,

His Majesty much resenting the falsification of the Treaty, published his Proclamation, called an Act of State, as followeth.

Whereas a Paper containing many Falshoods, and tending much to the Dishonour of his Majesties late Proceedings in the Pacification given to his Subjects of Scotland, hath ben dispersed in divers parts of this Kingdom; whereupon an Act of Council hath ben made in these words ensuing:

On Sunday the fourth of August, 1639: His Majesty being in Council, was pleased to acquaint the Lords with a Paper he had sen at Berwick, entitled, Some Conditions of his Majesties Treaty with his Subjects of Scotland are set down here for remembrance. Which Paper being in most parts full of falshood, Dishonour and Scandal to his Majesties proceedings in the late Pacification, given of his Princely Grace and Goodness to his Subjects of Scotland, hath been very frequently spread here in England, and avowed by some in Scotland to have been approved and allowed as Truth by some of those Lords of England, who attended his Majesty, and were present at the Pacification in the Camp. Whereupon the Paper having been read, and his Majesty commanding those English Lords to declare their knowledge therein; The Earl-Marshal first began to put his Majesty in remembrance, that some few days after the Pacification was concluded, some of the Scottish Lords coming to the Lord Chamberlain's Tent, sent to speak with him and the Earl of Holland, and offered them a certain Paper, which they pretended to have been collected for the help of their Memories, and not otherwise, nor to be published: But the said English Lords very dutifully and discreetly refused to accept that or any such Paper, but referred themselves totally to the Pacification in Writing. And the said Earl-Marshal further declared, That now upon upon the reading, he for his part held the said Paper for the most part false and scandalous, and no way agreeable to what his Majesty expressed at the Pacification.

Next the Lord Chamberlain declared, That he being ready to take Horse, and a number of his friends about him taking their leave, the Lord Lowdon pressed him with much importunity to receive a Paper, which he took, not knowing what it contained; but at night when he came to his Lodging, doubting it might be some such Paper as had been formerly offered, and was refused, took it, without reading it, and sealed it up, and so kept it till he presented it to his Majesty at Whitehall, professing that till that time he had never read any one word of it, nor seen any other Copy thereof. Which Paper being that which had been divulged, was the same which his Majesty had commanded to be read at the Board.

The Earl of Salisbury likewise desired to justify himself of a particular Scandal laid upon him, That he had received and brought Copies of this Paper from the North; which he declared could not be, because he was come away from the Camp before that Paper had been offered, and that he had never seen that, nor any Copy thereof, before his Majesties return to Theobalds.

After this the Lord Chamberlain, the Earls of Salisbury, Holland, and Barkshire, concurred with the Earl Marshal, That the Contents of that Paper were for the most part notoriously scandalous and false, and contrary to what his Majesty clearly expressed at the Pacification.

His Majesty likewise declared, That before his coming from Berwick, he shewed a Copy of this scandalous Paper to the Earl of Lindsey, the Earl of Holland, Master Treasurer, and Master Secretary Cook, who fully concurred in the aforesaid Opinion with the other Lords. All which Lords, and particularly the Earl of Holland, avowed the falseness thereof to the faces of those Scottish Lords who were believed to be the Divulgers of it, (the Lords of the Council of Scotland being there likewise present).

All which considered, the whole Board unanimously became humble Petitioners to his Majesty, That this false and scandalous Paper might be publicly burnt by the Hangman.

Not long after his Majesties return from Berwick, there hapned a notable Sea-fight in the Downs, betwixt the Spanish and Holland Fleet, which, because 'tis variously reported as to the Grounds of it, as if the Spaniards had some designs, either upon England or Scotland, (though altogether improbable) the Reader may make his judgment thereof as he pleaseth; and the Relation he may take from Sir John Pennington the English Admiral, as followeth.

The Engagement between the Spaniards and the Hollanders in the Downs.

Car. 15.

THE Spanish Fleet consisting of near seventy Sail, bound and designed for Dunkirk in Flanders, with a recruit both of men and money, met with the Vice-Admiral of the Holland Fleet, having in his Company seventeen tall Ships, Septemb. the 7. and entred a very fierce Dispute between them, until the Hollander perceiving himself too weak, got to the wind-ward, sailing along with them towards Dunkirk, continually firing their Ordnance to give warning to their Admiral, who lay before Dunkirk with the residue of the Fleet; in this Encounter the Hollander had two Ships sunk. The next morning by two of the Clock the Admiral came up, and joyned with the Vice-Admiral, between Dover and Calais, they set upon the Spaniard, and continued a very sharp Fight till past Noon, wherein they had much the better, having taken two Gallions, sunk another, and much shattered the rest, though they were but twenty five Sail, to the Spaniards sixty and upwards, and at length forced them upon the English Coast near Dover; where they left them, and bare off for the Coast of France, not willing to attempt any thing against them within the King of England's Liberties.

The Spaniards being now got, as they thought, under the lee of England's protection, began to plot how to get rid of their bad Neighbours. And the Spanish Resident importuned the King, that he would keep the Hollander in subjection two Tydes, that in the interim they might have the opportunity of shipping away for Spain; but the King being in amity with them both, was resolved to stand neuter, and whereas the Spaniards had hired some English Ships to transport their Souldiers to Dunkirk, the King upon complaint of the Dutch Ambassador, strictly commanded that none should take in any Spaniards, nor pass beyond Graves-end without License; but the Spaniards and the Hollanders, plotting a great while counter the one to the other, the Spaniard at length somewhat out-witted his Enemy, and by a stratagem in the night conveyed away fourteen Dunkirk Ships, and in them four thousand men.

In the beginning of October, the King sent the Earl of Arundel to the Admiral of Spain, Don Antonio d'Oquendo, desiring him to retreat upon the first fair wind, because he would not they should engage within his Seas; but the wind continued Eastwardly so long (a thing not usual at that season) as the Hollanders had daily fresh supply from Zealand, so that at length their Armado was compleated to an hundred Ships, wherewith they encompassed their Enemies within Pistol shot for some days. But that which was so long an interview of these two great Fleets, at last turned to an Engagement.

For the eleventh of the same Month Van Trump the Dutch Admiral, charged the Spaniards with Cannon and Fire-ships so furiously, as made them all cut their Cables, and being fifty three in number, twenty three ran on shoar and stranded in the Downs, whereof three were burnt, two sunk, and two perished on the shoar: One of these was a great Gallion the Vice-Admiral of Gallatia, Don Andrea de Casiro, and had fifty two brass Pieces of

H h h h h

Ord-

Anno 1639. Ordinance: The remainder of the twenty three deferred by the Spaniards, who went to land, were mann'd by the English to save them from the Dutch. The other thirty Spanish Ships under the command of the Admirals Don Antonia's Oquendo, and Lopus of Portugal, went to Sea, and kept in close order, until a great Fogg fell upon them, when the Dutch taking his advantage, interposed betwixt the Admirals and their Fleet, and fought them valiantly till the Fogg cleared up, when the Admiral of Portugal began to flame, being fired with two Holland Fire-ships, which d' Oquendo perceiving, he presently took his course towards Dunkirk, with the Admiral of that place, and some few Ships more; for most of the rest were taken; of these thirty, eleven were sent Prisoners into Holland, three perished upon the Coast of France, one near Dover, five sunk in the Fight, and only ten escaped. This Narration was sent from Van Trump himself to Joachimi the then Dutch Agent here.

The first apparition of this Armado upon our Coast, was beheld by Country people as a representation of that Invincible One in 88. and that the main Design of this, was like that, an Invasion. They thought the imbarquing of twenty five thousand Land-Souldiers, besides Mariners, were too many for a recruit. They thought the Admiral of Naples his refusal to shew his Commission, though required by the King, was but of ill signification; they wondered that the Town of Dunkirk should so much dispute the reception of the four thousand which were conveyed thither, till the Cardinal Infanta sent express order, had those Forces been designed for their recruit. And this perswasion is so implanted in many, as it is still very difficult to make them unbelieve it: Or not knowing, or not considering, that those Souldiers were unarmed, very few Officers amongst them, and the whole Fleet so poorly accommodated for Invasion, as they had not Powder enough for their own Defensive Offence, so that when they lay at Anchor in the Downs, London was their chief Magazine, from whence they had their constant and daily supply.

These two potent Enemies (saith one) being both Friends to England, the British Seas ought by rule of State to have been an Harbour of Retreat to secure the weaker from the stronger, not the Scene of their Hostile Engagement; and had this presumptuous attempt of the Hollander met with a King, or in Times of another temper, it would not, it's like, have been so silently connived at, and their Victory might have cost them the loss of England's Correspondence. But Self-denial is a Christian, not a Martial Vertue; and who is able to resist the temptation of an Advantage, whereby he may destroy his Foe, upon the nicety of exceeding his just limits? Besides the King, the Dutch well knew, was of a genius, as not querulous, so if provoked, very placable; and the disposition of his Affairs, as well as of his mind, dissuaded from expostulating the matter with them.

In regard of this Contempt of the Dutch, his Majesty and Council resolve for the Equipping of a good Fleet, to be set forth immediately, not only for the asserting of the Dominion of the Narrow Seas, but also for the Defence of the Realm, Nov. 10.

Writs to be issued for Ship-money, and a list of the Ships. Car. 15.

It was this day resolved by his Majesty, with Advice of the Board, that there shall be issued Writs forthwith to all the Counties of England and Wales, and to the Corporations within the same, for the setting forth and furnishing in warlike manner of Ships for the defence of the Realm, according to the List herewith sent; the said Ships to be ready at the same Rendezvous by the first of April; and the Time for the first Assessment to be within thirty days after the receipt of the Writs respectively. Whereof his Majesties Attorney General is to take notice, and to prepare a Warrant ready for his Majesties signature, directed to the Lord Keeper, to issue out the Writs accordingly. And a Minute of Letters and Instructions is to be prepared for the expedition of this Service.

Distribution of Ships to the several Counties of England and Wales, with their Tunnage and Number of Men, as the same was ordered to stand this present Year.

And in regard several Counties were in Arrears for their Ship-money for several years past, there were directed Letters from the Council-Board to the Sheriffs respectively of those Counties, for the paying in of the said Arrears; and all this was upon very good grounds: For that though the Scots had then their Commissioners here at Court treating with his Majesty, yet they were then secretly preparing for another Invasion, as may appear by an Information given his Majesty from beyond Seas by Sir Thomas Roe, dated Nov. 21. 1639.

‘The Scots (saith he) that are very numerous here, do speak desperately and traiterously, as if there were very ill Resolutions fomented in that Kingdom. Lesley hath written to a Merchant in Bremen, his principal Correspondent in these parts, that he will come hither in March or April for some business, and return with speed. Bremen is the only resort now of the Scots, and the only Port from whence they can securely extract all kind of Arms and Munition. If his Majesty could surprise him, I am perswaded it would be a smart blow to behead a Faction, upon whom the Mutineers do so much rely. To this end, If a small Ship were sent betimes to ride in the River of Weser at Gessendorp, or Hambrake, two or three months, it would not be Charges lost, and would terrifie that Town. The Ship may be sent out secretly, and the Captains Commission, whither he shall go, be opened when he is at Sea; with Directions only to watch Ships bound from or to Scotland, and thus he may perhaps catch the Prey desired. For there can be no advice of his being there in Scotland in a month at least, and in the mean time he may hinder all Provisions to be transported thither. But if that way shall be thought too open, his Majesty may write an effectual Letter to the Archbishop of Bremen, to Arrest his Person in that Town, or within his Territory: And another to the King of Denmark, and Magistrates of this Town. Lesley being his Majesties Subject, I am perswaded it cannot be denied, for I have seen the Example fresh in the Palatinate, at the Instance of the Duke of Holstein. These Letters may lie dormant in mine or Mr. Averies hands, to be used, if there be occasion; if there be none, they may be returned without noise, so the Business be kept secret, which otherwise will but irritate, and do more harm than service.

By which the World may judge of their sincerity in their late Treaty, and as well of the goodness of their Prince, who afterwards seizing several of these Scotch Commanders, and with them Lesley's own Sister, coming from Germany, was graciously pleased to release them, though he very well knew of their actings and intentions.

About this time died Sir Thomas Coventry, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England; A Person so incorrupt (saith one) as capitious Malice stands mute in the blemish of his Fame; a person truly loyal, and a good Patriot, &c. to him succeeded Sir John Finch, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; who, according to his Place, and the Publick Necessities, requires the Judges in their several Circuits to see to the payment of Ship-moneys; and to the putting of the Laws in Execution.

Car. 15.

The Lord Keeper Finch his Speech to the Judges, to promote Ship-money in their Circuits.

My Lords the Judges,

‘The Term is now done, the House of Justice is broken up, yet Justice goes not from us; for such is the wisdom and goodness of his Majesty, that all his Subjects may have Justice administered unto them in certainty, and with ease and equality. In Term time they know where to find Justice; in the Circuits Justice findeth out them.

‘Your Lordships may know the great Trust, Power, and Authority, that is committed unto you; how the ancient and excellent Institution of Justice in Eyre is transmigrated into you; and it is a thing will well become your Lordships, to uphold the Dignity of your Places, and to preserve that due respect and reverence that is owing unto you by virtue of your Places. It is stoutness and courage and magnanimity, that becomes a Magistrate, nay, should I say severity, I should agree with the saying of the Orator.

‘There are some that affect Popularity, diving into the Peoples hearts with kisses, offerings, and fawnings. This becomes no subordinate Magistrate. It is your part, my Lords, to break the insolencies of such—before it approach too near the Royal Throne. And you cannot too much uphold that reverence and respect that is owing to your Places upon the Bench; when you shall give an account of such as these that misbehave themselves, you, my Lords the Judges, shall quickly see the Commission shall not be troubled with them. The Officers, and all other Ministers of Justice, are to attend you to this like purpose, to receive Information from you. You shall do well to look to them, that they do not oppress the People by unjust exaction and extortion; let them be careful to look to the execution of Justice, for Execution is the Life of the Law; for whosoever by wilfulness or negligence suffereth not the Law to be put in execution, doth as much as in him lieth wound the Law in the Life thereof. Sometimes Sheriffs and Under-Sheriffs can hardly be got to execute any Process at all, or Extents, or Cap. Utlagatum. They will look through their Fingers, and see when and whom they please, sometime for reward, partiality, and affection, or fear of offending Great Ones, or offending a Multitude. For this they have no Plea; for in Law I am sure it was never known, that it was admitted in Court of Justice for a good Return, that a Sheriff could not execute a Writ, he having Posse Comitatus at his Command to assist him, to the end that the Law may not be fruitless, and like a dead Letter, but that vigour may be given unto it.

‘While I am speaking to this, I cannot forget to put you in mind of one Particular at least, if I may call it a Particular that doth concern the general Safety and Preservation of the whole Kingdom. His Majesty ever since his happy access to this Crown, hath had a vigilant eye of our Neighbours Estates, and taken into his Princely consideration, out of the affection and love to his

Anno 1639. his People, and tender care of their preservation, and the safety of this Kingdom, how active the times are; what preparation is made round about us; what endeavours there are to encrease their Naval Powers in other Nations. It is known well, that the right of the Dominion of the Narrow Seas belong unto the King, and it hath been his Majesties gracious Wisdom, and Providence, and Care over us, that these Storms have been prevented, that perhaps had fallen upon us before we could have discerned them. The King hath many eyes, many ears, and many hands; and it is impossible for every man to attain to that knowledge of Forrein States that he hath. And I will be bold to say, it is a base and unworthy part to suffer it to enter into the heart of any man, that we the Subjects of England, that have so just, gracious, and pious a King, to imagine, that unless urgent necessity did require, his Majesty would charge himself and his Subjects without cause. All the World knoweth he reapeth no benefit by it, and certainly it is a malignant humour to think the contrary. The Legality of it hath been already determined, upon as great, a solid and weighty Debate, as ever was in any Cause in Westminster-hall: It was his Majesties goodness to have it so. And yet I know not how it comes about, I hope it is out of misapprehension, or false intimation put into the hearts of his People, that there is not alacrity and cheerfulness given to the obedience of his Majesties Writs for Ship-money, that his affection and care of his People doth require. God forbid we should stay for provision of Naval Power, till our Enemies be floating upon us. Let them look to their Duties, I doubt not your Lordships will look to see that there be obedience given, and that those Officers that do neglect their Duties, may be brought to account, that they may know what the displeasure is to disobey his Majesties Commands.

I shall not trouble your Lordships with many particulars, your Lordships better know them than I can tell you: Yet something I have in command from his Majesty.

His Majesty (as all that know him) is the great example of Piety, and of one that daily frequents the House of God, as any Prince in the World: He doth instruct his own People his own way, and commands your care to put that Law in execution, that must bring men to God's House, and when they are there, they shall learn to obey the Law for Conscience-sake, and not for by-respects. You know well that we have two kinds of Opposers of Religion, as it standeth, and against them it is fit you bend your Forces and your Authority. And certainly, when we do consider that for these eighty years and upwards, we have enjoyed such plenty and peace, as no Nation hath had the like; what can we better attribute it unto, than the flourishing of the Gospel among us? And if we shall neglect that great Blessing, all other Blessings will quickly turn into Curses.

The Popish Reculants begin to increase, his Majesty taketh notice of it, he doubteth that there hath not that particular care been taken, in looking to them in all places of the Kingdom, as is fit; your Lordships attend Civil Causes more then that; he commends it to your care, that if it be so now, it be so no more. The Book of Common-Prayer setteth forth the Rights and Ceremonies, establishing the Doctrine of the Church of England, to which no just exception can be taken; for God loveth not to have his House empty or waste. Some, out of what humour I know not, will scarce admit of any Church at all. I wonder under what show of Religion they can shew themselves, when this Book was penned by those that shed their Blood, and sealed it with their Lives.

My Lords, in the next place his Majesty hath commanded me to put you in mind of the great abuse that is in this Kingdom, by the swarming of Rogues, that hath been so often commended unto you, your Lordships shall do well to take course for the suppressing and preventing thereof; and that Men of body and mind may be chosen Constables to execute their places. One great cause of their increase is, that the Houses of Correction, which is the place of their Retreat, are no better looked unto. Your Lordships shall do a great service to the Commonwealth, to take care that there be stricter Course taken of the Houses of Correction, that they may be placed near unto the Gaol.

Another thing is, The excess of Ale-houses, the Nursery of Rogues; in that your Lordships shall do well to take a strict account of them in all places, for the very Number is a Crime.

In the third place, The increase of Rogues is, by reason of their not putting out of Apprentices; the Seed-Plot of Rogues groweth from thence; your Lordships care in this also will be very necessary.

My Lords, I have nothing more to say, your Lordships are so well versed in every thing fit to be given in Charge, that I might be silent.

I shall only conclude with one thing, which is a thing that hath been by the Lords of this Court commended to your care, upon a Cause that hath been here heard; The Court for Sheriffs of Counties, it is not at their will and pleasure, or for their own vanity and ostentation that they are to conduct you, but it is out of their Duty; and when the Discretion, and generous Disposition of any shall not teach them how to do it, it is fit for you to call them to account.

Justices of the Peace, you shall have of them that will the first day attend you for an hour or two, perhaps to save a Fine, perhaps to shew their Country they are in Commission of the Peace: Emptiness becomes not the Seat of Justice, therefore hold them to their Duty to attend you all the time of the Assizes, and not to depart without your Licence.

The King our Master doth as well know Men as any Prince in the World, but it is impossible for him to know all; you are the great Surveyors of the Kingdom, for this purpose it is that all Officers and Ministers of Justice are commanded to attend you, to inform you of such as you should have knowledge of, that you may inform his Majesty of them. I have observed (while I had the Honour to be Chief Justice of the Common Pleas) that few gave their Attendance; what humour they are of that think themselves too good to serve the King, I know not, but let them know that it is in no Man's choice whether he will serve the King in the Ministry of Justice or no. Those that are backward, or have not taken it, give up the Names of them, that they may see what punishment they shall undergo.

There are some other Justices of Peace that are put in Commission, to injure their Neighbours, and to domineer over them, and to carry things with a Faction. But upon your intimation of such Persons, the Commission shall be ceased of them also.

Anno 1639. You have seen the Scots preparing for War, his Majesty, being not acquainted with these Passages, resolves also upon the raising of an Army, and accordingly by Commission, 14 Feb. Anno Regni 15. he appoints Algernon Earl of Northumberland General; and afterwards by another Commission Thomas Lord Viscount Wentworth, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to be Lieutenant General to the Earl of Northumberland, to imploy and dispose of the said Army to be raised for defences, or otherwise as they should be directed by his Majesties Instructions, &c. We may well imagine the Scotch Revolters having so well prepared in their former Achievements had no less encouragement than formerly for the undertaking of another War, it fortuned that November the 19. being the Anniversary night of the King's Birth-day, a great part of the Walls of the Castle of Edinburgh fell to the ground, with the Cannons mounted: which caused such a consternation, such an Alarm in the Castle, as if they had been undermined and surprized; but that was not all, for this casualty upon a time of so much remarque, could then receive no other construction from the Grammar of Superstition, than an ominous presage of the ruin of the King's design; especially considering that at that very same night the Scotch Commissioners returned from England to Edinburgh, so that the dilapidation seemed to import an humble prostration to the Idolized Covenant.

But the craftiest (I say not the wisest) of the Combination, would not trust to such fallacious conjectures; but willing to apprehend, and lay hold of any thing which offered its service to their enterprise, made a politick use thereof, and the King having appointed the Lord Estrich, Colonel Kuchen, and Governour of the Castle, to take order for the re-edification of what was lapsed, they refused to permit any materials to be carried in for reparation, which so incensed the King, as he concluded the indignity intolerable, and presently entered into deliberation how to relieve himself by force under this oppression; but with whom he should consult, there lay the difficulty, the transactions of his Council must be more closely carried then heretofore, for fear of correspondence with the Covenanters; to this end a private Junta for the Scotch Affairs, are selected from his Council, and great care taken, that those Hunting Lords (as Mr. L'Estrange saith the Archbishop called them) Pembroke, Salisbury, Holland, &c. who were Commissioners at the Pacification, be excluded, though Hamilton was retained, more dangerous, and fallacious than all. At this close and secret Council, Decemb. 5. it was agreed his Majesty should call a Parliament, to Assemble April the 13. The King told them he exceeding well approved of that Counsel, but withal he said, My Lords, the Parliament cannot suddenly convene, and the Subsidies they grant will be so long in levying, as in the interim I may be ruin'd; therefore some speedy course must be thought upon for Supplies. Whereupon the Lords told him they would engage their own credits, and the Lord Deputy of Ireland giving the on-set, subscribed for twenty thousand pounds; the other Lords had, some the same Loyal zeal, and others the modesty not to refuse. The Lords of the Council did in this example implicitly give a good example to the other Nobles, who generally conformed most cheerfully, saving some few whom singularity, or somewhat more portentous, restrained.

And that the Presbyterian Party here amongst us should not be wanting to play their parts (so far as then opportunity offered) one Bagshaw a hot-headed Lawyer of the Middle-Temple, then Reader of that House, proposing to read upon the Statute of the 28 Edw. 3. 6, 7. argued upon these (amongst others he propounded) Cases of Law. Whether a good Act of Parliament may not be made without the assent of the Lords Spiritual? Which he held Affirmatively, and though he thought he had done his Party good service herein in assigning his reasons, which were, That some Parliaments were held without any Bishops at all; and that divers Acts have been made when they were present, and would not consent. And lastly, That the Bishops cannot sit in Case of Blood in Judicature; but they may sit to assist to Enact Laws, but not to give Assent for Execution of them in Case of any Blood.

Car. 15.

Yet he herein betrayed the weakness only of the Reader, and that Party; for as to the first, there was never any Parliament to which they were not summoned, no not to that of 25 of Ed. 3. which is falsely said to have been summoned, Excluso Clero, For here they excluded themselves, and refused upon Pope Boniface's Prohibition [procured by Archbishop Winchelsey] to be present at this Parliament at St. Edmundsbury, summon'd to appear *Ad ordinandum de quantitate & modo sublidii memorati, Claus. 24. Ed. 1. M. 7. dorso, and to grant the King any Subsidies till they had consulted the Court of Rome, and go away every one to their own homes; notwithstanding which the King proceeds with the two other Estates and gets Subsidies from them, so that the exclusion of the Clergy was their own voluntary act; and as to what is said by some, that Magna Charta was confirm'd in that Parliament, will be found to be a mistake, for the King received the Archbishop and Clergy again into favour, and they sate in the Parliament, summon'd to meet In Feste Sancti Petri quod dicitur ad vincula, or Lammas-day following, which was in the year of Grace 1296. Regis Ed. 1. 25. as it is set down in our Statute Books, with which Walsingham accords, *Ad annum dictum.

And as to the Second Argument, it may be granted for that the Lay-Lords might make the Majority. And to his last it is a mistake, for they have actually sate in Cases of Blood, as is lately proved in two Books, the one Entitled, The Right of the Bishops cleared, &c. and the other, The Grand Question Stated and Debated; and that if ever they sate not, it was in respect of a Popish Canon now extinct; and whenever they withdrew they did it [Salvo Jure] as is notoriously known in the Parliament of the 11th of Rich. 2. but to put this matter further out of Question, after the abolishing of the Popish Canon Law, and since the Reformation they did sit on the twenty second of May, 1626. upon the Impeachment of the Earl of Bristol of High Treason, ten Bishops, ten Earls, ten Barons were appointed for Examination of the Evidence against the said Earl. Out of his second Case, this Question was started, Whether any Beneficed Clerk was capable of Temporal Jurisdiction at the time of making that Law. And for answer hereunto, if he meant by a Beneficed Clerk, a person in Holy Orders, it is most certain they were, for that many of the Bishops long before that time were the Kings Justitiaries, that the Bishops sate with the Earl in the Saxons times, in the County Courts where capital Causes were tried, as appears by the Laws of King Edward, as they were set forth by Hen. 2.

Anno 1639. c. 31. and that the Friends of one Hamel supplicated to one of Earl Godwines sons, then Earl of Northumberland, Ne capite pleſteretur, as may be ſeen in M. S. life of St. Cuthbert. And thus much of the Caſes propoſed to be debated by that Reader.

About this time the Council received a Letter from Sir Chriſtopher Yelverton, High Sheriff of the County of Northampton, and in it was enclosed a Preſentment of the Grand Jury of that County of Ship-money as a Grievance, the matter being debated, it was referred to the Attorney-General, and the Solicitor, who gave their Opinions of the matter to the Board, representing the High Sheriffs miſcarriage in that matter, whereupon by Order of Council, he received a Reprimand, commanding him forthwith to do his duty, or that if his Maſtieſ Service ſhould ſuffer herein by his neglect, there would be quick and exemplary reparation required from him, &c.

And now at laſt we come to give our Reader ſome account of the proceedings of the Scotch Commiſſioners at White-hall, who were ſo Male-part as to reſuſe audience from the Council or any Members of it, though deputed by his Maſtieſty, for that they ſaid they were ſent by the Parliament of Scotland, and were to own no other Judicatory, ſave that of his Maſtieſty in his own Perſon. Hereupon his Maſtieſty puts off his Journey to Hampton-Court, and would hear them himſelf, when the following Speech was made to his Maſtieſty by the Lord Lowdon.

S I R,

AS we did ſhew in that humble Remonſtrance which we gave to your Maſtieſty in Writ, That no earthly Thing could be more grievous to your Maſtieſties Subjects, convened by your Royal Authority in the Parliament of Scotland, than that their Loyalty ſhould be call'd in queſtion, or any ſuch hard Impreſſions ſhould be given againſt their Proceedings, as might derogate from that high eſtimation which they have of Sovereignty, and the tender reſpect they carry to your Maſtieſties inviolable Authority: So do we acknowledge your Maſtieſties Goodneſs and Juſtice, in keeping one Ear for us againſt all Suggeſtions and Obloquies, till the Reaſons of our Proceedings and Demands were made known from our ſelves; And that your Maſtieſty is graciouſly pleaſed to grant us this favour, of a full and publick Hearing. But becauſe the Parliament of that your Maſtieſties Ancient and Native Kingdom, is Independent, and not accountable to any other Judicature, we hope your Maſtieſty will pardon, and allow us to decline to ſpeak, or answer before any of your Maſtieſties Council, or other Judicatures whatſoever, as thoſe who have not any Power to Judge of the Laws, Actions, or Proceedings of the Parliament of that Kingdom. And as we acknowledge your Maſtieſties favour in allowing us to tender the Liberties and Freedom of your Maſtieſties Ancient and Native Kingdom; ſo are we glad, before all the World to clear the loyalty and lawfulness of their Proceedings, and do congratulate that your Maſtieſty hath Indicted a Parliament here, which we hope will advert to the good of Religion, your Maſtieſties Honour, and Peace of your Dominions: Albeit they be not Judges to determine of our Actions, (which are ſuch, as when they ſhall be known to your Maſtieſty, not upon Report, but upon true Trial, we are moſt confident will merit approbation at the Throne of your Maſtieſties Juſtice): But becauſe we hear that your Maſtieſties good Subjects are traduced, as having intention to diminish your Maſtieſties Authority, and ſhake off that civil and dutiful Obedience due to Sovereignty: Therefore before we deſcend to the Particular Actions and Articles of the Parliament, for vindicating us from ſo grievous and ſoul an Imputation, we do in our Name, and in the Name of the Parliament that ſent us, declare before God and the World, That we never had nor have any ſuch thought of withdrawing our ſelves from that humble and dutiful Subjection and Obedience to your Maſtieſty and your Government, which by the Deſcent and Reign of ſo many Kings is due to your Maſtieſty; and never had nor have any intent or deſire to attempt any thing that may tend to the diminishing of your Maſtieſties Princely Power; but on the contrary, we acknowledge our Quietneſs, Stability, and Happineſs, to depend upon the ſafety of your Maſtieſties Perſon, and maintenance of your Greatneſs and Royal Authority, as God's Vicegerent ſet over us for maintenance of Religion, and Adminiſtration of Juſtice; and have ſolemnly ſworn, not only to ſtand to the Defence of your Maſtieſties Perſon and Authority in the preſervation and defence of Religion, Liberties, and Laws of the Kirk and Kingdom; but alſo in every Cauſe which may concern your Maſtieſties Honour, ſhall according to the Laws of the Kingdom, and duty of good Subjects, concur with our Friends, in quiet manner, or in Arms, as we ſhall be required. But if any be ſo wicked, as to ſeek occaſion to divide detwixt your Maſtieſty and your Kingdom, and for their own ends go about to prostitute the purity of Religion, and the Liberties and Laws of that your Maſtieſties Ancient and Native Kingdom; we can give them no other character, but that which your Maſtieſties Father of bleſſed memory gave them, terming ſuch Men, Vipers and Peſts againſt the King and his Kingdom. And if it pleaſe God for our Sins, to make our condition ſo deplorable, as they may get the ſhadow of your Maſtieſties Authority, (as we hope in God they will not) to palliate their ends, then as thoſe, who are ſworn to defend our Religion, our reſcuſe muſt be only to the God of Jacob for our refuge, who is Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, and by whom Kings do Reign, and Princes decree Juſtice. And if in ſpeaking thus out of zeal to Religion, and the Duty we owe to our Country, and that Charge which is laid upon us, any thing hath eſcaped us, ſince it is ſpoken from the ſincerity of our Hearts, we fall down at your Maſtieſties feet, humbly craving pardon for our freedom.

Having thus, with your Maſtieſties permiſſion, cleared the Loyalty of your Subjects, that we may next ſhew the reaſon of their Demands, and equity of their Proceeding in Parliament, we do firſt crave, That if our Answers cannot give plenary ſatisfaction to the Objections and Exceptions that ſhall be made againſt their Proceedings, that our not knowing of thoſe Objections (albeit we did often require your Maſtieſties Commiſſioner to ſhew the ſame, that we might be the more able to give your Maſtieſty content; yet being ſtill concealed from us, and the Records and Registers of Parliament alſo ſtill kept from us,) may ſerve much for our excuſe. And if any any the Propositions and Articles sought and craved in Parliament, shall seem harsh at the first view to such as know not our Laws, that we do expect from them the Judgment of Charity, who ought (rather than to pass a rash Censure upon us) to profess Ignorantiam juris & facti alieni; and that they would distinguish betwixt the Desires and Actions of a Parliament, who (being convened by Royal Authority, and honoured with your Majesties or your Commissioner's presence,) are makers of Laws, against whom there is no Law; and the Actions of private Persons, against whom Laws are made.

And as the Desires of the Subjects are no other in the matter, but what they did humbly crave in their former Petitions, and are necessary for establishing of Religion, and the Good and Peace of the Kingdom, which can never oppose the King's Honour, and are agreeable to the Articles of Pacification; so in like manner they are agreeable to the Laws and Practices of that Kingdom.

And to descend more specially; all the Articles given in are either such as concern private Subjects, such as are for Manufactures, Merchants Trading, and others of that kind; which do not so much concern your Majesty, or the Publick, as the Interest of private Men, which are but minima, & de minimis non curat Lex: Or they are Publick Acts, which do concern the Religion and Liberties of the Kirk and Kingdom; as the Ratifying of the Conclusions of the Assembly, the Act of Constitution of Parliaments, the Act of Recision, the Act against Popery, and others of that kind. Wherein, because the eyes of the World were upon them, and that hard Constructions have been made of their proceedings, and that Malice is prompted for her Obloquies, and waiteth on with open mouth to snatch at the smallest shadow of disrespect to your Majesty, that our Proceedings may be made odious to such as know them not, we have endeavoured to walk with that tenderness which becometh dutiful Subjects, who are desirous to limit themselves according to Reason and the Rule of Law.

For the better understanding whereof, we must distinguish betwixt Regnum constituendum, and Regnum constitutum, a Kingdom before it be settled, and a Kingdom which is established by Laws. Wherein (as good Subjects esteem it their greatest glory) to maintain the Honour and lawful Authority of their King; so good Kings, (as your Majesties Father of ever blessed memory affirms, holding that Maxim, that Salus Populi est suprema Lex;) will be content to govern their Subjects according to the Law of God, and fundamental Laws of their Kingdom.

Next we must distinguish betwixt the Kirk and State, betwixt the Ecclesiastick and Civil Power, both which are materially one, yet formally they are contra-distinct in Power, Jurisdiction, Laws, Bodies, Ends, Offices, and in Officers. And albeit the Kirk and Ecclesiastick Assemblies thereof, be formally different and contra-distinct from the Parliament, and Civil Judicatories; yet there is so strict and necessary conjunction betwixt the Ecclesiastick and Civil Jurisdiction, betwixt Religion and Justice, as the one cannot firmly subsist and be preserv'd without the other; and therefore like Hippocrates's Twins, they must stand and fall, live and die together. Which made us all in our Petitions to your Majesty, who is Custos utriusque Ta- bule, to crave, that as Matters Ecclesiastical be determined by the General and other Assemblies of the Kirk, and Matters Civil by Parliament; so specially to crave, that the Sanction of the Civil Law should be added to the Ecclesiastical Conclusions and Constitutions of the Kirk and her Assemblies, lest there should be any repugnancy betwixt the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws, which your Majesty did graciously condescend unto. And your Majesties Commissioner representing your Majesties Royal Power and Person, in the General Assembly, wherein the whole Congregations and Parishes in Scotland are represented, upon diligent enquiry, finding that all those Evils which troubled the Kirk and Kingdom, proceeded from the Prelates, consented that Episcopacy be removed out of the Kirk of Scotland, and declared, that all Civil Places of Kirk-men to be unlawful in that Kingdom; and having ratified the Covenant, ordaining all the Subjects to subscribe the same, with the General Assemblies Explanation in that sense. And being also obliged to ratify the Conclusions of the Assembly in Parliament, it doth necessarily follow, that Bishops who usurped to be the Kirk, and in the name of the Kirk, did represent the third Estate; and that all Abbots, Priors, and others, who either did or do claim to represent the Kirk, be taken away. Which also by necessary consequence doth infer, that there must be an Act of Constitution of the Parliament without them, and an Act for repealing the former Laws, whereby the Kirk being declared the third Estate, and Bishops to represent the Kirk; both which the Kirk hath now renounced and condemned. So that unless the Act of Constitution of the Parliament, and Act of Recissory pass, it is impossible either to have a valid Parliament, or to ratify the Conclusions of the Assembly, which your Majesty hath graciously promised to perform, and which your Subjects are obliged to maintain.

And seeing your Majesties Subjects have no other ends, but such as may serve for establishing of Religion, and Peace of the Kingdom, and are agreeable to the fundamental Laws thereof, and to the Articles of Pacification; and that the Parliament is the only lawful means to remedy our Evils, remove our Distractions, and settle a solid and perfect Peace. The sum of your Subjects desire is, That your Majesty may be graciously pleased to command the Parliament to proceed freely in those Articles given in to them, and to determine them. And whatsoever Objections or Informations are made against any of the particular Overtures, Articles, or Proceedings of the Parliament; we are most willing and desirous, according to your Majesties Commandment, for avoiding contestation about words, to receive the same in writ; and are content in the same way to return our Answers, and humble Desires.

This Speech of the Lord Lowdon's containing the purport of the Scots demands, and the Arguments and Debates thereon depending, were fully Answered by his Majesty and Council; so that we will not relate them here at large, but shall refer our Reader, for his full satisfaction, to the account hereof given by his Majesties Declaration in Council, the Date whereof followeth:

A:

1639.

At White-hall the 11th of March, 1639.

His day his Majesty being present in Council, was pleased himself to make known to the Lords, what had passed at the Committee appointed by his Majesty, to hear those Lords and Gentlemen that came lately from Scotland, pretending to be sent from the Parliament there.

In the first place his Majesty acquainted the Lords, That after those Scottish Lords and Gentlemen had subscribed the Petitions which they had formerly presented to his Majesty, and had been read at the Board, order was given to the Earl of Traquair, his Majesties Commissioner, to assign them a time to be heard of the Committee; which falling out to be at the time of his Majesties being at Hampton-Court, they refused to come to the Committee, alledging, That they had Order and Instruction to Treat with none but his Majesty himself: Whereupon his Majesty appointed them to attend him at the Committee on the day of his remove to Hampton-Court, which was the third of March; at which time they did attend his Majesty accordingly.

The Earl of Dumfermling spake first, but very short, and so low that few of the Committee understood him.

Then the Lord Lowden made a long Speech, the effect whereof was, A Protestation of the Independency of the Parliament of Scotland, and that it was subject to no other Judicatory; and a profession of their Affection and Loyalty to his Majesty, with a Justification of their Proceedings in the Assembly and Parliament, as agreeable to the Articles of Pacification, and to the Laws and Practices of that Kingdom; and thereupon desired, That his Majesty would ratify and confirm those their Proceedings. And for that purpose they Petitioned his Majesty to command that the Parliament might proceed freely, for the determining of all the Articles delivered unto them, for the establishing of Religion and Peace in the Kingdom; undertaking that whatsoever Objections or Informations should be made against their Proceedings in Parliament, (provided they received them in writing) they would give a satisfactory answer to them.

This Discourse ended, his Majesty demanded what Power and Commission they had to give him satisfaction, and to oblige those from whom they came? For if they had none, he must hear them upon great disadvantage, they expecting satisfaction from him who had certainly Power to give it, but they had no Commission to render the like to him.

They answered, That which they should propose (it being agreeable to Law) they were confident should give his Majesty Satisfaction.

His Majesty asked who should be Judge of that? They answered, The Law would appear so clear that there would be no need of a Judge. And though his Majesty insisted much hereupon, they would give him no other Satisfaction. But they persisting to assert they had Power and Commission, and would bring them to his Majesty; they were ordered to do so at the next Meeting, and so for that time they were dismissed. Car. 15.

Upon the Ninth of March, after his Majesties return from Hampton-Court, they attended his Majesty at the Committee again. There they produced Instructions signed by some Scottish Lords, and some other Persons of no great eminency; which Instructions having been read, were judged by his Majesty, (all the Lords of the Committee concurring in the same opinion) to be no Commission, and that they had no Power or Authority by them to give his Majesty Satisfaction, or to oblige those from whom they said they came, to any thing that his Majesty should yield to or desire. Wherefore his Majesty demanding whether they had any other Power? They said, They had a Paper formerly subscribed by some of the Lords in Parliament, by which the Earl of Dumfermling and Lord Lowden were only authorized to come, and present their Justification to his Majesty, and said, they could for the present have no other, the Parliament then not sitting. Whereupon they were required to withdraw, and his Majesty advising seriously with the Committee what was best to be done in this weighty Business; and also considering, That if they should be dismissed without further hearing, they would take occasion to clamour, His Majesty resolved (that although he found himself bound neither in Honour nor Justice to hear them any further, (they having offered no Foundation for an Accommodation, nor having power to do it) yet to the end that no colour of sinister Construction might be left, and that his Majesty might justify himself to God and the World, that he had omitted nothing on his part that might tend to Peace, and to the settling of a better Intelligence between his Majesty and them) that he would continue to hear them, and would make his Objections to such Particulars as had been proposed in Parliament, and against which he had just grounds of Exception, that so it might appear whether they could give him satisfaction which they had promised and presumed they could do, or not.

Upon this they were called in again, and his Majesty making this known unto them, not one of them made shew of the least sense of this his Majesties Grace and Goodness so expressed to them; which the Lord Marquess Hamilton observing, took occasion of himself to say, That though he was not of their Company, yet being a Scotch Man, he held himself obliged to acknowledge with all humility this his Majesties singular and princely Favour to his Country, and besought him to accept his most humble thanks for it. This drew them on to do the like, and so they presented their humble thanks to his Majesty on their knees.

His Majesty having thus acquainted the Lords with this Business, commanded the Instructions to be Read at the Board; which being done, the whole Board unanimously concurred in Opinion, that the Petitioners had not Power nor Commission to give his Majesty Satisfaction, but only to endeavour to justify and maintain their former Proceedings. Whereupon his Majesty commanded this Judgment of the Board, together with the former Proceedings upon the whole Matter, to be passed into an Act of State, and to be be registred and remain upon Record in the Council-Book.

Upon Wednesday the eighteenth of March, his Majesty being in Council again, was pleased to acquaint the Board with what had passed at the Committee since the former Meetings, and that the Petitioners had produced the Paper above-mentioned, subscribed by some of the Lords of Scotland in Parliament, by which the Earl of Dunfermling and the Lord Lowdon, only were heretofore authorized to come and present their Justification to his Majesty; which Paper his Majesty having commanded to be read to the Board, the Lords unanimously then also agreed that the Petitioners had no more power by this Paper.

His Majesties Declaration, concerning his Proceedings with his Subjects of Scotland, since the Pacification in the Camp near Berwick.

By the KING.

WE did make account that the Pacification which we were pleased to condescend unto the last year in the Camp near Berwick, and to grant to our Subjects of Scotland, even then when they were in the height of their Rebellion, and in the Field in Arms against us, had given such demonstration to the World of our inclination to Peace, and desire to spare the Blood of our People, and to win them to the Obedience which they owe unto us, as that all misunderstandings had been utterly taken away, (as they were on our part) and that such Conditions as were then agreed upon, should have been really performed by them, according to those Bonds of Allegiance, Duty, and Promise in which they stand obliged to us. But we have since found, to our unexpressible Grief, that our Princely Goodness and Mildness in passing by that Offence, hath produced nothing but extream Ingratitude, and insufferable Insolences against our Government. And farther, by sundry Libellous Pamphlets, and most false and seditious Discourses sent from Scotland, and dispersed purposely in this our Kingdom of England, especially in our City of London; that the Cause of these Disorders is sought to be shifted off from the Rebels in Scotland, and most unjustly cast upon us. Wherefore we hold our Self bound, in that Duty which we owe to God, and love to Truth, not to suffer our Honour to be thus betrayed and vilified by Faction and Rebellion, but to vindicate it from all Calumny and Clamour, by giving hereby a clear and just account to all the World of our Proceeding with our Subjects of that our Kingdom, and of the most material and remarkable Occurrents since that Pacification, that so all those that are not partial, or will not willingly shut their Eyes against the Truth, may judge who they are that have been the Disturbers and Infractions of the Peace, and that under the Mask and Visor of Religion, seek to undermine and subvert all Monarchical and Civil Government. Which account follows thus.

After we had been some time in the Camp near Berwick, and that our Subjects of Scotland had encamped with their Army in view of Ours; upon an Overture from them, we were contented to condescend to the receiving of a Petition, in which it is expressed, That they, falling down at our Feet, did most humbly supplicate us to appoint some of this our Kingdom of England to hear, by some of them, their humble Desires. Which we having granted, and several Meetings by those of both Kingdoms having been held; at all which our Self, (to shew our hearty and earnest Desire to meet our Subjects in a peaceable way) were contented to be present (much beyond their own expectation, as they have since acknowledged, and we are sure, exceedingly beyond their Merit); at the last those of Scotland were commanded to make their Demands in Writing, in which after they had presented their Desires, (of which one was, That the Acts of the late Assembly at Glasgow holden by our Indiction, might be ratified in the ensuing Parliament) they profess, It is their grief that we should have been provoked to Wrath against them our most humble and loving Subjects, and that it shall be their delight, upon our gracious assurance of the Preservation of their Religion and Laws, to give example to others of all Civil and Temporal Obedience which can be required or expected of Loyal Subjects.

Whereupon we letting them know, that for the better clearing of Particulars, we expected from them the Grounds and Reasons of their Desires, but that we would not surprise them, and therefore gave them time to come prepared with their Grounds in Writing.

The Lord Lowdon said, Their Desires were only to enjoy their Religion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws of the Kingdom; and in clearing Particulars, they would not insist upon any that were not such.

This we willed him to set down in Writing under his Hand, which he did in these words:

Memorandum, That our desires are only the enjoying of our Religion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws of his Majesties Kingdom; to clear by sufficient Grounds, that the Particulars which we humbly crave, are such, and shall not insist to crave any Point which is not so warranted: And that we offer all Civil and Temporal Obedience to your Majesty, which can be required or expected of Loyal Subjects.

Signed, Lowdon.

To which we answered, That if their Desires were only the enjoying of their Religion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws of our Kingdom of Scotland, We do not only agree to the same, but shall always protect them to the uttermost of our Power. And if they shall not insist upon any thing but that which is so warranted, we will most willingly and readily condescend unto it, so that in the mean time they pay unto us that Civil and Temporal Obedience which can be justly required and expected of Loyal Subjects.

This

1639.

'This being the Ground of the Agreement on both sides, we were pleased to proceed to a final Determination of this Business, which was brought to a Conclusion upon the seventeenth of June, 1639. And our Declaration of that Date conformable to these Grounds was thereupon made, which was not only accepted by those that came in the Name of all those of the Covenant, but most humble thanks were given to us by them for our gracious Answer vouchsafed to their Petition in the said Declaration; which was fully agreed upon, together with sundry Articles by all Parties.

'The Pacification thus concluded, the Articles on both sides were to be performed accordingly. Those on our part were in the Declaration following:

'WE having considered the Papers, and humble Petitions presented unto us by those of our Subjects of Scotland, who were admitted to attend our Pleasure in the Camp; And after a full hearing by our Self of all that they could say or alledge thereupon, having communicated the same to our Council of both Kingdoms there present, upon mature deliberation, with their unanimous Advice, we have thought fit to give this just and gracious Answer.

'THat though we cannot condescend to ratifie and approve the Acts of the pretended General Assembly at Glasgow, for many grave and weighty Considerations which have happened both before and since, much importing the Honour and Security of that true Monarchical Government lineally descended upon us from so many of our Ancestors: Yet such is our gracious Pleasure, That notwithstanding the many Disorders committed of late, we are pleased not only to confirm and make good whatsoever our Commissioner hath granted and promised in our Name, but also we are further graciously pleased to declare and assure, that according to the Petitioners humble Desires, all Matters Ecclesiastical shall be determined by the Assemblies of the Kirk, and Matters Civil by the Parliament, and other inferiour Judicatories established by Law. Which Assembly accordingly shall be kept once a Year, or as shall be agreed upon at the General Assembly.

'And for settling the general Distractions of that our Ancient Kingdom, our Will and Pleasure is, That a Free General Assembly be kept at Edinburgh, the sixth day of August next ensuing, where we intend (God willing) to be personally present. And for the legal Indiction whereof, we have given order and Command to our Council; and thereafter a Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh the twentieth day of August next ensuing, for ratifying of what shall be concluded in the said Assembly, and settling such other things as may conduce to the Peace and Good of our Native Kingdom; and therein an Act of Oblivion to be passed.

'And whereas we are further desired, that our Ships and Forces by Land be recalled, and all Persons, Goods, and Ships restored, and they made safe from Invasion, we are graciously pleased to declare, That upon their disarming and disbanding of their Forces, dissolving and discharging all their pretended Tables and Conventicles, and restoring unto us all our Castles, Forts, and Ammunition of all sorts; as likewise our Royal Honours, and to every one of our good Subjects, their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatsoever, taken and detained from them since the late pretended General Assembly, we will presently thereafter recall our Fleet, and retire our Land-Forces, and cause restitution to be made to all Persons of their Ships and Goods, detained and arrested since the aforesaid time. Whereby it may appear, that our intention of taking up of Arms, was no waies for invading of our Native Kingdom, or to innovate the Religion and Laws, but meerly for the maintaining and vindicating of our Royal Authority. And since that hereby it doth clearly appear, that we neither have nor do intend any alteration in Religion or Laws, but that both shall be maintained by us in their full Integrity, we expect the performance of that humble and dutiful Obedience which becometh Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, as in their several Petitions they have often professed. And as we have just reason to believe, that to our peaceable and well-affected Subjects this will be satisfactory; so we take God and the World to Witness, That whatsoever Calamities shall ensue by our necessitated suppressing of the Insolencies of such as shall continue in their disobedient Courses, is not occasioned by us, but by their own procurement.

'These Conditions in this Declaration that refer to the Time past, have been the most part of them already punctually complied with by us, that Clause excepted in which we express, We intended to have been at the General Assembly at Edinburgh; which yet being but an Intention, we had assuredly performed, but that we were diverted by the Disorders committed by our Tumultuary Subjects in Edinburgh, upon the Persons of our High Treasurer the Earl of Kinnoul, our Justice General Sir James Hamilton, Councillors of that our Kingdom, and divers others our good Subjects there; which gave us just cause to suspect, that there could be no safety for our Person, among People enraged so immediately after our Clemency shewed to them in the Pacification.

'But one of the greatest Discouragements we had from going thither, was, The refusing of such Lords and others of that Nation whom we sent for to come to us to Berwick; by which Disobedience they manifestly discovered their distrust of us: And it cannot be thought reasonable, that we should trust our Person with those that distrusted us, after so many Arguments and Assurances of our Goodness towards them.

The Articles of Pacification agreed upon were these:

I.

The Forces of Scotland to be Disbanded and Dissolved within eight and forty hours after the publication of our Declaration, being agreed upon.

II.

Anno.
1639.

II.

Our Castles, Forts, Ammunitions of all sorts, and Royal Honours to be delivered after the said publication, so soon as we should send to receive them.

III.

Our Ships to depart presently after the delivery of the Castles, with the first fair Wind, and in the mean time no interruption of Trade or Fishing.

IV.

We were graciously pleased to cause to be restored, all Persons, Goods, and Ships, detained and arrested since the first day of November last past.

V.

No Meetings, Treatings, Consultations, or Convocations of any our Lieges, but such as are warranted by Act of Parliament.

VI.

All Fortifications to desist, and no further working therein, and they to be remitted to our Pleasure.

VII.

To restore to every one of our good Subjects their Liberties, Lands, Houses, Goods, and Means whatsoever, taken or detained from them by whatsoever means since the aforesaid time.

On Tuesday the eighteenth of June, those of Scotland came to our Pavilion, and there we signed the aforesaid Declaration, and the Articles were signed by them; who also signed another Paper of Submission to us, as followeth:

In the Camp, June 18. 1639.

In obedience to his Majesties Royal Commands, we shall, upon Thursday next, the twentieth of this June, dismiss our Forces, and immediately thereafter deliver his Majesties Castles, &c. and shall ever in all things carry our selves like Humble, Loyal, and Obedient Subjects.

Signed,

Roths.

Dunfermling.

Lowdon.

Dowglas.

Alex. Henderson.

A. Johnston.

Those of Scotland did likewise further promise and undertake, that our foresaid Declaration should be read and published in their Army; which was accordingly done by Lyon King of Arms of Scotland, on Thursday the twentieth, in the presence of the Earl of Morton, Sir Edmund Verney, and Sir John Borough, our Commissioners sent thither to see the same performed. How these Articles have been performed on their part, comes now to be considered, and will appear by that which follows.

First, Whereas we, by the publication of the Articles of Pacification, expected that due respect and acknowledgment of our Authority, which might have witnessed their Loyalty, and sense of their Thankfulness for so great and Royal Favour; we found on the contrary, that at the very publishing of it in their Camp, the same was met with a Protestation, so scandalous and dishonourable to our Government, as our Subjects were thereby rather encouraged in their former mutinous Waies, than reduced to that Obedience which they promised.

Secondly, They delivered into the hands of some of our English Nobility, and spread among others, a scandalous Paper, Entituled, Some Conditions of his Majesties Treaty with his Subjects of Scotland before the English Nobility, are set down here for remembrance. Wherein are contained such Untruths, and seditious Positions, and so contrary to that which was concluded in the Articles of Pacification, as thereby it did plainly appear, that however they pretended a desire of Peace, yet they intended nothing less. This false and seditious Paper coming to our Knowledge, was after, by the Advice, and upon the humble Petition of our Privy Council here in England, and particularly by such Noblemen as were pretended by them to be Witnesses to the same, ordered to be damned by Proclamation, and publicly burnt by the Hand of the Hangman; which was done accordingly.

Thirdly, Whereas it was promised, That the Forces of that our Kingdom of Scotland, raised without our Warrant, and against our Self, should be disbanded and dissolved within forty eight hours after publication of our said Declaration in their Camp; they did nevertheless for some time keep in Body divers Forces, and have ever since held in pay almost all their Officers, in manifest breach of those Articles, contempt of our Royal Authority, contrary to the Laws of that our Kingdom, and to the great danger of all our Subjects, who did give Obedience to our Commandments there, which clearly shewed their Intention of putting themselves again in Arms against us.

Fourthly, Whereas it was promised, That our Forts, Castles, and Ammunitions should be restored so soon as we should send to receive them; yet full Restitution was not made accordingly. And for the Fortification at Leith, which was with the rest remitted to our Pleasure, it stands entirely as it did, though we often commanded the demolishing thereof.

Fifthly, It was promised there should be no Meetings, Treatings, Tables, Consultations, Convocations, or Conventicles, but such as are warranted by Act of Parliament, (and yet we were pleased to give them Warrant to meet for the space of one Month, to Consult, Advise, and Resolve upon such Affairs and Businesses as concerned the Relief of their mutual Burthens only): Nevertheless after that Time expired, which was on the 20th day of July, 1639. they did, and do still continue their unlawful Meetings and Consultations upon Matters of State, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, contrary to the Laws and Acts of Parliament of that our Kingdom, and our express Warrant; In which Conventicles they daily vex and trouble such of our Subjects as do not adhere to their Rebellious Covenant, and pretended Assembly at Glasgow, and the Acts of the same.

Sixthly, Whereas all Fortifications were to be remitted to our Pleasure to be demolished or continued, and we having given Commandment for the demolishing of them all, raised and built without our Warrant; no Obedience is given to the same, but they are still continued, to the fostering of Sedition among our Subjects, and the disturbance of the Peace of that our Kingdom.

Seventhly, Whereas all our good Subjects should have their Liberties and Goods restored to them; yet such is the violence and fury of the People, animated thereunto by the said Protestation, scandalous Papers spread, and seditious Sermons Preached, as many of our said Subjects are deterred from going to their own Dwelling and places of abode, and threatened with the loss of their Lives, in case they shall repair to their own Houses.

Eighthly, Whereas in our Declaration before mentioned, we did make known that we could not approve the late pretended General Assembly at Glasgow, for the Reasons contained in our former Proclamations; yet contrary to that our Pleasure, they daily press our Subjects to subscribe the approbation of the said pretended Assembly, and Acts thereof, and to swear the same; so that whereas we did expect to have found our Subjects settled in Peace and Quietness against our repair to Edinburgh, we heard of nothing but new Disorders, Meetings and Molestations of our Subjects, well affected to our Service; which as it doth evidently appear, by the insupportable Insolences committed as aforesaid, upon the Persons of our High Treasurer the Earl of Kinnoul our Justice General, Sir James Hamilton, and others our Councillors and good Subjects; so doth it clearly evince, that nothing was less intended than Obedience to our Authority, or performance of what was promised, or is due to us in right of our Crown, and by the Laws of that our Kingdom.

Ninthly, Whereas we were pleased to grant a free General Assembly, for settling and composing the Divisions cunningly raised and fomented in the Church of that our Kingdom, expecting a fair choice of the Commissioners, and such as might stand with the respect due to our Authority, they did labour to pervert our Subjects by anticipating their Voices, in making them swear to, and subscribe the Acts of the pretended Assembly at Glasgow, and making choice of such Commissioners (and no others) as adhered thereunto, and by Oath were bound to maintain the same, and further, deterred others, whom we by our Warrant did lawfully call to the next Assembly, from repairing thereunto, threatening them with the loss of their lives, and what worse may be committed against their Persons, in manifest contempt of our Authority, and derogation from the freedom of the said Assembly.

Tenthly, To divert all our good Subjects from their due Obedience to us, and to debauch them to their factious Mutinies and Disorders; they brand all such as adhere to us, and have attended our Person, with the vile aspersion of Traitors to God and their Country, threatening to proceed against them with Censures accordingly; as though the due respect given by them to us, and their adhering to us, and their assisting us in their Persons, were Treason: Whereas by right of that our Crown, and the Acts of Parliament of that our Kingdom, all our Subjects are to rise with us, and to assist us with their Bodies and Goods; and whosoever refuses, or rises in Arms or Rebellion against us, or commits any Act of Hostility against our Sacred Person, are declared Traitors, and are to incur the pain of High Treason. Car. 15.

Lastly, Their Disobedience appears in that unparalleled contempt of our Royal Authority, and shaking off all respect due to Sacred Majesty, by their protesting that all Members of the Colledge of Justice, and all our Lieges were not to attend the Session, and that all Acts, Decrees, and Sentences therein past against any of them, shall be null, void, and ineffectual, contrary to our express Warrant for the down-sitting thereof, and to the heavy damage of our good Subjects, who were thereby frustrated of Justice, taking by this means our Royal Power out of our Hand, which alone belongeth to us; none but our Self being to command our Subjects to attend the Session, or to discharge their attendance, as we in our Princely Wisdom and Justice shall think fit.

Having laid these insolent and seditious Foundations for a Parliament, it could not in reason be expected but a Structure to be raised thereupon must be full of Disorder and Confusion; and indeed it proved all of a piece: for in all the Progress of the Parliament, their Actions and Demands were full of Undutifulness and Disloyalty, denying to us the most essential and inherent Prerogatives of our Crown, and striving by all means to charge and alter the Constitutions of the Parliament, and frame of Government; as appears by their first Act, at and after the chusing of the Lords of the Articles; where, in a most insolent and peremptory way they protested, That nothing done, or to be done in Parliament, should be valid, except the form of electing Articles heretofore observed were altered, every Estate allowed to chuse their own Articles, contrary to the form kept in former Parliaments for many Years, as will clearly be evinced by the Records, and will be made appear by Persons of all Qualities yet living, who assisted at the Parliaments, and were Members of the same, in the Years 1612, and 1609, and contrary to the Provisions and Conditions mentioned in the Act, 1587.

By their Act likewise concerning the defining of the Power of the said Articles, they press totally to subvert the Frame and Power thereof. The Articles have been, as is acknowledged by themselves, ever since King David Bruce his Time, which is above three hundred Years; and by the Lords of the Articles all Businesses are prepared, and from them brought to the Parliament, as appears by divers Acts of Parliament, and particularly by the fourth Parliament of King James the Sixth, Cap 218; in which for eschewing of Confusion and impertinent Motions, all Propositions to be made in Parliament are to be delivered to the Clerk Register, and by him presented to the Lords of the Articles, that all frivolous and improper Motions may be rejected; which Ancient Constitution they would subvert by the aforesaid Act.

Anno 1639. 'So by the Act concerning the Constitution of the Parliament in time to come, they urge, and thereby strive totally to alter the frame of the Parliament, and to confound and take away the third Estate; wherein the Civil Power of Kings is so much concerned, as Our Father, and all his Predecessors in former Parliaments, both in time of Popery, and since the Reformation of Religion, have been most careful to preserve and maintain the Dignity, Honour, and Priviledges of the third Estate; as appears in Anno 1560. when all Church Jurisdiction in the Persons of Bishops is alledged to be abolished; and in Anno 1587. when all the Temporalities of Benefices were annexed to the Crown, the Clergy retained still their Vote in Parliament, and represented the third Estate, and the Civil Power and Priviledges of the Church were still preserved, and again ratified, as appears by the first Parliament of King James 6. cap. 24. and by divers Acts of Parliament, Anno 1587, 1597, and 1609. By all which, and divers other Acts of Parliament, it does clearly appear how much the Kings, our Predecessors, have conceived their Civil Power, and the Honour of their Crown to be concerned in the maintaining and upholding of the Honour, Dignity, and Priviledges of the three Estates. Nay, by a special Act made in the time of King James 6. Parl. 8. cap. 130. it is declared Treason to impugn the Authority of the Parliament, and three Estates, or to procure the Innovation of the Power and Authority of the same three Estates, or any of them: And we would willingly know how they, or any of them, can deny, but that they have sought the breach of this Act, and so are guilty of Treason, and liable to the punishment thereof.

'Concerning the Act which they call Rescissory, they do not only thereby seek to take away the third Estate (which is Treason, as aforesaid) but to annul many other Acts formerly made in favour of the Crown: And farther, to bar Us, in a manner totally, from Assembly, or Assembly-Business, and cut Us off from all those Powers in Civil Affairs, which in the Court of that Kingdom are in consequence hereupon; by which it is evident how far they would trench upon Regal Power, and how different it is from their Promise, which was, to desire nothing that is not warranted by Law.

'For the Act of Oblivion, in the Narrative and whole strain of it, as it is formed, and desired by them to be past in Parliament, they seek to justify themselves in all their Proceedings, and instead of an Act of Oblivion, for which they petitioned Us at the Camp, they urge an Act which amounts to a Justification to be recorded in the Books of Parliament, altogether contrary to the nature of an Act of Oblivion, and to that which ever heretofore hath been desired in like case, as appears by the Act of Oblivion in Anno 1563.

'And whereas by the Act of Pacification, Restitution is ordained to be made to every one of Our good Subjects of their Liberties, Lands, Goods, and means whatsoever, taken and detained from them by any means since the aforesaid time; this is not only not yet performed, but as appears by the binding part of this Act, it is never intended.

'And as by the aforesaid Act of Oblivion, so by their Act of Relief, they depart from that which was condescended to at the Camp: For whereas upon their humble desire We were graciously pleased, by a Commission dated at Berwick, July 2.

1639. to allow them the liberty of Conveening and Meeting, until a certain day, for distributing of their pretended Charges amongst such as should willingly condescend thereunto; they have not only without our Warrant kept their Conventicles, and Tables, since the expiring of the foresaid Commission, contrary to the positive Laws of the Kingdom, and Act of Pacification, and their own acknowledgment in petitioning for the aforesaid Commission, but by their said Act of Relief they do most impudently urge upon Us, that by an Act of Our Royal Power, all our good Subjects, who in the late Troubles and Commotions did adhere to Us, and shew themselves ready to defend our Royal Authority, should be made equally, if not more liable to the defraying of their pretended Charges. So by the Act it self, We are pressed to justify and authorize all their Rebellions and Treasons, and to constrain the Innocent, and those that have suffered most for being faithful and loyal to Us, to contribute to those Rebellions and Treasons; than which there can be nothing more Tyrannical, nor contrary to Justice and our Honour.

'Concerning their Demands, although in all their Petitions, Declarations, and Remonstrances, they profess, That they will never inroach upon Sovereignty, nor diminish our Royal Authority; yet notwithstanding by their Demands made in Parliament, and the Reasons of them given to our Self, they strike at the very Root of our Regal Power. For they desire,

First, 'That the Coyne be not meddled with but by advice of Parliament.

Secondly, 'That no Stranger be entrusted with keeping of our Castles, nor other Person put in them, but by advice of the Estates.

Thirdly, 'That no Patent of Honour be granted to any Stranger, but such as have a competency of Land-Rent in Scotland.

Fourthly, 'That no Commission of Justiciary or Lieutenancy may be granted but for a limited time.

Fifthly, 'They protest likewise against the Precedency of our Lord Treasurer, and Lord Privy Seal, because as they alledge the same is not warranted by a positive Law.

'All which, though they are so essentially belonging to Us as their King, that for the most part they answer themselves; yet We have thought it not unfit to give the World this satisfaction concerning them.

'And first for the Coin; It is a Privilege most peculiar to the Crown, and none can meddle with it but by our Consent, without incurring the punishment of High Treason, as it is in all Kingdoms.

'In the second and third, There lurketh a great deal of Malignity and Poison, and they are intended meerly against the English, whom they would account Strangers; as appears by the Exception lately taken by those of Edinburgh to those English sent by Us to the Castles of Edinburgh and Donbarton. This is a most dangerous and seditious practice, to raise again the Partition Wall between the two Nations, and to divide them, thereby to awaken those ancient National Animosities, which have been most happily laid asleep by the blessed Union of the Anno 1639. two Crowns. And besides, the great dishonour to the English, that they should not be held worthy to enjoy any Dignities or Priviledges in Scotland, as well as the Scots do in England: It is an injury to themselves; For it is most just, that by the same Rule the Post-nati of Scotland (who are now admitted here to all Dignities, Priviledges, and Offices, and do enjoy them as freely as any English whatsoever) should be likewise excluded from them, for which most of their Country-men here would give them little thanks. But what Religion there can be in shewing themselves such Incendiaries, We leave it to the world to judge.

To the fourth; Some of themselves have obtained from us the heritable Rights of Justiciary, over a considerable part of that Our Kingdom; and why Our Power should be more limited to others than to them, We understand not.

To the fifth; No Man that is not a Traitor, can deny that the Source and Fountain of all Honour is in Us, and that it is a prime Branch of our Crown to distribute Honours, Dignities, and Precedencies to whom we please; and besides, the Chancellor of that Our Kingdom, holds his Place and Precedency without any Warrant or positive Law, but meerly from Our immediate and inherent Power; and therefore why not our Treasurer and Privy Seal as well as he?

They further boldly demand the rescinding the Acts of Parliament concerning the Civil Government; namely, the Act concerning the Judicatory of the Exchequer, the Act concerning Proxies, the Act concerning Confirmation of Ward-Lands; by which they would overthrow both our Government and Revenue.

When We found them thus pertinaciously resolved to persist in these their insolent and unsufferable Demands, contrary to all Religion and Laws, though they so much pretend them both, we signified Our Pleasure to Our Commissioner the Earl of Traquair, to this purpose;

That whereas it did evidently appear unto Us, that the aim of divers of our Subjects was not now for Religion, as they have always pretended, (for it was manifest by the proceeding of Our said Commissioner, how willing We had been to give satisfaction both in Assembly and Parliament, touching all such things as were promised by Us, or sued for by them under that Name of Religion); And that we did perceive, by many new strange Propositions, that nothing would give them content but the alteration of the whole frame of the Government of that Kingdom, and withal, the total overthrow of Royal Authority, We held it must now be Our care and endeavour to prevent that which did so nearly concern Us in Safety and Honour; and if thereupon We should immediately command the dissolving of the Parliament, it were no more then justice might be expected from Us. Nevertheless, such was still Our tenderness of their preservation, and of the establishment of a perfect Peace in that our Native Kingdom, as We were pleased rather to prorogate the same, and to hear such Reasons as they could give for their Demands. Wherefore We commanded Our said Commissioner to prorogate the Parliament until the second of June next ensuing, and that (since they had disputed it) by our Authority only; We holding it no way fitting, that any assent of theirs but Obedience should be had to that Act, which doth so properly belong to Us as their King; and if they should presume to protest, sit still, and disobey this our Royal Command, Our further Will and Pleasure was, That Our said Commissioner should discharge their so doing under pain of Treason. But in case of their Obedience, and dissolving according to Our Command, then We did require Our said Commissioner to declare unto them, That We would not only admit to Our presence such as they should send unto Us to represent their Desires, and the Reasons of them, but would likewise, as We were ready always to do, punctually perform whatsoever we did promise. In the interim, We commanded himself with all convenient speed to repair hither, and to bring with him all that had passed, or had been demanded, both in Assembly and Parliament, that so We might not only be more perfectly informed of all Proceedings, but likewise consult with him and those of Our Council, what course would be best for the preservation of Our Honour, and the happy accommodation of this Business.

This Our Command being signified to the Parliament by Our Commissioner, was not assented unto without a Protestation, which they call a Declaration of the Parliament, to this purpose.

That whereas John Earl of Traquair, his Majesties Commissioner, honoured with a most ample Commission, according to his Majesties Royal Word, having closed the Assembly, and sitting in Parliament with them a very long time, for debating and preparing such Articles as were to be represented in face of Parliament, did now take upon him, and that without the consent of the Estates, and without any Offence on their part, who have endeavoured in all their proceedings to witness their Loyalty to the King, and Duty to his Grace, as representing his Majesties Sacred Person, to prorogate the Parliament upon a private Warrant, procured by sinister information, against his Majesties publick Patent under the Great Seal, &c. whereby he heavily offends all his Majesties good Subjects, and endangers the Peace of the whole Kingdom, for which he must be liable to his Majesties Animadversion, and to the censure of the Parliament, this being a new and unusual way, without president in this Kingdom, contrary to his Majesties Honour so far engaged for present ratifying the Acts of the Kirk, contrary to the Laws, Liberties, and perpetual practice of the Kingdom; by which all continuation of Parliament once called, convened, and begun to sit, have ever been made with express consent of the Estates, as may be seen in the Reigns of sundry Princes, &c. Therefore we the Estates of Parliament, &c. are constrained in this Extremity to manifest and declare, &c. That as we have not given the least cause, or smallest occasion of this unexpected or unexampled Prorogation, so we judge and know the same to be contrary to the Constitution and Practices of all preceding Parliaments; contrary to the Liberties of this free and ancient Kingdom, and very repugnant to his Majesties Royal Intentions, Promise, and gracious Expression in the Articles of the late Pacification, &c. And we do further declare, That any Prorogation made by the Commissioner's Grace alone, without consent of the Parliament, by himself, or any Commissioner

 ner in his Name, under the Quarter Seal, or by the Lords of the Council, who have no power at all in Matters of the Parliament, during the sitting thereof, shall be ineffectual and of no force at all to hinder the lawful proceedings of the Subjects, and the doers thereof to be censurable in Parliament. And further we declare, That the Commissioner his nomination of the Articles by himself, his calling together those Articles, and commanding them to sit continually and proceed, notwithstanding their daily Protestations to the contrary; his keeping frequent Sessions of Council, and determining Causes in Council, during the time of Session in Parliament; His calling down and Calling up of Money during the Session of Parliament, without consent of the Estates of Parliament; notwithstanding the Parliament had taken the Money into their consideration, and had purposed to have given their advice for a determination there-aneant; His frequent prorogating of the riding of the Parliament, without consent of the Estates, or mentioning in the Acts of Prorogation, the consent of the Articles, although it were done by their advice, are contrary to the Liberties of the Kingdom, Freedom and Custom of Parliament; and that they be no preparatives, practicks, nor prejudices in time coming against us, or our Successors. But because we know that the Eyes of the World are upon us, that Declarations have been made and published against us, &c. that our proceedings may be made odious to such as know not the way how these Commandments are procured from his Majesty, nor how they are made known nor intimate to us, and do as little consider that we are not private Subjects, but a sitting Parliament; or what National prejudices we have sustained in time past by mis-information, and what is the present case of the Kingdom, We therefore declare, That whatsoever by the example of our Predecessors in like cases of necessity, by his Majesties Indiction, and by the Articles of Pacification, we might do lawfully in sitting still; and which in this extream necessity were justifiable, not only before so just a King, but to the faces of our Adversaries; Yet out of our most reverend regard, and humble desire, to render not only all real demonstrations of Civil Obedience, but to put far from us all show or appearance of what may give his Majesty the least discontent, we have resolved for the present only to make Remonstrance to his Majesty of the reason of our propositions and proceedings in this Parliament, &c. And in expectation of his Majesties gracious Answer to these our humble Remonstrances, some of each Estate having power from the whole Body of the Parliament, remain still here at Edinburgh, to attend the return of his Majesties gracious Answer to our humble and just Demands: And further, to remonstrate our humble Desires to his Majesty upon all Occasions, that hereby it may be made most manifest against all contradiction, that it was never our intentions to deny his Majesty any part of that Civil and Temporal Obedience which is due to all Kings from their Subjects, and from us to our dread Sovereign after a more especial manner, but merely to preserve our Religion and Liberties of the Kingdom, without which Religion cannot continue long in safety: And if it shall happen (which God forbid) that after we had made our Remonstrances, and to the uttermost of our power and duty used all means for his Majesties Information, that our malicious Enemies, who are not considerable, shall by their Suggestions and Lies prevail against the Informations, and general Declaration of a whole Kingdom, we take God and Men to witness, That we are free of the Outrages and Insolencies that may be committed in the mean time, and that it shall be to us no imputation, that we are constrained to take such course as may best secure the Kirk and Kingdom from the extremity of Confusion and Misery.

Which Declaration above-written, we the Estates of Parliament, required the Clerk to insert in the Records thereof, and grant Extracts thereof under his Hand and Subscription. Car. 15.

This Declaration was produced and read in the outer House of Parliament, upon Decemb. 18. 1639. according whereunto the Nobility nominated and appointed the Earls of Lothian and Dalhousie; the Lords, Yester, Balmerino, Cranston, and Napier: The Barons nominated the Commissioners of the three Lothians, Fife, and Tweedail: The Burroughs nominated the Commissioners of Edinburgh, Linlithgow, Sterling, Haddington, Dunbar, to attend at Edinburgh the return of his Majesties gracious Answer to their humble Remonstrance.

'In this Protestation or Declaration, though there be a specious show, and sundry professions of Obedience to Us, yet it is evident they have wound'ed our Authority in the Person of the Earl of Traquair our Commissioner, who did nothing in that Prorogation but by Our special Command'ment; and therefore for that they cannot cen'sure him without reflection upon Us: And be'sides, it is positively affirmed, That any Proroga-
 'tion made by the Commissioner alone, without consent 'of the Parliament, shall be ineffectual, and of no
 'force; which necessarily implies, That We have 'no power to Prorogue, whereas the contrary is 'most manifest Truth. And though upon our 'Command there was a show of Prorogation, yet
 'they continued part of their Body at Edinburgh,
 'upon pretence of receiving our Answer to their 'Remonstrance; which, if it shall not be to their 'liking, they conclude with a menacing Protesta-
 'tion, That it shall be no imputation to them, if they 'be constrained to take such course as may best secure
 'the Kirk and Kingdom from the extremity of Con'fusion and Misery; having first taken God and 'Man to witness, That they will be free of all Out'rages and Insolencies that may be committed in the 'mean time; than which nothing can be more 'boldly and insolently spoken.

'After this, these divided Members of that di-'tracted Parliamentary Body remaining thus at 'Edinburgh, did send the Earl of Dunfermling and
 'the Lord Lowdon as their Deputies, to make 'their Remonstrance to Us. But because We un'derstood that they came without Warrant or Li'cence from our Commissioner, and had not ac'quainted him with what they were to propound
 'unto Us, We held this like the rest, a great 'and insufferable Disobedience, and would not 'admit them to our Presence, coming in this man'ner; and so commanded them to return without 'hearing them.

'Then our Commissioner came hither, and 'made a Report to Us of the state of our Affairs
 'there; with which We thought fit to acquaint
 'the Lords of our Council of England, as also
 'with this Carriage of the Parliament in Scotland, 'and to advise with them what was to be done for 'redress of these Disorders. Whereupon We 'commanded Our said Commissioner, the Earl of 'Traquair, to make relation to the Board of all 'their exorbitant Demands, of which some ac'count hath been formerly given them by the Lord
 'Marquess Hamilton. Upon this our Command,
 'the Earl of Traquair made a large and exact re'presentation to the Board of the most consider'able Matters proposed and agitated in Parlia'ment, and of the insolency of their Demands;
 'and the Petitioners themselves sent from Scotland,
 'have

Anno 1639. have since their coming to Us insisted upon all and every Particular of Our said Commissioners Relation, and in a most bold way offered to justify them all; by which they have more than justified the Report of the said Earl of Traquair.

Whereupon we were further pleased to acquaint the Lords, that they had lately sent Us a Petition, which carried some show of submission and humility, but was indeed nothing less, wherein they desired, that some might be allowed to come from them to Us, to represent their Affairs; which to make our Subjects of Scotland the more inexcusable, We told the Lords we had granted, though we had little cause to hope for any good from those that had so much forgotten their Duty and Allegiance to Us.

When the Lords had heard the Relation of our Commissioner, We thought fit upon the whole Matter to put this Question to them, Whether considering the insolency and height of these Demands, even concerning Civil Obedience, it were not fit to reduce them to their Duty by force, rather than to give way to these Demands, so prejudicial to Us in Honour and Safety? To this we commanded every one of our Council to give his Answer, and to declare his Opinion by Vote; which was accordingly done, and they unanimously voted in the Affirmative: Whereupon soon after we resolved to call a Parliament.

After this, our Subjects in Scotland, according to the Answer we gave them upon their Petition, having sent up hither four Deputies, viz. the Earl of Dunfermling, the Lord Lowdon, Sir William Douglass, and Mr. Berkley; We were pleased to admit them to Our Presence, and to receive Petitions from them, which were after by our Direction subscribed by them; in one of which they, in the Name of the Assembly convened at Edinburgh, gave Us thanks for that we had made known to them, that all Matters Ecclesiastical should be determined in free National Assemblies, and Matters Civil in Parliaments, and desired our Ratification of the Constitutions of the Assembly in Parliament: And in the other they desired to be heard before Us, and some of our Council of both Kingdoms; and that the Report made by the Earl of Traquair to our Council here in England, might be delivered them in writing under his hand, which was a most insolent Demand.

Immediately after this, We thought fit to appoint a special Committee of some of our Council to hear them, and accordingly gave order to the Earl of Traquair to assign them a day to come to that Committee. They refused to come, alleging that they had Order and Instructions to treat with none but our Self: Whereupon we appointed them to attend Us at the Committee, though it were the day of Our appointed remove to Hampton Court; at which time they did attend Us accordingly.

There the Lord Lowdon made a long Speech, the effect whereof was, A Protestation of the Independency of the Parliament of Scotland, and that it is subject to no other Judicatory; a profession of their Loyalty and Affection to Us, and a Justification of their proceedings in the Assembly and Parliament, as agreeable to the Articles of Pacification, and to the Laws and Practices of that Kingdom; and thereupon a desire, That We would ratify and confirm those their proceedings; and to that purpose command that the Parliament might proceed freely, for the determining of all the Articles delivered into them, and the establishing of Religion and Peace in the Kingdom; undertaking that whatsoever Objections or Informations should be made against their proceedings in Parliament, (if they might receive them in writing) they would make Answer to them.

This Discourse ended, We demanded what Power and Commission they had to give Us satisfaction, and to oblige those from whom they came? Seeing if they had none, We should hear them upon great disadvantage, they expecting Satisfaction from Us who have Power to give it, but they none to render the like to Us.

They Answered, That which they should propose (it being agreeable to Law) they were confident would give Us satisfaction.

We asked who should be Judge of that? They answered, The Laws would be so clear that there should be no need of a Judge. And though We insisted much hereupon, they would give Us no other Satisfaction; they avowing they had Powers, and would bring them to Us; they were ordered to do so at the next Meeting, and so for that time were dismissed.

After Our return from Hampton Court, they attended Us at the Committee again; where they produced Instructions signed by some Scottish Lords, and other Persons of no great eminency; which Instructions having been read, were judged by Us, (all the Committee concurring in the same Opinion) to be no Commission, nor that they had any Power or Authority by them to give Us satisfaction, or to oblige those from whom they said they came, to any thing that We should yield to, or desire. Wherefore we demanding whether they had any other Power? They said, They had a Paper formerly subscribed by some of the Lords in Parliament, by which the Earl of Dunfermling and Lord Lowdon were only authorized to come, and present their Justification to Us, and they could for the present have no other, the Parliament now not sitting. Whereupon we advising seriously with the Committee what was best to be done in this weighty Business; and considering, That if they should be dismissed without further hearing, they would take occasion to clamour, although We held our Self bound neither in Honour nor Justice to hear them any further, (they having offered no Foundation for an Accommodation, nor having Power to do it) yet to the end that no colour of sinister Construction might be left, and that We might justify our Self to God and the World, that We have omitted nothing on Our part that might tend to Peace, and to the settling of a better Intelligence between Us and them, we did resolve that we would continue to hear them, and make Our Objections to such Particulars as had been proposed in Parliament, and against which we had just grounds of Exception, that so it might appear whether they could give Us that satisfaction which they had promised and presumed.

This We having declared to them, not one of them made show of the least sense of this Our Grace and Goodness so expressed to them; which the Lord Marquess Hamilton observing, took occasion of himself to say, That though he was not of their Company, yet being a Scotch-man, he held himself obliged to acknowledge with all humility

Anno 1639.
 'humility this Our singular and princely Favour 'to his Country, and besought Us to accept his 'most humble thanks for it. This drew them 'on to do the like, and so they presented their 'humble Thanks to Us on their knees.

'At the next Meeting of the Committee, the 'said Petitioners produced the Paper above-men'tioned, subscribed by some of the Lords remain'ing at Edinburgh, as aforesaid, by which the Earl 'of Dunfermling and Lord Lowdon only were here'tofore authorized to come and present their Ju'stification to Us: Which Paper being read, the 'whole Committee agreed that the Petitioners 'had no power by this Paper, no more than by the 'former, to give Us any satisfaction, or to ob'lige those from whom they came, but only to 'endeavour to justify themselves, and the former 'proceedings of the Parliament. Of all this
 'we were pleased to give account to Our whole
 'Council of England, who unanimously concurred
 'in Opinion with the Committee, That the 'above-mentioned Papers gave them no power at 'all: Nevertheless we were contented, accord'ing to Our promise, to hear them; and we 'did make Objections to the most exorbitant of 'their Demands: But their Answers were very 'impertinent, and rather Justifications of them,
 'than any way satisfactory: Which could not be 'otherwise, seeing those Demands were for the 'most part so contrary to Law and Monarchical
 'Government, that they did answer themselves;
 'as by our Answer to them formerly set down
 'more particularly may appear.

'Concerning our promise of a Free Parliament,
 'no Man of ordinary sense can imagine we ever 'intended it should be so free, as not to be lim'ited with their own Conditions, subscribed by
 'the Lord Lowdon, which were to enjoy their Re'ligion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesia'stical and Civil Laws of that our Kingdom; and 'if they pass these Bounds, as it is evident they 'have done, we remain disobliged, unless they 'will have Us only obliged, and themselves left at 'liberty to fly at our Monarchical Government,
 'without controul, to wrest the Scepter out of 'our Hand, to rob our Crown of the fairest Flow'ers belonging to it, and to destroy our Regal
 'Power and Authority, as manifestly they have 'endeavoured to do by their insufferable intend'ed Acts and Demands, contrary to all Law and 'Reason.

'If it be further Objected, That they assume
 'this Liberty by our allowing of the Covenant,
 'and commanding Our former High Commissio'ner, the Lord Marquess of Hamilton, and other
 'Our Subjects, to subscribe it; the Answer is 'very ready, That there is a great difference be'tween the Covenant and Band subscribed by Our 'Commandment, and their Band; for that Cove'nant and Band was made by Our late Father,
 'King James of blessed memory, Anno 1580.
 'and obligeth those that swear to it, that they 'should mutually assist one another, as they 'should be commanded by the King, or any au'thorized by him. But this new Band was made 'without Our consent, and by it they swear mu'tually to assist one another, not excepting the 'King, which is indeed a meer cunning Combina'tion against the King. Besides, when any have 'been required to subscribe the Covenant, as the 'Lord Marquess Hamilton was, and did, and in 'that sense which he declared in print, the princi'pal Heads of them did not only refuse it them'selves, but dissuaded (as much as in them lay) all Our good Subjects from subscribing it, though

 'the Covenant were all one with theirs, and so 'acknowledged by themselves: Whereby it doth 'evidently appear, That it was not Religion they 'aimed to secure; (as they pretended) for then
 'they would have acquiesced with these our Com'mands, but meerly by adhering to their own 'Band, to keep our Subjects in that condition, as 'they might be always tied, and conceive them'selves obliged by Oath to take up Arms against 'Us whensoever the time should be fit for a total
 'Rebellion; which they have never left endea'vouring till they have brought it to pass: So that
 'by Our approbation of the old Covenant and 'Band, or by the Subscription of our Commissio'ner, they can have no solid Foundation to justi-
 'fie their now Proceedings; and it will hardly 'appear that ever any Covenant was made in the 'Christian World (except in Cases of Rebellion 'and Treason, as this is) where the Head was left 'out, or had not a Negative Voice.

'Neither can the Earl of Traquair, our High 'Commissioner his Subscription, or allowance of 'the subscription of the Covenant, be any War'rant for their rebellious Courses; seeing, as ap'pears by their own Petitions to him, they de'clare, that, Now following the laudable Example
 'of their Predecessors, they do humbly supplicate for 'the same, and that they may be allowed and warranted
 'to subscribe it: Which clearly evinces, that what 'they did before, and of themselves, without 'warrant of Authority, was neither laudable nor 'warrantable: As also before the allowing there-
 'of by the said Earl of Traquair, it is acknow'ledged (as appears by that which is prefixt to 'his Subscription) that it is one and the same Co'venant with that of 1580. which, as appears by
 'the Reasons heretofore deduced, will no way in'fer any ground, or the least shadow of Reason 'for their treasonable Combinations, or taking 'up of Arms against Us, or our Authority, or any 'denial of our Negative Voice.

'Now upon Debate of this Point at the Coun'cil Board, the Lords were of Opinion, that un'til the Petitioners sent from the Covenanters
 'would acknowledge that the Supream Magi'strate must have Authority to call Assemblies,
 'and to dissolve them, and to have a Negative
 'Voice in them, as is accustomed in all Supream
 'Powers of Christendom, they ought not to be 'heard.

'If they shall alledge (as they did when they 'came to the Committee) that their Demands a'foresaid were but Matters in fieri, and not abso'lutely resolved nor concluded: It is to be answer'ed, That the Impediment was not on their part 'that they were not concluded. Nay, the Lord
 'Lowdon, in his first Speech to Us at the Com'mittee, did not only justify their proceedings in 'the Assembly and Parliament, as agreeable to 'the Articles of Pacification, and to the Laws and 'Practice of that Kingdom, but did desire that 'we would ratifie and confirm those their pro'ceedings, and to that purpose command that
 'the Parliament might proceed freely, and deter'mine anent all those Articles delivered in to 'them. Howsoever, good Subjects ought to be 'wary how they come near the suspicion of Rebel'lion or Treason, much more how they make 'Demands that carry with them more than a 'suspicion of rebellious and treasonable Inten'tions, as these above-mentioned most manifest'ly do.

'Now besides the Insolencies and Acts of Rebellion

K k k k k

Anno 1639. bellion and Treason above-mentioned, committed before, and in the Assembly and Parliament, we cannot but observe and publish to the world, that their carriage hath been no less exorbitant since the Parliament, and since the coming of their Petitioners hither, than before: For without any Authority or Commission from Us, they have taken upon them to levy and raise Forces in several parts of that our Kingdom, in great numbers, which they have continually exercised and trained, and have assigned them a Rendezvous, and a day to be in a readiness to march.

They have made Provisions of great quantities of Artillery, Munition, and Arms, from Forreign Parts, which they have ready in Magazine to make use of against Us their Sovereign.

They have of themselves laid Taxes and Impositions of ten Marks in every hundred, upon all and every our Subjects, according to their several Revenues, to be levied upon their Estates, for the maintenance of this Rebellion; and this they have exacted with the greatest rigour and tyranny that can be imagined, howsoever they pretended the Contribution to be voluntary.

They have caused to be framed and published, as well in Manuscript as in Print, sundry false, seditious, and scandalous Papers and Pamphlets, concerning our proceedings with them; and amongst others, one intituled, An Information from the Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland, to the Kingdom of England, &c. which having come to our knowledge, we caused it to be read publicly at our Council Table; and the Lords in detestation thereof became humble Suitors to Us, that it might be suppressed by Proclamation, and burnt by the Hand of the Hangman, which hath been done accordingly.

They have refused the Lord Estrick, Governor of our Castle at Edinburgh, Timber, and other Materials necessary for reparation of the Works lately fallen down there, notwithstanding our express Commandment by our Letters to them upon their Allegiance to furnish them.

They have committed sundry Outrages and Violences upon the Persons of some of the Garrison at Edinburgh, that came out of the Castle to buy Victuals.

They have begun to raise Works and Fortifications against the said Castle, thereby to block up that our Royal Fort, and to render it unuseful. And they have fortified sundry other Places in that our Kingdom, and particularly Insgarvy, where they have mounted divers pieces of Ordnance.

They have lately imprisoned the Lord of Soubeske, and sundry others of Quality, for not adhering to them, and for their fidelity to Us.

And whereas we have upon sundry occasions signified our Pleasure to the Magistrates of Edinburgh for the performance of such things as have concerned our Service: Instead of yielding Obedience, they have made answer, That they have delivered up the power of governing the Town, into the hands of the Committee of the pretended Tables, by which they have not only voluntarily disabled themselves to serve Us, but have incurred the guilt of High Treason, by conferring upon any that power of Government which they derive and hold from Us alone, and cannot be resigned to any other without our special Warrant and Command.

But to fill up the measure of their Treasons, they have endeavoured to settle Intelligences in parts beyond the Seas, and practised to let in Forreign Power into that our Kingdom, as we are able to make appear under the hands of some of the chiefest of them; as if the Fire, which by their own Rebellions they have already kindled within the Bowels of that State, were not sufficient to consume it, unless they added fuel to it from abroad. And herein appears first their malignity to Us their natural Sovereign, in that they had rather prostitute themselves to a Forreign Government, and such as is different in Religion, than yield conformity to ours. And then secondly, we cannot but take notice that the Interests and Safety of our Self, and this our Kingdom of England, are highly concerned herein: For if a Stranger once take footing in those Northern parts, it is not hard to judge how easily he may be invited by such Guides as they, and such an entrance as they will readily give him, to draw nearer to this warmer Climate of the South; and then how much the English Nation are likely to be beholden to their Scottish Neighbours for such Inmates, is left to every true English heart sadly to consider, and in time to endeavour to prevent, lest he be overtaken unawares by the mischief which threatens every one in particular, and the whole Nation in general; and yet all this with them is Religion and Laws.

But because the World shall see that we charge them not but upon very good and sure Grounds, we have thought fit to set down here their own Letter: Of which we have given our good Brother, the French King, an account, being confident he will not assist any Rebels against Us. The Letter follows, with this Endorsement, Au Roy, which in France is always understood from those Subjects only to their Natural Prince.

SIRE,

Vostre Majesté (estant l'asyle & sanctuaire des Princes & Estats affligés) nous avons trouvé nécessaire d'envoyer ce Gentilhomme le Sieur de Colvil, pour représenter à V. Englished thus:

SIR,

Your Majesty being the Refuge and Sanctuary of afflicted Princes and States, we have found it necessary to send this Gentleman Mr. Colvil, to represent unto your Majesty the candour and ingenuity, as well of our Actions and Proceedings, as of our Intentions, which we desire to be engraved and written to the whole World with a Beam of the Sun, as well as to your Majesty. We therefore most humbly beseech you (Sir) to give faith and credit to him, and to all that he shall say on our part, touching us and our Affairs; being most assured (Sir) of an Assistance equal to your wonted Clemency heretofore, and so often shewed to this Nation, which will not yield the Glory to any other whatsoever to be eternally,

Sir,

Your Majesties most humble

most obedient, and most affectionate Servants,

'Now these Affronts to our Government, and dangers to our State, which have no Relation at all to Religion and Law, but in the violation of them both, have necessitated Us to put the Forces of this our Realm in order, and our Self into a condition to be able (by God's help) to vindicate our Safety and Honour against all those that under pretence of Religion and Law, have already risen, or shall rise up against Us, and to preserve and keep in safety our good and loyal Subjects, and to take care that the Gangrene be cut off before it spread too far, to the endangering of this our Kingdom of England. Nevertheless we profess before God and all the World, that we never did, nor ever will hinder them from the enjoying of their Religion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws of that our Kingdom; and according to our Promise and their Desires, subscribed by themselves at the Pacification; but that we will govern them as a Just and Religious Prince: In assurance whereof, if they will yet acknowledge their former Crimes and Exorbitancies, and in an humble and submissive manner, like penitent Delinquents, crave pardon for what is past, and yield obedience for the time to come, they shall still find that we will be more sensible of their Conversion, than we have been of their Rebellions; and that we rather desire their Reformation, than their Destruction. But if they persist in their Rebellious Courses, and by that which they call the enjoying of their Religion and Liberties, according to the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws of that Kingdom, will understand nothing but the trampling of our Crown and Royal Authority under their Feet, and the endeavouring to subvert all Laws and Religion, as they have done hitherto by their Proceedings in the Assembly and Parliament, then we hold our Self obliged, in discharge of that Duty which we owe to God and the Government which he hath entrusted to Us, to have recourse to our coercive Power, to prevent so many imminent Dangers as threaten the Publick. This we take God to witness we are necessitated to, and shall not undertake without extream sorrow and reluctance. Nevertheless we trust that God, whose Vicegerent we are, and by whom alone Kings Reign, being likewise a God of Truth, and a severe punisher of all Falshood and Imposture, will no longer suffer his Glory to be despised and prophaned in our Person, by gross Hypocrisie, under the counterfeit habit of Religion, but will arise and scatter His and Our Enemies.

'And for this Noble English Nation, whose Glory it hath been to have been governed many hundreds of Years under a Monarchy, we doubt not but they will, as it becomes loyal and faithful Subjects, continue their Affection to Us and Monarchical Government, and not suffer themselves to be debauched and betrayed into an Anarchy, by such as envy the happiness they have so long enjoyed, and the many glorious Victories which they have atchieved, under Kingly Government, but following the example of the Lords of our Council, and of our Servants, will cheerfully assist Us in this Our just Cause, wherein Our Honour and Safety, together with theirs, are so highly concerned.

'Our Subjects in Ireland, by their late Declaration in Parliament, have not only given Us a considerable Supply toward our present Preparations, to reduce Our disaffected Subjects in Scotland to their due Obedience, but have humbly offered Us their Persons and Estates, even to the uttermost of their Abilities for Our future Supply, in a Parliamentary way, as Our great Occasions (should that Distemper continue) shall require. And this they desire may be recorded as an Ordinance of Parliament, and that it may be published in Print for a Testimony to all the World, and to succeeding Ages, of their Loyalty and Affection to Us, as it well deserves. This is a singular comfort to Us in the midst of these Distractions; and we have no cause to doubt but Our Subjects of England, who are nearer to the Danger, will shew the like tenderness of Our and their own Honour and Safety, which will be no less contentment to Us, and make Us, as a Father of Our People, take the same care of their Preservation and Prosperity, that We shall of Our own. And this We assure them, in the word of a Prince, We shall ever do.

AND thus you have a sight of these Debates, in the mean time the Scottish Covenanters were not idle, but endeavoured by all means to sollicit the help and assistance of several great Ones in the Court of England; more particularly the Earl of Roth's writes upon this Subject to the Earl of Pembroke, who either presently after changed his mind, or acted much against his honour, if he was not of that judgment, which his Letter, in answer to the Earl of Roth's, bespeaks him; for there he expressly saith, That I never allowed your Defence lawfully undertaken, by other Arms than by Petitions and Prayers unto your Master. I never found Loyalty in your Covenant, nor Duty in your taking up Arms. I never affirmed the Justice of your Cause; neither did I consider so much the Merit thereof, as your unwarrantable and tumultuous disobedience therein unto the King, with the vexation and Disturbance it brought upon the Nobility of this Kingdom.

dom. Neither was I in all this Commotion your Advocate for other reasons, than suffering my self to become a Mediator to his Majesty for your Peace and Forgiveness, moved therunto by your frequent Protestations of paying all Duty and Loyalty to your Masters Commands. Most certain it is, that he with some others of his Majesties Court-Officers in these times were not over faithful to their Master, but did afterwards close with his Enemies.

And now all things begin to put on the aspect of War; for the Scots were providing Arms in Germany, as you have heard, wherefore it highly imported his Majesty to make provision accordingly, and rather to meet than expect a War. Accordingly the General Commissions (as you have heard) having been given out, the Entertainment of the Officers, General of the Field, the Lord Generals Train Officers of four Regiments of Foot, Officers General of Horse, and twelve Troops of Horse, and the Officers of the Train of Artillery was agreed on, the charge whereof amounted to no less than One hundred sixty one thousand six hundred fifty and two pounds, eight shillings and four pence per annum, besides eight thousand eight hundred and twenty pounds ten shillings per annum for the pay of the Train of Artillery.

In the latter end of the Year the Lord Wentworth, Deputy of Ireland, came over into England, where by his Majesty he was, according to his excellent merits, kindly entertained, and by him taken into his most intimate Counsel; he was now advanced to the state and honour of an Earl, and Knight of the most noble Order of the Garter: At his Creation he addressed himself to his Majesty, and his Speech hereafter followeth.

The Speech of Thomas Lord Viscount Wentworth to the King in the Presence Chamber at Whitehall, at his being Created Earl of Strafford the 12. of January, 1639.
15 Car. 1.

SIR,

IT is acknowledg'd (with Reverence and Truth) that Kings on the Throne are Sacred Pictures of Divine Majesty; but no where more expressive, then when excellent Princes are delighted in themselves, and magnified by others, rather through their Favours then Corrections; nor does Sovereignty at any time more eminently distinguish and exalt it self, then when we find Power and Will in Contention, or rather Consent for doing of good, more especially and in a larger measure then can consist with the condition of a Subject to accomplish.

This method (kept by great and magnanimous Kings) hath bequeathed them famous and glorious to Posterity: And amongst these your Majesty hath the pre-eminence; for such is the ease, propenseness, and (as I may say) the tranquillity of your Goodness, that what in them were Habits (acquir'd by long observation and practice) seems to be coessential with your Nature.

Nor shall I need fetch an Evidence to this Truth forth of my self, a grateful mention only of the Progress of your multiplied Favours towards me (your humblest Servant) will sufficiently and clearly evince

Your Majesty (of your own meer and free grace) made me a Baron, when you had scarce heard of me, and that too rather by ill Reports then Good; not many days after you were pleased to prevent any pretence of merit in me, indeed to exceed my thoughts through a gracious promise to make me a Viscount, and President of your Council in the North, which was Royally fulfilled within few Months after; successive to these you did me the Honour to call me to your Council-Board, a Deputy I was of your own Choice, and at this present Created an Earl. Car. 15.

These, Sir, in themselves are great and lasting Honours, yet as unto me in no relation so well pleasing, as when I consider my self (by those degrees) here upon my Knees humbly at your Feet to attend the Honour of your Commands, and to be inform'd by your Wisdom.

And I do most humbly beseech your Majesty, That you may vouchsafe the continuance of these dear Pledges unto me, and that I may from your Instructions still borrow light how to guide and direct my self (in the future course of my Service) to that which may be of most advantage to your Affairs, and best accepted with your self, as a Person utterly resolv'd to consider nothing of this World either before or after your Majesty.

The Services this great States-man had performed his Majesty, may not otherwise be better understood than by giving you the words of the Parliament of Ireland, who best knew him.

FOR that your Majesty hath placed over us so just, wise, and profitable a Governour, as the Right Honourable Thomas Earl of Strafford, Lord Lieutenant of this your said Kingdom of Ireland, who by his great care and travel of Body and Mind, sincere and upright Administration of Justice without partiality, encrease of your Majesties Revenues, without the least hurt or grievance to any of your well-disposed and loving Subjects, and our great Comfort and Security, by the large and ample Benefits which we have received, and hope to receive by your Majesties Commission of Grace for remedy of defective Titles, procured hither by his Lordship from your Sacred Majesty; his Lordships great care and pains in Restoration of the Church; the reinforcing of your Army within this Kingdom, and ordering the same with singular good Discipline; His support of your Majesties wholesome Laws here established; his encouragement to your Judges, and other good Officers, Ministers, and Dispensers of your Laws in the due and sincere Administration of Justice; his necessary and just strictness for the Execution thereof, his due punishment of the Contemners of the same, and his care to relieve and redress the Poor and Oppressed. For this your tender care over us shewed by the Deputy, and supporting so good Governours, &c. We in free recognition of your great Goodness towards Us, do, for the abbreviation of some part of your Majesties inestimable Charges, most humbly and freely offer to your Majesty four entire Subsidies, &c.

Notwithstanding these his great Demerits, he was not free from the Attempts of the Beast call'd Envy, but was most unworthily traduced by several Persons, as the Lord Esmond, Sir Pierce Crosby, and others, who for reporting and spreading scandalous Rumours to his prejudice, were enjoined by the Sentence of the Court of Star-Chamber, to make their acknowledgments at the Bar of the Court, and together together with the other persons concerned in the Crime, to pay 5000 l. damages to the Lord Lieutenant.

And thus we have brought our Reader to the beginning of the Second War with Scotland, the Epocha whence his Majesties and the Kingdoms Troubles succeeding, may be reckoned; and all this was for the advancement of that form of Government invented by Mr. Calvin of Geneva; it may not, perhaps, be amiss to give the Reader some account of this fatal Church-Government, the very Fundi nostri calamitas; for which the two Nations drew their Swords, and of which they were (especially this of England) so quickly weary.

and growth of Presbytery.

It was this year an exact Century since Calvin first set his foot into Geneva, where the Bishop being expelled, necessary it was some other Government should be succenturiated instead of the former. Calvin being of high esteem there, the contrivance thereof was committed to his care. He observing the Town Democratical in the Civil, thought an Ecclesiastical state elemented of respondent principles, would sute best: upon which consideration he formed a Consistory of Elders, whereof a great part were Lay. And these were to manage all Ecclesiastical concerns. Famous was he for this new model, no less than Columbus for his America, nor was it enough it was reputed a prudent institution, it must also be entitled to Divine, and Sacred Scripture tortured to declare as much. Most kind reception it found with the Gallican, and Belgique Churches. Where planted and settled, the next design was to dispatch it over into Great Britain: to which effect Beza writes a complying Epistle Commendatory to Queen Elizabeth, presenting this Geneva Platform, as the only desideratum wanting to Englands Reformation. The Queen was loth to proscribe so long a Standard as Episcopacy, to entertain such an upstart In-mate as Presbytery, therefore gave Beza his saying, but not his desire; this was Anno 1560. And shortly after, not only She, but the whole Parliament (whereof some Members began now to incline to the Disciplinarian Sect) were summoned again by Libels, called an Admonition to the Parliament, and Defence of that Admonition, to the Abolition of Episcopacy as Antichristian. But all this notwithstanding, both She and her Pan-Anglium, or great Council, stood fixt and inexorable, so that all the efforts and attempts of the other Party, could not produce any considerable unsettlement of that Ancient Discipline. In Scotland true it is, the new projected Model prospered better, for the Earl of Murray, or rather the Prior of St. Andrews (base Brother to the Queen) with his Complices, Knox, Buchanan, and others in their first Reformation, about Anno 1560. gave so terrible a shock to Popery, as made every thing, and by consequence Episcopacy which stood near it, to reel. Which nevertheless held them tug a score of years, nor could they supplant it all at once, but gained upon it by degrees. First, an Assembly at Dundee, Anno 1580. Ordered all Bishops upon pain of Excommunication, to resign up their Offices; and about three years after, prevailed with the Parliament, (the King being then in Minority) to annex their Temporalities to the Crown. Though this was acted in Scotland, yet was it not without instigation from England, and from some of her prime Nobility, animated by some Ministers who began to be now so pragmatistical and busie, as to preserve Ecclesiastical unity, the then Archbishop Whitgift by command from the Queen, that very year contrived those three eminent Articles in the late Canons, whereto all who desired to enter into sacred Orders were strictly enjoined subscription. The first acknowledging the Queens Supremacy. The second, professing conformity to the Book of Common-Prayer, and approbation of the Book of ordering of Bishops, Priests and Deacons. And the third, assenting to the thirty nine Articles of the Church of England. Nor was the Hierarchy thus quite outed in Scotland, but somewhat revived again by the Parliament, ratifying the Clergy as the third Estate, Anno 1584. But the other Party being resolved never to acquiesce, until they obtained their minds, grew so impetuous, as they, I cannot say perswaded, but even forced that State, Anno 1592. to ratifie their Discipline. Thus did Episcopacy and Presbytery play Love-le-queve, and take their turns of Government for about thirty years; but in the year 1593. King James, the Queen of England now declining, hoping his wardship to these hot Spirits began now to expire, took up resolutions of animosity, and caused the Prelates to be restored to their Ancient Vote in Parliament, and published his Book called Basil. Doron, expressing therein no good will to the Consistorian Sect. And though, Anno 1603. upon his first accession to the English Crown, he was saluted here with a Petition, pretended of a thousand Ministers, that they might appear the more formidable, yet did he slight their boldness, and in Scotland, by several Acts of Parliament, rescinded what had formerly been introduced to the Prejudice of Episcopacy, so that from 1589. until this present, the Presbyters durst never appear in opposition.

England had flourished by its antient Laws and Customs for many Ages heretofore, happy at home and renowned abroad, at last it pleaded God for the Sins of this and the Neighbouring Kingdoms to raise amongst us a most unnatural Civil War accompanied (as is usual) with a contempt of things Divine and Human, the Laws of God and the King, the Palladium of a well govern'd Kingdom being troden under foot. Pride, Ambition, and the contempt of our lawful Government and Governours were too much encouraged, and these became the pestilent sources of the Distempers and Maladies, which raged with so much violence, almost to the ruin and desolation of these Kingdoms, the Scots by the late Pacification, and the encouragements they received from discontented and self-seeking persons here at home as well as from abroad were grown in their demands insufferable and exorbitant, the very constitution of their Parliaments by them found fault with, the manner of preparing of Bills to be passed into Laws, which were by a select number of Bishops, Nobles, and Commons of that Kingdom quarrel'd at, the third Estate in Parliament of the Bishops formerly call'd the first Estate, demanded to be annulled, &c. Hereupon his Majesty, by the advice of his Council, raises another Army against those Rebellious Scots, and proportioneth the number of men to be raised in each County. And his Majesty was pleased to promise for the ease of the Counties, that all the Souldiers should enter in to pay, as soon as they shall march out of the Confines of each Shire towards the Ports and places aforesaid of Newcastle, Tarmouth, and Gravesend: so he expects that the more care and readines be used, in the raising and keep-

The Proportion of Souldiers that were to be raised in each County, to go by Sea, and where to be Shipped, followeth:

Suffex 600. to be Ship'd the sixth of June, at Gravesend, to be at the General Rendezvous the twentieth of May, to march thence the first of June.

Surry 800. to be Ship'd the sixth of June at Gravesend, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty first of May, to march thence the second of June.

Kent 700. to be Ship'd the fourth of June at Gravesend, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty third of May, to march thence the third of June.

Cinque-Ports 300. to be Ship'd the fourth of June at Gravesend, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty first of May, to march thence the first of June.

Middlesex 1200. to be Ship'd the eighth of June at Harwich, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty fourth of May, to march thence the third of June.

Hertford 650. to be Ship'd the fifth of June at Harwich, to be at the General Rendezvous the twentieth of May, to march thence the one and thirtieth of May.

Essex 700. to be Ship'd the fourth of June at Harwich, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty fourth of May, to march thence the third of June.

Buckingham 500. to be Ship'd the sixth of June at Harwich, to be at the General Rendezvous the twentieth of May, to march thence the first of June.

London 1200. to be Ship'd at Blackwall.

Huntingdon 400. to be Ship'd the tenth of June at Yarmouth, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty fifth of May, to march thence the fifth of June.

Suffolk 600. to be Ship'd the eighth of June at Yarmouth, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty seventh of May, to march thence the sixth of June.

Norfolk 750. to be Ship'd the eighth of June at Yarmouth, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty eighth of May, to march thence the seventh of June.

Cambridge 300. to be Ship'd the tenth of June at Yarmouth, to be at the General Rendezvous the twenty fifth of May, to march thence the fifth of June.

Bedford 400. to be Ship'd at Yarmouth the tenth of June, to be at the General Rendezvous the 25 of May, to march thence the fifth of June.

Lincoln 200. to be Ship'd the tenth of June at Grimsby, to be at the General Rendezvous the 29 of May, to march thence the ninth of June.

Nottingham 300. to be Ship'd the tenth of June at Grimsby, to be at the General Rendezvous the 27 of May, to march thence the sixth of June.

Derby 400. to be Ship'd the tenth of June at Grimsby, to be at the General Rendezvous the 25 of May, to march thence the fifth of June.

The total is 10000 Men.

The residue of the Army to be raised in the more Northern Counties were ordered to march by Land to Newcastle upon Tyne. The men to be raised to meet in Companies of one hundred a piece at particular Rendezvous in that County most convenient for each hundred men, till the tenth of May next, to be Weekly exercised with false Fires or no Fire, by such inferiour Officers, as the Lord General shall send down to instruct them in their postures, and the use of their Arms: to which purpose, your Lordship is to cause the Arms of the Trained Bands to be lent unto them, which shall be re-delivered back, when they shall march out of that County. Your Lordship is likewise to take order, that there be prest, and sent with the said Souldiers one Drum and Drummer to every hundred men, who shall enter into His Majesties pay, as soon as the said Souldiers shall march out of that County. Besides the said particular Rendezvous, where the several Companies are to meet in that County, your Lordship is to cause one General Rendezvous to be appointed on the Confines of that Shire, most convenient for the said Souldiers march towards Newcastle upon Tyne; to which General Rendezvous in that County, the said Souldiers are to be brought the tenth of May, and to remain there till the twentieth of the same Month, to be there exercised and put in order for their March towards Newcastle, by such Commanders and Officers as shall be sent thither by the Lord General, to whom your Lordship is to send present advertisement, what place you appoint for the said General Rendezvous of that County. The Souldiers are to be allowed at the charge of that County 8 d. a piece per diem for every day they shall be exercised, at the particular Rendezvous in that County. And from the tenth of May till the twentieth. The charge also of conducting the said men to the General Rendezvous of the County, is to be born by that County. Your Lordship (or at least) two of your Deputy Lieutenants are to be at the General Rendezvous of the County by the tenth of May, as well to assist in keeping of the men in order, as to take care for the receiving back from them the Arms of the County, and to deliver the said men over by Indenture, to such Commanders and Officers, as shall be appointed to receive and take charge of them: of which Indentures, one part is to be signed by your Lordship, or two of your Deputy Lieutenants, and the other by the said Commanders or Officers that shall receive the men; and Duplicates of the said Indentures are to be sent by your Lordship, one to this Board, and another to the Lord General. As his Majesty is graciously pleased for the ease of that County, that all the Souldiers shall enter into His Majesties pay as soon as they shall march out of the Counties.

Anno
fines of that Shire towards Newcastle; so he expects, that the more readines and care be used in the raising and keeping them together while they shall be there; and that they be sent away well Cloathed and Coated at the charge of that County; all which charges and allowances, as well for the Coating as for the entertainment of the said men in their exercising, and conducting to their General Rendezvouz of that County; His Majesties Pleasure and Command is, that your Lordship do cause the same to be Levied in that County as hath been used heretofore in cases of less importance. And the Counties are to be repaid the same upon Accompt thereof made out of his Majesties Exchequer, in such manner as in former times, upon the like occasion. And lastly, we do expect and require the Justices of Peace, and other Officers in their several Divisions to be aiding and assisting to your Lordship and your Deputy Lieutenants in this Service, &c.

And for the Carriage of the Artillery, Letters were directed to the respective Lord Lieutenants of the several Counties through which it was to pass, to provide Horses and Carts for the same, and for the charge it was to be born by the respective Counties at the rate of 12 d. per diem for every Horse, and 8 d. per diem for every Carter, &c.

And forasmuch as those of Scotland had taken all pains imaginable, not only to falsifie the Articles of the Pacification, but also to possess his Majesties Subjects with false Aspersions and Scandals upon the King and his Government, and upon his proceedings with his Subjects in Scotland and to distemperate and alienate from his Majesty, the hearts of his well affected Subjects, and such as otherwise are no way inclined to such seditious and disloyal courses: His Majesty having taken these disorders into serious consideration, and finding them of dangerous consequence to his Government, if some timely remedy be not applied; hath with the advice of his Privy Council, thought fit to publish and declare, and by these presents doth publish and declare, that all and every person and persons, of what degree or quality soever, now have, or hereafter shall have any such Libellous and Seditious Discourse or Pamphlet, either in Manuscript or Print, concerning his Majesties proceedings with his Subjects in Scotland (other than such Relations and Discourses concerning the same, as have been published and Printed by his Special Licence and Authority) and shall not within ten daies after the date of these presents, bring and deliver the same to one of his principal Secretaries of State, all and every such person and persons shall incur the uttermost of such punishments and penalties, as by the Laws of this Realm are to be inflicted upon those that keep such scandalous and Seditious Pamphlets and Papers.

More particularly this Proclamation was directed against a Pamphlet published in Print, An Information from the States of the Kingdom of Scotland to the Kingdom of England, containing many notorious falsehoods and scandals, to the dishonour of his Majesties proceedings with his Subjects in Scotland, sundry Copies of which Printed Discourse have been sent from Scotland to divers of his Majesties Subjects in England, especially in the City of London.

Upon the account of all these undutiful and rebellious courses of his Majesties Scottish Subjects directly against his Crown, Government, and Dignity, his Majesty did by perswasion of his three most intimate Councillors, the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Marquess of Hamilton, and the Noble Earl of Strafford Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, indict his great Council or Parliament to meet at Westminster, April 13. and that all occasion of offence and complaint from that great Assembly might be taken away, he having formerly by his Letters Patents recal'd all Licenses and Commissions for Monopolies, &c. heretofore granted; and yet the Patentees continued still to vex the people in execution of the same, his Majesty commanded all those Patentees to bring in all their respective Patents upon their utmost peril, and yet more particularly these following:

The Commission for Brewing and Malting.

A Patent of Register to the Commission for Bankrupts in Divers Counties.

The Patent for Marking and Gaging of Butter Cask.

The Hat-band-makers Grant.

The Patent for making Brick.

The Patent for Kelp and Sea-weed.

The Patent for Sealing of Linnen Cloth.

The Privy-Seal for Buttons.

The Patent for Gut-string-making.

The Horners Patent.

The Patent for Lampreys.

The Patent for Transportation of Butter.

The Patent for Gathering of Raggs.

The Patent for Hay and Straw.

On the thirteenth of April the Parliament was opened at Westminster according to his Majesties Writs and Proclamation was made in the Lobby; as is usual on such occasions; by the Lord Steward of the King's Household as followeth:

A Proclamation before the Lord Steward.

THE King's Most Excellent Majesty doth straightly charge and command all manner of Persons, chosen for the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses, to attend in this present Parliament, that they nor any of them, do presume to sit or take their places in the Lower-House of Parliament, until they, and every of them, have first taken the Oathes of Supremacy and Allegiance in the usual manner and place; nor until the Sheriff shall make return of his Writ according to Statute, unto the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and his, or their names be there entred in such manner as hath heretofore been accustomed, upon pain of the peril shall fall thereon.

God save the King.

All Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, chosen to attend this present Parliament, make your appearance, and answer to your Names as you shall be called.

Our

Anno 1640. Our Reader is not here to expect from us a List of that Parliament, but for that many of the same Persons were Members of the more fatal Parliament, which began on the third of November following, we shall then give you an exact Catalogue thereof.

His Majesty being placed with his Regal Ornaments on his Throne in the Lords House of Parliament, the Commons were by the Black-Rod commanded to attend in the Lords House, where being come, his Majesty spake as followeth:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THere was never a King that had a more great and weighty cause to call his People together than my Self: I will not trouble you with the Particulars; I have informed my Lord Keeper, and command him to speak and desire your Attention.

Sir John Finch Lord Keeper spake as followeth:

My Lords, and you the Knights, Citizens and Burgeses of the House of Commons,

YOU are here this day Assembled by his Majesties gracious Writ and Royal Command to hold a Parliament, the general, ancient and greatest Council of this Renowned Kingdom. By you, as by a select choice and abstract the whole Kingdom is presented to his Majesties Royal view, and made happy in the beholding of his excellent and Sacred Person. All of you not only the Prelates, Nobles, and Grandees, but in your persons that are of the House of Commons every one, even the meanest of his Majesties Subjects are graciously allowed to participate and share in the honour of those Counsels, that concern the great and weighty Affairs of the King and Kingdom. You come all armed with the Votes and Suffrages of the whole Nation: and I assure my self, your hearts are filled with that zealous and humble affection to his Majesties Person and Government, that so just, so pious, and so gracious a King hath reason to expect from all his Subjects. I doubt not, but you rejoyce at this daies meeting, and methinks you should do so too; and good reason you have to do so, and with all humbleness of heart to acknowledge the great goodness of his Majesty, who sequestering the memory of all former discouragements in preceding Assemblies, is now of a Fatherly affection to his people, and a confidence that they will not be failing in their duty to him, who is pleased graciously to invite you and all his loving Subjects to a sacred Unity of hearts and affections, in the services of him and of the Common-wealth, and in the execution of those Counsels that tend only to the honour of his Majesty, and to the good preservation of you all. His Majesties Kingly resolutions are seated in the Ark of his Sacred Breast, and it were a presumption of too high a nature, for any Uzzah uncalled to touch it: yet his Majesty is now pleased to lay by the shining beams of Majesty, as Phabus did to Phaeton, that the distance between Sovereignty and Subjection should not bar you of that filial freedom of access to his Person and Counsels, only let us beware how with the Son of Clymene, we aim not at the guiding of the Chariot; as if that were the only testimony of Fatherly affection; and let us ever remember, that though the King sometimes laies by the Beams and Rayes of Majesty, he never laies by Majesty it self.

In former Parliaments you have been advised with, for the preventing and diverting of those dangers, which by Foreign and more remote Counsels might have tended to the dishonour and ruin of this Nation; therein his Majesties great Wisdom and Providence hath for many years eased you of that trouble, his Majesty having with great judgment and prudence, not only seen and prevented our danger, but kept up the Honour and Splendor of the English Crown, of which at this day we find the happy and comfortable experience, Almighty God having vouchsafed such success to his Majesties Counsels, that our Fleece is dry, when it raineth blood in all the Neighbour States. But what availeth this the Kingdom? Si foras hostem non inveniat, si modo domi inveniet. You are now summoned to Counsels and Resolutions that more nearly concern you, to prevent a danger and a dishonour, that knocks at our Gates, and that moves from such, from whom we had little reason to suspect it. It's well known upon what happy and solid Counsels, one of our Wisest Kings made a match with Scotland for his eldest Daughter. We cannot forget (I'm sure we should not) the blessed Success that waited upon those Counsels, when the Crown of England descended upon King James of ever blessed and famous memory, who with the fulness of Joy to all true English hearts, made his Entry not by Bloodshed. The Wall of Separation was thereby taken away; and that glorious King to make his word good, faciam eos in Gentem unam, made all England rejoyce, and Scotland I'm sure had no reason to be sorry for it: They participated of English Honours, the Wealth and Revenue of this Nation they shared in, and no good thing was withholden from them, such was the largeness of heart in that most excellent King, and such was the comfort we took in this Fraternity, or rather Unity: When both of us had but one Brazen Wall of Fortification to look unto, the Sea, and all things so equally and evenly carried between us, that Tros Tyrinsque nullo discrimine habentur. His Majesty our most gracious Sovereign became Heir, as well to his Fathers Vertues as to his Kingdoms, Pacemque Regis, &c. and in his gracious and tender affection to that Nation, hath given as many indulgent testimonies of Love and Benignity, as they could expect. Thus became we both like a Land flowing with Milk and Honey; Peace and Plenty dwelt in our Streets, and we have had all our Blessings crowned with the sweet hopes of Perpetuity. God found out for my Lord the King, a Companion meet for him, his Royal Consort our most gracious Queen, who as she is not to be paralleled for her Person and Vertue, so hath she made his Majesty and the whole Kingdom most happy and blessed, in the sweetest pledges of their love and our hopes which ever stood like Olive-branches about the Throne or Table: But which I sorrow for, Civiles furores patrie nimia infelicitas, and when his Majesty had most most reason to expect a grateful return of Loyalty and Obedience from all the Scottish Nation, some men of Belial, some Zebu hath blown the Trumpet there, and by their Insolencies and rebellious Actions drawn many after them, to the utter desertion of his Majesties Government; his Majesties and his Kingly Fathers love and bounty to that Nation quite forgotten, his goodness and piety unremembred.

They have led a multitude after them into a course of disloyalty and rebellious Treason, such as former times have not left in mention, nor this present Age can any where equal; they have taken up Arms against the Lords Anointed, their rightful Prince and undoubted Sovereign, and following the wicked Counsels of some Achitophel, they have seized on the Trophies of Honour, and invested themselves with Regal Power and Authority: such and so many Acts of disloyalty and disobedience, as (let their pretences be what they will be,) no true English or Christian heart, but must acknowledge them to be the effects of foul and horrid Treason.

The last Summer his Majesty at his own charge, and at the vast expence of many of his faithful and loving Subjects of England, went with an Army, and then they took upon them the boldness to out-face and brave his Royal Army, with another of their own raising; Yet for all this, his Majesties goodness was not lessened by that, nor could his gracious Nature forget what he was to them, nor what they were to him; but considering with himself they were such (quos nec vincere, nec vinci gloriosum fuerat) out of his Piety and Clemency chose rather to pass by their former miscarriages, upon their humble protestations of future Loyalty and Obedience, than by just vengeance to punish their Rebellions.

But his Majesty (who is ever awake for the good and safety of all his Subjects) hath since too plainly discovered, that they did but prevaricate with him to divert the storm which hung over their heads, and by gaining time to purchase themselves more advantage, for pursuing their rebellious purposes.

For since his Majesty came from Berwick, it is come to his certain knowledge, that instead of performing that Loyalty and Obedience, which by the Laws of God, of Nature, and Nations they owe unto him, they have addressed themselves to Foreign States, and treated with them to deliver themselves up to their protection and power (as by God's great Providence and Goodness, his Gracious Majesty is able to shew under the hands of the prime Ring-Leaders of that Faction) than which nothing could be of more dangerous consequence to this and his Majesties other Kingdoms. Whosoever they be that do, or shall with England ill, they may know it to be of too tough a Complexion and Courage, to be assailed in the face, or to be set upon at the Fore-door: and therefore it is not unlikely, but they may (as in former times) find out a Postern-gate.

There were heretofore two of them, Scotland and Ireland, and both of them had their several Defences.

Ireland through his Majesties just and prudent Government, is not only reduced from the distemper of former times, but settled in such a condition of peace, and during his Majesties happy Reign, so altered and civilized, that instead of being a charge to him (as it was to his Predecessors) hath yielded to him some Revenue, and his Subjects there do daily give very acceptable testimonies of their Loyal and Dutiful affection, both to his Person and Government. And now lately at the Parliament assembled, they have not only with full and free consent, made his Majesty a chearful Aid towards his present preparations, to reduce his disaffected Subjects in Scotland to their due obedience, but they have also professed and promised, that they will be ready with their Persons and Estates, to the uttermost of their Ability, for his Majesties future Supply, as his great Occasions by the continuance of his Forces against that distemper, shall require; so that the hopes of hurting England that way, are quite extinct.

Scotland then only remains, whither (as to a weak and distempered part of the body) all the Rheumes and Fluxes of factious and seditious humours make way.

His Majesty hath taken all these, and much more into his Princely Consideration; and to avoid a manifest and apparent mischief; threatened to this and his other Kingdoms, hath resolved by the means of a powerful Army, to reduce them to the just and modest Conditions of Obedience.

It is a course his Majesty takes no delight in, but is forced unto it; for such is his Majesties Grace and Goodness to all his Subjects, and such it is and will be to them (how undutiful and rebellious soever they now are) that if they put themselves into a way of humility becoming them, his Majesties Piety and Clemency will soon appear to all the World: But his Majesty will not endure to have his honor weighed at the Common Beam: nor admit any to step between him and his vertue: and therefore as he will upon no terms, admit the mediation of any person whatsoever; so he shall judge it as high presumption in any person to offer it, and as that which he must account most dangerous to his Honour, to have any conceit, that the solicitation of others can by any possibility better incline him to his people than he is, and ever will be, out of his own grace and goodness.

The Charge of such an Army hath been thoroughly advised, and must needs amount to a very great sum, such as cannot be imagined to be found in his Majesties Coffers, which how empty so ever, have neither yet been exhausted by unnecessary Triumphs, or sumptuous buildings, or other magnificence whatsoever, but most of his own Revenue, and whatsoever hath come from his Subjects, hath been by him employed, for the common good and preservation of the Kingdom. And like vapours arising out of the Earth and gathered into a Cloud, are fallen in sweet and refreshing Showers upon the same ground. Wherefore his Majesty hath now at this time, called this Parliament, the second means under God's blessing to avert these publick Calamities threatened to all his Kingdoms, by the mutinous behaviour of them.

And as his Majesties Predecessors have accustomed to do with your Fore-fathers, so his Majesty now offers you the Honour of working together with himself, for the good of him and his, and for the common preservation of yourselves and your posterity.

Anno 1640. Counsels and Deliberations that tend to benefit or profit, may endure Disputes and Debates, because they seem only accompanied with persuasions, But deliberations that tend to preservation, are waited upon by necessity, and cannot endure either Debate or delay; of such nature are the bleeding evils, that are now to be provided against.

This Summer must not be lost, nor any minute of Time foretold, to reduce them of Scotland, lest by protraction here they gain time and advantage, to frame their parties with Foreign States.

His Majesty doth therefore desire, upon these pressing and urgent occasions, that you will for a while lay aside all other Debates, and that you would pass an Act for such, and so many Subsidies as you in your hearty affection to him, and to your common good, shall think fit and convenient for so great an Action, and withal that you would hasten the payment of it, as soon as may be: And his Majesty assures you all, that he would not have proposed any thing, out of the ordinary way, but that such is the straitness of Time, that unless the Subsidies be forthwith paid, it is not possible for him to put in order such things, as must be prepared before so great an Army can be brought into the Field.

And indeed, had not his Majesty upon the credit of his Servants, and security out of his own estate, taken up and issued between three and four hundred thousand Pounds, it had not been possible for his Majesty, to have provided those things to begin with, which were necessary for so great an Enterprize, and without which we could not have secured Berwick and Carlisle, or avoided those affronts, which the Insolency of that Faction might have put upon us, by injuring the persons and fortunes of his Loyal Subjects, in the Northern parts.

To avoid all question and dispute that may arise, touching his Majesties taking of Tonnage and Poundage, his Majesty hath commanded me to declare unto you, that he hath taken it only de facto, according to the example of former Kings, from the death of their past Predecessors, until the Parliament had passed an Act for it themselves. That in like manner, his Majesty desires not to claim it, but by grant of Parliament; for this purpose his Majesty hath caused a Bill to be prepared in the same form as it passed to his Royal Father of blessed memory, adding only words to give it him, from the first of his Majesties Reign.

This and the Bill of Subsidies, his Majesty expects (for the pressing reasons before delivered unto you) may be dispatched with all speed, which his Majesty commanded me to tell you he shall graciously accept, as the welcome pledges of your loving, happy, and dutiful affection to him, his person, and Government.

And his Majesty is most graciously pleased, to give you his Royal word, that afterwards he will give you time for considering of such Petitions, as you shall conceive to be good for the Common Wealth, even now before you part, according as the season of the year, and the great affairs in hand will permit; and what is now omitted, his Majesty will give you time to perfect towards Winter, when your own leisure and conveniency may better attend it, he knowing well, that these Subsidies can be of little use, without that more ample supply, which his Majesty expects upon the happy conclusion of this Session, and therein his Majesty is graciously pleased (according to the ancient way of Parliaments) to stay till your just grievances be heard and redressed.

And his Majesty assures you, that he will go along with you for your advantage, through all the gracious expressions of a just, a pious, and gracious King, to the end there may be such a happy conclusion of this Parliament, that it may be a cause of many more meetings with you.

I have now delivered what I have in Command from his Majesty.

The KING.

My Lords,

YOU shall see he hath spoken nothing hyperbolically, or nothing but what I shall make good one Speech, way or other.

And because he did mention a Letter by my Subjects in Scotland, who did seek to draw in Foreign power for aid, here is the Original Letter, which I shall command him to read unto you.

And because it may touch a Neighbour of mine, whom I will say nothing of, but that which is just (God forbid I should); for my part, I think it was never accepted of by him; indeed it was a Letter to the French King, but I know not that ever he had it; for by chance I intercepted it, as it was going unto him; and therefore I hope you will understand me right in that.

His Majesty delivering the Letter to the Lord Keeper, his Lordship began to read it, and observe as followeth:

Lord Keeper.

The Superscription of the Letter is this:

AU ROY.

FOR the nature of which Superscription, it is well known to all that know the style of France, that it is never written by any Frenchman to any, but to their own King; and therefore being directed (AU ROT) it is to their own King, for so in effect they do by that Superscription acknowledge.

Then his Lordship read the Letter in French, being the Original Language wherein it was Writ.

The Letter being read in French, his Lordship added.

His Majesty Commanded me to read it in English to you, as it is Translated, for that is the Original under their own hands.

SIR,

SIR,

Anno.
1640.

YOUR Majesty being the Refuge and Sanctuary of afflicted Princes, and States, We have found it necessary to send this Gentleman Mr. Colvil, by him to represent unto your Majesty, the Candor and Ingenuity, as well of our Actions and Proceedings, as of our Intentions, which we desire should be Engraven and Written to the whole World, with the Beams of the Sun, as well as to your Majesty. We most humbly beseech you therefore, to give Faith and Credit to him, and all he shall say on our part concerning us, and our Affairs: being most assured of an assistance, equal to your accustomed Clemency heretofore, and so often shewed to this Nation, which will not yield to any other whatsoever, the Glory to be eternally

Your Majesties most humble, obedient, and affectionate Servants,

Rothes.
Montross.
Lesley.
Marre.
Montgomery.
Lowdon.
Forester.

Then the KING added.

OF these Gentlemen, that have set their hands to this Letter, here is one, and I believe you would think it very strange, if I should not lay him fast, and therefore I have Signed a Warrant, to lay him close Prisoner in the Tower.

My Lords, I think, (but I will not say positively, because I will not say anything here, but what I am sure of,) I think I have the Gentleman that should have carried the Letter, fast enough; but I know not, I may be mistaken.

And then my Lord Keeper concluded.

Gentlemen,

YOU of the House of Commons, his Majesties pleasure is, that you do now repair to your own House, there to make choice of your Speaker, whom his Majesty will expect to be presented to him on Wednesday next, at two of the Clock in the Afternoon.

The day following the Convocation sate at St. Pauls, and was somewhat longer liv'd than the Parliament, at which some Members thereof took great exceptions, as well to the Subsidies therein granted to his Majesty as the Canons by them made, as we shall, God willing, make manifest in due time and place, but with what Reason or Law, others will judge. The day following, being the fifteenth, the Commons presented their Speaker, whom they had elected Mr. Sejeant Glamvile at the Bar of the Lords House, who in his own excuse spake as followeth:

The Speaker's Speech.

May it please your Majesty,

THE Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses, of your Commons House of Parliament, in conformity to most ancient and most constant usage (the best guide in great Solemnities) according to their well-known privileges, (a sure Warrant for their proceedings) and in obedience to your Majesties most Gracious Counsel and Command (a duty well becoming Loyal Subjects) have met together in their House and chosen a Speaker, one of themselves to be the Mouth, indeed your Servant of all the rest, to steer watchfully and prudently in all their weighty Consultations and debates, to collect faithfully and readily the genuine sense of a numerous Assembly, to propound the same seasonably, and in apt questions of their final Resolutions, and so represent them and their Conclusions, their Declarations and Petitions, upon all urgent occasions with truth, with right, with life and with luster, and with full advantage to your most excellent Majesty. With what Judgment, what Temper, what Spirit, what Elocution ought he to be endowed and qualified, that with any hope of good success should undergo any such Employment, Your Majesty in your great Wisdom, is best able to discern and judge; both as it may relate to your own peculiar and most important Affairs of State and Government, and as it must relate to the proper business of your House of Commons, which was never small nor mean, and is like at this time to be exceeding weighty.

Had your House of Commons been as happy in their choice (as they were regular, well warranted, and dutiful) of my self, who stand elected yet to be their Speaker, and am now presented by them to your Majesty, for your gracious and Royal approbation, I should not have needed to become troublesome to your Majesty in this suit, for my releasment and discharge, which now in duty to your Majesty, and care for the good, prosperity, and success of your Affairs, I hold my self obliged to make. My imperfections and disabilities are best known to my self, and to your Majesty I suppose not altogether unknown, before whom in the course of my Practice and Profession, I have divers times had the honour and favour to appear and bear a part, as an ordinary pleader.

It is a Learned Age wherein we live, under your Majesties most peaceful and flourishing Government, and your House of Commons (as it is now composed) is not only the representative body, but the abstracted quintessence of the whole Commonalty, of this your noble Realm of England; there be very many amongst them, much fitter for this place than I am, few or none in my opinion, so unfit as my self.

I most humbly beseech your Majesty, as you are the Father of the Common-wealth and Head of the whole Parliament, to whom the care of all our welfare chiefly appertains, have respect to your own ends, have regard to your House of Commons, have compassion upon me the most unworthy member of that Body,

ready to faint with fears, before the burthen light upon me.

Anno 1640. In the fulness therefore of your Kingly power, your piety and your goodness, be graciously pleased to command your House of Commons, once more to meet together to consult and deliberate better, about their choice of a meet Speaker, till they can agree of some such person, as may be worthy of their choosing, and of your Majesties acceptation.

His Majesties pleasure being enquired of by the Lord Keeper, he was commanded to Reply, as followeth:

The Lord Keeper's Speech.

HIS Majesty with a gracious ear, a Princely attention, hath listened to your humble and modest excuse, full of Flowers of Wit, of Flowers of Eloquence, and Flowers of Judgement.

Many reasons from your self he hath taken, to approve and agree to the Choice and Election, made by the House of Commons, he finds none from any thing that you have said, to dissent or disagree from it; you have set forth your inabilities with so much Ability, you have so well deciphered and delineated the parts, duties, and Office of a good Speaker, which is to collect the sense of the House judiciously, to render it with fidelity, to sum it up with dexterity, and to mould it into fit, and apt questions for resolutions, and those as occasion shall serve, to present with vigour, advantage, and humility to his Majesty, he doubts not, but you that are so perfect in the Theory, will with great ease perform the practick part, and with no less Commendation,

His Majesty hath taken notice, and well remembers, your often waiting on him in private Causes, wherein you have alwaies so carried your self, and won so much good opinion from his Majesty, as he doubteth not but that now, when you are called forth to serve him, and the publick, your affections and the Powers of your soul, will be set on work with more zeal, and more alacrity. It's that for which the Philosophers call a man happy, when men that have ability and goodness, do meet with an object fit to bring it into Act, and such at this time is your good fortune, an occasion being ministered unto you, to shew your ability and goodness, and your fidelity to his Majesties Service, to shew the Candor and cleanness of your heart towards those of the House of Commons; In all which his Majesty nothing doubteth, but you will so discharge your self, as he may to his former Favours, find occasion and reason to add more unto you, That the House of Commons may rejoyce in this Election of theirs, and that the whole Kingdom, by your good, clear, and candid service, may receive fruits that may be comfortable unto all.

His Majesty therefore doth approve and confirm the choice of the House of Commons, and ratifies you for the Speaker.

The Speaker's excuse being as you have heard not allowed of, he addresseth himself again to his Majesty.

The Speaker's farther Speech.

Car. 16.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

MY Profession hath taught me, that from the highest Judge and highest seat of Justice, there lieth no Writ of Error, no Appeal.
Your Majesty in full Parliament, hath been pleased by the mouth of the Lord Keeper, to declare your Royal Judgment in Affirmation of the Election of your House of Commons, whereby I'm become their Speaker, and their Servant.
What is there therefore left unto me? but in the first place devoutly to beseech Almighty God, the Author and finisher of all good works, to enable me by his blessing to discharge honestly and effectually, so great a task, so great a trust.

And in the next place, humbly to acknowledge (as I do) the great grace and favour, that is done unto me by your Majesty, and readily to conform my self to your good pleasure and command, to which I now submit with all possible cheerfulness, lest else my too much diffidence to undertake the service, might add a further disadvantage to my performance, than peradventure would arise out of my other Impetfections.

Two Enemies I might fear, the common Enemies of such Services, Expectation and Jeal-ousie: I'm not worthy of the former, and I contemn the latter. Time that tryeth truth, shall let the whole world see and know, that I am and will be found an equal Free-man, zealous to serve my Gracious King, and zealous to serve my dearest Country.

Monarchy, Royal and Hereditary, is of all sorts of Government the most compleat and excellent; whether we regard the Glory, the Wealth, or the safety of the Governour or of the People, or of both. And I hope there are not of this Nation any that are of Antimonar-chical spirits or resolutions, no, nor dispositions, nor friends to such as are so; If there be,
I wish no greater honour to this Parliament, than to discover them; and by all means possible to assist your Gracious Majesty to suppress them, or to confound them.

You are a great King at all times, but sitting now attended by your Prelates, your Lords, and People in free Parliament are in the highest state of Majesty and Glory.

I remember well, I heard your Majesties most Royal and learned Father our late dear Soveraign King James of sacred memory, speak to that purpose of himself and of Kings in general; his Majesty sitting then in Parliament, upon that Throne which by descent from him, and from innumerable Royal Ancestors, is now become your Majesties lawful Seat and rightful Inheritance.

To behold you thus in peace and safety, upon this great and good occasion, after full fifteen years experience of your most peaceful Government, yields most compleat joy to all your Majesties Loyal and Well-affected Subjects, who cannot but concur with me in this desire, Servus in Caelum redeas diuque letus intersis Britannio popupulo. England is your Seat of Residence not made a Province, nor Governed by a Vice-Roy. God open all our Eyes and understandings, to discern and

Anno 1640.
and value the great blessings and benefits we enjoy, by your Majesties gracious presence and immediate influence of life and cheerfulness to all the parts of these your Noblest Kingdoms.

Scotland is your Birth-place, and therein hath advantage of your other Realms; God make them and keep them ever sensible and worthy of that Honour.

Ireland begins apace to imitate England, in a great and quick progression in civility of manners and conversation, by many sedulous plantations and improvements of the Soyl, by their receiving and enacting of the more wholesome Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom, and by many other good effects and fruits of Peace, and blessed Government.

France is still an Attendant to your Royal Style and Title.

The Prerogative of a King is as necessary, as it is great: Without it, he should want that Power and Majesty which is, and ought to be inseparable from the Crown and Scepter. Nor can there any danger result from such Prerogative in the King to the Liberty of the Subject, so long as both of them admit the Temperament of Law and Justice: Especially under such a King as your Majesty, who to your immortal Glory among your printed Laws, have published this to the whole World for your Maxim, The Liberty of the People strengthens the King's Prerogative, and the King's Prerogative is to defend the Peoples Liberty. Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver.

Kings, as they are Kings, are never said to err; only the best may be abused by mis-information. The highest point of Prerogative is, The King can do no wrong. If therefore by the subtilty of mis-informers, by the specious false pretences of Publick Good, by cunning and close contrivance of their ways to seduce, the Sacred Royal Person shall at any time be circumvented or surprized, or over-wrought and drawn to command things contrary to Law, and that the same be done accordingly: These Commands will be void, and the King innocent even in his very Person, being defended by his Prerogative; Nevertheless, the Authors in such mis-informations, and Actors in those abuses, will stand liable and exposed to strict Examination and just Censure, as having nothing to defend themselves but the colour of a void Command, made void by just Prerogative, and by the fundamental and true reason of State and Monarchy: And what difference is there, or can be in Law, between a void Command, and no Command at all?

If Religion, Justice and Mercy, all happily assembled and graciously lodged together in your Royal Breast, may give to your well-affected Subjects a good hope of the good Success of this Parliament, I know not why we should not all of us, expect it with much confidence. Some few particulars pertaining to these general heads, I humbly beg of your Majesty, that without offence to your Sacred Ears, I may have leave to mention and observe, for the further comfort of my self, and all that hear me.

What Prince of this Land was ever known to keep the hours and times set for Prayer and for the Service of Almighty God, with that Regularity and Constancy as your Majesty? Nay more, have you not ever since your access to the Crown, had one day in every week besides the Lord's Day, dedicated and applied to preaching and devotion? I may not stay here, there is a no other particular equalling, nay much excelling both the former, And that is your Majesties great care to educate those Pledges of Conjugal and most abundant mutual Love that is between your Majesty and your most gracious Consort; the best Queen and Woman, and the Foundation of our future Hopes, the most illustrious Prince Charles, and the rest of your Royal Progeny, in the true Religion of Almighty God, publicly professed and by Law established in this Kingdom; What tongue is able to express the great Joy and Comfort, which all your Majesties most loyal and loving Subjects to derive unto themselves, in Contemplation of your Majesties great piety and prudence in this one Act expressed, extending it self not only to the present time, but to the good of Succession and all after Ages!

Touching Justice, there is not any more certain sign to discern an equal Judge, than by his patience to be well informed before he give his Sentence; and I may boldly say all your Judges throughout all your Kingdoms, may take example by your Majesty, and learn their Duty, from your practice in this kind. I my self have been witness of it, to my no little Admiration and Content.

From your patient hearing, let me pass on to your righteous Judgment; and therein bring but one Instance, but it shall be a great one. When your Lords and your People in your last Parliament, presented to your Majesty a Petition, concerning divers Rights and Liberties of your Subjects; the Petition being of no small weight and importance, as by the same may well appear; your Majesty, after meet deliberation, in few, but most effectual words, (Soit droit fait come est desire;) made them such an answer, as shall renown you for just Judgment, in this Age and to all Posterity.

I make haste to come to your Mercy, whereof I cannot but have need again and again, before I have finished that Service to which I am enjoined, and am not altogether in despair of obtaining it; Nevertheless, the Mercy which I mean to celebrate, is not only concerning single or particular persons, but whole Nations; that unexampled Mercy and Clemency, which (in your Royal Wisdom and abundant Goodness, happily met together) your Majesty vouchsafed to shew to us and all your Kingdom, in not drawing your Sword of Justice the last Summer, against your People of Scotland; though your Armies were much the better and the stronger.

It seems your Majesty remembered with more tenderness of heart than they do, that they were Christians and your Subjects, and that your Power was posse & nolle nobile. Whatsoever might be the Rule that inclined you to Mercy, I am sure the benefit redounds to us and ours, who by this means are still in peace and tranquillity, not without good hope of long continuance; A blessing peradventure undervalued by us, we have had so much of it, under your Majesties most gracious Fathers Royal Government.

I have yet no Instructions from your House of Commons, therefore can propound nothing as by Warrant from them; But if I may have leave to present to your Majesty my own most humble and most hearty Wishes and Desires, they be directed upon Religion, and Chivalry, Commerce, Justice, and Unity: That this Parliament may be Anno 1640. be famous for the care and contentment of God's true Religion in this World and that to come: And to that purpose, that the most Reverend Prelates, your Majesties Archbishops and Bishops, sitting on the right hand of your Throne, will be therein most forward, to whom it is most proper.

That the Lords Temporal girt with their Swords in their Creation, as more specially rewarded or designed for Actions Military, would call to mind the most Noble and most Valiant of their Ancestors, whose Lands and Honours they inherit; and how famous this Land hath been at home and abroad, for Deeds of Arms and Acts of Chivalry, and to labour to restore it by all means to its ancient Glory. The best way to preserve Peace, is to be ready prepared and well fitted for War.

That your Majesty would be pleased to command, that your Grave and Reverend Judges, whose Observations should exceed all other mens, though they be but Assistants in this Service, to contribute the best and utmost they can, to explain, to execute, to advance our good old Laws, and to propound such things for the enacting of wholesome and plain new Statutes, that every Subject of this Realm may be enabled to know and understand himself clearly, both what he hath to do, and what he may possess, and what not. There are no considerable Mines Royal in this Kingdom: Trade and Commerce, the exportation of our Wools in Manufactures and Native Commodities, is that which furnisheth us with Gold and Silver, the Materials of our Moneys, and hath only power to enable us to supply your Majesty, for the defending of our selves, and the offending of others. That Merchants and Tradesmen therefore, should have all meet encouragement, is a most special Interest of this Island.

But were we never so Valiant, never so Wealthy, if Love and Unity be not amongst us, what good will our Wealth do to our selves, or to your Majesty? He that commands a heart in Love, he, and he only commands assuredly the Purse to pay, and the Hands to fight. I pray God therefore, that we may all endeavour to knit such a knot of true Affection betwixt the Head and Members, that all Jesuited Forreign States, who look perchance with envious and malignant Eyes upon us, and would be glad to rejoyce in our Divisions, may see themselves lost and defeated of all their subtil Plots and Combinations, and of all their wicked Hopes and Expectations, to render us (if their Endeavours might prevail) a People inconsiderable at home, and contemptible abroad.

Religion teacheth us, Si Deus nobiscum, quis contra nos? And Experience I hope will teach us, Si sumus inseparabiles, sumus insuperabiles. It was wont to be, and I hope it ever will be the Tenet and Position of your House of Commons, That the good of the King and of the People cannot be severed, and cursed be every one that shall go about to divide them.

I fear I have adventured too far on your Royal Patience, though yet I confess, I never knew it wearied; nevertheless, I will here conclude: Only first beseech your gracious Majesty, in the name and right of the whole House of Commons, that in your Justice you would be pleased to grant and confirm to them (for their better Encouragement to proceed in their great Business) these their ancient and just Liberties, which time out of mind they have rightfully enjoyed.

Car. 16.

That they, their Servants and necessary Attendants, together with their Goods, may be freed from all Imprisonments, Arrests and Molestations, during Parliament.

That they may enjoy freedom of Speech in all their Propositions and Debates; which, I hope, they will be careful to use, within the Bounds of Loyalty and Duty.

That upon all necessary Occasions, they may have access to your Majesty, with such a competent Number, and at such seasonable times and place, as your Majesty shall appoint.

And last of all, That your Majesty will be pleased, graciously to make the best Construction of all their Words and Actions, and of mine in particular.

In the Lord's House, at the entrance of the Parliament, the Earl of Strafford was introduced, as is usual, into the House betwixt two Earls, Peers of that House. His good Services to his Majesty and the Government, not without the envy and disgust of some of the Commons, was there, according to his Demerits of the Commonwealth in general, amply related and extolled; more particularly, that he most speedily and effectually obtained of the Parliament of Ireland, for his Majesties Service against the Covenanted Scots, four intire Subsidies, for the maintenance of ten thousand Foot, and fifteen hundred Horse: A very good pattern for the present Parliament to have imitated and followed, had not the same Distemper of these Covenanters spread it self here in England; and I wish I might not say in the present two Houses of Parliament themselves.

After the Commons had settled (as accustomed) their grand Committees, for Religion, Law, Priviledges and Grievances, Secretary Windebanke gave that House to understand, That the Earl of Lowdon had been examin'd in the Tower, whither he was committed for the Treasonable Letter before by us mentioned, directed to the French King, by his Majesties Warrant directed to one of the Sheriffs of London, and where he was worthily lodged accordingly; who had confessed the Letter to be of his Hand-writing, but said in excuse, It was only prepar'd to be sent, and never actually sent; (which by the way [only] was downright Treason.) The same Account was also given to the House of Peers by the Lord Corrington; and yet no publick resentment manifested by either House to so egregious a piece of Treason.

The House of Commons afterwards desire the Peers to joyn with them in their Petition to his Majesty for his Allowance of a Fast, to beg the Divine Assistance and Direction upon their Consultations, and that by solemn Humiliation thorough the whole Kingdom.

And now the Parliament fell upon Business, his Majesty having fully acquainted them with the Affronts and Indignities of his Scottish Subjects, they would take no notice hereof, no not so much of the palpable practising of Treason with the French King, but now mention'd, but seemed resolved, as if they had feared no evil consequences from these practices. They in the first place start

1640. start the old matter of their Grievances, as a complain of, that the State laboured under, these must first be considered and treated, where they would be sure either to find or make work; these were Ship-money, Monopolies, Star-Chamber, High Commission Court, &c. complain'd of by a Petition from the good County of Hertford, to which Mr. Grimstone, Burgeſs for Colcheſter, thus ſpoke.

Harbottle Grimstone Esq; his Speech.

Mr. Speaker,

WE are called hither by his Majesties Writ to consult of the great and weighty Affairs of the State and Kingdom. There hath now a great and weighty Business been presented to this House, and a Letter hath been read, importing. (according to the Interpretation which hath been collected out of it) a Defection of the King's Natural Subjects. This is a great cause, and very worthy of the Consideration and Advise of this great Council: But I am very much mistaken, if there be not a Case here at home of as great danger, as that which is already put. The one stands without at the backdoor (for so dangers from thence in all our Histories have ever been termed) but the Case we will put, is a Case already upon our backs. And in these great cases of danger, (which so much concern the welfare of the Body Politick) we ought to do like skilful Physicians, that are not led in their Judgments so much by outward expressions of a Disease, as by the inward Symptoms and Causes of it: For it fares with a Body Politick, as it doth with a Natural Body. It is impossible to cure an ulcerous Body, unless you first cleanse the Veins, and purge the Body from the Obstructions and pestilent Humours that surcharge Nature; and that being once done, the Botches, Blanes and Scabs, which grow upon the superficies and outside of the Body, will dry up, shed, and fall away of themselves. The Danger that hath now been presented to the House, it standeth at a distance; and we heartily wish it were farther off: Yet as it stands at a distance, it is so much the less dangerous. But the Case that I shall put, is a Case of great Danger here at home. And is so much the more dangerous, because it is home-bred, and runs in the Veins.

If the one shall appear to be as great a Danger as the other; we hope it will not be thought unreasonable at this time, to put the one as well as the other.

Mr. Speaker,

The Case is this; The Charter of our Liberties, called Magna Charta, was granted unto us by King John, which was but a Renovation and Restitution of the ancient Laws of this Kingdom. This Charter was afterwards in the succession of several Ages, confirmed unto us above thirty several times, and in the third year of his Majesties Reign that now is, we had more then a Confirmation of it: For we had an Act declaratory past: And then to put it out of all question and dispute for the future, his Majesty by his gracious Answer, Soit Droit fait come est desire, invested it with the Title of Petition of Right.

What expositions contrary to that Law of Right have some men given to the undermining the Liberty of the Subjects, with new invented subtil distinctions, and assuming to themselves a power (I know not where they had it) out of Parliament, to supersede, annihilate and make void the Laws of the Kingdom? The Commonwealth hath been miserably torn and massacred, and all Property and Liberty shaken, the Church di-tracted, the Gospel and Professors of it persecuted, and the whole Nation over-run with swarms of projecting Canker-worms and Caterpillars, the worst of all the Egyptian Plagues:
Then (as the case now stands with us) I conceive there are two points very considerable in it. The first is, What hath been done any way to impeach the Liberties of the Subjects, contrary to the Petition of Right? The second is,
Who have been the Authors and Causes of it?

The serious examination and discussion of these two Questions, do highly concern his Majesty in point of Honour, and his Subjects in point of Interest. And all that I shall say to it, are but the words that Ezra used to King Artaxerxes of the settlement of that State, which at that time was as much out of frame and order, as ours is at this present; that which cured theirs, I hope will cure ours: His words are these, Whoſoever, saith he, hath not done the Laws of God and the King, let Judgment be speedily executed upon him, whether it be unto Banishment, or to Conſiſcation of Goods, or to Imprisonment. It may be some do think this a strange Text, and 'tis possible some may think it as strange a Case. As for the Text, every man may read it that will; and for the Case,
I am afraid there are but few here, that do not experimentally know it, as bad as I have put it, and how to mend a bad Cause, I take it is part of the Business we now meet about.

His Majesty yesterday did graciously confirm unto us, our great and ancient Liberties of Freedom of Speech; and having his Kingly word for it, I shall rest as confidently upon it, as the greatest security under Heaven, whilst I have the honour to have a place here, and I shall with all humility be bold to express my self like a Freeman.

The Diseases and Distempers that now are in our Bodies Politick, are grown to that height, that they pray for and importune a Cure. And his Majesty, out of his tender care and affection to his People, like a Nursing Father, hath now freely offered himself to hear our Grievances and Complaints. We cannot complain we want good Laws; the wit of man cannot invent better than are already made: There want only some Examples, that such as have been the Authors and Causes of all our miseries and distractions in Church and Commonwealth contrary to these good Laws, might be Treacle to expell the Poison of mischief out of others.

But my part is but ostendere partem; therefore having put the Case, I must leave it to the Judgment of this House, Whether our Dangers here at home, be not as great and considerable, as that which was even now presented?

But Sir Benjamin Rudyard, to qualifie a little the heat of the foregoing Gentleman, adviseth Moderation, that the House would proceed with all caution and tenderness, and to lay aside all Exasperations, &c. as followeth.

Sir

Anno 1640.

Sir Benjamin Rudyard's Speech.

WE have, said he, Mr. Speaker, a great and effectual door of doing good opened unto us, it will be our prudence, and the advantage of the Nation, to make the best advantage thereof. We are here (Sir) met by the blessing of God and our King: Parliaments have of late days become unfortunate; it is our duty by our good temper and carriage, to restore them to their ancient Lustre.

There be some here present, who can remember the breaking up of the last Parliament; a business certainly from which the Papists are not exempt, who now by the discontinuance of Parliaments, are come to that arrogance and boldness, that they contend with us, who are the better Subjects. Their Envy I like, but their presumption is not to be born. I wish them no harm, but good; for I desire their Conviction: And the way to do that, is to set up better Lights, who have warmth in them, and are not lukewarm in Religion. Surely they that quarrel betwixt preaching and prayer, and would have them contend, never meant well to either: But both must have their due. And yet I know not how it comes to pass, but it hapneth to us, which is in no other Religion in the World, that a man may be too religious: And many one by that scandal, is frighted into a deep dissimulation. It is wisdom in us, to preserve temper and moderation: For breaking of Parliaments makes dangerous wounds in the Body Politick; and if the Splinters be not pulled out with a gentle hand, we may hereafter despair of Cure.

In 14 Ed. 3. Subsidies were given to the King for his expedition into France, but by the ill management of his Treasure here, he was so low, that he was glad to make Truce with the French King.

In 15 Ed. 3. He returns, and summoned a Parliament, wherein there was nothing but Jealousies and Distempers.

In 17 Ed. 3. He called another Parliament, to procure an Atonement with his Subjects, which took good success by their humble carriage to him, and his willingness to ratifie their Liberty, whereby all breaches were then made up.

A Parliament is the Bed of Reconciliation between King and People; and therefore it is fit for us, to lay aside all Exasperations, and carry our selves with humility: Howbeit the King's Prerogative may go far, yet if it be swayed with Equanimity, it may be the better born.

Princes are, and will be as jealous of their power, as people of their Liberties; though both are then best, when kept within their several Bounds. Levying of Moneys is a great disturbance to the Subject; and so will be the scarcity of the King's Revenues, until they be supplied. And where the Power of the King and Necessity meets in one hand, he will not long be disappointed. But before the ending of this Parliament, (the untimely breaking whereof would be the breaking of us) I doubt not but his Majesties Revenue may be so settled, that he may live plentifully at home and abroad: And without taking any thing from his Majesty, save that, which of it self would fall away.

In former Parliaments, the Carriage of some have been so haughty, as though Parliaments would last always; and the carriage of others, as if there would be never any again. And therefore a Moderation (if we love our selves) is requisite. Car. 16.

The Delays of Remedies are well known, how dangerous they are to the Commonwealth and Religion, seeing, during this Vacation of Parliaments, so many Disorders have been committed, by Innovations in Religion, Violation of Laws, and intruding upon Liberties.

To set all which aright, is now our Task: And if in these tempting provocations we bear a temperate moderation, we shall not miss of our end, but shall be vindicated by God in his Religion, the King in his Honour, and the Commonwealth in its gasping Extremities.

If temper and moderation be not respected by us, be ware of having the Race of Parliaments rooted out.

Men and Brethren, What shall we do? If it were for my life, I would desire nothing more, then that we proceed with moderation, that so we may have many happy Parliaments, and that no dismal Events may happen to any: For when Parliaments are gone we are lost.

The day following, being the 17th of April, was spent in reading sundry Petitions from the several Counties of Suffolk, Middlesex, Essex, &c. at what time Mr. Pym, having a great deal of leisure since the Parliament in 1628. takes up whatever he could get together to inodiate the Government, and exasperate the House. These he rangeth into three Heads.

1. Grievances about the Liberties and Privileges of Parliament.
2. Innovations in matters of Religion.
3. Grievances about the Property of our Goods, &c.

Concerning the first of these (said he) I shall instance in six Particulars.

First, In that the Speaker the last Parliament (the last day of it) being commanded to put the Question, the House was commanded they should not speak. These are conceived to be the grounds of whatsoever befell those Gentlemen, which so lately suffered. 'Tis true, the House was commanded to adjourn presently, yet whilst the House sate, God forbid we should be barr'd from offering the last sighs and groans to his Majesty.

Secondly, In that the Parliament was then dissolved, before our Grievances had redress, or before we could make our Wills known, which is the privilege of Dying men; and to be heard before condemned, is not denied to private persons.

Thirdly, That the Judges presume to question the proceedings of this House: It is against nature and order, that inferiour Courts should undertake to regulate superiour. The Court of Parliament is a Court of the highest Jurisdiction, and cannot be censured by any other Law or Sentence, but by its own.

Fourthly, The several Imprisonments of divers Gentlemen, for speaking freely in Parliament.

Fifthly,

Anno 1640.

Fifthly, That inferiour Courts should be informed to punish Acts done in this Court, whereby divers Members of the House were so kept in Prison, till they had put in security for their good behaviour; and some of them died in Prison; others not released, until Writs came for this Parliament.

Lastly, (which I conceive to be the greatest) That the Parliament was punished, without being suffered to make its own Defence. I call the Dissolution of the Parliament a punishment, and justly: The breaking of the Parliament, is death to a good Subject.

But it is to be observed, that in this and the other Grievances, though the King be no party (for his Highnesses Prerogative is to do no wrong) yet most of these Distempers of State, arise and do invade the Subjects, by means of misinforming him: As the Celestial Bodies of themselves send forth nothing but wholsomeness to man; but by the ill distemper in inferiour Bodies, much hurt ariseth from them.

Secondly, As to the second sort of Grievances, they are about Religion; Wherein I would (said he) first observe, the great Encouragement which is given to them of the Popish Religion, by an universal suspension of all Laws that are against them, and some of them admitted into publick places of Trust and Power.

I desire not to have any new Laws made against them (God be thanked, we have enough) nor a strict execution of the old ones, but only so far forth as tends to the safety of his Majesty, and such a practice of them, that the Religion that can brook no Corral, may not be the destruction of ours, by being too concurrent with it.

There is an Intention of a Nuncio from the Pope, who is to be here, to give secret Intelligence to Rome, how we incline here, and what will be thought fit to win us thither.

I observe as a great Grievance, there are divers Innovations in Religion amongst our selves, to make us more capable of a translation; to which purpose Popish Books have been published in print, and Disputations of Popish Points are, and have been used in the Universities and elsewhere with privilege, and preached in the Pulpit, and maintained for sound Doctrine, whereby Popish Tenets are maintained.

Secondly, The introducing of Popish Ceremonies, as Altars, bowing towards the East, Pictures, Crosses, Crucifixes, and the like, which of themselves considered, are as so many dry Bones, but being put together, make the man. We are not now contented with the old Ceremonies, I mean such as the constitution of the Reformed Religion hath continued unto us: But we must introduce again many of those superstitious and infirm Ceremonies, which accompanied the most decrepid Age of Popery, bowing to the Altar, and the like.

I shall observe the daily discouraging of all godly men, who truly profess the Protestant Religion, as though men could be too Religious.

Some things are urged by Ecclesiastical men, without any ground by any Canon or Article established, and without any Command from the King, either under his Great Seal, or by Proclamation.

The Parliament ever since Queen Elizabeth's time, desired the Bishops to deal moderately; but how they have answered those desires, we all know, and these good men for the most part feel.

I may not forget, that many of the Ministers are deprived, for refusing to read the Book for Sports and Recreation upon the Sabbath, which was a Device of their own Heads: which Book, I may affirm hath many things faulty in it.

Thirdly, The encroaching upon the King's Authority by Ecclesiastical Courts, as namely the High Commission, which takes upon it to Fine and Imprison men, enforcing them to take the Oath Ex Officio, with many of the like Usurpations, which are punishments belonging only to Temporal Jurisdiction: And it hath been resolved in the time of King James, that the Statute of 1 Eliz. cap. 1. gives them no such Power: Moreover, the Power which they claim, they derive not from the King, nor from any Law or Statute; but they will immediately have it from Heaven Jure Divino. Divers particular Ordinaries, Chancellors, and Arch-Deacons take upon them to make and ordain Constitutions within their particular Limits. All these things are true to the knowledge of most that hear me.

Thirdly, As to the Grievances about Property, I reckon several Infringements made hereupon.

First, By the taking Tunnage and Poundage, which I account (said he) a great Grievance. There are divers ancient Customs due to the King, but they are certain what they are, and are due by prescription: These Customs being too narrow for his Service, and the affections of the People growing stronger and stronger to their Prince, Tunnage and Poundage were granted for years to the King; and afterwards by this House granted for Lives; but never were taken by the King's own Act without a Parliament: For doing which, there is no President, unless in a year or two in the latter end of Queen Elizabeth.

Secondly, The next Grievance, I rank Knight-hood, the Original whereof was, that persons fit for Chivalry might be improved: But this after was stretched for another end, for Money, and extended not only to Terre Tenants, but to Lessees and Merchants, who were first to appear, and then to plead for themselves at the Council Board; but were delayed from day to day, to their great charge and inconvenience: And notwithstanding the just Defence they have made for themselves, there have been infinite Distresses laid upon them until the Fines were paid, which were imposed not by Courts, but by Commissioners assigned for that purpose: And this being a continuing Offence, they are by the same Rule, as liable now to Fines, as ever.

Thirdly, Monopolies and Inundations of them, whereby a Burthen is laid not only upon Foreign, but upon Native Commodities, as Soap, Salt, Drink, &c. the Particulars whereof are fit

M m m m m

Anno 1640.

fit for the Committee of Grievances.

Fourthly, Ship-money; and although there be a Judgment for it, yet I dare be bold to say it's against all former Presidents and Laws, and not one Judgment that ever maintained it. This is a Grievance that all are grieved at, having no Limits either for time or proportion: If therefore any shall endeavour to defend this, he must know, that both his Reputation and Conscience lye at Stake in the Defence.

Fifthly, The enlarging the bounds of the Forest. Though our Ancestors were heretofore questioned for the same thing, yet upon the satisfaction of all the Objections that were, or could be made, they then saved themselves; yet now the same things are turned upon us.

Sixthly, The Sale of publick Nuisances, for so they are pretended to be. Many great Nuisances have been complained of: But when there hath been money given, and Compositions made, then they are no more Nuisances, as Buildings and Depopulations.

Seventhly, Military Charges, and Impositions upon Counties, by Letters only from the Council Table, whereby Souldiers Conduct-money and Coats are to be provided at the Countries charge; and Horses also provided without ground or Law; many things in this kind being done by Deputy-Lieutenants of their own accord.

Eighthly, Extrajudicial Judgments and Impositions of the Judges without any cause before them, whereby they have anticipated the Judgment which is legal and publick, and circumvented one of the parties of just remedies, in that no Writ of Error lies, but only upon the Judicial proceedings.

The last sort of Grievance is, That the great Courts do countenance the Oppressions, as I may instance in the Court of Star-Chamber, advancing and countenancing of Monopolies, which should be instead of this great Council of the Kingdom; and the Star-Chamber now is become a Court of Revenue; Informations there being put in against Sheriffs, for not making returns of Money upon the Writs of Ship-money: It was not used, that meum & tuum should be disputed there.

The Remedy I do humbly present for all these Grievances, is, That we may joyn with the House of Peers in an address to his Majesty, and pray that these Grievances, being clear in Fact, may be Voted; if any thing in the Vote be stuck upon, that it may be debated and drawn according to the course of the House, into a Remonstrance, with an humble Petition of both Houses for redress. And I hope the Wisdom of this House will prepare such a Remedy, as will make the King a great King, and the people happy.

The day following, being the 18th of April, the House divided upon the Question, Whether the Records in the Court of Star-Chamber should be sent for against Sir John Elliot, Mr. Holles, &c. and referred to a Committee, which carried in the Affirmative. The Speakers refusing to put the Question at the command of the House, was referred to the same Committee, and also ordered a Committee to consider of the Grievances mentioned in the several Petitions, and that the records about the Ship-money in the Case of Hampden should be brought into the House.

ON the 20th of April, the Committee about the Speakers not putting the Question, made the Report, and it was, That (he said) he durst not put the Question; not, That he would not put the Question; and that he left the Chair in obedience to the King's Command, which they presently voted a breach of Priviledge.

HIS Majesty seeing which way Affairs steered, commanded both Houses to attend him the day following, being the 21 of April, in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall, where he commanded the Lord Keeper to acquaint the Houses with his Majesties expectations from them, he said as followeth.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

YOU may well remember, upon the beginning of this Parliament his Majesty commanded me, to deliver unto you the causes of calling of it, which was, for the Assistance and Supply of his Majesty in so great, weighty, and important Affairs, as ever King of England had to require at his Subjects hands.

I am now to put you in mind what I then said unto you, and withal to let you know, that such and so great are his Majesties occasions at this time, that if the supply be not speedy, it will be of no use at all: For the Army is now Marching, and doth stand his Majesty in at least One hundred thousand pounds a Month, and if there be no means used to go on with this as is fitting, his Majesties design will be lost, and the charge all cast away. It is not a great and ample supply for the perfecting of the work, that his Majesty doth now expect, but it is such a supply (as without which) the Charge will be lost, and the Design frustrated, being built upon those weighty Reasons which tend to the infinite good of the Kingdom, and preservation of you all.

This done, his Majesty will give you scope and liberty to present your just Grievances unto him, and he will hear them with a gracious Ear, and give them such an Answer, as you and all the Kingdom shall have reason to joy therein.

His Majesty takes notice of one particular, and that is concerning Ship-money; wherein his Majesty hath commanded me to declare thus much unto you: First, His Majesty never had it in his Royal heart, to make an Annual Revenue of it, nor ever had a thought to make the least benefit or profit of it: But whatsoever he did or intended in it, it was for the Common good of you all; for the honour, glory, and splendor of this Nation, and that every one of us are made sharers and partakers in the benefits, fruits, and successes of it, which otherwise you would have felt the woes of it. He hath been so far from making the least benefit of it, that he hath expended great Sums of Money out of his own Coffers to work with, to those necessary ends I have named unto you.

The Accompts of such Moneys so received, have been brought to the Council Table, the Moneys delivered to Sir William Russell the Treasurer of the Navy, and by them all it may appear whether there hath been a fulness and clearness of truth in the disbursements thereof, for the good and safety of the Kingdom.

It

anno. 1640. It is true, his Majesty had once intended this year not to have taken that course, but an Army, which his Majesty so just a King for the preservation of the Kingdom hath now taken into Consideration; And I must tell you, that his Majesty prizeth nothing more than his honour, and he will not lose for any earthly thing, his honour in the least; They cannot make those expressions of love, duty, and affection to him, which the graciousness of his Nature will not exceed in.

Of all his Kingdoms, this ought to be the nearest and dearest unto him, yet for his Kingdom of Ireland the last Parliament before this, the very second day of the Parliament they gave him six Subsidies, they relied upon his gracious Words, the success was that before the end of the Parliament, they had all that they did desire granted, and had it with an advantage. This last Parliament there, it is well known unto you all, what a cheerful supply they have given unto his Majesty, for their hearts went with it; and let it not be apprehended, that Subsidies there are of small Value; there is not a Subsidy that is granted, but it is worth Fifty or sixty thousand pounds at the least: Consider that Kingdom, what proportion it holdeth with this of England, and you will find, that it is a considerable Gift, as hath been given in many years. It hath wrought this effect, That certainly his Majesty will make it apparent to all the World, what a good construction, and how graciously he doth esteem and interpret this Act of theirs. I have directed hitherto my Speech to you that are of the House of Commons; Now I shall address my self to your Lordships.

It is true, the proper and natural Supply proceeds from the House of Commons, yet in aid at this time, his Majesty hath called you hither; and hopeth he shall not find the House of Commons backward to his desires, nor your Lordships to concur with them.

To you of the House of Commons, I did forget one thing, of an Objection that might perhaps be made; That Tunnage and Poundage is given towards the maintenance of a Fleet at Sea, let me tell you, that Tunnage and Poundage was never intended, but for ordinary preservation of the Sea, not that that should be to defend the Dominion of the Narrow Seas, when the Navies of all the Princes of Christendom are so increased as they are. It is fit for his Majesty (as things now stand) to have such a strength at Sea, as may be a terror to others abroad.

His Majesty was once resolved that no Shipping Writs should have issued out this year, but he was enforced for your good, and the good of the Kingdom, and for his Honour, upon necessary and weighty reasons to send forth Writs, and those reasons were these.

It was of necessity for his Majesty to prepare an Army to reduce his disaffected Subjects of Scotland to their due Obedience. This very year all the Neighbouring Princes are preparing with great Fleets of Ships, so as it is time for his Majesty to put himself into a strength that he may be able to preserve the Dominion of the Narrow Seas, without which this Kingdom will be lost, he not able to maintain his right of being the Moderator of the Sea, whereby there may be Freedom and Commerce of Trade, which adds exceedingly to the flourishing of this Kingdom. Another reason for Shipping Writs this year is, That those of Argier are grown to that insolency, that they are provided of a Fleet of sixty sail of Ships, and have taken divers Ships, and one called the Rebecca of London (well known to the Merchants upon the Exchange) taken upon the Coasts of Spain, worth at the least Two hundred and sixty thousand pounds. And therefore the Writ having gone out upon those weighty Reasons, before it was possible the Parliament could give any supply to provide for those things, his Majesty cannot this year forbear it, but he doth expect your Concurrence in the Levying of it for the future. I shall speak that unto you by his Majesties Command, which may comfort any English heart; His Majesty hath no thoughts of enriching himself by the monies coming in upon these Writs; he doth desire but to live as it behoves a King of England, able to defend you and this Nation in honour and in lustre, which is famous abroad, and glorious at home, and to live but like such a King, as every true English heart desireth their King should be.

Be Masters of your own way, settle it so secure and so safe, that it may never come to the least benefit and advantage to himself, but for the common good, and those necessary ends wherein you shall all share in your plenty, peace, honour, and whatsoever any English man can glory in.

His Majesty commands me to tell you, You shall propound nothing wherein you may receive all security for the property of your Goods, and nothing for securing your own Liberties, wherein he will not most readily listen unto you; and be as willing to grant, as you to ask. His Majesty doth now offer unto you the reasons, occasions, and the way to make this the most blessed and most happy Parliament that ever was, and that may produce such effects, that the King may delight in his People, and the People in their King. And he layeth before you not only the Counsel to do so, but he will tell you the way, and that is by putting an obligation of trust and confidence upon him, which shall more secure you, then all that you can invent; or Fears or Jealousies can imagine to be provided for; It is a course that good Manners, Duty, and Reason should require of you to take into Consideration.

Wednesday, April 22. the Lord Keeper's Speech was reported to the House, and they entred upon the Debate thereof, and of the Supplies demanded; and upon the whole, were resolved, notwithstanding what had been offered to the contrary, to persist, and to go on to consider of Grievances, which they did for several days following.

ON Saturday, being the 25th, the Commons received a Message from the Lords (in whose House it had been carried, That the Consideration of Supplies for his Majesty should precede the Debate of Grievances) desiring a present Conference; which was granted: And the Matters therein debated were reported to the House Monday following by Mr. Herbert the Queens Solicitor, as followeth.

That it pleased his Majesty to honour the Lords House so much, as to come thither in person, and to make many Gracious expressions; and that he put them in mind, of what had been by my Lord Keeper in his Majesties Name delivered, first in the Lords House, and after to both Houses, in the Banqueting-House in Whitehall, and then he gave us his Royal Word and Assurance, that he would not depart from one tittle of that, which in his Majesties name had been delivered to the House of Commons, but perform it really to the utmost.

He gave us to understand, That the necessity of his Affairs was such, as would bear no delay, and a delay would be as good as a denial, both in regard of the Affairs themselves, and of the dangers that did attend them, as well as of his honour in Foreign States,

M m m m m 2 which which so much concerned him to uphold, as he held it as dear as his life, and of as great importance to maintain.

His Majesty did think, that in Civility and good Manners, as well as Necessary, it was fit for him to be trusted first.

There must be a Trust, and whether it begin with him or you, in the execution the total trust must be in him; the difference is but in point of time; though we trust him in the beginning, yet it is but in part, he must trust us in all before the end of this Parliament.

It is but a present Supply that he expects at this time, to go on with the things in hand, or else all the things which hath been told us will be lost, and that a very little time delayed will make it impossible for my Lords and us, to recover the same.

That the Lords commanded him to tell us of the necessity of the Affairs, and the urgency of the danger of somewhat that is lately come to their knowledge. The War is begun, and the men in Scotland have pitched their Tents at Dunce, and threaten an Invasion in Northumberland, and have taken some of the Troopers of Sir William Brounkards, so as their intention is plain; besides the Letter which may shew their purpose, to put themselves into the Protection and Defence of Foreign States.

The necessity is such, that his Majesty could not transfer the Trust to us, to begin with us, or otherwise he would most willingly let you go on in your own course, to begin with redress of your Grievances; but his Majesties necessity requires a present supply for this purpose, after which he will let us go on with our Grievances, and doth promise a Princely and Gracious care, and will relieve you therein, as far as in Justice and Reason you can ask.

His Majesty did express that he holds nothing so glorious, as that he is King of a rich and free People, and if he do not secure you in your Liberties and Property of Estate, he cannot account you a rich and free People, and consequently himself not Glorious: And therefore his Majesty declared, that for those three things, Religion, Property of Estate, and Priviledges of Parliament, he would graciously listen unto you.

For Religion, his Heart and his Conscience doth stand with the Religion of the Church of England, and as he hath lived in it, so he would dye in it; and no man can be more careful to keep out Innovations then his Majesty will be; and for that purpose he would lay a great Charge upon his Archbishops and Bishops, that they should take order accordingly.

For Ship-money, his Majesty declared, it was never in his thoughts to make the least profit or benefit of it, and that he never did make advantage of it. But contrarily had laid out many Thousand pounds out of his own Treasury towards that Defence, for which that was intended, as many of the Lords can witness.

All his Majesties care and aim was for the preservation of your safety, peace, and plenty, and his own honour abroad: That he may Reign among you a great and glorious King, as you ought to desire he should: Therefore think you of any other way for the guard and preservation of the Seas, which (considering the great Naval preparations abroad) doth so much import, that he may be able to maintain a Navy, whereby he may be Moderator, and keep Dominion of all the Narrow Seas, without which it is impossible for us to subsist. Keep the Sea which is the way by which God hath enabled his Majesty to protect and defend us; put it into what way you will, his Majesty will joyn with us in it.

The Lords have taken into consideration his Majesties gracious expression; we have the Word of a King, and as some of the Lords were pleased to say, not only of a King but a Gentleman, and they would no more be guilty of distrusting him, then they would be of the highest undutifulness towards him.

And upon all these Considerations, though my Lords would not meddle with matters of Subsidy, which belong properly and naturally to you, no not to give advice therein, but have utterly declined it; yet being Members of one Body, Subjects of the same King, and all concerned in the common safety, their duty to his Majesty, and in their zeal and natural love to their Country, themselves and their Posterity, they have declared by Vote, that they hold it most necessary and fit that the matter of Supply should have the precedence before any other Matter or Consideration whatsoever, and therefore desired a Conference with you, to let you know their Reasons for the same.

This taken into consideration, and done by you, trusting in his Majesties promise, (which they hold the greatest obligation upon him, and the greatest security to your selves) they will freely joyn with you in all that concerns Matter of Religion, Property of Estate, and Priviledge of Parliament. This course being followed, their Lordships are of opinion we shall have a most happy and blessed Parliament.

This being reported to the House, it was by them Resolved upon the Question;

First, That the House of Lords have violated the Priviledges of the Commons by Matters propounded to the Commons by them at their late Conference.

Secondly, That this Matter be referred to a Committee to prepare Heads for a Conference to be had and to be desired with the Lords hereupon; and that a Message be sent to the Lords to desire a Conference on the Heads following.

First, That at the Conference it being admitted by their Lordships, that Matters of Subsidy naturally and properly belong to this House, and that their Lordships would not meddle therein, or give advice therein, but had declined it; the Committee therefore conceives, that this House shall not need to labour therein, or to think of Presidents or Reasons for the maintaining of this Priviledge.

Secondly, That notwithstanding this Declaration, their Lordships meddled with, and advised concerning both the matter of Supply, and the time when, and that before such time as the same was moved to them by the Commons. It appears by their Lordships Declaration (viz.) that they had Voted, That they held it most necessary and fit the matter of Supply should have the Precedence before any other matter or consideration whatsoever; and therefore desired that Conference with the Commons to let them know their Lordships Reasons; and that being taken into consideration, and done by the Commons, their Lordships would freely joyn with them in all that concerns matter of Religion, Property of Estate, and Priviledge of Parliament.

Thirdly, To desire reparations from the Lords hereupon, for repair of this breach of Priviledge; and that their Lordships be desired in their wisdom to find out some way of Reparation of their Priviledges for the present; and of prevention of the like infringement for the future.

And

Anno 1640.
And lastly, Whereas the Committee was induced to conceive, that their Lordships had been informed that the Commons upon debate thereof had taken into consideration the matter of Religion, property of Estate, and Priviledges of Parliament, and that they mean to let the same have the precedency before the Supply, they humbly offer that the same may be presented to their Lordships in words to this effect.

That in case their Lordships have taken notice of any Orders, or proceedings of the Commons concerning matters of Religion, property of Estate and Priviledge of Parliament, that they were to have precedency before the Supply, which they seem to conceive by these words, That this being done, then their Lordships will freely joyn to the avoiding of all mis-understanding between their Lordships and the Commons for time to come: They desire their Lordships to take no notice of any things which shall be debated by the Commons, until they shall themselves declare the same to their Lordships, which the Commons will alwaies observe towards the proceedings of their Lordships.

After a debate hereon had in the House of Commons, they agreed with the Committee in the report, and appoint one to manage the Conference with the Lords. The day following they spent in further debate of heads to be added to the foregoing in the Conference to be desired with the Lords, and these were Innovations in Religion, Liberty, and Property, and Priviledge of Parliament; the Conference was had accordingly with the Lords on Wednesday, April 29. and was managed by Mr. Pym, as to matters of Religion, by Mr. St. John as to Monopolies, and by Mr. Holborne as to Priviledge of Parliament.

Thursday was spent in the matter of Ship-money; and on Friday the House met at a Conference in the Painted Chamber upon the Subject matter of the last Conference, where the Lord Keeper spake as followeth:

The Lord Keeper's Speech.

THE Lords have commanded me to let you know, that the desire and care on your part at the last Conference, represented unto them for preserving a good Union and Correspondence between their Lordships and you, is by them entertained with all respect, and requited with all good affection; as that which is the best way to bring our Consultations and Resolutions to an happy issue, to give his Majesty a dutiful account of our zeal and forwardness in those great and weighty affairs, for which we were assembled; and to further those United Proceedings that may tend to the happiness of this Kingdom, and the contentment of both Houses.

Their Lordships well know the great privileges belonging to both Houses of Parliament, of which they and you alike participate: and they are not ignorant of those that are distinctly proper to each House: what belongs to you of the House of Commons they never had thought to impeach or diminish in the least kind; and what they may justly challenge to themselves, they presume you will not attempt upon, since you cannot doubt but they will be as tender of their Honour in the preservation and upholding of their own, as they are and shall be careful not to invade or violate any of yours. Car. 16.

This (their Lordships commanded me to tell you) will best and most clearly appear, by the Course hath been held in their own House, and by their proceedings with you.

Their Lordships (as in Duty and affection to his Majesties Crown and Government they are bound) took into serious Consideration, the great and weighty motives of his Majesties calling together at this time, the great Evils and Calamities that hang over our Heads, and the apparent danger this Kingdom is like to run into, if by speedy and fitting supply his Majesty be not able to prevent it.

These with Reasons inforcing, how unportable Delay and Protraction was, and how impossible it is for both Houses to recover the loss of time, in a matter of so urging and pressing Consequence, whereby his Majesties Command delivered to their Lordships and you both in the Lords House and in the Banqueting-House at White-hall, his Majesty being present.

His Majesty, I say, at both those times, expressed his gracious and Princely desire to do all that from a just and a gracious King might be expected, whereby this Parliament might have an happy and blessed conclusion, to bring Joy and Consolation to his Majesty and all his Subjects. He told you, that all your just Grievances should be graciously heard and relieved; that he would therein let you be at no loss of time.

Their Lordships were Witnesses, that his Majesty gave his Royal Word herein, and for their parts lodge it in their hearts with as much trust and confidence of his Majesties Royal performance, as ever Subjects did.

Not long after, his Majesty was pleased to honour the Lords House with his presence again, to renew their Remembrance of all that before had been delivered to both Houses, both for the necessity of the Supply desired, with an impossibility of admitting delay, and the clearness of his Majesties intention and resolutions to give all just satisfaction, to what with reason could be desired of him.

His Majesty then took notice to their Lordships of somewhat that had been Voted in your House concerning Religion, Property of Goods, and Liberty of Parliament, whereby his Majesty conceived the matter of his Supplies set aside, which he had so often and with such weight of Reason desired might have precedence, after very gracious assurances to their Lordships of his Majesties constant affection and zeal for the true Religion, for preventing all Innovation therein, of his so often iterated promise to give a gracious Ear and just Relief to all your just Grievances, expressing his Royal Intentions in that of Ship-money, which he found so much stood upon. He was pleased to desire their Lordships, (as persons in their Ranks and Degrees nearest to him in Honour, as much and more concerned than others, and in the safety and prosperity of his Kingdom, at least equally interested with the rest of his Subjects) in a case of this great and important weight.

They would by their Counsel and perswasion, incline you of the House of Commons to give his Majesty a speedy answer and resolution in the matter of Supply.

Their

Anno 1640. Their Lordships took his Majesties Desire into serious and dutiful consideration, and after a great and solemn Debate, they resolved, that their opinion was, That the matter of his Majesties Supply should have precedence, and be resolved of before any other matter whatsoever; and did think fit, there should be a Conference desired with you of the House of Commons, to dispose you thereunto. And this was all they then Voted or concluded, with which other Conference their Lordships acquainted you; This as it was just and honourable for them to do, so it neither extended the Bounds and Limits of their own privilege, nor narrowed or strained any of yours. And yet at the last Conference which their Lordships are apt and willing to believe, proceeded rather from some mistaking than any intention to lessen their, or enlarge your own Priviledges.

It was urged in your name, that the Voting of this was a breach of your Privilege, and that therein their Lordships had been transported beyond their grounds, which they had set to themselves: because in their former Conference their Lordships had admitted, that matter of Supply ought to be given in the House of Commons, as naturally belonging to that House, and wherein their Lordships would not meddle, no not so much as to give advice: And yet by Voting what they did, had not only meddled in matter of Supply, but as far as in their Lordships lay, had concluded both of Matter and Order of proceeding, for which you demanded Reparation from their Lordships: Wherein I'm commanded by their Lordships to let you know, that they have neither varied, nor been transported from their own grounds, nor Voted any thing contrary to your Rights and Priviledges, or to that admitting of them at that Conference, which is pretended. For their Lordships did and I do admit, that the Bill of Subsidies ought to have its Inception and beginning in your House, that when it comes up to their Lordships, and is by them agreed unto, it must be returned back to you, and be by your Speaker presented.

And therefore as they do disclaim any thought or Intention of such beginning in their House, so they did at their Debate and Conference with you, disclaim to meddle with the matter of Subsidies or Supplies; that is, by naming the Time or Number, or any such Circumstances incident to the Bill, which ought to begin with you, or therein to give you any the least advice, but to confer and talk with you about Supplies in general.

Their advice therein they do not, nor ever did hold derogatory to yours, or exceeding the Priviledges of their own House: for as you frequently impart your Grievances to them, so it's all the Reason in the World they should communicate their fears and fore-sights of Dangers to you, their Lordships being a Body that moveth in an Orb nearer unto the Royal Throne than you do, and therefore the likelier to communicate in the Counsels and Secrets of State, and for their Persons and Fortunes, at least as considerable in point of Danger.

Their Lordships are not unacquainted with that Establishment in Parliament, which was by you at the Conference styled, The Indemnity of the Commons: but it is indeed the Indemnity of the Lords and Commons, and so styled in the Record it self, by that Record made at Gloucester 9 H. 4.

It appears there was a Conference between the Lords and Commons, about the State of the Realm and Defence of it, after which the King demanded of the Lords, What Aid was fit to be granted? They said a Tenth and an half in Cities and Burroughs, and one Fifth and a half of others, and a Subsidy of Tonnage and Poundage for two years.

Upon which, the King sent to the Commons to send up to him and the Lords, twelve of their company; when they came, it was by the King's Command declared, what had been of the King demanded of the Lords, and what the Lords answer thereunto was (which the King willed them to report to their Companions, that they might with better speed conform themselves to the intention of the Lords.)

This indeed the Commons were troubled at, as being a great Derogation to their Liberties; whereupon to prevent for the future any thing that might turn to the prejudice of their liberty, or against the liberty of the Lords, It was established, That it should alwaies be lawful for the Lords to commune among themselves in the King's absence of the State of the Realm, and the Remedies needful; and so for the Commons among themselves, Provided alwaies, that neither the Lords or Commons report to the King any things granted by the Commons and assented to by the Lords, nor the Communication of it, before the Lords and Commons be agreed, and then be represented (as the manner is) by the Speaker of the House of Commons.

This is the substance of that Establishment, which only hath relation to the manner of presenting Subsidies and Aids to the King, and giving him knowledge of them. And as it hath not one word that bars the Lords and Commons from conferring about them; so it plainly declares, that Lords and Commons in their several Houses, may equally treat amongst themselves of the Dangers the Kingdom is in, and of the way to remedy them: and this my Lords have well weighed, and are satisfied verities their proceedings to have been according to ancient usage and custom, as they are grounded upon just and weighty reasons.

Many other Reasons their Lordships have, to justify their proceedings in this particular: but they conceive this Record alone mentioned by your self, will give you herein abundant satisfaction, and plainly shew, that the House of Commons had no cause to demand Reparation herein from their Lordships.

A second thing objected, wherein their Lordships have been said to have broke another great privilege of the House of Commons established by that Ordinance which I have mentioned before, is, that their Lordships have taken notice of some proceedings in the House of Commons, concerning three particulars, viz. Religion, Propriety of Goods, and Privilege of Parliament. To which their Lordships have commanded me to give you this just and honourable answer.

His Majesty told their Lordships you had resolved something concerning these three heads, and by that way of proceeding preferred the grievances before the matter of Supply. How his Majesty knew that you had so resolved, belongs not to their Lordships to enquire into, their Lordships nor meddling with any thing that others said to the King. But withal his Majesty said to their Lordships, and for their Lordships to

to hear what his Majesty declared to them, and for them thereupon to report the same to the House of Commons, their Lordships are so far from holding it any diminution, or violation of your privileges, that on the contrary in Duty to his Majesty they could do no other, and the communicating it to you in that manner, they think rather merits your opinion and belief of their affections to you, and desire of Correspondence with you, than any other misconstruction whatsoever.

And that which you called the Indemnity of the Commons, hath no word in it that can be construed to make that any breach of your privilege; and therefore their Lordships having thus cleared and justified their own proceedings, and freed themselves from any Imputation of invading your Liberties, they cannot but return to their first grounds and resolution, which were in all fair and affectionate manner, to stir up in you the just consideration of those great and eminent dangers that threaten this Kingdom at this time, and how dangerous and irrecoverable delay is. And withal to dispose you to take into your first and best thoughts the matter of his Majesties Supply, and give him a speedy answer therein.

This their Lordships are confident, will be the means to preserve and continue a good union and understanding between their Lordships and you, to make this a happy Parliament, and to avert the publick calamities, that menace the ruin and overthrow of this famous and renowned Monarchy.

The next day, Saturday, May the first, his Majesty by Sir Henry Vane, Treasurer of his Household, minds the Commons of the danger and disreputation was like to fall upon the State and his Majesties Honour, if more time should be lost, and therefore desires their answer in the matter of the Supply; that a delay herein would be all one to him with a denial, that his Majesty was resolved to make good what he had promised by the Lord Keeper.

Hereupon the House was resolved into a grand Committee of the whole House, and Mr. William Lenthall (a Gentleman afterwards well known) had the Chair; the House spent the whole day in Debate, Whether Supply or Grievances should proceed and came to no resolve.

His Majesty again by the Treasurer of the Household, Sir Henry on the 4th of May (who, some say, did herein go beyond his Commission from his Majesty in demanding twelve Subsidies, for that one half thereof was the sum desired by the King) reminds the Commons of the desired Supply, and said, That his Majesty (the better to facilitate your Resolutions) this day hath thought fit to let you know, that of his Grace and favour he is pleased, upon your granting twelve Subsidies to be presently passed and to be paid in three years, with a proviso, that it shall not determine the Sessions, his Majesty will not only for the present forbear the levying of any Ship Money, but will give way to the utter abolishing of it, by any course that your selves shall like best.

And for your Grievances, his Majesty will (according to his Royal promise) give you as much time as may be now, and the next Michaelmas you shall meet again; and he expects a present and positive answer upon which he may rely, his affairs being in such a condition as can endure no longer delay.

The House is again turned into a grand Committee, and came to no Resolution, only appointed Sir Henry Vane to attend his Majesty to acquaint him they would proceed upon the same again the day following, but his Majesty having notice that the Commons intended that morning to Vote against the War with the Scots, and to blast that design to which (as one saith) they were so much indisposed. Mr. Secretary Windbanke was commanded by his Majesty to bring the Speaker of the Commons house to White-hall early the next morning, which he did accordingly; and the Commons meeting at their usual time, and the Speaker not come, did imagine what would follow, which was the Parliaments Dissolution, for about eleven a Clock that forenoon the Usher of the Black Rod was commanded to call the Commons to the Bar of the Lords House, whither they being come, his Majesty thus spake:

The KING's Speech.

My Lords,

There can no occasion of my coming to this House be so displeasing unto me as this at this time. The fear of doing that which I am to do this day, made me not long since come into this House, where I expressed well my fears as the remedy which I thought necessary for the eschewing of what is to follow.

I must confess and acknowledge that you, my Lords, of the higher House, did give me so willing an ear, and with such an affection did shew your selves, that certainly I may say, that if there had been any means to have given an happy end to this Parliament, you took it, so that it was neither your Lordships fault nor mine, that it is not so. Therefore in the first place I must thank you, my Lords, for your good endeavours.

My Lords, I hope you remember what the first day of the Parliament my Lord Keeper said to you in my name, and what likewise he said in the Banqueting-house in White-hall, and what lately I said unto you in this place my self. I name all this unto you, not doubting that you do not well remember it, but to shew you that I never said any thing in way of Favour to my people, but (by the Grace of God) I will punctually and really perform it.

I know that they have insisted very much on Grievances; I will not say but there may be some, though I will confidently affirm, that there are not by many degrees so many as the publick voice doth make them. Wherefore I desire you to take notice, now especially at this time, that out of Parliament I shall be as ready (if not more willing) to hear and redress any just Grievances, as in Parliament.

There is one thing much spoken of, I mean as to matters of Religion. Concerning which, albeit I expressed my self fully the last day in this place, yet I think it fit again on this occasion to tell you, that as I am concerned, so I shall be most careful to preserve that purity of Religion which (I thank God) is so well established in the Church of England, and that as well out of, as in Parliament.

My Lords, I shall not trouble you long with words, it being not my fashion; wherefore to conclude, what I offered the last day to the House of Commons, I think it is very well known to you all; as likewise how they accepted it, which I desire not to remember, but wish Anno 1640. wish they had remembered, how at first they were told by my Lord Keeper, that delay was the worst kind of denial; yet I will not lay this fault on the whole House of Commons; I will not Judge so uncharitably of those whom for the most part I take to be Loyal and well-affected Subjects, but it hath been the malicious cunning of some few seditiously affected men that hath been the cause of this mis-understanding.

I shall now end as I have begun, in giving you thanks for your affections shewn to me at this time, desiring you to go on and assist me in the maintaining of that Regal power that is truly mine. As for the liberty of the people, that they now so much startle at; know, my Lords, that no King in the World shall be more careful in the propriety of their Goods, liberty of their Persons, and true Religion, than I shall.
And now my Lord Keeper do as I have commanded you.

The Lord Keeper then added,

MY Lords, and you the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, The King's Majesty doth Dissolve this Parliament.

For the satisfaction of his Majesties Subjects about the Dissolution of this Parliament, the King emitted the Declaration following:

His Majesties Declaration to all his loving Subjects, of the Causes which moved him to Dissolve the last Parliament.

THE King's most Excellent Majesty well knoweth, that the Calling, Adjourning, Proroguing, and Dissolving of Parliaments, are undoubted Prerogatives inseparably annexed to his Imperial Crown; of which he is not bound to render any account, but to God alone, no more than of his other Regal Actions.

Nevertheless his Majesty (whose Piety and Goodness have made him ever so order and govern all things) that the clearness and candor of his Royal Heart may appear to all his Subjects, especially in those great and publick matters of State, that have relation to the Weal and Safety of his People, and the Honour of his Royal Person and Government, hath thought fit (for avoiding and preventing all sinister constructions and mis-interpretation, which the malice of some ill-affected persons to his Crown and Sovereignty, hath or may practise to infuse into the minds and Ears of his good and faithful Subjects,) to set down by way of Declaration, the true causes as well of his assembling as of his Dissolving the late Parliament.

It is not unknown to most of his Majesties loving Subjects, what Discouragements he hath formerly had, by the undutiful and seditious carriage of divers of the lower House in preceding Assemblies of Parliaments, enough to have made him averse to those ancient and accustomed waies of calling his People together; when instead of dutiful expressions towards his Person and Government, they vented their own malice and disaffections to the State, and by their subtil and malignant courses endeavoured nothing more than to bring into contempt and disorder all Government and Magistracy.

Yet his Majesty well considering that but few were guilty of that seditious and undutiful behaviour, and hoping that time and Experience had made his loving Subjects sensible of the distemper the whole Kingdom was like to be put into by the ill-governed actions of those men; and his Majesty being over-desirous to tread in the steps of his most Noble Progenitors, was pleased to issue forth his Writs under the Great Seal of England for a Parliament, to be holden the thirteenth day of April last. At which day his Majesty by the Lord Keeper of his Great Seal, was graciously pleased to let both Houses of Parliament know how desirous he was, That all his People would unite their hearts and affections in the execution of those Counsels that might tend to the Honour of his Majesty, the safety of his Kingdoms, and the good and preservation of all his People. And withal how confident he was that they would not be failing in their Duties and Affections to him and to the publick.

He laid open to them the manifest and apparent mischiefs threatned to this and all his other Kingdoms, by the mutinous and rebellious behaviour of divers of the Scottish Nation, who had by their Examples drawn many of his Subjects there into a course of Disloyalty and Disobedience, not fit for his Majesty in Honour, Safety, or Wisdom to endure.

How (to strengthen themselves in their disloyal Courses) they had address themselves to Foreign States, and treated with them to deliver themselves up to their protection and Defence, as was made apparent under the hands of the Prime Ring-leaders of that Rebellious Faction.

These courses of theirs tending so much to the ruin and overthrow of this Famous Monarchy, united by the descent of the Crown of England upon his Majesty and his Father of blessed memory: His Majesty (in his great wisdom, and in discharge of the Trust reposed in him by God, and by the Fundamental Laws of both Kingdoms, for the Protection and Government of them) resolved to suppress, and thereby to vindicate that Sovereign power intrusted to him.

He had by the last Summers tryal found that his Grace and Goodness was abused, and that contrary to his expectation, and their faithful promises they had (since his being at Berwick, and the pacification there made) pursued their former Rebellious designs: And therefore it was necessary now for his Majesty by power to reduce them, to the just and modest condition of their obedience and subjection, which whenever they should be brought unto, or seeing their own Errors should put themselves into a way of humility and obedience becoming them, his Majesty should need no other Mediator for Clemency and mercy to them, than his own piety and goodness, and the tender affection he hath ever born to that his native Kingdom.

This being of so great weight and consequence to the whole Kingdom, and the charge of an Army fit to master such a business amounting to such a sum as his Majesty hath no means to raise, having not only emptied his own Coffers, but issued between three and four thousand pounds which he borrowed of his Servants upon security out of his own Estate, to provide such things as were necessary to begin such an Action with; his Majesty after the example of his Predecessors, resorted to his People in their representative Body the Parliament, whom he desired (with all the Expressions Anno. 1640. fions of grace and Goodness which could possibly come from him) that taking into serious and dutiful consideration the nature of these bleeding Evils, and how dangerous it was to lose the least minute of time, lest thereby those of Scotland should gain the opportunity to frame their parties with Foreign States: that they would for a while lay aside all other Debates, and pass an Act for the speedy payment of so many Subsidies, as might enable his Majesty to put in readiness for this Summers Expedition those things which were to be prepared before so great an Army could be brought into the Field.

For further Supply necessary for so great an undertaking his Majesty Declared, that he expected it not till there might be a happy conclusion of that Session, and till their just grievances might be first graciously heard and relieved.

Wherein as his Majesty would most willingly have given them the precedence before matter of Supply, if the great necessity of his occasions could have permitted; so he was graciously pleased for their full assurance and satisfaction therein to give them his Royal Word, that without determining the Session (upon granting of the Subsidies) he would give them, before they parted, as much time as the season of the year and the great affairs in hand would permit, for considering all such Petitions as they conceived to be good for the Common-Wealth, and what they would not now finish, they should have full time to perfect towards Winter: His Majesty graciously assuring them, that He would go along with them for their advantage, through all the expressions of a gracious and pious King, to the end there might be such a happy conclusion of that as might be the cause of many more meetings with them in Parliament.

From their first Assembling until the twenty first of April, the House of Commons did nothing that could give his Majesty any content or confidence in their speedy supplying of him: Whereupon he commanded both the Houses to attend him in the Banqueting-House at Whitehall in the afternoon of that twenty first of April, where (by the Lord Keeper) his Majesty put them in mind of the end for which they were Assembled, which was for his Majesties Supplies; That if it were not speedy, it would be of no use unto him, part of the Army then marching at the Charge of above a hundred thousand Pounds a Month; which would all be lost if his Majesty were not presently supplied, so as it was not possible to be longer forborn.

Yet his Majesty then expressd that the Supply he for the present desired, was only to enable him to go on with his Designs for three or four Months, and that he expected no further Supply till all their just Grievances were Relieved.

And because his Majesty had taken notice of some mis-apprehensions about the levying of Ship-Money, his Majesty commanded the Lord Keeper to let them know that he never had any intention to make any Revenue of it, nor had ever made any, but that all the Money collected had been paid to the Treasurer of the Navy and by him expended, besides great sums of Money every year out of his Majesties own purse.

That his Majesty had once resolved this year to have levied none, but that he was forced to alter his Resolution, in regard he was of necessity to send an Army for reducing those of Scotland, during which time it was requisite the Seas should be well guarded.

And besides, his Majesty had knowledge of the great Fleets prepared by all neighbouring Princes this year, and of the insolencies committed by those of Algiers, with the store of Ships they had in readiness.

And therefore though his Majesty for this present year could not forbear it, but expected their concurrence in the levying of it, yet for the future to give all his Subjects assurance, how just and Royal his Intentions were, and that all his Aim was, but to live like their King, able to defend himself and them; to be useful to his Friends, and considerable to his Enemies, to maintain the Sovereignty of the Seas, and so make the Kingdom flourish in Trade and Commerce: he was graciously pleased to let them know, that the ordinary Revenue now taken by the Crown, could not serve the turn: and therefore that it must be by Ship-Money, or some other way, wherein he was willing to leave it to their considerations, what better course to find out, and to settle it how they would (so the thing were done) which so much imported the honour and safety of the Kingdom.

And his Majesty for his part, would most readily and cheerfully grant any thing they could desire, for securing them in the propriety of their Goods and Estates, and in the Liberty of their Persons. His Majesty telling them, it was in their power to make this as happy a Parliament as ever was, and to be the cause of the King's delighting to meet with his People, and his People with him.

That there was no such way to effect this, as by putting Obligations of trust and confidence upon him, which as it was the way of good manners with a King, so it was a surer and safer course for themselves, than any that their own Jealousies and fears could invent; his Majesty being a Prince that deserved their trust, and could not lose the honour of it; and a Prince of such a gracious nature, that disdained his People should overcome him by kindness.

He had made this good to some other Subjects of his; and if they followed his Counsel, they should be sure not to repent it, being the People that were nearest and dearest unto him, and Subjects whom he did and had reason to value more, than the Subjects of any his other Kingdoms.

His Majesty having thus graciously expressed himself unto them, he expected the House of Commons would have the next day taken into consideration the matter of Supply, and laid aside all other Debates, till that was resolved of, according to his desire.

But instead of giving an Answer therein, such as the pressing and urgent occasions required, they fell into Discourses and Debates about their pretended Grievances, and raised up so many and of so several natures, that in a Parliamentary way they could not but spend more time, than his Majesties great and weighty Affairs could possibly afford.

His Majesty foreseeing in his great Wisdom, that they were not in the way to make this a happy Parliament (which he so much desired and hoped) that nothing might be wanting on his part, to bring them into the right way, for his honour, the safety of the Kingdom, and their own good, he resolved to desire the Assistance of the Lords of the Higher House, as persons in Rank and Degree nearest to the Royal Throne, and who having received Honour from him and his Royal Progenitors, he doubted not would for those 1640. those and many other Reasons, be moved in Honour and Dutiful Affection to his Person and Crown, to dispose the House of Commons to express their Duties to his Majesty, in expediting the matter of Supply for which they were called together, and which required so present a Dispatch.

For this purpose, his Majesty in his Royal Person came again to the Lords House on Wednesday the twenty fourth day of April, where himself declared to the Lords the cause of his coming, which was to put them in mind of what had been by the Lord Keeper in his Name delivered to both the Houses the first day of the Parliament, and after at White-hall: how contrary to his expectation, the House of Commons having held consultation of matter of Religion, Property of Goods, and Liberty of Parliament, and voted some things concerning those three Heads, had thereby given them the precedence before the matter of his Supply. That his necessities were such, they could not bear delay; That whatever he had by the Lord Keeper promised, he would perform, if the House of Commons would trust him.

For Religion, that his Heart and Conscience went together with the Religion established in the Church of England: and he would give order to his Arch-Bishops and Bishops, that no Innovation in matter of Religion should creep in.

For the Ship-money, that he never made, nor intended to make any profit to himself of it, but only to preserve the Dominion of the Seas; which was so necessary, that without it the Kingdom could not subsist. But for the way and means by Ship-Money or otherwise, he left it to them.

For property of Goods, and Liberty of Parliament, he ever intended his People should enjoy them; holding no King so great, as he that was King of a Rich and free people; and if they had not property of Goods and Liberty of Persons, they would be neither rich, nor free.

That, if the House of Commons would not first trust him, all his Affairs would be disordered and his business lost. That though they trusted him in part at first, yet before the Parliament ended, he must totally trust them; and in conclusion, they must for Execution of all things, wholly trust him.

Therefore since the matter was no more, than who should be first trusted; and that the trust of him first, was but a trust in part, his Majesty desired the Lords to take into their considerations, his and their own Honour, the Safety and Welfare of this Kingdom, with the great danger it was in, and that they would by their Advice dispose the House of Commons, to give his Supply the precedence before the Grievances.

His Majesty being departed, the Lords took into serious consideration what his Majesty had commended to their care, and forthwith laying aside all other Debates (such was their Lordships Dutiful and Affectionate Carriage, they well remembering what had been formerly declared in his Majesties Name to both Houses, his Majesties gracious promises and expressions then and at this time, with the pressing and urgent occasions which so much imported the Honour of his Majesty, and the good of this Kingdom) their Lordships delivered their Votes in these words;

We are of opinion, that the matter of his Majesties Supply should have precedence and be resolved of, before any other matter whatsoever. And we think fit, there shall be a Conference desired with the House of Commons, to dispose them thereunto. Car. 16.

Accordingly the next day being Saturday the twenty fifth day of April, a Conference was had in the Painted Chamber by a Committee of both Houses, where the Lord Keeper (by the Lords Command) told the House of Commons of his Majesties being the day before in person in the Higher House, how graciously he had expressed himself in matter of Religion, Property of Goods, and Liberty of Parliament; and that he would therein graciously hear and relieve them, and give them what in reason could be desired, with the effect of what else had been graciously delivered unto them by his Majesty, as well touching his constant zeal and affection to the Religion established in the Church of England, as touching the Ship-money.

By all the proceedings herein declared, it is evident to all men, how willing and desirous his Majesty hath been, to make use of the Antient and Noble way of Parliaments used and instituted by his Royal Predecessors, for the preservation and honour of this famous Monarchy: And that on his Majesties part nothing was wanting, that could be expected from a King, whereby this Parliament might have had a happy Conclusion, for the comfort and content of his Majesties Subjects, and for the good and safety of this Kingdom.

On the contrary it is apparent, how those of the House of Commons, (whose sinister and malicious courses enforced his Majesty to dissolve this Parliament) have vitiated and abused that Antient and Noble way of Parliament, perverting the same to their own unworthy Ends, and forgetting the true Use and Institution of Parliaments.

For whereas, these Meetings and Assemblies of his Majesty with the Peers and Commons of this Realm, were in their first Original, and in the practice of all succeeding Ages, ordained and held as pledges and testimonies of affection between the King and his People; the King for his part graciously hearing and redressing such Grievances, as his people in humble and dutiful manner should represent unto him; and the Subjects on their part, (as testimonies of their Duty) supplying his Majesty upon all extraordinary occasions for support of his Honour and Sovereignty, and for preserving the Kingdom in Glory and Safety.

Those ill affected Members of the House of Commons, instead of an humble and dutiful way of presenting their Grievances to his Majesty, have taken upon them to be the Guiders and Directors in all matters that concern his Majesties Government, both Temporal and Ecclesiastical: and (as if Kings were bound to give an account of their Regal Actions, and of their manner of Government to their Subjects assembled in Parliament) they have in a very audacious and insolent way, entered into examination and censuring of the present Government, traduced his Majesties Administration of Justice, rendered as much as in them lay, odious to the rest of his Majesties Subjects, not only the Officers and Ministers of State, but even his Majesties very Government, which hath been so just and gracious, that never did this, or any other Nation enjoy more blessings and 1640. and happiness, than hath been by all his Majesties Subjects enjoyed ever since his Majesties Access to the Crown: nor did this Kingdom ever so flourish in Trade and Commerce, as at this present, or partake of more peace and plenty in all kinds whatsoever.

And whereas, the Ordinary Revenues of the Crown are not sufficing to defray extraordinary charges, it hath ever been the usage in all Parliaments, to aid and assist the Kings of this Realm with free and fitting Supply, towards the maintenance of their Wars, and for making good their Royal undertakings; whereby the Kingdom intrusted to their protection, might be held up in Splendour and Greatness:

These ill affected persons of the House of Commons, have been so far from treading in the steps of their Ancestors by their dutiful expressions in this kind, that contrarily they have introduced a way of bargaining and contracting with the King; as if nothing ought to be given him by them, but what he should buy and purchase of them, either by quitting somewhat of his Royal Prerogative, or by diminishing and lessening his Revenues; which courses of theirs, how repugnant they are to the Duty of Subjects, how unfit for his Majesty in honour to permit and suffer, and what hazard and dishonour they subject this Kingdom to, all men may easily judge, that will but equally and impartially weigh them.

His Majesty hath been by this means reduced to such straits and extremities, that were not his Care of the Publick Good and Safety the greater, these men (as much as in them lies) would quickly bring ruin and confusion to the State, and render contemptible this glorious Monarchy.

But this frowardness and undutiful behaviour of theirs, cannot lessen his Majesties Care of preserving the Kingdoms entrusted to his Protection and Government, nor his gracious and tender affection to his people, for whose good and comfort his Majesty, by God's gracious assistance, will so provide, that all his loving Subjects may still enjoy the happiness of living under the blessed shade and protection of his Royal Scepter.

In the mean time, To the end all his Majesties loving Subjects may know, how graciously his Majesty is inclined to hear and redress all the just Grievances of his people as well out of Parliament as in Parliament, his Majesty doth hereby further declare his Royal Will and Pleasure, that all his loving Subjects who have any just cause to present, or complain of any Grievances or Oppressions, may freely address themselves by their humble Petitions to his Sacred Majesty, who will graciously hear their Complaints, and give such fitting Redress therein; that all his people shall have just cause to acknowledge his Grace and goodness towards them; and to be fully satisfied, that no Persons or Assemblies can more prevail with his Majesty, than the Piety and Justice of his own Royal Nature, and the tender affection he doth and shall ever bear to all his people and loving subjects.

The day following the dissolving of the Parliament, the Lord Brooks his Study and Pockets were searched for Papers, for that it was notoriously known that he held Correspondence with the Scots, the King's declared Enemies, and Sir Henry Bellasis, and Sir John Horham, Knights, were commanded before the Council; and refusing to answer to questions about matters done in time of Parliament, were Committed to the Fleet; Mr. Crew also, Chairman of the Committee for Religion, was Committed likewise close Prisoner to the Tower, for refusing according to the custom of former times, to deliver the Petitions and Complaints exhibited about Religion to the Committee for Religion, to the Council Board requiring the same.

Letters were directed much about this time to the respective Lords Lieutenants of Counties, about the Souldiers that were to go both by Sea and Land for Newcastle, the Lists thereof (though perhaps not so exact as may be desired) hereafter follow:

Some short time after the Dissolution of the Parliament, his Majesty declared in Council, that he was resolved to take into his own consideration the matters complained of in Parliament as Grievances, and to redress them; but more especially those concerning Religion; hereupon he commanded a Memorial of his pious and gracious resolution herein to be entered in the Register of the Acts of the Council; that the Convocation of the Clergy for the quiet of the Church, should sit still, to redress any thing amiss in Religion, which they did accordingly by Canons made in opposition to Popery, Presbytery, and Socinianism, which yet were call'd in Question in the ensuing Parliament; for that some argued both those Assemblies were to end together, and others the contrary, for that the Writ for calling the Convocation together was to continue durante beneplacito Regis; and the Sages of the Law being consulted, thus subscribed, That the Convocation called by the King's Writ was not to dissolve, but by the King's Writ, notwithstanding the dissolution of the Parliament, Finch, Manchester, Littleton, Banks, Heath, Sheffield. Of the Tumults of the Rabble stir'd up by the Presbyterians, which hereupon follow'd Mr. Saunderson gives us the ensuing account, That the old Convocation armed with a new Commission, sat still, but not well armed against Lilburn's Libels, or the Riot of Rakehels upon Lambeth House; Who being a mixture of the Rabble, Prentices, and other inferiour Artificers, having encouragement from attempts of this nature in the neighbour Kingdom of Scotland put in practice, and yet the Actors if not applauded yet indemnified, to the great scandal and reproach of all Authority and Government, had Posted up a Paper upon the Old Exchange, exhorting one another to arise and sack the Archbishop's House at Lambeth on the Munday following, which accordingly they did, and were repulsed; and one of the Ringleaders, a Cobler, was afterward Executed thereupon for terror and example to the rest. And the King was fain to set a Guard about Westminster Abbey, during their whole time of sitting, In much distress besides, well observed, and in danger of the King's displeasure if they rose, of the peoples fury if they sat; to be beaten up by Tumults while at work, and beaven down by the next Parliament for doing the work, and obnoxious to the lash of evil tongues for all their good intents, and to their pens too, upon the main score, not so much of the Bishops doing not well, as of being Bishops, to do any thing; such was the fate of the Prelates, now, to be under censure of the Presbyters, with such prejudice to either, as the contest of endeavouring to satisfy the World, made the wound upon either side more wide, especially if you take in for good Arguments the common fame of every Libeller. As for the main, It must not be supposed that the question began but now to be maintained, for the Divine Right on which Bishops were founded, many writ for their defence in Queen Elizabeths time. Dr. Bancroft then Bishop of London confirmed it in the Conference at Hampton-Court in presence of the Adversary Dr. Reynolds their chief dependant, who neither contradicted nor confuted him; So did Bishop Laud in the High Commission, which might give occasion of matter to some sufficient opposers, but found none, unless we reckon loose Pamphlets. Indeed the Sme-tymnians revived the controversy, and was soon maintained by Dr. Hall then Bishop of Exeter; by Churchman in his History of Episcopacy; by Dr. Taylor his Episcopacy of Divine Right; by Dr. Hammond in English and Latin. But lest these Divines should be thought partial, see the whole subject discussed by the Layery; Sir Thomas Aston Knight and Baronet, the Aric-Mastix of John Theyre Gentleman, the Lord Falkland in his Tract against Henderson saies somewhat incomparable Mr. Selden against the Argument of a young Member of Parliament, whose Argument was, 1. That Bishops are Jure Divino is of question. 2. That Archbishops are not Jure Divino, is out of question. 3. That Ministers are Jure Divino there is no question. Now if Bishops which are questioned whether Jure Divino, and Archbishops which out of question are not Jure Divino, shall suspend Ministers that are Jure Divino, I leave it to you Mr. Speaker.

Which Mr. Selden thus retorted on him: That the Convocation is Jure Divino, is a question. 2. That Parliaments are not Jure Divino, is out of question. 3. That Religion is Jure Divino there is no question: Now Mr. Speaker, That the Convocation which is questioned whether Jure Divino, and Parliaments which out of question are not Jure Divino, shall meddle with Religion which questionless is Jure Divino, I leave to you Mr. Speaker?

And the Gentleman replying, That Archbishops are no Bishops, Mr. Selden rejoins, That's no otherwise true, than that Judges are no Lawyers, and Aldermen no Citizens.

There had indeed been wrote here in England, during the interval of Parliaments, some scurrilous as well as scandalous and loose Libels against Episcopacy, and the Ceremonies of the Church, and against particular Prelats and Governours thereof, the most whereof were either by public Authority condemned, or the Authors punish'd, amongst such were Prynne, Burton, and Bastwicke, as before we have mentioned in the beginning of the Year 1637. These were sufficiently answered, and their Cavils manifested to proceed from either their weaknesses or their wilfulness, or from both, and their scandals they raised and endeavoured to throw upon the Government and Governours of the Church sufficiently wiped off by that worthy Prelate the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury's defence of himself and the Church of England, in his Speech in the Star-Chamber 16th of June, 1637. when the afore-said Libellers were most condignly censured, and their Arguments fully by him answered.

A Speech

Anno 1640.

A Speech delivered in the Star-Chamber, on Wednesday the 16. of June, 1637. at the Censure of John Bastwick, Henry Burton, and William Prinn; concerning pretended Innovations in the Church. By the most Reverend Father in God, William, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury his Grace.

My Lords,

I Shall not need to speak of the infamous course of Libelling in any kind :

Nor of the punishment of it, which in some cases was Capital by the Imperial Laws. As appears Cod. l. 9. T. 36.

Nor how patiently some great men, very great men indeed, have born Animo civili (that's Suetonius his word) laceratam existimationem, the tearing and rending of their Credit and Reputation, with a gentle, nay, a generous mind.

But of all Libels, they are most odious which pretend Religion : As if that of all things did desire to be defended by a Mouth that is like an open Sepulchre, or by a Pen that is made of a sick and a loathsome Quill.

There were times when Persecutions were great in the Church, even to exceed Barbarity itself: Did any Martyr or Confessor, in those times, Libel the Governours? Surely no, not one of them to my best remembrance: Yet these complain of Persecution without all shew of cause; and in the mean time Libel and Rail without all measure. So little of kin are they to those which suffer for Christ, or the least part of Christian Religion.

My Lords, it is not every mans spirit to hold up against the venom which Libellers spit. For St. Ambrose, who was a stout and a worthy Prelate, tells us, not that himself, but that a far greater man than he, that's King David, had found out (so it seems in his judgment 'twas no matter of ordinary ability) Grande inventum, a great and mighty invention, how to swallow and put off those bitter Contumelies of the Tongue: And those of the Pen are no whit less, and spread farther. And it was a great one indeed, and well becomed the greatness of David. But I think it will be far better for me to look upward, and practise it, than to look downward, and discourse upon it.

In the meantime I shall remember what an Antient under the name of St. Hierom tells me, Indignum est & preposterum, 'Tis unworthy in itself, and preposterous in demeanour for a man to be ashamed for doing good, because other men glory in speaking ill.

And I can say it clearly and truly, as in the presence of God, I have done nothing, as a Prelate, to the uttermost of what I am conscious, but with a single heart, and with a sincere intention for the good Government and Honour of the Church, and the maintenance of the Orthodox Truth and Religion of Christ, Professed, Established, and Maintained in this Church of England.

For my care of this Church, the reducing of it into Order, the upholding of the External Worship of God in it, and the setting of it to the Rules of its first Reformation, are the causes (and the sole causes, whatever are pretended) of all this malicious storm, which hath loured so black upon me and some of my Brethren. And in the mean time, they which are the only, or the chief Innovators of the Christian World, having nothing to say, accuse us of Innovation; they themselves and their Complices in the mean time being the greatest Innovators that the Christian World hath almost ever known. I deny not but others have spread more dangerous Errours in the Church of Christ; but no men, in any Age of it, have been more guilty of Innovation than they, while themselves cry out against it: Quis tulit Gracchos?

And I said well, Quis tulit Gracchos? For 'tis most apparent to any man that will not wink, that the intention of these men, and their Abettors, was and is to raise a Sedition, being as great Incendiaries in the State (where they get power) as they have ever been in the Church? Novatian himself hardly greater.

Our main Crime is (would they all speak out, Burton as some of them do) that we are Bishops; were we not so, some of us might be as passable as other men.

And a great trouble 'tis to them, that we maintain that our calling of Bishops is Jure Divino, by Divine Right: Of this I have said enough, and in this place, in Lighton's Case, nor will I repeat. Only this I will say, and abide by it, that the Calling of Bishops is Jure Divino, by Divine Right, though not all Adjuncts to their Calling. And this I say in as direct opposition to the Church of Rome, as to the Puritan humour.

And I say farther, that from the Apostles times, in all Ages, in all places the Church of Christ was governed by Bishops: And Lay-Elders never heard of, till Calvin's new-fangled device at Geneva.

Now this is made by these men, as if it were Contra Regem, against the King, in right or in power.

But that is a meer ignorant shift; for our being Bishops, Jure Divino, by Divine Right, takes nothing from the King's Right or power over us. For though our Office be from God and Christ immediately, yet may we not exercise that power, either of Order or Jurisdiction, but as God hath appointed us, that is, not in his Majesties, or any Christian Kings Kingdoms, but by and under the power of the King given us so to do.

And were this a good Argument against us, as Bishops, it must needs be good against Priests and Ministers too; for themselves grant that their Calling is Jure Divino, by Divine Right; and yet I hope they will not say, that to be Priests and Ministers is against the King, or any His Royal Prerogatives.

Next, suppose our Callings, as Bishops, could not be made good Jure Divino, by Divine Right; yet Jure Ecclesiastico, by Ecclesiastical Right it cannot be denied. And here in England the Bishops are confirmed, both in their power and means, by Act of Parliament. So that here we stand in as good case, as the present Laws of the Realm can make us. And so we must stand, till the Laws shall be repealed by the same power that made them.

Now

Car. 16.

Anno 1640. Now then, suppose we had no other string to hold by (I say suppose this, but I grant it not) yet no man can Libel against our Calling (as these men do) be it in Pulpit, Print, or otherwise, but he Libels against the King and the State, by whose Laws we are established. Therefore, all these Libels, so far forth as they are against our Calling, are against the King and the Law, and can have no other purpose, then to stir up Sedition among the People.

If these men had any other intention, or if they had any Christian or Charitable desire, to Reform any thing amiss; why did they not modestly Petition his Majesty about it, that in his Princely wisdom he might set all things right, in a just and Orderly manner? But this was neither their intention, nor way. For one clamours out of his Pulpit, and all of them from the Press, and in a most virulent and Unchristian manner, set themselves to make a heat among the People; and so by Mutiny, to effect that, which by Law they cannot; And, by most false and unjust Calumnies, to defame both our Callings and Persons. But for my part, as I pity their rage, so I heartily pray God to forgive their malice.

You may see it in the Example of St. Paul himself, whose very Zeal in the darkness of his understanding, which he then had, made him persecute Christ and his Church, Acts 22. 3; 4. And he was very dangerous Company then; for he breathed out threatnings against the Disciples, Acts 9. 1. So true is that of Saint Greg. Naz. Orat. 21. Zelus Iracundiam acuit, All Zeal puts an edge to anger it self. And that must needs be dangerous in the dark. Pag. 5.

For the main scope of these Libels, is to kindle a Jealousie in mens minds, that there are some great Plots in hand, dangerous Plots (so says Mr. Burton expressly) to change the Orthodox Religion Established in England; and to bring in, I know not what, Romish Superstition in the room of it. As if the external decent Worship of God could not be upheld in this Kingdom, without bringing in of Popery.

Now by this Art of theirs, give me leave to tell you, That the King is most desperately abused and wounded in the minds of his People; and the Prelates shamefully.

The King most desperately: For there is not a more cunning trick in the world, to withdraw he Peoples hearts from their Sovereign, than to perswade them that he is changing true Religion, and about to bring in gross Superstition upon them.

And the Prelates shamefully; for they are charged to seduce, and lay the Plot, and be the Instruments.

For his Majesty first. This I know, and upon this occasion take it my duty to speak: There is no Prince in Christendom more sincere in his Religion, nor more constant to it, than the King. And he gave such a Testimony of this at his being in Spain, as I much doubt, whether the best of that Faction durst have done half so much, as his Majesty did in the face of that Kingdom. And this you, my Lord, the Earl of Holland, and other Persons of Honour, were Eye and Ear-Witnesses of, having the happiness to attend Him there. Car. 16.

And at this day, as his Majesty (by God's great blessing both on him and us) knows more, so is he more settled and more confirmed, both in the Truth of the Religion here Established, and in Resolution to maintain it.

And for the Prelates; I assure my self they cannot be so base, as to live Prelates in the Church of England, and labour to bring in the Superstitions of the Church of Rome, upon themselves and it. And if any should be so foul, I do not only leave him to God's Judgment, but (if these Libellers, or any other, can discover that his base and irreligious falshood) to shame also, and severe punishment from the State: And in any just way, no mans hand shall be more, or sooner against him, than mine shall be.

And for my self, to pass by all the scandalous reproaches, which they have most injuriously cast upon me, I shall say this only,

First, I know of no Plot, nor purpose of altering the Religion established.

Secondly, I have ever been far from attempting any thing that may truly be said to tend that way in the least degree, and to these two I here offer my Oath.

Thirdly, If the King had a mind to change Religion, (which I know he hath not, and God forbid he should ever have) he must seek for other Instruments. For as basely as these men conceive of me, yet I thank God, I know my duty well both to God and the King: And I know that all the duty I owe to the King, is under God. And my great happiness it is (though not mine alone, but your Lordships and all his Subjects with me) that we live under a Gracious and a Religious King, that will ever give us leave to serve God first, and him next. But were the days otherwise, I thank Christ for it, I yet knew not how to serve any man against the Truth of God, and I hope I shall never learn it.

But to return to the business: What is their Art to make the world believe a change of Religion is endeavoured? What? Why, forsooth, they say, there are great Innovations brought in by the Prelates, and such as tend to the advancement of Popery.

Now that the vanity and falshood of this may appear, I shall humbly desire your Lordships to give me leave to recite briefly all the Innovations charged upon us, be they of less or greater moment, and as briefly to answer them. And then you shall clearly see, whether any cause hath been given of these unfavoury Libels; and withal, whether there be any shew of cause to fear a change of Religion. And I will take these great pretended Innovations in order, as I meet with them.

First, I begin with the News from Ipswich.

Where the first Innovation is, That the last years Pag. 2. Fast was enjoyed to be without Sermons in London, the Suburbs, and other infected Places, contrary to the Orders for other Fasts in former times: Whereas Sermons are the only means to humble men, &c.

To this I say First, That an after-age may, without offence, learn to avoid any visible inconvenience observed in the former. And there was visible inconvenience observed in mens former flocking to Sermons in infected places.

Secondly,

Anno 1640. Secondly, This was no particular Act of the Prelates; but the business was debated at the Council Table, being a matter of State, as well as of Religion. And it was concluded for no Sermons in those infected places, upon this Reason; That infected Persons or Families, known in their own Parishes, might not take occasion upon those by-days to run to other Churches, where they were not known, as many use to do, to hear some humorous men preach: For on the Sundays, when they better kept their own Churches, the danger is not so great altogether.

Nor thirdly, is that true, that Sermons are the only means to humble men. For though the Preaching of God's Word, where it is performed according to his Ordinance, be a great means of many good effects in the Souls of men; yet no Sermons are the only means to humble men. And some of their Sermons are fitter a great deal for other operations; namely, to stir up Sedition, as you may see by Mr. Burton's: For this his printed Libel was a Sermon first, and a Libel too. And 'tis the best part of a Fast to abstain from such Sermons.

pag. 3. 2. The second Innovation is, That Wednesday was appointed for the Fast-day, and that this was done with this intention, by the example of this Fast without Preaching, to suppress all the Wednesday Lectures in London.

To this I answer First, that the appointing of Wednesday for the Fast-day was no Innovation. For it was the day in the last Fast before this: And I my self remember it so, above forty years since, more than once.

Secondly, If there had been any Innovation in it, the Prelates named not the day; my Lord Keeper, I must appeal to your Lordship: The day was first named by your Lordship, as the usual and fittest day. And yet I dare say, and swear too, that your Lordship had no aim to bring in Popery; nor to suppress all, or any the Wednesday Lectures in London. Besides, these men live to see the Fast ended, and no one Wednesday Lecture suppressed.

pag. 3. 3. The third Innovation is, That the Prayer for seasonable weather was purged out of this last Fast-Book, which was, say they, one cause of Shipwrecks and Tempestuous weather.

To this I say, First in the General; This Fast-Book, and all that have formerly been made, have been both made, and published by the command of the King, in whose sole power it is to call a Fast. And the Archbishop and Bishops to whom the ordering of the Book is committed, have power under the King, to put in, or leave out, whatsoever they think fit for the present occasion; as their Predecessors have ever done before them. Provided that nothing be in contrary to the Doctrine or Discipline of the Church of England,

And this may serve in the General for all Alterations, in that or any other Fast-Book or Books of Devotion upon any particular occasions, which may and ought to vary with several times, and we may, and do, and will justify, under His Majesties Power, all such Alterations made therein.

Secondly, For the particular. When this last Book was set out, the weather was very seasonable. And it is not the Custom of the Church, nor fit in itself to pray for seasonable weather when we have it, but when we want it. When the former Book was set out, the weather was extremely ill, and the Harvest in danger; Now the Harvest was in, and the weather good. Car. 16.

Thirdly, 'Tis most inconsequent to say, that the leaving that Prayer out of the Book of Devotions, caused the Shipwrecks and the Tempests, which followed. And as bold they are with God Almighty, in saying it was the cause: For sure I am, God never told them that was the cause. And if God never revealed it, they cannot come to know it; yet had the Bishops been Prophets, and foreseen these Accidents, they would certainly have prayed against them.

Fourthly, Had any Minister found it necessary to use this Prayer at any one time during the Fast, he might with ease, and without danger, have supplied that want, by using that Prayer to the same purpose which is in the ordinary Liturgy.

Fifthly, I humbly desire your Lordships to weigh well the Consequence of this great and dangerous Innovation. The Prayer for fair weather was left out of the Book for the Fast; therefore the Prelates intend to bring in Popery. An excellent Consequence, were there any shew of Reason in it.

4. The Fourth Innovation is, That there is one pag. 3. very useful Collect left out, and a Clause omitted in another.

To this I answer First, as before; It was lawful for us to alter what we thought fit.

And Secondly, Since that Collect made mention of Preaching, and the Act of State forbade Sermons on the Fast-days in infected places; we thought it fit, in pursuance of that Order, to leave out that Collect.

And Thirdly, for the branch in the other, which is the first Collect, though God did deliver our Forefathers out of Romish Superstition, yet (God be blessed for it) we are never in. And therefore that Clause being unfittingly expressed, we thought fit to pass it over.

5. The Fifth Innovation is, That in the sixth pag. 3. Order for the Fast, there is a passage left out concerning the abuse of Fasting in relation to merit.

To this I answer, That he to whom the ordering of that Book to the Press was committed, did therefore leave it out; because in this Age and Kingdom there is little opinion of meriting by Fasting.

Nay, on the contrary, the contempt and scorn of all fasting (save what humorous men call for of themselves) is so rank, that it would grieve any Christian man to see the necessary Orders of the Church concerning Fasting, both in Lent, and at other set times, so vilified as they are.

6. The Sixth Innovation is, That the Lady Elizabeth and her Princely Children are dashed (that is their Phrase) out of the new Collect, whereas they were in the Collect of the former Book. pag. 3.

For this First, The Author of the News knows full well that they are left out of the Collect in the latter Editions of the Common-Prayer Book, as well as in the Book for the Fast. And this was done according to the Course of the Church, which ordinarily names none in the Prayer, but the Right Line descending. Yet this was not done till the King himself commanded it; as I have to shew under his Majestie's hand.

Secondly,

Secondly, I beseech your Lordships to consider, what must be the Consequence here: The Queen of Bohemia and her Children are left out of the Collect, therefore the Prelates intend to bring in Popery; For that (you know) they say is the end of all these Innovations. Now, if this be the end and the Consequence, truly the Libellers have done very dutifully to the King, to poison his People with this conceit; That the Lady Elizabeth, and her Children, would keep Popery out of this Kingdom, but the King and his Children will not. And many as good Offices as these have they done the King quite through these Libels, and quite through his Kingdoms. For my part, I honour the Queen of Bohemia, and her Line, as much as any man whatsoever, and shall be as ready to serve them, but I know not how to depart from my Allegiance, as I doubt these men have done.

Pag. 3.

7. The Seventh Innovation is, That these words [Who art the Father of thine Elect and of their Seed] are changed in the Preface of that Collect, which is for the Prince and the King's Children. And, with a most spiteful inference, That this was done by the Prelates to exclude the King's Children out of the number of God's Elect. And they call it an intolerable impiety and horrid Treason.

To this I answer, First, That this Alteration was made in my Predecessor's time, before I had any Authority to meddle with these things, further then I was called upon by him.

Secondly, This is not therefore to lay any aspersion upon my Predecessor; for he did in that but his duty: For his Majesty acknowledges, it was done by his special direction, as having then no Children to pray for.

And thirdly, This Collect could not be very old, for it had no being in the Common-Prayer Book all Queen Elizabeth's time, she having no Issue.

The truth is, it was made at the coming in of King James; and must of necessity be changed over and over again pro ratione Temporum, as Times and Persons vary. And this is the intolerable Impiety, and horrid Treason they charge upon Us.

In this Method the Innovations are set down in the News from Ipswich. But then in Mr. Burton's News from Friday-street, (called his Apology) they are in another Order, and more are added. Therefore with your Lordships leave I will not repeat any of these, but go on to the rest, which Mr. Burton adds.

Burton's
Apology
Page 2.

8. The Eighth Innovation is, That in the Epistle the Sunday before Easter, we have put out In, and made it, At the Name of Jesus every Knee shall bow; which alteration, he saith, is directly against the Act of Parliament.

Here give me leave to tell you it is At the Name of Jesus, in the late learned Translation made in King James his time. About which many learned Men of best note in the Kingdom were employed, besides some Prelates.

But to this I answer, First, It is true, the Common-Prayer Book was confirmed by Act of Parliament, and so all things contained in it, at the passing of that Act. But I hope, if any thing were false printed then, the Parliament did not intend to pass those slips for current.

Secondly, I am not of opinion, that if one word be put in for another, so they bear both the same sense, that there is any great matter done against the Act of Parliament.

Thirdly, This can make no Innovation. For In the Name, and At the Name of Jesus, can make no Essential difference here. And Mr. Prynne (whose Darling business it hath long been to cry down the honour due to the Son of God, at the mentioning of his saving Name Jesus) knows the Grammar Rule well, In a place, or At a place, &c.

Fourthly, If there were any Error in the change of In into At; I do here solemnly protest to you, I know not how it came: For Authority from the Prelates, the Printers had none; and such a word is easily changed in such a negligent Press as we have in England. Or if any altered it purposely, for ought I know, they did it to gratify the Preciser sort. For therein they followed the Geneva Translation, 1557. where the words are, At the Name of Jesus. And that is Ninety four years ago; and therefore no Innovation made by us.

Fifthly, This I find in the Queens Injunctions, without either word, In or At. Whosoever the Name of Jesus shall be in any Lesson, Sermon, or otherwise pronounced in the Church (it is enjoined) that due reverence be made of all persons, Young and Old, with lowliness of Course, and uncovering of the heads of the Menkind, as therunto doth necessarily belong, and heretofore hath been accustomed. So here is necessity laid upon it, and custom for it, and both expressed by Authority in the very beginning of the Reformation; and is therefore no Innovation now.

9. The Ninth Innovation is, That no places are changed in the Prayers set forth for the Fifth of November: And ordered to be read (they say) by All of Parliament. The first place is changed thus, from, Root out that Babylonish and Antichristian Sect, which say of Jerusalem, &c. Into this form of words, Root out that Babylonish and Antichristian Sect (of them) which say, &c. The second place went thus in the old; Cut of these workers of Iniquity, whose Religion is Rebellion. But in the Book printed 1635. it is thus altered: Cut off those workers of Iniquity, who turn Religion into Rebellion, &c.

To this I say first, It is a notorious untruth, that this Book was ordered to be read by Act of Parliament. The Act of Parliament indeed is printed before it; and therein is a Command for Prayers and Thanksgivings every Fifth of November; but not one word or syllable for the Form of Prayer: That is left to the Church, therefore here is no Innovation against that Act of Parliament.

Secondly, The Alteration first mentioned, that is, That Sect, or That Sect of them: is of so small consequence, as it is not worth the speaking of. Besides, if there be any thing of moment in it, it is answered in the next.

Thirdly, Both for that and the second place, which seems of more moment; and so for the rest, not only in that Book, but that other also for his Majesties Coronation; His Majesty expressly commanded me to make the Alterations, and see them printed. And here are both the Books with his Majesties Warrant to each of them. So that herein I conceive I did not offend, unless it were that I gave not these men notice of it, or asked them leave to obey the King.

Against this there can be but two Objections, should Malice it self go to work. The one is, that I moved his Majesty to command the Change. And the other, that now, when I saw my self challenged for for it, I procured his Majesties Hand for my security.

 Anno 1640. To these I answer clearly; First, That I did not move the King, directly, or indirectly, to make this change.

And Secondly, That I had his Majesties hand to the Book, not now, but then, and before ever I caused them to be printed, as now they are. And that both these are true, I here again freely offer my self to my Oath.

And yet Fourthly, that you may see his gracious Majesty used not his power only in commanding this change, but his wisdom also; I shall adventure to give you my Reasons, such as they are, why this Alteration was most fit, if not necessary.

My first Reason is, In the Litany in Hen. VIII. his time †: And also under Edward VI. || there was this Clause: From the Tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable enormities, from all false Doctrine, &c. Good Lord, deliver us. But in the Litany in Queen Elizabeths time this Clause about the Pope was left out, and it seems of purpose, for avoiding of Scandal: And yet the Prelates for that not accounted Innovators, or Introducers of Popery. Now it is a far greater scandal to call their Religion Rebellion, then it is to call their chief Bishop Tyrant.

And this Reason is drawn from Scandal, which must ever be avoided as much as it may.

My second Reason is, That the Learned make but three Religions to have been of old in the World, Paganism, Judaism, and Christianity. And now they have added a fourth, which is Turcism, and is an absurd mixture of the other three. Now if this ground of theirs be true (as it is generally received) perhaps it will be of dangerous consequence sadly to avow, that the Popish Religion is Rebellion. That some opinions of theirs teach Rebellion, that is apparently true, the other would be thought on, to say no more. And this Reason well weighed, is taken from the very foundations of Religion itself.

My third Reason is, Because if you make their Religion to be Rebellion, then you make their Religion and Rebellion to be all one. And that is against the ground both of State and the Law. For when divers Romish Priests and Jesuits have deservedly suffered death for Treason, is it not the constant and just profession of the State, that they never put any man to death for Religion, but for Rebellion and Treason only? Doth not the State truly affirm, that there was never any Law made against the life of a Papist, quaerens a Papist only? And is not all this stark false, if their very Religion be Rebellion? For if their Religion be Rebellion, it is not only false, but impossible, that the same man in the same Act should suffer for his Rebellion, and not for his Religion.

And this King James of ever blessed memory understood passing well, when (in his premonition to all Christian Monarchs) he saith, I do constantly maintain that no Papist, either in my time, or in the time of the late Queen, ever died for his Conscience. Therefore he did not think, their very Religion was Rebellion. Though this Clause passed through Inadvertency in his time. And this Reason is grounded both upon the Practice, and the Justice of the Law.

Which of these Reasons, or whether any other better, were in his Majesties thoughts, when he commanded the alteration of this Clause, I know not. But I took it my duty to lay it before you, that the King had not only Power, but Reason to command it.

10. The Tenth Innovation is, That the Prayer for the Navy is left out of the late Book for the Fast. Car. 16. Pag. 3.

To this I say, There is great Reason it should. For the King had no declared Enemy then; nor (God be thanked) hath he now. Nor had he then any Navy at Sea. For almost all the Ships were come in, before the Fast-Book was set out.

But howsoever, an excellent Consequence it is, if you mark it; The Prayer for the Navy was left out of the Book for the Fast, therefore by that, and such like Innovations the Prelates intend to bring in Popery. Indeed, if that were a piece of the Prelates Plots to bring in Popery from beyond Sea, then they were mightily overseen that they left out the Prayer for the Navy. But else what Reason or Consequence is in it, I know not, unless perhaps Mr. Burton intended to befriend Dr. Baskwick, and in the Navy bring hither the Whore of Babylon to be ready for his Christening, as he most profanely scoffs.

Well; I pray God the time come not upon this Kingdom, in which it will be found, that no one thing hath advanced or ushered in Popery so fast, as the gross Absurdities even in the Worship of God, which these Men, and their like, maintain both in Opinion and Practice.

11. The Eleventh Innovation is, The reading of the Second Service at the Communion Table, or the Altar. Pag. 105.

To this; First, I can truly say, that since my own memory, this was in use in very many places, as being most proper (for those Prayers are then read which both precede and follow the Communion,) and by little and little this Ancient Custom was altered, and in those places first, where the Emissaries of this Faction came to preach. And now if any in Authority offer to reduce it; this ancient course of the Church is by and by called an Innovation.

Secondly, With this the Rubricks of the Common-Prayer Book agree: For the first Rubrick after the Communion tells us, that upon Holy-days, though there be no Communion, yet all else that is appointed at the Communion shall be read. Shall be read? That is true, but where? Why, the last Rubrick before the Communion tells us, that the Priest, standing at the North side of the Holy Table, shall say the Lord's Prayer, with that which follows. So that not only the Communion, but the Prayers which accompany the Communion (which are commonly called the Second Service) are to be read at the Communion Table. Therefore if this be an Innovation, it is made by the Rubrick, not the Prelates; And Mr. Burton's Scoff, that this Second Service must be served in for dainties †, favours too much of Belly and Profanation.

12. One thing sticks much in their Stomachs, and they call it an Innovation* too. And that is, bowing, or doing Reverence at our first coming into the Church, or at our nearer approaches to the Holy Table, or the Altar, (call it whether you will) In which they will needs have it, that we worship the Holy Table, or God knows what. † Pag. 104. [Then the second Service as dainties, must be said there.] * Pag. 105.

To this I answer: First, That God forbid we should worship any thing but God himself.

Secondly, That if to worship God when we enter into his House, or approach his Altar, be an Innovation, it is a very old one.

Anno 1640. For Moses did reverence at the very door of the Tabernacle, Num. 20. 6. Hezekiah, and all that were present with him, when they had made an end of offering, bowed and worshipped, (2 Chron. 29. 29.) David calls the People to it with a Venite, O come let us worship and fall down, and kneel before the Lord our Maker, (Psal. 95. 6.) And in all these places (I pray mark it) it is bodily Worship.

Nor can they say, that this was Judaical Worship, and now not to be imitated. For long before Judaism began, Bethel, the House of God, was a place of Reverence, Gen. 28. 17, &c. Therefore certainly, Of, and To God.

And after Judaical Worship ended, Venite, Adoremus, as far upwards as there is any tract of a Liturgy, was the Introitus of the Priest all the Latin Church over.

And in the daily Prayers of the Church of England; this was retained at the Reformation; and that Psalms, in which is Venite, Adoremus; is commanded to begin the Morning Service every day, and for ought I know, the Priest may as well leave out the Venite, as the Adoremus; the calling the People to their duty, as the duty itself, when they are come.

Therefore even according to the Service Book of the Church of England, the Priest and the People both are called upon, for external and bodily Reverence and Worship of God in his Church. Therefore they which do it, do not Innovate. And yet the Government is so moderate (God grant it be not too loose therewith) that no man is constrained, no man questioned, only religiously called upon, Venite, Adoremus, Come, let us worship.

For my own part, I take my self bound to worship with Body, as well as in Soul, when ever I come where God is worshipped. And were this Kingdom such as would allow no Holy Table, standing in its proper place (and such places some there are) yet I would worship God when I came into his House. And were the times such, as should beat down Churches, and all the curious carved work thereof with Axes, and Hammers, as in Psalms 74. 6. (and such times have been) yet would I worship in what place soever I came to pray, though there were not so much as a Stone laid for Bethel. But this is the misery; it is Superstition now adays for any man to come with more Reverence into a Church, than a Tinker and his Bitch come into an Ale-house; the Comparison is too homely, but my just Indignation at the Profaneness of the times, makes me speak it.

And you my Honourable Lords of the Garter, in your great Solemnities, you do your Reverence, and to Almighty God, I doubt not, but yet it is versus Altare, towards his Altar, as the greatest place of God's Residence upon Earth. (I say the greatest, yea, greater than the Pulpit. For there it is, Hoc est Corpus meum, This is my Body. But in the Pulpit, it is, at most, but, Hoc est Verbum meum, This is my Word. And a greater Reverence (no doubt) is due to the Body, than to the Word of our Lord. And so, in Relation, answerably to the Throne, where his Body is usually present; than to the Seat, whence his Word useth to be Proclaimed. And God hold it there, at his Word; for, as too many men use the matter, It is Hoc est Verbum Diaboli, This is the word of the Devil, in too many places, Witness Sedition, and the like to it.) And this Reverence ye do, when ye enter the Chappel, and when you approach nearer to offer. And this is no Innovation, for you are bound to it by your Order, and that is now New.

And Idolatry it is not, to worship God towards his Holy Table; For if it had been Idolatry, I presume Queen Elizabeth, and King James would not have practised it, no not in those Solemnities. And being not Idolatry, but true Divine Worship, You will, I hope, give a poor Priest leave to Worship God, as your selves do: For if it be God's Worship, I ought to do it as well as you: And if it be Idolatry, you ought not to do it more than I.

I say again, I hope a poor Priest may worship God with as lowly Reverence as you do, since you are bound by your Order, and by your Oath, according to a Constitution of Henry the Fifth, (as appears*) to give due Honour and Reverence, Domino Deo, & Altari ejus, in modum virorum Ecclesiasticorum; That is, to the Lord your God, and to his Altar (for there is a Reverence due to that too, though such as comes far short of Divine Worship) and this in the manner, as Ecclesiastical Persons both Worship and do Reverence.

The Story which led in this Decree is this, King Henry the Fifth, that Noble and Victorious Prince, returning gloriously out of France, sate at this Solemnity; and finding the Knights of the Order scarce bow to God, or but slightly, and then bow towards Him and his Seat, startled at it (being a Prince then grown as Religious, as he was before victorious) and after asking the Reason; for till then the Knights of the Order never bowed toward the King or his Seat; the Duke of Bedford answered, It was settled by a Chapter Act three years before. Hereupon that Great King replied, No, I'll none of this, till you the Knights do it Satis bene, well enough, and with due performance to Almighty God. And hereupon the forenamed Act proceeded, that they should do this duty to Almighty God, not slightly, but Ad modum virorum Ecclesiasticorum, as low, as well, as decently, as Clergy-men use to do it.

Now if you will turn this off, and say, it was the Superstition of that Age so to do; Bishop Jewel will come in to help me there. For where Harding names divers Ceremonies, and particularly bowing themselves and adoring at the Sacrament, I say, adoring at the Sacrament, not adoring the Sacrament; there Bishop Jewel (that learned, painful, and reverend Prelate) approves all both the kneeling and the bowing, and the standing up at the Gospel (which as ancient as it is in the Church, and a common Custom, is yet fondly made another of their Innovations||:) And further the Bishop adds, That they are all commendable gestures, and tokens of Devotion, so long as the People understand what they mean, and apply them unto God. Now with us the People did ever understand them fully, and apply them to God, and to none but God, till these factious Spirits, and their like, to the great dis-service of God and his Church, went about to perswade them, that they are Superstitious, if not Idolatrous gestures: As they make every thing else to be, where God is not served slovenly.

13. The Thirteenth Innovation is, The placing of the Holy Table Altar-wise, at the upper end of the Chancel, that is, the setting of it North and South, and placing a Rail before it, to keep it from profanation, which Mr. Burton says, is done to advance and usher in Popery.

To

Anno 1640.

To this I answer, That it is no Popery to set a Rail to keep profanation from that Holy Table: Nor is it any Innovation to place it at the upper end of the Chancel as the Altar stood. And this appears both by the Practice, and by the Command and Canon of the Church of England.

First, By the Practice of the Church of England. For in the King's Royal Chappels, and divers Cathedrals, the Holy Table hath ever since the Reformation stood at the upper end of the Quire, with the large or full side towards the People.

And though it stood in most Parish Churches the other way, yet whether there be not more reason, the Parish Churches should be made conformable to the Cathedral and Mother Churches, than the Cathedrals to them, I leave to any reasonable man to judge.

And yet here is nothing done either by violence or command to take off the Indifferency of the standing of the Holy Table either way, but only by laying it fairly before men, how fit it is there should be Order and Uniformity; I say, still reserving the Indifferency of the standing.

But howsoever, I would fain know, how any discreet moderate man dares say, That the placing of the Holy Table Altar-wise (since they will needs call it so) is done either to advance or usher in Popery? For did Queen Elizabeth banish Popery, and yet did she all along her Reign, from first to last, leave the Communion Table so standing in her own Chappel Royal, in St. Pauls, and Westminster, and other places; and all this of purpose to advance or usher in that Popery which she had driven out?

And since her death, have two gracious Kings kept out Popery all their times, and yet left the Holy Table standing, as it did in the Queens time, and all of purpose to advance or usher in Popery which they kept out?

Or what is the matter? May the Holy Table stand this way in the King's Chappel, or Cathedrals, or Bishops Chappels, and not elsewhere? Surely, if it be decent, and fit for God's Service, it may stand so (if Authority please) in any Church. But if it advance or usher in any Superstition and Popery, it ought to stand so in none.

Nor hath any King's Chappel any Prerogative (if that may be called one) above any ordinary Church to dis-serve God in by any Superstitious Rites: Where, give me leave to tell you, that the King and his Chappel are most jeeringly, and with scorn abused, in the last leaf of Mr. Burton's Mutinuous Appeal, for such it is.

Secondly, This appears by the Canon or Rule of the Church of England too, for it is plain in the last Injunction of the Queen; That the Holy Table ought to stand at the upper end of the Quire, North and South, or Altar-wise. For the words of the Queens Injunctions are these:

The Holy Table in every Church (mark it, I pray, not in the Royal Chappel, or Cathedrals only, but in every Church) shall be decently made, and set in the place where the Altar stood. Now the Altar stood at the upper end of the Quire North and South, as appears before by the Practice of the Church. And there to set it otherwise, is to set it cross the place, not in the place where the Altar stood: And so Stulti dum vitant vitia — weak men, as these Libellers are, run into one Superstition, while they would avoid another; For they run upon the Superstition of the Cross, while they seek to avoid the Superstition of the Altar. So you see here is neither Popery nor Innovation in all the practice of Queen Elizabeth, or since.

These words of the Injunction are so plain, as that they can admit of no shift.

And give me leave to tell you, that a very learned Prelate of this Church, and one, whom I think these men will not accuse, as a man like to advance or usher in Popery, is of the same opinion: It is, my Lord, the Bishop of Salisbury.

Some difference was lately rising about placing the Communion Table in a Parish Church of his Diocess. The Bishop, careful to prevent all disorder, sends his Injunction under his Hand and Seal to the Curate and Churchwardens, to settle that business: In which he hath these two passages remarkable. I have seen and read the Order.

The first passage is this; By the Injunction of Queen Elizabeth (saith he) and by Can. 82. under King James, the Communion Tables should ordinarily be set and stand with the side to the East-wall of the Chancel. Therefore this is no Innovation, since there is Injunction and Canon for it.

The other passage is this; It is Ignorance (saith that learned Bishop) to think that the standing of the Holy Table there, relishes of Popery. Therefore, if it do not so much as relish of Popery, it can neither advance it, nor usher it in. And therefore, this is a most odious slander and scandal cast upon us.

So here is enough both for the Practice and Rule of the Church of England since the Reformation. Now before that time, both in this and other Churches of Christendom, in the East and West ordinarily the Holy Table or Altar stood so: Against this Mr. Burton says little.

But the Lincolnshire Minister comes in to play the Puritan for that. Concerning which Book (falling thus in my way) and the Nameless Author of it, I shall only say these two things:

The one is, that the Author prevaricates from the first word to the last in the Book; for he takes on him both for the name and for the placing of the Holy Table, and the like, to prove, that Generally and Universally, and ordinarily in the whole Catholick Church, both East and West, the Holy Table did not stand at the upper end of the Quire or Chancel. And this he must prove, or he doth nothing.

Now when he comes to make his Proofs, they are almost all of them particular, few or none general and concludent: For he neither brings Testimonies out of the General and received Rituals of the Eastern and Western Churches, nor of Fathers and Histories of the Church; which speak in General terms of all, but where they speak of particular Churches only.

So that suppose the most that can be, that is, suppose his quotations be all truly alledged, and true too in the sense that the Minister takes them (though in very truth, the places, most of them, are neither truly alledged, nor sensed) yet they are but exceptions of, and exemptions from the General practice. And you know both in Law and Reason, Exceptio firmat Regulam in non exceptis. So that upon the sudden I am not able to resolve, whether this Minister hath done more wrong to himself or his Readers, for he hath abused both.

The other is, that in the judgment of very many learned men, which have perused this Book, the Author is clearly conceived to want a great deal of that Learning to which he pretends: Or else to have written this Book wholly and resolvedly against both his Science, and his Conscience.

O o o o o

And

Car. 16.

May 17.
1637.

And for my own part, I am fully of opinion, this Book was thrust now to the Press, both to countenance these Libellers, and as much as in him lay, to fire both Church and State.

And though I wonder not at the Minister, yet I should wonder at the Bishop of the Diocese (a man of learning and experience) that he should give Testimony to such a business, and in such times as these.

And once more, before I leave the Holy Table, Name, and Thing, give me leave to put you in mind, that there is no danger at all in the Altar, Name, or Thing. For at the beginning of the Reformation, though there were a Law for the taking down of the Altars, and setting up of Holy Tables in the room of them; yet in some places the Altars were not suddenly removed. And what says the Queen in her Injunction to this? Why, she says, That there seems no matter of great moment in this, saving for uniformity, and the better imitation of the Law in that behalf. Therefore for any danger or hurt that was in the Altar, Name, or thing, they might have been left standing, but for Uniformity, and the Imitation of the Law.

But howsoever, it follows in the same Injunction, That when the Altar is taken down, the Holy Table shall be set in (not cross) the place where the Altar stood; which (as is aforesaid) must needs be Altar-wise.

14. The Fourteenth and the last Innovation comes with a mighty Charge, and it is taken out of an Epistle to the Temporal Lords of his Majesties Privy Council. Of which Epistle we got one sheet, and so (for ought I yet know) that Impression staid: In that sheet is this Charge, The words are,

The Prelates to justify their proceedings, have forged a new Article of Religion, brought from Rome, (which gives them full power to alter the Doctrine and Discipline of our Church at a blow, as they interpret it) and have foisted it (such is their language) into the beginning of the Twentieth Article of our Church. And this is in the last Edition of the Articles, Anno 1628. in affront of his Majesties Declaration before them, &c.

The Clause (which they say is forged by us) is this: The Church (that is, the Bishops, as they expound it) hath Power to decree Rites and Ceremonies, and Authority in matters of Faith (The word is Controversies of Faith, by their leave.) This Clause (say they) is a Forgery fit to be examined, and deeply censured in the Star-Chamber. For it is not to be found in the Latin or English Articles of Edward VI. or Queen Elizabeth, ratified by Parliament.

And then in the Margent thus, If to forge a Will or Writing be censurable in the Star-Chamber, which is but a wrong to a private man: How much more the Forgery of an Article of Religion, to wrong the whole Church, and overturn Religion, which concerns all our souls?

This is a heavy Charge, my Lords; but I thank God the Answer is easie.

And truly I grant, that to forge an Article in Religion in whole or in part, and then to thrust it upon the Church, is a most hainous Crime, far worse than the forging of a Deed; and is certainly very deeply censurable in this Court. And I would have humbly besought you, that a deep censure might have been laid upon it, but that this sheet was found after, and so is not annexed to the Information, nor in Judgment at this present before you.

But then, my Lords, I must tell you, I hope to make it as clear as the day, that this forgery was not, that this Clause mentioned was added by the Prelates to the Article, to gain power to the Church, and so to serve our turns: But that that Clause in the beginning of the Article was by these men, or at least by some of their Faction, razed out, and this to weaken the just power of the Church to serve their turns.

They say (to justify their Charge) that this Clause is not to be found in the Articles, English or Latin, of either Edward VI. or Queen Elizabeth.

I answer: The Articles of Edward VI. and those made under Queen Elizabeth differ very much. And those of Edward VI. are not now binding. So whether the Clause be in or out of them, it is not much material.

But for the Articles of the Church of England, made in the Queens time, and now in force, that this Clause for the power of the Church to decree Ceremonies, and to have Authority in Controversies of Faith, should not be found in English or Latin Copies, till the Year 1628. that it was set forth with the King's Declaration before it, is to me a miracle, but your Lordships shall see the falshood and boldness of these men.

What! Is this Affirmative Clause in no Copy, English or Latin, till the Year 1628? Strange! Why, my Lords, I have a Copy of the Articles in English, of the Year 1612. and of the Year 1605. and of the Year 1593. and in the Latin of the Year 1563. which was one of the first printed Copies, if not the first of all: For the Articles were agreed on but the Nine and twentieth day of January, According to the English Account.

Anno 1563.

According to the Julian Account.

And in all these, this Affirmative Clause for the Churches power is in. And is not this strange boldness then to abuse the World, and falsely to say it is in no Copy, when I my self, out of my own store, am able to shew it in so many, and so anciently?

But, my Lords, I shall make it plainer yet: For it is not fit concerning an Article of Religion, and an Article of such consequence for the Order, Truth, and Peace of this Church you should rely upon my Copies, be they never so many, or never so ancient.

Therefore I sent to the publick Records in my Office, and here under my Officers hand, who is a publick Notary, is returned me the XX. Article with this Affirmative Clause in it. And there is also the whole Body of the Articles to be seen.

By this your Lordships see how free the Prelates are from forging this part of the Article. Now let these men quit themselves and their Faction, as they can, for their Index Expurgatorius, and their foul razure in leaving out this part of the Article. For to leave out of an Article is as great a Crime as to put in; and a main razure is as censurable in this Court as a forgery.

Why, but then my Lords, what is this Mystery of Iniquity?

Truly, I cannot certainly tell, but as far as I can, I'll tell you.

The Articles you see were fully and fairly agreed to, and subscribed in the Year 1563. But after this, in the Year 1571. there were some that refused to subscribe, but why they did so, is not recorded. Whether it were about this Article, or any other, I know not. But in fact this is manifest, that Anno 1640. that in that year 1571. the Articles were Printed both in Latin and English, and this Clause for the Church left out of both. And certainly, this could not be done, but by the malicious cunning of that Opposite Faction. And though I shall spare dead mens names where I have not certainty; yet if you be pleased to look back and consider who they were that Governed businesses in 1571. and rid the Church almost at their pleasure; and how potent the Ancestors of these Libellers began then to grow, you will think it no hard matter to have the Articles Printed, and this Clause left out.

And yet it is plain, That, after the stir about Subscription in the year 1571. the Articles were settled and subscribed unto at last, as in the year 1562. with this Clause in them for the Church: For looking farther into the Records which are in mine own hands, I have found the Book of 1563. subscribed by all the Lower-House of Convocation, in this very year of Contradiction, 1571. Dr. John Elmar, (who was after Lord Bishop of London) being there Proloquutor: Alexander Nowel, Dean of St. Pauls, having been Proloquutor in 1563. and yet living and present and subscribing in 1571. Therefore I do here openly in Star-Chamber charge upon that pure Sect this foul corruption of falsifying the Articles of the Church of England; let them take it off as they can.

I have now done, and it is time I should, with the Innovations charged upon the Prelates, and fit to be answered here.

Some few more there are, but they belong to matter of Doctrine, which shall presently be answered, Iusto Volumine, at large, to satisfy all well-minded people. But when Mr. Burton's Book which is the main one, is answered, (I mean his Book, not his Railing) neither Prynne, nor Eastwick, nor any Attendants upon Rabshakeh shall by me or my care be answered. If this Court find not a way to stop these Libellers Mouths and Pens, for me they shall rail on till they be weary.

Page 175. Yet one thing more I beseech you give me leave to add. It is Mr. Burton's charge upon the Prelates, That the Censures formerly laid upon Malefactors are now put upon God's Ministers for their Vertue and Piety.

A heavy charge this too. But if he or any man else can shew that any man hath been punished in the High Commission, or elsewhere, by the Prelates, for Vertue and Piety, there is all the reason in the World we should be severely punished our selves. But the truth is, the Vertue and Piety for which these Ministers are punished, is for Preaching Schism and Sedition, many of their Sermons being as bad as their Libels; As Burton's Libel was one of his Sermons first. But whether this stuff have any Affinity with Vertue and Piety, I submit to any Christian Reader.

Page 7. And yet Mr. Burton is so confident of his Innocency, even in this cause wherein he hath so foully carried himself, that he breaks forth into these words, I never so much as once dreamed, that Impiety and Impudency it self, in such a Christian State as this is, and under such a gracious Prince, durst ever thus publicly have called me in question, and that upon the open Stage, &c.

You see the boldness of the Man, and in as bad a cause, as (I think) in this kind ever any man had.

I shall end all with a passage out of St. Cyprian*, when he, then Bishop of Carthage, was bitterly railed upon by a pack of Schismatics, his answer was, and it is now mine; They have railed both bitterly and falsely upon me, and yet Non oportet me paria cum illis facere; It becomes not me to answer them with the like, either Levities or Revilings, but to speak and write that only which becomes Sacerdotem Dei, a Priest of God.

Neither shall I in this give way (though I have been extremely vilified) to either grief or passion to speak, remembering that of the Psalmist, Psalm. 37. 8. Fret not thy self, else shalt thou be moved to do evil.

Neither yet by God's Grace shall the Reproaches of such men as these, make me faint or start aside, either from the right way in matter of practice, (they are St. Cyprian's words again) or à certa regula, from the certain Rule of Faith. Ibid. p. 10.

And since in former times, some spared not to call the Master of the House Beelzebub, how much more will they be bold with them of his Household, as it is in St. Matthew, Chap. 10. 25? And so bold have these men been; but the next words of our Saviour are, Fear them not.

I humbly crave pardon of your Lordships for this my necessary length, and give you all hearty thanks for your Noble patience, and your Just and Honourable Censure upon these Men, and your unanimous dislike of them, and defence of the Church.

But because the business hath some reflection upon my self, I shall forbear to censure them, and leave them to God's Mercy, and the King's Justice.

But the great quarrel which arose in the ensuing Parliament, was, about the Oath imposed by the Canons made in that Convocation having an &c. in it: The Oath it self here followeth:

I A. B. do swear, That I do approve the Doctrine and Discipline of Government established in the Church of England, as containing all things necessary to Salvation. And that I will not endeavour by my self, or any other directly or indirectly, to bring in any Popish Doctrine, contrary to that so established. Nor will I ever give my consent to alter the Government of this Church by Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, and Arch-Deacons, &c. as it stands now established, and as by right it ought to stand, nor yet ever to subject it to the usurpations and superstitions of the See of Rome; And all these things do I plainly and sincerely acknowledge and swear according to the plain and common sense and understanding of the same words, without any equivocation, or mental evasion, or secret reservation whatsoever; And this I do heartily, willingly and truly, upon the Faith of a Christian, So help me God in Jesus Christ.

The Exceptions taken against this Oath, were, especially three, to which some add a fourth: First, That the word &c. leaves the Oath too loose, that neither the makers nor the Takers could know the meaning.

Answer hereto was made, That in the Canons a particular Enumeration is made of all persons having Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, as Archbishops, Bishops, Deans, Archdeacons, Deans and Chapters, and other persons having exempt or peculiar Jurisdictions, and therefore for avoiding Tautology the &c. was added as an expression importing all the foregoing, than which nothing in the Canons was more known.

The

Anno 1640. The Second was, That the Commanding an Oath in things of Indifferency was an Affront to the Government.

The Answer was, the Sanction was added by the King to this Canon, and it was added to prevent alterations in Church Government by those who had no power, and to continue it the same till allowed by lawful Authority.

The Third Objection was, That the Juror declares he swears willingly, whereas he was under restraint by the most severe Penalties.

Hereunto it was Answered, The Oath of Allegiance, 3 Jac. enjoyns this recognition that the Juror do it heartily, truly, and willingly, and yet there is a great penalty upon not taking.

The Fourth or last Objection was, That as the Scots condemned the Arminian Tenets (for which they were blamed) without defining what they were, so did these the Socinians without defining what they were.

Answer: The Arminian Tenets were but five, and might easily have been enumerated, but Socinianism is a complication of many and gross Errors; but more especially the Presbyterians Oath here and in Scotland were used to brand any Episcopal person with the name of an Arminian or Popishly addicted; though those five Points Controverted in Holland were here in England amongst our Divines amicably and peaceably tolerated to be entreated of, and fairly disputed, till the excesses of some hot men on both sides, caused his Majesty to emit his Proclamation to cause those Disputes to surcease, especially in Pulpit Debates.

Upon the conclusion of this Synod, they grant to the King an ample Benevolence of four shillings in the pound for six years, towards his intended Expedition against the Scots, at which Exception was taken upon a great mistake, as if it had been an usurpation upon the power of Parliaments, no Convocation having power so to do but only in time of Parliament: For why may not our Clergy give their own without the leave of any, and yet for instance and precedent the Convocation, Anno 1585. after having given one subsidy confirm'd by Parliament, did afterwards add two shillings per pound without leave of the Parliament.

His Majesty, as you heard, ordered the March of his Army against the Scots: several Councils were held for the advance of Money, and the City of London, as is usual, being importuned to lend, pretend poverty, whereas the City never more abounded with Treasure, Bullion, and all manner of rich Merchandize, having enjoyed peace and plenty of Commerce for forty years, Their Plenty (saith one) bred Luxury, Luxury filled them with all Vices answerable; unfaithful they were to their Sovereign, ungrateful to their own Members and Friends, &c.

The King to let them see themselves and their own demerits, how much they depended upon his bounty and goodness, and how little they had deserved, his Majesty had granted them a Patent on account of their Plantation in London-Derry in Ireland; and this Patent they had forfeited by usurping upon their Neighbours, and taking more Land than their Patent would empower; for this the City was sued in the Star-Chamber, their Lands sentenced to be forfeit to his Majesty, Fines imposed upon the Undertakers, notwithstanding a small Fine in respect of the forfeiture by his Majesty and their Patent restored. This gracious dealing of his Majesty with that City was by them complained of, and bore in mind to be revenged upon occasion. Hereupon order being sent to the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs for the collecting of the Arrearages of Ship-money, as like orders were sent into other Counties upon the same affair, and the Mayor and Sheriffs giving the Council-Board no account thereupon, and having not executed the Writ by distraint upon any one person; the Order following was issued against the said persons:

At White-hall, July 5. 1640.

Present

The King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury,

Lord Keeper,

Lord Treasurer,

Lord Marquess Hamilton,

Earl Marshal,

Earl of Salisbury,

Earl of Bridgewater,

Earl of Holland,

Earl of Berks,

Earl of Strafford,

Earl of Cork,

Lord Goring,

Lord Cottington,

Lord Newburgh,

Mr. Treasurer,

Mr. Secretary Windebanke,

Sir Thomas Rowe,

Lord Chief Justice of the Common-Pleas.

Whereas the Lord Mayor of London, and the two Sheriffs, did this day appear before his Majesty and the Board, to give an account of their proceedings upon the Writ for the Ship business this present year: Forasmuch as it did appear, that besides all former neglects in the execution of that Writ, his Majesty having respited the Information against them for the same; yet they have not since distrained any one person according to the said Writ. It was this day ordered by his Majesty, with the advice of the Board, that his Majesties Attorney General shall forthwith prefer an Information in the Star-Chamber against the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, for their contempt and default in the execution of the said Writ; and shall forthwith proceed against them De die in Diem, until the Cause be ready for hearing: and if upon Examination of the said Cause, his Majesties Attorney General shall find sufficient Cause against any of the Aldermen, that then he do prefer one other Information against the said Aldermen; and in like manner do proceed against them apart.

A Gallant Army was now the second time raised against the Scots, who not performing their former stipulations, and having under-hand encouragement and assistance from some Male-content persons here in England of their perswasion as to Church Discipline, had already in a second Rebellion taken up Arms against their Sovereign, but pretended they were only to deliver a Petition to his Majesty in order to the redress of their Grievances, and that some Incendiaries about his Majesty, their enemies might be removed from the King's Person and Counsels, they were now already on their March ready to pass the River Tine, which to impede the Lord Conway had posted

Anno.
1640. posted himself with three thousand Foot, and about one thousand Horse on the adverse part of the River; hereupon Lesley the Scotch General desires his leave to pass towards his Majesty, with the humble Petition and request of his Majesties good Subjects of his Native Kingdom of Scotland; The Lord Conway for answer told him, That he should readily permit him to pass with a few in order thereunto, but he would not permit his Army to pass; hereupon Lesley Commands three hundred Horse to pass the River, who were driven back by the English Foot, which play'd upon them by their small Shot from a Breast-work on the English side of the River; hereupon Lesley having placed his great Guns behind the blind of some Bushes, lets fly amongst the English, who having nothing to secure them but their Breast-work retired and fled; hereupon the Scots Horse again advance, and are entertain'd by Commissioner General Wilmot who gallantly charg'd them back to the River, but these were overpower'd by the numbers of the Scots, and being withal gall'd and annoyed by the Scottish Ordnances were forced to retire in disorder, two hundred English being slain and taken Prisoners. The Lord Conway was blamed for his ill conduct in this Action, having no other security but the aforesaid Breast-works for the Foot, and no great Guns well made use of on his part to oppose to those of the Rebels; nay, some have not stick'd to affix on him either Cowardize or Treachery for this his evil manage; however he retreats to his Majesty at Northallerton, where the Noble Earl of Strafford was very severe upon him because of this defect. Sir Jacob Ashley, Governor of Newcastle, judging the Town not tenable, deserts it, and sinks his Ordnance in the River.

About this time the Queens Majesty was safely delivered of her third Son Henry, who was afterward created Duke of Glocester, and died after his Majesties return to his Kingdoms, a Prince of great hopes and worth, and Gallantry.

After the Lord Conway's defeat at Newbourne upon Tine, the Earl of Strafford under his Majesty took care of his Army, for that the Earl of Northumberland, Lord General thereof, was not able by reason of sickness to undertake the Command; and this gallant Army to which the Gentry of England had so nobly and freely contributed, lay quarter'd in Yorkshire and the Bishoprick of Durham, and for that divers disorders, as is usual on such occasions, were committed by the Souldiery in their Quarters, the Inhabitants of that County at the general Assizes at York on the twenty eighth of July exhibited their Petition complaining (though at a very unseasonable time, the Kingdom being then invaded by the Scots) hereof.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of the Gentry of your Majesties County of York, now assembled at the Assizes at York, July 28. 1640.

May it please your Sacred Majesty,

YOur most humble Subjects shew unto your Sacred Majesty, that in all humility this Country had endeavoured to fulfil your Majesties Commands with the forwardest of your Majesties Subjects, and the last year in the execution of your Majesties Royal Commands about the Military Affairs did expend one hundred thousand pounds to our great impoverishment, and far above the proportion of other Counties; which although at that time we were willing (out of a desire to serve your Majesty) to do, yet for the future the burthen is so heavy, that we neither can, nor are able to bear it. Now upon this our chearfulness to serve you, we thought to have found equal favours with other Counties.

But so it is, most Gracious Sovereign, to our great grief, and (as we conceive) to the great disservice of your Majesty, we find our selves oppressed with the Billetting of unruly Souldiers, whose Speeches and Actions tend to the burning of our Villages and Houses, and to whose Violences and Insolencies we are so daily subject, as we cannot say we enjoy our Wives, Children and Estates safely: wherefore we are emboldned, humbly to present these our Complaints, beseeching that as the Billetting of Souldiers in any of your Subjects Houses against their will, is contrary to the Antient Laws of this Kingdom confirmed by your Majesty in the Petition of Right, we most humbly pray, that this insupportable burthen be taken from us, lest by their Insolencies some such sad Accidents may happen, as will be much displeasing unto your Sacred Majesty and your Loyal and Obedient Subjects, who will never cease to pray for your Majesties long and happy Raign over us.

His Majesties Affairs, though he had now a very good Army on foot, were very much perplexed, and intricate; Money, the Sinews of War, was not over plenteous with the King, and a considerable part of his Subjects here at home wish'd well perhaps (though to their own and the Kingdoms infamy) to the Scottish designs; his Majesty was hereupon necessitated to borrow of the Spanish Merchants, and others of the Bullion then in the Mint at the Tower of London the sum of 40000*l.* which was punctually repaid by his Majesty, and though the Kingdom then lay under an Invasive War [Oh the Indignity hereof!] from the rebellious Scots, his Majesties own Subjects; breaking thorough all ties both Sacred and Civil by their Rebellion to the King, and Invasion of this Kingdom, yet would not the foregoing Parliament grant any succours and aids to his Majesty for their Chastisement; but on the contrary they 1640. they were encourag'd in these their attempts by some here at home, to the embroilment and ruin of at last both these Kingdoms; yea, and of themselves and their Party too, I speak of the Presbyterian Faction, who afterwards, we know by whom, were fairly laid aside, and some of their Chiefs committed to Prisons and other hardships, by those who had been undertakers with them in their unfortunate and mischievous designs. This Defensive War, for so it was on his Majesties part, was not at all approved of by these sorts of men, but they endeavour'd what they could to debauch the common Souldiers, and caused them to Mutiny against their Commanders, which they did in several places, as in Devonshire, Warwickshire, and in other Counties, as appears by an Order of Council, dated June 28. 1640.

At White-hall, June 28. 1640.

Present

The King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury,
Lord Keeper,
Lord Treasurer,
Lord Privy-Seal,
Lord Duke of Lenox,
Lord Marquess Hamilton,
Earl Marshall,
Lord Admiral,
Lord Chamberlain,
Earl of Dorset,
Earl of Salisbury,
Earl of Bridgewater,
Earl of Holland,
Earl of Berks,
Earl of Lanericke,
Earl of Cork,
Lord Goring,
Lord Cottington,
Lord Newburgh,
Mr. Treasurer,
Mr. Secretary Windebanke,
Sir Thomas Rowe,
Lord Chief Justice of the Common-Pleas.

His day (his Majesty being present in Council) the Board was informed, that the Souldiers under the Regiment of Colonel Lunsford, were fallen into such a Mutiny against their Officers, and disorders likewise in the County of Warwick, in their passage through the said County, as that a great part of them are run away, and the rest persisting in so much disobedience, as that they are ready all to disband; and that there is such a general remissness and backwarkness in the Deputy Lieutenants and others, to whom it appertains, to countenance and assist the Officers and Commanders in punishing and reducing them to conformity and obedience; and especially in the raising and following of Hue-and-Cries for the apprehending of those that run away, as that they seem rather to foment, than to endeavour the suppressing and reformation thereof: upon consideration and debate whereof had, and for that Information hath been given to the Board from other Counties of the like Mutinies and disorders, and of the like remissness and backwardness, (though not altogether in so high a degree) in those that should assist the Commanders and Officers for punishing and suppressing the same; whereby a great number of the Souldiers are disbanded and run away, to the great disservice of his Majesty and the publick, and the high contempt and scandal of all Authority and Government: It was therefore resolved and ordered, That a Proclamation should be forthwith published throughout the Kingdom, requiring the Deputy Lieutenants and Justices of Peace in the several Counties, and all others to whom it appertains, that they use all possible diligence and endeavor for the apprehending and punishing according to the Laws, of all those that shall be found to have run away from their Commanders and Officers; and likewise that they assist and endeavor all that possibly they may, in punishing and suppressing of the Mutinies of the Souldiers against their Officers, or any other insolencies and disorders by them committed: whereof his Majesties Attorney General is hereby required to take notice, and accordingly to prepare a Proclamation ready for his Majesties Signature.

The Privy Council being informed of another Mutiny as in Herefordshire, Somersetshire, and Dorsetshire, and of some men slain, writ Letters likewise thereupon to the several Lord Lieutenants of the respective Counties, to assist the Officers of those Souldiers in their reduction and deserved punishments.

Moreover the Government of the City of London it self became very disorderly, and was very troublesom to the Governours thereof, for daily Tumults were made, and privately and underhand encouraged by the foregoing Male-contents, which caused the Privy Council several times to raise the Militia of Middlesex and Surry to appease them, and for the keeping and maintaining of the peace of the City and adjacent Counties, as may appear by the Orders of the Council-board hereupon, and his Majesties Proclamation for the suppression of those Tumults, which we shall omit.

And for that the Souldiers, as in Marches of all Armies, consisting of new raised men, were very forward and ready of themselves to Mutiny, without being influenced hereto by any other Male-contents to this Scottish Expedition, and for that it was the opinion of men learn'd in the Laws, that Martial Law could not legally be executed in the King's Army, but when an Enemy is near to the King's Army, a Mutiny hapning amongst the Souldiers under the Lord Conway's conduct, and others, in the County of Essex, a Commission of Oyer and Terminer was directed to the Lord Chief Justice Brampstone for the Trial of the last mentioned at Chelmsford in Essex.

Nelther were there lacking Mutinies and Complaints ever studiously disseminated amongst the vulgar by the Presbyterian Faction, concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs, and more particularly about the late Book of Canons compiled by the Convocation, and ratified by his Majesty, the great matter of these mens Exception thereto was the Oath &c. which by all means must be Popish, and a kind of Trojan; nay, having nothing less than the Pope and the Conclave of Cardinals in the Belly of it, howsoever the meaning thereof was innocent and harmless in the sence of the Compilers thereof, or of any other unbiassed persons;

Anno
1640. persons; yet most horrid Exclamations were every where raised against it: As the Exceptions from Northamptonshire; from Dorsetshire and Kent sufficiently testify, which we shall here subjoin for that they, all of them, run upon the same mistake, as if the Oath obliged the taker thereof never to consent to any alteration though it was made by right Authority, whereas the known and undoubted meaning thereof was only to prevent alterations made by way of Tumults and Uproars, and unlawful Authority, such as those were lately in the Church of Scotland, against which Popery, Presbytery, and Socinianism those Canons were chiefly level'd.

1. They of Northamptonshire said, That the taking of this Oath doth seem to establish the legality of it, and prepare a way for the imposing of other new Oathes; whereas it is questionable, whether any Oath may be imposed, not establish'd and appointed by Parliament.

2. The taking of it, may seem to approve the exacting of it of all the persons of whom it is required; many of whom cannot take it (probably) in judgment, as not being acquainted with the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church, nor the Controversies concerning them.

3. It is required, we should swear all things necessary for salvation to be contained in the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England.

1. It is not declared, What is to be accounted the Doctrine of the Church.

The Book of Homilies hath been disclaimed: The Articles claimed by the Arminians and others; and some of them corrupted.

2. It hath not been conceived, that any particular kind of Discipline was necessary to salvation.

The Presbyterians have been derided and writ against, for making the Discipline a part of the Kingdom of Christ.

It's acknowledged, That the Reformed Churches that differ from us in Discipline, want nothing necessary to salvation.

4. It's required to swear, Not to consent to the alteration of the Government by Archbishops, Bishops, Archdeacons, &c. as it is by Law established, and by right they ought to stand: which Clause we dare not swear to, for these causes:

1. Because we judge it unlawful to swear the perpetuation of any meer Ecclesiastical Ordinance which is subject to such corruptions as may necessitate an alteration; and such we judge this Government to be, at least in part; for Archbishops, Archdeacons and Deans are but Ecclesiastical, whatever may be said for Bishops,

2. We have taken the Oath of Supremacy, by which we acknowledge the King's Majesty and his Successors Supream Head of the Church, and Governour in Causes and over Persons Ecclesiastical as well as Civil, which this Oath seems to contradict.

In that,

1. It binds from consenting to the alteration of Church Government, so that if the King or his Successors should alter it, we must dissent and Preach against them, as in the eighth Canon.

2. It binds to acknowledge a further Right that Archbishops and Bishops, &c. have in the Government of Church, than that which is given them by Law, meaning a Divine Right, as we are induced to believe:

Because,

1. Many Bishops have so declared themselves.

2. In the first Canon they have not given the King any power in Ecclesiastical Government, disclaiming only Papal, Popular, Independent, Coactive power, but not Episcopal; whereas the Controversies of this time require a more precise and open declaration.

3. It seems to make more account of the the Discipline, than of the Doctrine of the Church; for in that we abjure Consent to any alteration, in this we abjure endeavour to induce Popish Errors only.

4. This Clause is administered with an &c. which we conceive was never tendred in any Oath before now.

5. There are some things in the Discipline of the Church, which we have just ground to desire and endeavour the alteration of, should it be offered. As,

That the Bishop delegates his power to be officiated by a Chancellor, whereby it comes to pass, that the sentence of Excommunication, which is incompatible with a meer Lay-man (as our Church teacheth against Presbyterians) is devolved upon a meer Lay-man, and the Plaister provided by the thirteenth Canon is too narrow for this sore.

For,

The Grave Minister to whom the pronouncing the Sentence belongs, is but the Chancellors Voice to speak what he decrees; and so the power of Excommunication is still in him.

5. The whole Oath is filled with so many ambiguities, that we dare not take it.

6. The taking of it, makes us approve of the Synod, by which there are induced and tolerated divers Ceremonies contrary to the Book of Common Prayer, which we have subscribed unto, and must in this Oath (if we take it) abjure.

7. It is required, to be taken heartily and willingly, and yet they that refuse it, are threatened with severe punishments; by which means it is to be feared, that many that are weak, may forswear themselves.

1. Those of Devonshire complain, that they are bound to take it willingly (and so they must the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy) which they say they cannot do with a safe Conscience, and so shall be perjured, [if so, they ought to submit to the penalty, and not to raise Tumults.

Anno 1640. 2. That they must swear sincerely, without any mental reservation, yet that &c. in the Oath, referreth and implyeth somewhat more than is expressed; which they must conceive or understand.

3. That they must acknowledge both the Doctrine and Discipline of our Church, to contain all things necessary to salvation: which is not true of the Discipline.

4. That they are tyed never to give consent to any alteration of the said Discipline, though the King and State should enjoin them thereunto.

5. That it crosseth or contradiceth the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy which they have already taken; because if the King by Parliament would disanul any part of the Ecclesiastical Discipline, or by a Synod shall alter it, they are bound never to consent.

6. That it is a flat bandy against the power of Parliaments; because the Clergy can constitute no Canons, much less create or impose Oaths, unless the Parliament confirm them: and therefore they think it a project to suppress all Parliaments for ever.

7. That it clips the wings of the King's Royal Prerogative and Spiritual Supremacy, bereaving him and his Successors from altering any thing in Church Government, either by Synod, Convocation or Parliament.

The men of Kent their Queries follow hereafter:

1. Whether it be lawful to take an Oath with an &c. where there may be a doubt, how much is thereby signified?

2. Whether to affirm in an Oath, that such a thing ought so by right to stand, doth not suppose it to be a Divine Right?

3. Whether it be lawful to swear the perpetual maintaining any Order meerly Ecclesiastical?

4. Whether the Superiority of Archbishops above Bishops, and the substitution of Archdeacons, Deans, &c. be not meerly Ecclesiastical?

5. Whether when Divine Authority hath ordained only Bishops to be Church Governours, particularly in point of Excommunication, it be lawful to consent any more than passively, to any other Governours Ecclesiastical, to exercise the same Authority of Excommunication?

6. Whether since the Church of England rejects the Lay-Elders of other Churches, it doth not thereby condemn the giving of any power to Commissaries, Chancellors and Officials which are meerly Lay-men, to meddle in Excommunication even jointly with Ministers, much less as chief Surrogates, being but his Deputies and Ecclesiastical?

7. Whether the Scriptures Authorize such power being given to meer Lay-men?

8. Whether having sworn to the King's Supremacy in all causes Ecclesiastical, it be not a violation of that Oath, or at least a hazard of it in time to come, to swear not to give consent to such an alteration in Government, which may at least possibly be thought fit, and even be commanded with all Authority by the King or any Succellor of his hereafter?

These Queries are answered before, for the main of them, as are also the foregoing Exceptions in the beginning of this year, whether we shall remit the Reader, and now proceed.

The Scotch Army (as before is said) having entered England under the Command of Lesley as General, the Earl of Kalendar as Lieutenant General, and Alexander Hamilton as Major General at a Ford of the Tweede, call'd Cold Stream, the Noble Earl of Montross, then a Covenanter, commanding the Van-guard, and first taking the River, they did by slow Marches in a weeks space arrive at Newbourn, a small Village belonging to the Earl of Northumberland situate of the Tine, and there, as before, our Reader is given to understand, hapned the first Action betwixt the Scots and English; wherein and the manner how the latter were worsted, we have already declared; and that they might not seem to be altogether without Abettors and Maintainers of their quarrel here in England, and making necessity (which can never justify any evil action) the ground of their Invasion, they emit and published certain considerations to manifest the legality of their present invading of England, and declared their intentions to their Brethren here in England in the six following Considerations.

Six Considerations of the Lawfulness of their Expedition into England manifested.

AS from the beginning till this time, we have attempted nothing presumptuously in this great work of Reformation, but have proceeded upon good grounds, and have been led forward by the good hand of God; so now, from our own perswasion, are we ready to answer every one that asketh us a reason of this our present Expedition, which is one of the greatest and most notable parts of this wonderful work of God, beseeching all to lift up their minds above their own particulars, and without prejudice or partiality, to lay to heart the Considerations following.

First, As all men know and confesse what is the great force of necessity, and how it doth justify actions otherwaies unwarrantable, so it cannot be denied but we must either seek our peace in England at this time, or lie under the heavy burdens which we are not able to bear.

1. We must maintain Armies on the Borders, and all places nearest to hazard, for the defence and preservation of our Country, which by laying down of Arms, and disbanding of our Forces, should be quickly over-run by Hostile Invasion, and the incursions of our enemies.

2. We shall want Trade by Sea, which would not only deprive the Kingdom of many necessities, but utterly undo our Boroughs, Merchants, Mariners, and many others who live by Fishing, and by Commodities Exported and Imported, and whose particular callings are utterly made void, by want of Commerce with other Nations and Sea-trade.

3. The

Anno. 1640. 3. The Subjects through the whole Kingdom; shall want administration of Justice; and although this time past, the marvellous power and providence of God hath kept the Kingdom in order and quietness without any Judicatories sitting, yet cannot this be expected for afterward, but shall turn to confusion. Any one of the three, much more all of them put together threaten us with most certain ruin, unless we speedily use the remedy of this Expedition. And this we say not from fear, but from feeling: for we have already felt to our unspeakable prejudice, [what it is to maintain Armies, what to want Traffick, what to want Administration of Justice.] And if the beginning of these evils be so heavy, what shall the growth and long continuance of them prove unto us? So miserable a being all men would judge, to be worse than no being.

Secondly, If we consider the nature and quality of this Expedition, it is defensive, and so the more justifiable. For proof hereof let it be remembred,

1. The King's Majesty misled by the crafty and cruel Faction of our Adversaries began this years War, not we. When Articles of Pacification had been the other year agreed upon, Arms laid down, Forts and Castles rendered, an Assembly kept, and concluded with the presence and consent of his Majesties High Commissioner, the promised Ratification thereof in Parliament (contrary to the aforesaid Articles) was denied unto us, and when we would have informed his Majesty by our Commissioners, of the reasons and manner of our proceedings, they got not so much as presence or audience. Thereafter his Majesty being content to hear them, before that they came to Court or were heard, War was concluded against us at the Council Table of England, and a Commission given to the Earl of Northumberland for that effect.

First, The Parliaments of Ireland and England were also convocate, for granting Subsidies unto this War against us, as is notoure, Plots have been hatcht, and Military preparations made against us: many Invasions by Sea, which have spoiled us of our Ships and Goods: Men, Women and Children killed in Edenburgh by his Majesties Forces in the Castle: Our Enemies therefore are the Authors and beginners of the War, and we defenders only.

2. We intend not the hurt of others, but our own peace and preservation, neither are we to offer any injury or violence: And therefore have furnished our selves according to our power with all necessaries, not to fight at all, except we be forced to it in our own defence, as our Declaration beareth.

3. We shall retire and lay down Arms, as soon as we shall get a sure peace, and shall be satisfied in our just demands. Upon which ground even some of those who would seem the greatest Royalists, hold the Wars of the Protestants in France against the King, and the Faction of the Guisians to have been lawful defensive Wars, because they were ever ready to disband and quiet themselves, when they got assurance of Peace and Liberty of Religion. Now this present Expedition being in the nature of it defensive, hence it appeareth that it is not contrary, but consonant to our former Protestations, Informations, and Remonstrances: In all which there is not one word against defensive War in this cause; but strong reasons for it, all which militate for this Expedition. Car. 16.

Our first Information sent to England this year, though it accuseth all offensive or invasive War, yet sheweth plainly, that if we be invaded either by Sea or Land, we must do as a man that fighteth himself out of Prison. If a private man when his House is blocked up, so that he can have no liberty of Commerce and Traffick to supply himself and Family, being also in continual hazard of his life, not knowing when he shall be assaulted by his Enemies who lie in wait against him, may in this case most lawfully step forth with the Forces which he can make, and fight himself free; of how much more worth is the whole Nation? and how shall one and the same way of defence and liberation be allowed to a private man, and disallowed to a whole Nation?

Thirdly, We are called to this Expedition by that same divine providence and vocation which hath guided us hitherto in this great business. We see the expediency of it, for the glory of God, for the good of the Church, for advancing the Gospel, for our own peace: after seeking of God, and begging light and direction from Heaven, our hearts are inclined to it, God hath given us zeal and courage to prosecute it, ability and opportunity for undertaking it, unanimous Resolution upon it, scruples removed out of minds where they were harboured, encouragements to achieve it from many passages of divine providence, and namely from the proceedings of the last Parliament in England, their Grievances and desires being so homogeneous and akin to ours, we have laboured in great long-suffering by Supplications, Informations, Commissions, and all other means possible, to avoid this Expedition. It was not premeditated nor affected by us (God knows) but our enemies have necessitated and redacted us unto it, and that of purpose to sow the seed of National Quarrels: yet as God hitherto hath turned all their plots against themselves, and to effects quite contrary to those that they intended; so are we hopeful that our coming into England (so much wished and desired by our Adversaries for producing a National quarrel) shall so far disappoint them of their aims, that it shall link the two Nations together in stricter and stronger bonds, both of Civil and Christian love, than ever before.

And that we may see yet further evidences of a calling from God to this Voyage, we may observe the order of the Lords steps and proceedings in this work of Reformation. For, beginning at the gross Popery of the Service Book, and Book of Canons, he hath followed the back trade of our defection, till he hath Reformed the very first and smallest Novations, which entred in this Church. But so it is, that this back trade leadeth yet further, to the Prelacy in England, the fountain whence all those Babylonish streams issue unto us: The Lord therefore is still on the back trade, and we following him therein, cannot yet be at a stay. Yea, we trust, that he shall so follow forth this trade, as to chase home the Beast, and the false Prophet to Rome, and from Rome out of the World. Besides, this third Consideration resulteth from the former two; for if this Expedition be necessary,

Anno 1640. necessary, and if it be defensive, then it follows inevitably, that we are called unto it, for our necessary defence is warranted, yea commanded by the Law of God and Nature, and we are obliged to it in our Covenant.

Fourthly, The lawfulness of this Expedition appeareth, if we consider the party against whom, which is not the Kingdom of England, but the Canterburian Faction of Papists, Artheists, Arminians, Prelates, the misleaders of the King's Majesty, and the Common Enemies of both Kingdoms. We perswade our selves, that our Brethren and Neighbours in England, will never be so evil advised, as to make themselves a Party against us, by their defence and patrociny of our Enemies among them, as sometimes the Benjamites made themselves a Party against the Israelites, by defending the Gibeathites in their wicked cause, Judg. 20. We pray God to give them the wisdom of the wise Woman in Abel, who when Joab came near to her City with an Army, found out a way which both kept Joab from being an Enemy to the City, and the City from being an Enemy to him, 2 Sam. 20. As touching the Provision and Furniture of our Army in England, it shall be such as is used among friends, not among enemies. The rule of humanity and gratitude will teach them to furnish us with necessities, when as beside the procuring of our own peace, we do good Offices to them. They detest (we know) the churlishness of Nabal, who refused Victuals to David and his men, who had done them good and no evil, 1 Sam. 20. And the inhumanity of the men of Succoth and Penuel, who denied bread to Gideon's Army, when he was pursuing the Common Enemies of all Israel, Judg. 8. But let the English do of their Benevolence, what humanity and discretion will teach them; For our own part our Declaration sheweth, that we seek not Victuals for nought, but for Money or Security: And if this should be refused (which we shall never expect) it were as damnable as the barbarous cruelty of Edom and Moab, who refused to let Israel pass through their Country, or to give them Bread and Water in any case, Numb. 20. Judg. 11. and this offence the Lord accounted so inexpiable, that for it he accursed the Edomites and Moabites from entering into the Congregation of the Lord, unto the tenth Generation, Deut. 23. 3, 4.

Fifthly, The fifth Consideration concerneth the end for which this Voyage is undertaken. We have attested the searcher of hearts, It is not to execute any disloyal act against his Majesty, It is not to put forth a cruel or vindictive hand against our Adversaries in England, whom we desire only to be Judged and Censured by their own Honourable and High Court of Parliament, It is not to enrich our selves with the Wealth of England, nor to do any harm thereto. But by the contrary, we shall gladly bestow our pains and our means to do them all the good we can, which they might justly look for at our hands, for the help which they made us at our Reformation, in freeing us from the French, a bond of peace and love betwixt them and us to all Generations. Our Conscience, and God who is greater than our Conscience beareth us record, that we aim altogether, at the glory of God, peace of both Nations, and honour of the King, in suppressing and punishing (in a legal way) of those who are the troublers of Israel the Fire-brands of Hell, the Korahs, the Baalams, the Doegs, the Rabshakehs, the Hammans, the Tobiabs and Samballars of our time, which done, we are satisfied. Neither have we begun to use a Military Expedition to England, as a mean for compassing those our pious ends, till all other means which we could think upon have failed us, and this alone is left to us as ultimum & unicum remedium, the last and only remedy.

Sixthly, If the Lord shall bless us in this our Expedition, and our intentions shall not be crossed by our own sins and miscarriage, or by the opposition of the English, the fruits shall be sweet, and the effects comfortable to both Nations, to the Posterity, and to the Reformed Kirks abroad: Scotland shall be Reformed as at the beginning, the Reformation of England long prayed and pleaded for by the Godly, thereby shall be according to their wishes and desires, perfected in Doctrine, Worship and Discipline. Papists, Prelates, and all the Members of the Antichristian Hierarchy, with their Idolatry, Superstition, and human Inventions shall pack from hence, the names of Sects and Separatists shall no more be mentioned, and the Lord shall be one, and his name one throughout the whole Island, which shall be glory to God, honour to the King, Joy to the Kingdoms, comfort to the posterity, example to other Christian Kirks, and Confusion to the incorrigible Enemies.

His Majesty on the other hand, for opposing the Scots, and the strengthening of his Kingdom of England, now under an actual Invasion, issued out Commissions of Array to the several Lieutenancies of England; and withal, declared his Royal Pleasure, that these latter should not derogate, or be any waies prejudicial to the former Commissions granted unto the Lord Lieutenants, &c. for their commanding and ordering of the standing Militia's of their respective Counties, but that it should be lawful for them to execute both these concurrent Commissions, and the Earl Marshal of England was to command by advice and direction from his Majesties Privy-Council, all the power of arrayed men on the South side of Trent, and pursuant hereto, he had a Commission granted him under the Broad Seal of England.

Great were the discouragements his Majesty every way met with in this necessary and defensive war against these his worst of Subjects, for that his Majesty having called the Gentry of the County of York unto them, and declaring his resolution to lead them on himself in Person to the Frontiers of that County, several of the Gentry thereof very fairly deliver a Petition to his Majesty for their excuse herein, for that by reason of the Poverty of their County, they were not able to advance, and more according to his Majesties expectation, except they might have 14 daies Pay from his Majesty before-hand, whereas at the time of the delivery of this Petition, or very shortly after, the Scots were upon the point of entering into the aforesaid County, and setting the Bishoprick of Durham under Contribution, and being shortly after also possessed of Newcastle; such and so great were the difficulties his said Majesty then labour'd under, the circumstances hereof were very well known to sundry of the Peers, and others

1640. others of this his Majesties Kingdom of England, who, as it afterwards notoriously appeared in the ensuing Troubles, were no very great Enemies to the Scots in this their Invasion of England. These men hereupon Petition his Majesty for the summoning of a Parliament, where they very well knew the Scotch War and Invasion would be, if not justified and abetted, yet palliated and excused. There were two Petitions of this nature, and they stuffed with their pretended Grievances; the one from several Peers, the other from the City of London; though this later had been expressly prohibited by the Council Board. And they were as followeth.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of your Majesties most Loyal and Obedient Subjects, whose Names are here under-written, in behalf of themselves and divers others.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

THE sense of that Duty and Service which we owe unto your Sacred Majesty, and our earnest Affection to the good and welfare of this your Realm of England, have moved us in all humility to beseech your Royal Majesty, to give us leave to offer unto your most Princely Wisdom, the Apprehension which we and other your faithful Subjects have conceived of the great Distempers and Dangers now threatening the Church, and state of your Royal Person, and the fittest means by which they may be prevented.

The Evils and Dangers whereof your Majesty may be pleased to take notice, are these;

1. That your Sacred Majesty is exposed to hazard and danger in the present Expedition against the Scottish Army, and by the occasion of the War, your Revenue is much wasted, your Subjects burthened with Coat and Conduct Money, Billetting of Souldiers, and other Military Charges, and divers Rapines and Disorders committed in several parts in this your Realm, by the Souldiers raised for that Service, and your whole Kingdom become full of fear and discontent.

2. The sundry Innovations in matters of Religion, the Oath and Canons lately imposed upon the Clergy, and other your Majesties Subjects.

3. The great Encrease of Popery, and Implying of Popish Recusants, and others ill affected to the Religion by Law established in places of Power and Trust, and especially commanding of Men and Arms both in the Field and other Counties in this Realm, whereas by the Laws they are not permitted to have Arms in their own Houses.

4. The great mischief which may fall upon this Kingdom, if the Intentions which have been credibly reported, of bringing in of Irish Forces, shall take effect.

5. The urging of Ship-money, and prosecution of some Sheriffs in the Star-Chamber for not levying of it.

6. The heavy Charges of Merchandize to the discouragement of Trade, the multitude of Monopolies, and other Patentees, whereby the Commodities and Manufactures of the Kingdom are much burthened, to the great and universal Grievance of your People.

7. The great grief of your Subjects by the Intermision of Parliaments, in the late former dissolving of such as have been Called, with the hoped Effects which otherwise they might have procured.

For a remedy whereof, and prevention of the danger that may ensue to your Royal person, and to the whole State, we do in all humility and faithfulness beseech your most Excellent Majesty that you would be pleased to summon a Parliament within some short and convenient time, whereby the cause of these, and other great Grievances, which your poor Petitioners now lye under, may be taken away, and the Authors and Counsellors of them, may be there brought to such Legal Trial, and condign punishment, as the nature of the offence does require, and that the present War may be composed by your Majesties wisdom without Bloodshed, in such manner as may conduce to the honour and safety of your Majesties person, and content of your People, and continuance of both of your Kingdoms against the common Enemy of the Reformed Religion.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of your Majesties Subjects the Citizens of London.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

BEING moved with the Duty and Obedience which by the Laws your Petitioners owe unto your Sacred Majesty, they humbly present unto your Princely and pious wisdom, the several pressing grievances following; viz.

1. The pressing and unusual Impositions upon Merchandize, Importing, and Exporting, and the urging and Levying of Ship-money, notwithstanding both which, Merchants Ships and Anno 1640. and Goods have been taken and destroyed both by Turkish and other Pirates.

2. The multitude of Monopolies, Patents, and Warrants whereby Trade in the City, and other parts of the Kingdom, is much decayed.

3. The sundry Innovations in matter of Religion.

4. The Oath and Canons lately enjoined by the late Convocation, whereby your Petitioners are in danger to be deprived of their Ministers.

5. The great concourse of Papists, and their Inhabitations in London, and the Suburbs, whereby they have more means and opportunity of plotting and executing their designs against the Religion established.

6. The seldom Calling, and sudden Dissolutions of Parliaments, without the redress of your Subjects Grievances.

7. The Imprisonment of divers Citizens for Non-payment of Ship-money, and Impositions, and the prosecution of many others in the Star-Chamber, for not conforming themselves to Committees in Patents of Monopolies, whereby Trade is restrained.

8. The great danger your Sacred Person is exposed unto in the present War, and the various fears that seized upon your Petitioners, and their Families by reason thereof, which grievances and fears have occasioned so great a stop and distraction in Trade, that your Petitioners can neither Buy, Sell, Receive, or Pay as formerly, and tends to the utter ruin of the Inhabitants of the City, the decay of Navigation and Cloathing, and the Manufactures of this Kingdom.

Your humble Petitioners conceiving that the said Grievances are contrary to the Laws of this Kingdom, and finding by Experience that they are not redressed by the ordinary Course of Justice, do therefore most humbly beseech your most Sacred Majesty to cause a Parliament to be Summoned with all convenient speed, whereby they may be relieved in the premises.

And your Petitioners and Loyal Subjects shall ever pray, &c.

Before the delivery of these Petitions, his Majesty had resolved, and had accordingly issued out his Writs for Summoning a great Council of the Peers to convene at York on the 24th day of September following; and therefore for answer to the Peers their Petition, his Majesty commanded them to offer what they had to propose to the aforesaid Council, in order to the honour of his Majesty, and the safety of the Kingdom. And that it may farther appear, that the desires of these Petitioners, and of the Scots themselves, now actual Invaders of this Kingdom, did almost naturally tend to one and the same Centre, viz. the Calling of a Parliament, where they very well knew things must necessarily run high, to the prejudice both of his Majesty and the Church, the retrenchment, if not total ruin of both, which some of these Petitioners aimed at. There comes also a Petition from the Scotch Army, directed to the Earl of Lanerick, Secretary of Scotland, which was delivered to his Majesty, and answered by his Majesty accordingly. The Petition and Answer hereafter follow.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of your Commissioners of the late Parliament, and others of his Majesties most Loyal Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland.

Humbly Sheweth,

That whereas through many sufferings, in this time past, Extream necessity hath constrained us, for our reliefs, and obtaining our humble and just desires, to come into England; where, according to our Intentions formerly delivered, we have in all our Convoy, lived upon our own Means, Victuals and Goods brought along with us; and neither troubling the Peace of the Kingdom of England, nor hurting any of your Majesties Subjects of whatsoever quality in their Persons or Goods, having carried our selves in a most peaceable manner, till we were pressed by strength of Arms to put such forces out of the way, as did without our deservings, and (as some of them at the point of death have confessed) against their own Consciences opposed our peaceable passage at Newburne upon Tyne; and have brought their own blood upon their own heads against our purposes and desires, expressed by Letters sent to them at Newcastle. For preventing of the like, or greater Inconveniencies, and that without further opposition we may come to your Majesties presence, for obtaining from your Majesties Justice and Goodness, full satisfaction to our just Demands, we your Majesties most humble and loyal Subjects, do persist in that most humble and submissive way of petitioning, which we have kept from the beginning, and from the which, no provocation of your Majesties Enemies and ours, no Adversity we have hitherto sustained, no prosperous success that can befall us, shall be able to divert our minds; most humbly entreating, that your Majesty would in the depth of your Royal Wisdom consider at least our pressing Grievances, and provide for the repair of our wrongs and losses, and with the Advice of the States of the Kingdom of England, convened by Parliament, settle a firm and durable Peace against all Invasions by Sea and Land.

That we may with Cheerfulness of heart pay unto your Majesty, as our Native King, all Duty and Obedience, that can be expected from Loyal Subjects; and that against the many and great Evils which at this time threaten both Kingdoms, whereat all your Majesties good Loyal and Loving Subjects tremble to think, and which we unanimously beseech God Almighty might to avert; that your Majesties Throne may be established in the midst of us in Religion and Righteousness.

And your Majesties Answer we humbly desire, and earnestly wait for.

At the Court at York, Sept. 5.
1640.

His Majesty's Answer thereunto

His Majesty hath seen and considered this within-written Petition, and is graciously pleased to return this Answer by me, That he finds it in such General Terms, that till you express the particulars of your Desires, his Majesty can give no direct Answer thereunto: wherefore his Majesty requireth, that you would set down the particulars of your Demands with expedition; he having been always ready to redress the Grievances of his People. And for the mature deliberation of the weighty Affairs, his Majesty hath already given out Summons for the meeting of the Peers of this Kingdom in the City of York, the Twenty fourth day of this Month, that with the Advice of the Peers, you may receive such Answer to your Petition, as shall most tend to his honour, and the peace and welfare of his Dominions. And in the mean time, if Peace be that you so much desire, as you pretend he expects, and by this his Majesty commands, that you advance no further with your Army into these parts, which is the only means that is left for the present to preserve Peace between the two Nations, and to bring these unhappy Differences into a Reformation; which none is more desirous of than his most sacred Majesty.

Lanercik.

Great were the oppressions of his Majesties Subjects in the County of Northumberland and Bishoprick of Durham, each of which were assessed at 300 l. per diem, upon pain of plundering; whilst in the mean time, according to the Scotch mode of mercy, they permitted their Souldiers to rife Houses, break up Shops, and to act what other Insolencies they pleased; but more particularly the pious and learned Dr. Morton, Lord Bishop of Durham, the Dean of that Church, and all the Episcopal Clergies Lands, having been heretofore used and put to superstitious uses, were seized for the use of the Scotch Army, an action much applauded, and very grateful to our English Presbyterians, whose interests were the same, and actions had now openly the same tendency. Thus luckily went on every thing in England for the promotion of the Scotch designs; but an unlucky accident from Scotland did somewhat abate the tumour of their success: For the Earl of Hodington, a Covenanter, who commanded as Major General in Lowbrian, having regain'd some pieces of Cannon taken by the English Garrison of Berwick, which had been left as useless by Lesley at Dunse, and having convey'd them to Dungleffe, was the next day slain with twenty more Knights and Gentlemen in the midst of his Court by the Stones which flew from a Vault near adjoining, which it seems was then casually blown up with the Ammunition in it.

The Earl of Strafford was very desirous, and several times did advise his Majesty to have put an end to these Commotions by the decision of Battel, which in all likelihood might have prevented the ensuing Troubles; but the King was loth to run the hazard, not knowing how to recruit himself if worsted, unless he should condescend as much, or more, to his own Subjects in the ensuing Parliament, which was now resolved upon by the advice of the Peers convened at York, whither the Peers were summoned to attend his Majesty, where on the 24th of September, his Majesty spake as followeth.

Car. 16.

His Majesties Speech to his Great Council of Peers assembled at York, Septemb. 24. 1640.

My Lords,

UPon sudden Invasions where the dangers are near and instant, it hath been the custom of my Predecessors to assemble the Great Council of the Peers, and by their advice and assistance, to give a timely remedy to such Evils, which could not admit a delay so long, as must of necessity be allowed for the Assembling of the Parliament.

This being our Condition at this time, and an Army of Rebels lodged within this Kingdom, I thought it most fit to conform my self to the practice of my Predecessors in like cases; that with your advice and assistance We might justly proceed to the Chastisement of these Insolencies, and securing of my good Subjects.

In the first place, I must let you know, that I desire nothing more, than to be rightly understood of my people. And to that end, I have of my self resolved to call a Parliament; having already given order to my Lord Keeper to issue the Writs instantly, so that the Parliament may be assembled by the third of November next: Whither if my Subjects bring those good affections, which become them towards me, it shall not fail on my part to make it a happy meeting. In the meantime, there are two points wherein I shall desire your advice, which indeed were the chief cause of your meeting.

First, What answer to give to the Petition of the Rebels, and in what manner to treat with them? Of which, that you may give a sure Judgment, I have ordered, that your Lordships shall be clearly and truly informed of the State of the whole business, and upon what reasons the advices that my Privy Council unanimously gave me, were grounded.

The second is, How my Army shall be kept on foot and maintained, until the Supplies of a Parliament may be had? For so long as the Scotch Army remains in England, I think no man will counsel me to duband mine: For that would be an unspeakable loss to all this part of the Kingdom, by subjecting them to the greedy appetite of the Rebels, besides the unspeakable dishonour that would thereby fall upon this Nation.

Here his Majesty, by the Earl of Traquair, made known how unreasonable the Scotch Commissioners demands, made at Lowdon, and acknowledged by the Lord Lowdon, were, as that they subverted the fundamental Laws of that Kingdom, the prerogative and dignity of the King, and the very Constitution of the Parliament itself. Secondly, the Scots Petition, heretofore mentioned to be sent to the Secretary of Scotland, Anno 1640. Scotland, was read and communicated to the Peers, as were also the Petitions of the County Palatine of Durham, presented to the Assembly by the Bishop of Durham, complaining of their oppression from the Scots. The third thing under debate was, the subsistence of the English Army until the Convention of the Parliament, which, as you have heard, his Majesty of himself had resolved should meet on the Third of November following. The debates upon these great Affairs produced a Treaty at Rippon with the Scots. The Commissioners for the English were eight Earls, Bedford, Hertford, Essex, Salisbury, Warwick, Bristol, Holland, Berkshire; and eight Lords, Mandevill, Wharton, Pages, Brook, Pawlet, Howard, Savile, Dunmore; to whom, for information and assistance, were added by his Majesty the Earls of Traquaire, Morton, and Lanerike, Secretary Vane, Sir Lewis Steward, and Sir John Burrough. This Treaty his Majesty had reason to believe might have done very much to the appeasing and quieting of all Discontents, as well as to the prevention of the ruin of the Northern Counties, which lay under the oppression, and at the mercy of the Scotch Army. This Treaty should have begun at York, but the Scots objected, That the Earl of Strafford's presence, who was declared by them to be their grand Enemy, might retard the proceedings thereof. Hereupon Rippon is the place agreed on, where Commissioners for both Parties met, the Scots again excepting at the presence of the Earl of Traquaire, for that they termed him an Incendiary, and what not? They were answered, That he being a Person well knowing in the Laws of Scotland, and of the Actions now in debate, was present, and might be, though not as a Commissioner; which satisfied those of Scotland: And so the Treaty proceeded, which had likely to have broken off upon a Preliminary insisted upon by the Scots, which was, That they desired to know how their Army must be maintained until the Peace was concluded and secured, till which time they were not willing to grant any Cessation. Hereat the Noble Earl of Strafford was highly incensed, and again desires leave of his Majesty to fight them, no way doubting but that he should have been able to have driven them back again into Scotland; and indeed his Glory, as well as safety, did herein consist: But contrary counsels were followed, to the great regret of that Noble Earl. And so it was deemed meet by the Noble men and Counsellors of the adverse party, to the infamy of our Nation, That the Scotch Army should be paid and maintained by the English Purse. These were the Counsels and Actions which were the ruin of that great Personage. The other point under debate was, How the English Army was to be maintained until the Parliaments convention? Hereupon the state of the Army being declared by the Earl of Strafford, the Lieutenant General thereof, it was computed, that for three Months time 200000 l. was required for the pay thereof; which was resolved to be borrowed of the City of London, and the Peers were desired by Bond to secure the same to the City: And for the days of repayment, the Peers were to confer with the Officers of his Majesties Revenue. Hereupon the Lords wrote to the City of London accordingly.

Upon the Sixteenth of October following, the ensuing Articles were by the Commissioners on both sides agreed upon at Rippon.

1. That there be a Cessation of Arms, both by Sea and Land, from this present.

2. That all Acts of Hostility do henceforth cease.

3. That both Parties shall peaceably return, during the Treaty, whatsoever they possess at the time of the Cessation.

4. That all such persons who lived in any of his Majesties Forts beyond the River of Tees, shall not exempt their Lands which lie within the Counties of Northumberland and the Bishoprick, from such Contributions as shall be laid upon them for the payment of eight hundred and fifty pounds per diem.

5. That none of the King's Forces upon the other side of Tees, shall give any impediment to such contributions, as are already allowed for the competency of the Scotch Army, and shall fetch no Victuals nor Forrage out of their bounds, except that which the Inhabitants and Owners thereof shall bring voluntarily unto them, and that any restraints or detention of Victuals, Cattle, or Forrage, which shall be made by the Scots within those bounds for their maintenance, shall be no breach.

6. That no recruit shall be brought into either Armies, from the time of Cessation, and during the Treaty.

7. That the Contribution of Eight hundred and fifty pounds per diem, shall be only raised out of the Counties of Northumberland, Bishoprick, Town of Newcastle, Cumberland and Westmerl. And that the Not-payment thereof, shall be no breach of the Treaty, but the Countries and Towns shall be left to the Scots power to raise the same, but not to exceed the Sum agreed upon, unless it be for charges of driving, to be set by a prizor of the Forrage.

8. That the River of Tees shall be the bounds of both Armies, (excepting always the Town and Castle of Seockton, and the Village of Eggscliffe) and the Countries of Northumberland and Bishoprick be the limits, within which the Scottish Army is to reside, having liberty for them to send such Convoys as shall be necessary for the gathering up only of the Contribution, which shall be unpaid by the Counties of Northumberland and Cumberland.

9. That if any person commit any private infolence, it shall be no breach of our Treaty, if, upon complaint made by either parties, reparation and punishment be granted.

10. If Victuals be desired upon the price which shall be agreed upon, and ready Money offered for the same, and refused, it shall be no breach of the Cessation to take such Victuals, paying such prices.

11. No new Fortifications to be made during the Treaty, against either parties.

12. That the Subjects of both Kingdoms may in their Trade of Commerce freely pass to and fro, without any stay at all; but it is particular-ly Anno 1640. ly provided, That no Member of either Army passe without a formal Pass, under the hands of the General, or of him that commands in chief.

To these Capitulations, which had so great an influence upon the Life of the great Earl of Strafford, he was said to be consenting; and herein some very much question his prudence, for that he very well knew, What (as one discourseth, whether well or ill, is left to the Reader's judgment) the Scots had in design against him, they had already verbally declared, if not, the language of their actions was express enough; a fair warning for him to seek some place of more secure retreat, and Ireland especially, where he had the temptation of well-disciplin'd Souldiers ready to obey his command, and attend his conduct. Had he observed the dictates of this advantage, and stood upon a military defence, possibly he might have fought them into other resolutions; and had he been defeated, yet might he then have resorted for refuge to some forraign Land; whereas his repair to London was in effect, a rendering up of himself captive to the will of his deadliest enemies, that City being now turned perfect Scotch, and (as to inclination) more theirs then his Majesties Subjects. Two things may be said in his excuse: First, He was opinionated of his own Innocence, and Innocence usually makes men bold and daring. True, but not always safe. For where ignorance, malice prepossessed, self-interest, passion, all or any one invades the Throne of Justice (a thing not very rare) the just man runs a great hazard of unjust sentence. Again, flight imports a seeming faultiness: True this also, and so doth Condemnation, under which, though never so injurious, the guiltless suffer as guilty. And therefore it is the greater wisdom, and not the greater blemish, where both are at election, to live, than die a suspected Delinquent.

At this Treaty of Rippon it was, That the Noble Earl of Montrose first discovered his secret Faith and Loyalty to his Prince, having before sufficiently smelt out the rancidity and evil favour of the Covenanters intentions, and he found himself only made use of, and managed by other persons for their own, and to evil ends. The occasion thus; At his return from his Travels in France, where by the King's favour he had commanded the Scots Guard, he was recommended for his Sovereign favour and preferment to the Lord Marques of Hamilton, who fearing a competitor, upon knowledge and experience of Montrose his worth and gallantry, cunningly dissuades him from any farther applications, for that his Majesty had no kindness for his natural Subjects, the Scots; and intended to reduce their Nation to a Province; the young Lord hereby inflamed against his Majesty, and not permitted by Hamilton's contrivance (possessing his Majesty with the danger of the power and popularity of Montrose, being by his ancient descent of the Royal Family of Scotland) to kill the King's hand, his Majesty turning sideways from him, hereupon in passion he posts for Scotland, where he found all things fitted for his resentments, & here he becomes a principal Lord amongst the Covenanters, and hearty in their Service till his Conviction, which was about the time of the foregoing Pacification, Anno Dom. 1639. From thenceforward he dissembled his intentions, thinking to signalize his Fidelity to his Prince and the sincerity of his Conviction by some eminent Service; which he not having any opportunity, he writes to his Majesty at Tork, and with his own hand ascertains his Faith to his Majesty. These Letters it seems were by Hamilton's Agents about the King, stol'n at Night out of the King's Pocket, copied out, and communicated to the Covenanters at Newcastle, who concealing their information, laboured underhand to render the Earl odious to the People, and thereby unserviceable to his Majesty.

This was not (saith Mr. Sanderfon) the last exercise of some Bed-chamber-men, and they Scots, betraying his most secret Dispatches. And hereupon it was, says another Author, that the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, writing to his Majesty about the Popish Plot designed against the Life of his Sacred Majesty, as well as of that Renowned Archbishop, said, Sir, for God's sake and your own Safety, secrecy, I beseech you send me back this Letter, and all that comes with it, speedily and secretly, and trust not your own Pockets with them; I shall not eat nor sleep in quiet till I receive them.

And in regard there is and hath been much Discourse of this grand Popish Design and Plot against his Majesty, and the Religion of the Church of England, as then flourishing and established by Law, as well as against the Life of that great Archbishop, the victorious Champion thereof, give me leave to acquaint our Reader, That the Plot was first discovered to Sir William Boswell, Ambassadour for his Majesty at the Hague, and by him communicated to his Grace, by whom it was made known to his Majesty; as followeth.

Sir William Boswell's first Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury concerning the Plot.

May it please your Grace,

THE offers (whereof your Grace will find a Copy) here enclosed towards a further and more particular Discovery, were first made unto me at the second hand, and in speech, by a Friend of good quality and worth in this place; but soon after (as soon as they could be put into order) were received by the Principal Party; and delivered me in Writing by both together, upon Promise and Oath, which I was required to give, and gave accordingly, not to reveal the same to any other man living but your Grace, and by your Graces hand unto his Majesty.

In like manner they have tied themselves not to declare these things unto any other but my self, until they should know how his Majesty and your Grace would dispose thereof. The Principal giving me wishal to know, that he puts himself and this Secret into your Graces Power, as well because it concerns your Grace so nearly after his Majesty, as that he knows your Wisdom to guide the same aright, and is assured of your Grace's Fidelity to his Majesties Person, to our State and to our Church.

First, Your Grace is humbly and earnestly pressed to signify his Majesties Pleasure (with all possible speed) together with your Graces Disposition, intention and purpose to carry all with silence from all but his Majesty until due time.

Anno

1640.

Secondly, When your Graces shall think fit to shew these things unto his Majesty, to do it immediately, not trusting to Letters, or permitting any other Person to be by or in Hearing; And to overeat and counsel his Majesty as in a Case of Conscience to keep the same wholly and solely in his own Bosom, from the knowledge of all other Creatures living but your Grace; until the business shall be clear, and sufficiently in his Majesties and your Graces hands to effect.

Thirdly, Not to Enquire or Demand the Names of the Parties from whom these Overtures do come, or any further Discoveries and Advertisements in Pursuit of them which shall come hereafter, until due Satisfaction shall be given in every part of them. Nor to betray unto any Person but his Majesty in any measure or kind, that any thing of this nature, or of any great Importance is come from me.

For as I may believe, these Overtures are Verifiable in the way they will be laid, and that the Parties will not shrink; so I make account that if never so little a glimpse or shadow of these Informations shall appear by his Majesties or your Graces speech or carriage unto others, the means whereby the business may be brought best unto Trial will be utterly disappointed; and the Parties, who have in Conscience towards God, and Devotion to his Majesty, affection to your Grace, and Compassion of your Country, disclosed these things, will run a present and extreame hazard of their Persons and Lives. So easily it will be conjectured (upon the least occasion given upon his Majesties or your Graces parts) who is the Discoverer; by what means, and how he knows so much of these things, and where he is: These are the Points, which together with the offers they have pressed me especially to represent most seriously unto your Grace.

For my own particular, having most humbly craved pardon of any Error or Omissions, that have befallen me in the Messaging of this business, I do beseech your Grace to let me know;

First, Whether, and in what order I shall proceed hereafter with the Parties?

Secondly, What points of these offers I shall chiefly and first put them to enlarge and clear?

Thirdly, What other points and enquiries I shall propose unto them, and in what manner?

Fourthly, How far further I shall suffer my self to hear and know these things?

Fifthly, Whether I shall not rather take the Parties Answers and Discoveries sealed up by themselves, and having likewise put my own Seal upon them, without questioning what they contain, so to transmit them to his Majesty or your Grace?

Sixthly, Whether I may not insinuate upon some fair occasions, that there will be a due regard held of them and their Service, by his Majesty and your Grace, when all Particulars undertaken in these General Offers, and necessary for Perfection of the discovery and work intended, shall be effectually delivered to his Majesty or your Grace?

Upon these Heads, and such other as his Majesty and your Grace shall think proper in the business, I must with all humility beseech your Grace to furnish me with Instructions, and Warrant for my Proceedings under his Majesties hand with your Graces attestation, as by his Majesties goodness and Royal disposition is usual in like cases.

May it please your Grace to entertain a Cypher with me upon this occasion, I have sent the Counterpart of one here enclosed: In the vacant spaces whereof your Grace may insert such Names more, with Numbers to them, as you think requisite.

If these Overtures happily sort with his Majesties and your Graces mind, and shall accordingly prove effectual in their operation, I shall think my self a most happy man to have had my Oblations in so Pious a Work for my most Gracious Sovereign and Master: More particularly, in that your Grace under his Majesty shall be, Opifex rerum & mundi melioris origo. Which I shall incessantly beg in my Prayers at his hands, who is the giver of all good things, and will never forsake or fail them, who do not first fail and fall from him, The God of all Mercy and Peace, with which I shall remain ever

Your Graces most Dutiful

and Obligated Servant,

William Boswell.

I have not dared more to trust this business without a Cypher, but by a sure hand, for which I have sent this Bearer my Secretary Express, but he knoweth nothing of the Contents hereof.

Sir William Boswell's Endorsement.

For your Grace. Hague in Holland, Sept. 9. 1640. Styl. loci.

The Archbishops Endorsement with his own hand.

Received Sept. 20. 1640. Sir William Boswell's Letter about the Plot against the King.

Andreas ab Habernfield his Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, concerning the Plot revealed to him, Dated at the Hague, Septemb. 14. New Style, 1640. which he sent enclosed in Sir William Boswell's first Letter, Septemb. 14. 1640.

Most Illustrious and most Reverend Lord,

ALL my Senses are shaken together as often as I revolve the present business, neither doth my Understanding suffice to conceive what wind hath brought such horrid things, that they should see the Sun-shine by me; for besides expectation this good man became known unto me, who when he had heard me discoursing of these Scottish stirs, said, that I knew not the Nerve of the business, that these things which are commonly scattered abroad

Anno

are superficial. From that hour he every day became more familiar to me, who acknowledging my Dexterity herein with a full breast poured forth the burdens of his Heart into my bosom, supposing that he had discharged a burden of Conscience wherewith he was pressed. Hence he related to me the Factions of the Jesuits, with which the whole earthly world was assaulted, and shewed, that I might behold how through their poison, Bohemia and Germany were devoured, and both of them maimed with an irreparable wound; that the same Plague did creep through the Realms of England and Scotland, the matter whereof revealed in the adjacent writing he discovered to me: Which things having heard, my Bowels were contracted together, my Loins trembled with horror that a pernicious Gulf should be prepared for so many thousands of Souls, with words moving the Conscience; I inflamed the mind of the man, he had scarce one hour concocted my admonitions but he disclosed all the secrets, and he gave free liberty that I should treat with those whom it concerned, that they might be informed hereof. I thought no delay was to be made about the things; the same hour I went to Sir William Boswell the King's Leger at the Hague, who being tied with an Oath of Secrecie to me, I communicated the business to him, I admonished him to weigh these things by the ballance, neither to defer but act, that those who were in danger might be speedily succoured; He, as becomes an honest man, mindful of his duty, and having nearer looked into the business, refused not to obey the motions; moreover he forthwith caused that an Express should be dispatched, and sent word back again what a most acceptable Oblation this had been to the King and your Grace, for which we rejoiced from the Heart, and we judged that a safe and favourable Deity had interposed it self in this business, whereby you might be preserved.

Now that the verity of the things related might be confirmed, some principal Heads of the Conspiracy were purposely pretermitted, that the knowledge of them might be extorted from the circumvented Society of the Conspirators.

Now the things will be speedily and safely promoted into Act, if they be warily proceeded in at Brussels. By my advice, that day should be observed wherein the Packet of Letters are dispatched, which under the title of, to Monsr. Strario Arch-Deacon of Cambray, tied with one Cover are delivered to the Post-Master; such a Packet may be secretly brought back from him, yet it will be unprofitable, because all the inclosed Letters are written Characteristically: Likewise another Packet coming weekly from Rome, which is brought under this Subscription, To the most Illustrious Lord Count Rosetti, Legat for the time; these are not to be neglected; to whom likewise Letters writ in the same Character are included; That they may be understood, Read is to be consulted with. The forenamed day of dispatch shall be expected: In Read's House an accumulated Congregation may be circumvented, which succeeding, it will be your Graces part to order the business. The intestine Enemy being at length detected by God's Grace, all bitterness of mind which is caused on either side, may be abolished, delivered to Oblivion, deleted and quieted, the Enemy be invaded on both parts: Thus the King, and the King's Friends, and both Kingdoms near to danger shall be preserved, delivered from eminent danger.

Your Grace likewise may have this Injunction by you, if you desire to have the best advice given you by others, that you trust not overmuch to your Pursevents, for some of them live under the stipend of the Popish party; How many Rocks and how many Scylla's, how many displeasing Charybdes appear before your Grace, in what a dangerous Sea the Cockboat of your Graces life, next to Shipwrack is tossed, your self may judge, the Foredeck of the Ship is speedily to be driven to the Harbour.

All these things I whisper into your Graces ear, for I know it bound with an Oath of Secrecie, therefore by open Name I would by these presents become known to your Grace,

Andreas ab Habernfeld, a Physician or Chaplain (as some affirm) to the Queen of Bohemia, His Endorsement hereon, Illustrissimo ac Reverendissimo Dom. Domino Gulielmo Archiepiscopo Cantuariensi, Primati & Metropolitano totius Regni Angliæ, Domino meo.

The Archbishops Endorsement with his own hand,

Received Octob. 14. 1640. Andreas ab Habernfeld his Letters sent by Sir William Boswell about the Discovery of the Treason.

The General Overture and Discovery of the Plot sent with Sir William Boswell's first Letter, Sept. 6. 1640. Foreign Stile.

THE King's Majesty and Lord Archbishop of Canterbury are to be secretly informed by Letters,

1. That the King's Majesty and Lord Archbishop are both of them in great danger of their lives.

2. That the whole Commonwealth is by this means endangered, unless the mischief be speedily prevented.

3. That these Scottish troubles are raised, to the end, that under this pretext the King and Archbishop might be destroyed.

4. That there is a means to be prescribed, whereby both of them in this case may be preserved, and this tumult speedily composed.

5. That although these Scottish Tumults be speedily composed, yet that the King is endangered, and that there are many ways by which destruction is plotted to the King and Lord Archbishop.

Qqqqq 2

6. That

Anno 1640.

6. That a certain Society hath conspired, which attempts the death of the King and Lord Archbishop, and Convulsion of the whole Realm.

7. That the same Society every Week deposits with the President of the Society, what intelligence every of them hath purchased in eight days search, and then confer all into one Packet, which is weekly sent to the Director of the business.

8. That all the Confederates in the said Conspiracy may verily be named by the Poll, but because they may be made known by other means, it is thought meet to defer it till hereafter.

9. That there is a ready means whereby the Villany may be discovered in one Moment, the chief Conspirators circumvented, and the primary Members of the Conjuratation apprehended in the very Act.

10. That very many about the King, who are accounted most faithful and intimate, to whom likewise the more secret things are intrusted, are Traytours to the King, corrupted with a Forreign Pension, who communicate all secrets of greater or lesser moment to a Forreign Power.

11. These, and other most secret things, which shall be necessary for the security of the King, may be revealed if these things shall be acceptable to the Lord Archbishop.

12. In the meantime, if his Royal Majesty, and the Lord Archbishop desire to consult well to themselves, they shall keep these things only superficially communicated unto them, most secretly under deep silence, not communicating them so much as to those whom they judge most faithful to them, before they shall receive by name in whom they may confide, for else they are safe on no side. Likewise they may be assured, that whatever things are here proposed are no Figments, nor Fables, nor vain dreams, but such real verities, which may be demonstrated in every small tittle, for those who thrust themselves into this business, are such men who mind no gain, but the very Zeal of Christian Charity suffers them not to conceal these things, yet both from his Majesty and the Lord Archbishop some small Exemplar of Gratitude will be expected.

All these Premises have been communicated under good Faith, and the Sacrament of an Oath, to Mr. Leiger Ambassadour of the King of Great Britain at the Hague, that he should not immediately trust, or communicate these things to any Mortal, besides the King and the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Archbishops own Endorsement, Received Sept. 10. 1640. The Plot against the King.

The Archbishop of Canterbury's Letter to the King concerning the Plot, with the King's Direction in the Margent, written with his own Hand.

May it please your Grace,

AS great as the secret is which comes herewith, yet I choose rather to send it in this silent covert away, and I hope safe, than to come thither, and bring it my self. First, Because I am no way able to make haste enough with it. Secondly, Because should I come at this time and antedate the meeting Sept. 24. there would be more jealousy of the business, and more enquiry after it, especially, if I being once there, should return again before that day, as I must if this be followed, as is most fit.

The Danger it seems is imminent, and laid by God knows whom, but to be executed by them which are very near about you (for the great honour which I have to be in danger with you, or for you, I pass not, so your Sacred Person and the State may be safe.) Now may it please your Majesty, This Information is either true, or there is some mistake in it: If it be true, the persons which make the Discovery will deserve thanks and reward; if there should be any mistake in it, your Majesty can lose nothing but a little silence.

The business (if it be) is extream foul; The discovery thus by God's Providence offered, seems fair. I do hereby humbly beg it upon my knees of your Majesty, that you will conceal this business from every Creature and his Name that sends this to me. And I send his Letters to me to your Majesty, that you may see his sense both of the Business and the Secresie. And such Instructions as you think fit to give him, I beseech you let them be in your own Hand for his Warrant without imparting them to any. And if your Majesty leave it to his discretion to follow it therein in the best way he can, that in your own Hand will be Instruction and Warrant enough for him. And if you please to return it herewith presently to me, I will send an Express away with it presently.

Afternoon, and now I make this Dispatch before I sleep. Herewith I send his Warrant as you advise, which indeed I judge to be the better way.

In the mean time I have by this Express returned him this Answer, That I think he shall do well to hold on the Treaty with these men with all care and secresie, and drive on to the Discovery so soon as the business is ripe for it, that he may assure himself and them, they shall not want reward, if they do the Service; That for my part he shall be sure of secresie, and that I am most confident your Majesty will not impart it to any. That he have a special eye to the Eighth and Ninth Proposition.

Sir, for God's sake and your own safety, secresie in this business: And I beseech you send me back this Letter, and all that comes with it, speedily and secretly, and trust not your own Pockets with them, I shall not eat nor sleep in quiet till I receive them. And so soon as I have you to proceed, especially when I expressly command you to do so, them them again, and your Majesties Warrant to proceed, no diligence shall be wanting in me to help on the Discovery.

This is the greatest Business that ever was put to me; And if I have herein proposed or done any thing amiss, I most humbly crave your Majesties pardon. But I am willing to hope I have not herein erred in Judgment, and in Fidelity I never will.

These Letters came to me (saith the Archbishop) on Thursday, Septemb. 10. at Night, and I sent these away according to the Date hereof, being extreemly wearied with writing this Letter, copying out these other which come with this, and dispatching my Letters back to him that sent these, all in my own hand; once again secesie for God's sake, and your own: To his most blessed protection I commend your Majesty and all your Affairs, and am

Car. 16.

May it please your Grace,

Upon Receipt of his Majesties Commands, with your Graces Letters of 9 and 18 Sept. last, I dealt with the Party to make good his offers formerly put in my hand, and transmitted to your Grace; This he hopes to have done by the enclosed, so far as will be needful for his Majesties satisfaction; yet if any more Particular Explanation of Discovery shall be Required by his Majesty or your Grace, He hath promised to add: hereunto, whatsoever he can remember and know of truth. And for better Assurance and Verification of his Integrity, he professeth himself ready (if required) to make Oath of what he hath already declared, or shall hereafter declare in the business.

His name he Conjures me still to conceal, though he thinks his Majesty and your Grace, by the Character he gives of himself, will easily imagine who he is, having been known so generally through Court and City, as he was for three or four years in the Quality and Employment he acknowledgeth (by his Declaration enclosed) himself to have had.

Hereupon he doth also redouble his most humble and earnest Suit unto his Majesty and your Grace to be most Secret and Circumspect in the business, that he may not be suspected to have discovered, or had a hand in the same.

I shall here humbly beseech your Grace to let me know what I may further do for his Majesties Service, or for your Graces particular behoof; that I may accordingly endeavour to approve my self as I am

Which said larger Discovery here followeth:

A large particular Discovery of the Plot and Treason against the King, Kingdom and Protestant Religion, and to raise the Scottish Wars.

Most Illustrious and Reverend Lord,

WE have willingly and cordially perceived that our offers have been acceptable both to his Royal Majesty, and likewise to your Grace. This is the only Index to us, That the blessing of God is present with you, whereby a spur Anno 1640. spur is given, that we should so much the more cheerfully and freely utter & detect those things whereby the hazard of both your lives, the subversion of the Realm and State both of England and Scotland, the tumbling down of his most Excellent Majesty from his Throne is intended. Now lest the Discourse should be enlarged with superfluous Circumstances, we will only premise some things which are meerly necessary to the Business.

They may first of all know, That this good man, by whom the ensuing things are detected, was born and bred in the Popish Religion, who spent many years in Ecclesiastical Dignities. At length being found fit for the expedition of the present Design, by the Counsel and Mandate of the Lord Cardinal Barberino, he was adjoynd to the assistance of Master Cuneus (Con) by whom he was found so diligent and sedulous in his Office, that hope of great promotion was given to him; yet he, led by the instinct of the good Spirit, hath, howsoever it be, contemned sweet promises, and having known the vanities of the Pontifical Religion (of which he had sometimes been a most severe defender) having likewise noted the malice of those who fight under the Popish Banner, felt his Conscience to be burthened; which burden, that he might ease himself of, he converted his mind to the Orthodox Religion. Soon after, that he might exonerate his Conscience, he thought fit, that a desperate Treason machinated against so many souls, was to be revealed, and that he should receive ease if he vented such things into the bosom of a Friend; which done, he was seriously admonished by the said Friend, that he should shew an example of his Conversion and Charity, and free so many innocent souls from imminent danger. To whose monitions he willingly consented, and delivered the following things to be put in writing, out of which the Articles not long since tendered to your Grace, may be clearly explicated and demonstrated.

1. First of all, That the hinge of the Business may be rightly discerned, it is to be known, that all those Factions with which all Christendom is at this day shaken, do arise from the Jesuitical off-spring of Cham, of which four Orders abound throughout the World.

1. Of the first Order are Ecclesiasticks, whose Office is to take care of things promoting Religion.

2. Of the second Order are Politicians, whose Office it is by any means to shake, trouble, reform the state of Kingdoms and Republics.

3. Of the third Order are Seculars, whose property it is to obtrude themselves into Offices with Kings and Princes, to insinuate and immix themselves in Court-businesses, Bargains and Sales, and to be busied in Civil Affairs.

4. Of the fourth Order are Intelligencers, (or Spies) men of inferiour condition, who submit themselves to the services of the Great Men, Princes, Barons, Noblemen, Citizens, to deceive (or corrupt) the minds of their Masters.

2. A Society of so many Orders, the Kingdom of England nourisheth: For scarce all Spain, France, and Italy can yield so great a multitude of Jesuits as London alone; where are found more than fifty Scottish Jesuits. There the said Society hath elected to it self a seat of iniquity, and hath conspired against the King, and the most faithful to the King, especially the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and likewise against both Kingdoms.

3. For it is more certain than certainty it self, that the fore-named Society hath determined to effect an universal Reformation of the Kingdom of England and Scotland. Therefore the determination of the end, necessarily infers a determination of means to the end.

4. Therefore to promote the undertaken Villany, the said Society dubbed it self with the Title of, The Congregation of propagating the Faith; which acknowledgeth the Pope of Rome the Head of the Colledge, and Cardinal Barberino his Substitute and Executor.

5. The Chief Patron of the Society at London, is the Pope's Legat, who takes care of the Business; into whose bosome, these dreggs of Traytors weekly deposite all their Intelligences. Now the Residence of this Legation was obtained at London in the Name of the Roman Pontife, by whose mediation it might be lawful for Cardinal Barberino, to work so much the more easily and safely upon the King and Kingdom. For none else could so freely circumvent the King, as he who should be palliated with the Popes Authority.

6. Master Cuneus did at that time enjoy the Office of the Popes Legate, an universal Instrument of the conjured Society, and a serious promoter of the business, whose secrets, as likewise those of all the other Intelligencers, the present good man, the Communicator of all these things, did receive and expedite whither the business required. *His name was said to be George Con, and a Scotchman, but whether he had any Commission for Legacy, not known, at least would not be acknowledged by the Papists;

Cuneus set upon the chief men of the Kingdom, and left nothing unattempted, by what means he might corrupt them all, and incline them to the Pontifical party: He inticed many with various inticements; yea, he sought to delude the King himself with gifts of Pictures, Antiquities, Idols, and of other vanities brought from Rome, which yet would prevail nothing with the King.

Having entred familiarity with the King he is often requested at Hampton Court, likewise at London, to undertake the cause of the Palatine, and that he would interpose his Authority, and by his intercession perswade the Legat of Colan, that the Palatine in the next Diet to treat of peace, might be inserted into the conditions, which verily he promised, but performed the contrary. He writ indeed, that he had been so desired by the King concerning such things, yet he advised not that they should be consented to, lest peradventure it might be said by the Spaniard, that the Pope of Rome had Patronized an Heretical Prince.

In the meantime, Cuneus smelling from the Archbishop most trusty to the King, that the King's mind was wholly pendulous (or doubtful) resolved that he would move very stone, and apply his forces, that he might gain him to his party: Certainly confiding, that he had a means pre-

Anno. 1640. prepared, for he had a command to offer a Cardinals Cap to the Lord Archbishop in the name of the Pope of Rome; and that he should allure him also with higher promises, that he might corrupt his sincere mind. Yet a fitting occasion was never given whereby he might insinuate himself into the Lord Archbishop (for the Scorpion sought an egg). Free access was to be impetrated by the Earl and Countess of Arundel, likewise by Secretary Windbank: The intercession of all which being neglected, he did fly the company or familiarity of Curwen, worse then the Plague: He was likewise perswaded by others of no mean rank, well known to him, neither yet was he moved.

7. Another also was assayed who hindred access to the detestable wickedness, Secretary Cook, he was a most bitter hater of the Jesuites, from whom he intercepted access to the King, he entertained many (of them) according to their deserts, he diligently enquired into their Factions; by which means every incitement breathing a magnetical (attractive) power to the Popish party, was ineffectual with him; for nothing was so dear unto him that might incline him to Wickedness: Hereupon being made odious to the Patrons of the Conspiracy, he was endangered to be discharged from his Office; it was laboured for three years space, and at last obtained. Yet notwithstanding there remained on the King's part a Knot hard to be untied, for the Lord Archbishop by his Constancy, interposed himself as a most hard Rock.

When Curwen had understood from the Lord Archbishop's part, that he had laboured in vain, his malice and the whole Societies waxed boiling hot: Soon after Ambushes began to be prepared, wherewith the Lord Archbishop, together with the King should be taken.

Likewise a sentence is passed against the King (for whose sake all this business is disposed) because nothing is hoped from him, which might seem to promote the Popish Religion (but especially when he had opened his mind, that he was of this opinion, that every one might be saved in his own Religion, so as he be an honest pious man.)

8. To perpetrate the Treason undertaken, the Criminal execution at Westminster caused by some writings of Puritans, gave occasion of the first fire; which thing was so much exasperated and exaggerated by the Papists to the Puritans, that if it remained unrevenge, it would be thought a blemish to their Religion, the flames of which fire, the subsequent Book of Prayers encreases.

9. In this heat a certain Scottish Earl, called Maxwell, if I mistake not, was expedited to the Scots by the Popish party; with whom two other Scottish Earls, Papists, held correspondence: He ought to stir up the People to Commotion, and rub over the injury afresh, that he might enflame their minds, precipitate them to Armes, by which the hurtful disturber of the Scottish Liberty might be slain.

10. There, by one labour, snares are prepared for the King: For this purpose the present Business was so ordered, that very many of the English should adhere to the Scots; That the King should remain inferior in Arms, who (thereupon) should be compelled to crave assistance from the Papists; which yet he should not obtain, unless he would condescend unto Conditions, by which he should permit universal Liberty of the exercise of the Popish Religion; for so the affairs of the Papists would succeed according to their desire. To which consent, if he should shew himself more difficult, there should be a present remedy at hand: For the King's Son growing now very fast to his youthful Age (who is educated from his tender Age, that he might accustom himself to the Popish party) the King is to be dispatched; for an Indian Nut, stuffed with most sharp poyson, is kept in the Society (which Curwen at that time shewed often to me in a boasting manner) where in a poyson was prepared for the King, after the example of his Father.

11. In this Scottish Commotion, the Marquess of Hamilton was often dispatched to the Scots in the name of the King, to interpose the Royal Authority, whereby the heat of minds might be mitigated, returned notwithstanding as often without fruit, and without ending the Business: His Chaplain at that time repaired to us, who communicated something secretly with Curwen. Being demanded of me in jest, whether also the Jews agreed with the Samaritans, Curwen thereunto answered, Would to God all Ministers were such as he. What you will, may be hence conjectured.

12. Things standing thus, there arrived at London from Cardinal Richelieu, Mr. Tbo. Chamberlaine, his Chaplain and Almoner, a Scot by Nation, who ought to assist the Colledge of the Confederate Society, and seriously to set forward the Business, to leave nothing unattempted, whereby the first heat might be exasperated. For which Service he was promised the reward of a Bishoprick: He cohabited with the Society four Months space; neither was it lawful for him first to depart, until things succeeding according to his wish, he might be able to return back again with good News.

13. Sir Toby Mathew, a Jesuited Priest, of the Order of Politicians, a most vigilant man of the chief Heads, to whom a Bed was never so dear, that he would rest his head thereon, refreshing his body with sleep in a Chair for an hour or two, neither day nor night spared his Machinations; a man principally noxious, and himself the Plague of the King and Kingdom of England; a most impudent man, who lies to all Banquets and Feasts, called or not called, never quiet, always in action, a perpetual motion; thrusting himself into all Conversations of Superiours; he urgeth Conferences familiarly, that he may fish out the minds of men; whatever he observeth thence, which may bring any commodity or discommodity to the part of the Conspirators, he communicates to the Pope's Legat; the more secret things he himself writes to the Pope, or to Cardinal Barberino. In sum, he adjoyns himself to any mans company, no word can be spoken that he will not lay hold on, and accommodate to his party. In the mean time, whatever he hath fished out, he reduceth into a Catalogue, and every Summer carryeth or conveyeth it to the general Consistory of the Jesuites Politicks, which secretly meets together in in the Province of Wales, where he is an acceptable Guest. There Counsels are secretly hampered, which are most meet for the Convulsion of the Ecclesiastick and Politick Estate of both Kingdoms.

14. Captain Read a Scot, dwelling in Long-Acre Street, near the Angel Tavern, a Secular Jesuit; in his House the business of the whole Plot is concluded, where the Society which hath conspired against the King, the Lord Archbishop, and both Kingdoms, meet together, for the most part every day: But on the day of the Carriers (or Posts) dispatch, which is ordinarily Friday, they meet in greater numbers; for then all the Intelligencers assemble and confer in common, what things every of them hath fished out that Week; who that they may be without suspicion, send their secrets by Toby Matthew or Read himself, to the Popes Legate, he transmits the compacted Packet which he hath purchased from the Intelligencers to Rome.

With the same Read, the Letters brought from Rome are deposited under feigned Titles and Names, who by him are delivered to all to whom they appertain, for all and every of their Names are known to him.

Upon the very same occasion Letters are brought hither under the Covert of Father Philips; (he notwithstanding being ignorant of things) from whom they are distributed to the Conspirators.

There is in that very House, a Publick Chapel, wherein an ordinary Jesuit Consecrates, and dwells there. In the said Chapel, Masses are daily Celebrated by the Jesuits; and it serves for the Baptizing of the Children of the House, and of some of the Conspirators.

6. Those who assemble in the forenamed House, come frequently in Coaches or on Horseback in Lay-mens habits, and with a great Train, wherewith they are disguised, that they may not be known, yet they are Jesuits, and conjured Members of the Society.

15. All the Papists of England contribute to this Assembly, lest any thing should be wanting to promote the undertaken designs, upon whose Treasury one Widow, owner of the Houses wherein Secretary Windebanke now dwelleth, dead above three years since, bestowed Forty thousand English pounds, so likewise others contribute above their Abilities, so as the business may be promoted unto its desired end.

16. Besides the foresaid Houses, there are Convents kept also in other more secret places, of which verily they confide not even among themselves, for fear lest they should be discovered. First, every of them are called to certain Inns, (one not knowing of the other); hence they are severally led by Spies to the place where they ought to meet, otherwise ignorant where they ought to assemble, lest peradventure they should be surprized at unawares.

17. The Countess of Arundel, a strenuous She-Champion of the Popish Religion, bends all her Nerves to the Universal Reformation; whatsoever she hears at the King's Court that is done secretly or openly in words or deeds, she presently imparts to the Popes Legat, with whom she meets thrice a day, sometimes in Arundel House, now at the Court, or at Tart Hall.

The Earl himself being called about three years since, this year must go to Rome, without doubt to consult there of matters pertinent to the Design. Car. 16.

At Greenwich, at the Earl's cost, a Feminine School is erected, which is but a Monastery of Nuns; for the young Girls therein are sent forth, hither, and thither, into Forreign Monasteries beyond the Seas.

Master Porter of the King's Bed-chamber, most addicted to the Popish Religion, is an utter Enemy of the Kings, revealing all his Secrets to the Legat by his Wife; for he rarely meets with himself. In all his actions he is nothing inferior to Toby Matthew; it is unexpressible how diligently he intends this business.

His Sons are secretly principled in the Romish Belief, but open Professors of the Reformed: the eldest is now to receive his Father's place under the future King: A Cardinal's Hat is provided for the other, if the Plot takes.

Three years since, Master Porter was to be sent away by the King to Morocco, but was prohibited by the Society, lest the business should suffer delay.

He is a Patron of the Jesuits, providing Chapels for them to exercise their Religion in, both at home and abroad.

Secretary Windebanke, a fierce Papist, is the greatest Traitor to the King of all. He not only revealeth the King's greatest Secrets, but also communicates Counsels, by which the Design may be best advanced. He at least thrice every Week converseth with the Legate in the Nocturnal Conventicles, and revealeth what is fit to be known; to which end he hireth an House near to the Pope's Legate, to whom he often resorts through the Garden-door; for by this vicinity the Meeting is facilitated. He is bribed with Gifts to be a Partner in the Conspiracy, by whom he is sustained, that he may more sedulously attend his Charge.

His Son is sent expressly to Rome, on purpose to insinuate himself into his Holiness.

Digby and Winter, Knights, Mr. Mountague, who hath been at Rome, the Lord Sterlin, a Kinsman of the Earl of Arundel, a Knight, the Countess of Newport, the Dutches of Buckingham, and many others, who hath sworn to this Conspiracy, are all most vigilant in the Plot: Some are enticed with hope of Court, others of Political Offices; others attended to the sixteen Cardinals Caps vacant, which are detained so, to feed with vain hopes those who expect them.

The President of the said Society was the Lord Gage; a Jesuited Priest, dead some three years since. He had a Palace adorned with wanton Pictures as pretending to profaneness, but palliating thereby a Monastery, wherein forty Nuns were maintained, concealed in so spacious a Palace. It is situated in Queens-street. The Jesuits have bought all this Street, and have reduced it to a Quadrangle, where a Jesuital Colledge is tacitly built, with this hope, that it might be openly finished as soon as the General Reformation was accomplished.

The Pope's Legate useth a threefold Character; One common to all Nuncios; Another peculiar to himself and Cardinal Barberino; A third where-with he covers some greater secrets to be imparted. Whatsoever things he receiveth from the Society, or Spies, he packeth up in one bundle; with this Address, To Monsieur Stravio Archdeacon of Cambrai, from whom they are sent to Rome. These Anno. 1640. These Particulars considered, it will be evident to all,

1. That the Conspiracy against the King and Lord Archbishop is detected, and the means whereby ruin is threatned to both demonstrated.

2. The Imminent dangers to both Kingdoms are rehearsed.

3. The Rise and Progress of that Scottish Fire is related.

4. Means whereby these Scottish troubles may be appeased are suggested; for after the Scots shall know by whom and to what end their minds are incensed, they will speedily look to themselves, neither will they suffer the Forces of both parts to be subdued, lest a middle Party interpose, which seeks the Ruin of both.

5. With what Sword the King's Throat is assaulted, even when these stirs shall be ended, Cuneus his Confession, and a visible Demonstration sheweth.

6. The Place of the Assembly in the House of Captain Read is nominated.

7. The day of the eight daies dispatch by Read and the Legate is prescribed.

8. How the names of the Conspirators may be known.

9. Where this whole Congregation may be circumvented.

10. Some of the principal unfaithful ones of the King's Party are notified by name; many of whose names occur not, yet their habitations are known, their names may be easily extorted from Read.

If these be warily proceeded in, the strength of the whole business will be brought to Light, so the Arrow being foreseen, the danger shall be avoided; which that it may prosperously succeed, the Omnipotent Creator grant.

The Archbishop's Indorsement with his own hand.

Received Octob. 14. 1640. The Narration of the great Treason, concerning which the Discoverer promiseth to Sir William Boswell to discover, which is against the King and State.

That the Papists were instrumental to promote our late troubles; besides the present discovery, the original whereof was found in the Archbishop's Library after his death, and the confirmation hereof by a Bull of Pope Urbanus Octavus directed to Sir Toby Matthews a prime person concerned herein, wherein mention is made of the chief occurrences declared and manifested in that discovery, which Bull was found amongst the Papers of Mr. Secretary Windebanke, and expressly saith that young Count Rosetti the Apostolick Nuncio was committed by his Holiness to the care and administration of the said Sir Toby as a person well versed and knowing in our Affairs; and moreover not to speak of our late discoveries (as that some Jesuits are said to have Preached in the Field Conventicles in Scotland) the Reverend Dr. Du Moulin Prebend of the Church of Canterbury hath openly and in Print averr'd, That he is ready to prove what he hath publicly wrote, that there late a Council of Popish Priests and Jesuits in London to signify the condition of our Affairs to Rome and Paris during our late intestine Wars, and that when our late good King [now the blessed and glorious] Charles, and the first was taken and imprisoned with a design to bring his sacred Head to the Block, they gave notice hereof to others of their Confederacy of the Sorbon in Paris, then almost wholly Jesuited, desiring a resolution of this important Question, That seeing the state of England was in a likely posture to change the Government, whether it was lawful for the Catholics to work that change for the advancing and securing the Catholick Cause in England, (by making away the King) whom there was no hope to turn from his Heresie. The Answer of the Sorbon was affirmative, and at Rome it was concluded by the Pope and Council, That it was both lawful and expedient for the Catholics to procure that alteration. Dr. Du Moulin in answer to a Popish, Lying, and Scandalous Pamphlet, entituled, Philanax Anglicus.

This the aforesaid Reverend and very aged Divine hath promised to make good, and to prove the matter of fact, if any Romanist (which to this day none ever hath done) shall require it at his hands, and this challenge hath been made publick for almost the space of twenty years now last past; and none hath yet appear'd.

A Copy of Pope Urban the Eighth his Bull to Sir Tobias Mathews.

Dilecto Filio Tobia Matheo, Societ. Jesu Sacerdoti, Urbanus Papa VIII.

Dilecte Fili, salutem & Apostolicam benedictionem. Ardens animarum zelus quo jam a tot annis in vinea domini laborando strenuum te militem exhibuisti, promeretur ut tua virtuti d. b. laudem reddamus. Sane magna cum exultatione audivimus labores quos sustines ut sedis Apostolicae amplitudinem augeas, & quo charitatis zelo omnibus omnia fias, ut omnes lucrifacias. Decet certe te virum Apostolicum, magni Apostoli exemplo doctum, ut Judeis fias tanquam Judeus, & iis qui sunt sine lege, tanquam sis sine lege, dummodo sedis Apostolica dignitatem promoveas: ideo cum in magnam Britanniam mittere statuerimus dilectum filium Comitem Rosetti, nostrum & Sedis Apostolicae cum potestate Legati a latere Nuntium, juvenem zelo Dei accensum, Apostolica sollicitudini nostrae satisfactum credidimus, si cum tua cura committeremus. Jussimus igitur ut tibi communicet instructiones sibi datas, & a dilecto filio & Nepote nostro, Francisco Sancta Reverendis. Ecclesiae Card. Barbarino subscrip. Teque ab eo quo pro sede Apostolica zelo ardes rogamus, & in quantum opus est, tibi mandamus, ut praedictum filium, & Nuntium nostrum, in omnibus dirigas, moveas, instruas, lapsus & errores ejus, (qui per juventutem facile accidere possunt) corrigas (ut sedis Apostolica decor inviolatus permaneat) & ut denique in omnibus ei te Angelum custodem praebeas. Magnam certe spem concepimus praedictum filium & Nuntium tuis consiliis adjutum, non parvos in Ecclesia Catholica fructus producturum. Labora igitur, dilecte fili, opus fac Evangelista, ministerium tuum imple, Catholicos zelo Dei accende, ipsos conforta, sed praecipue Amazones illas qua (ut a dilecto filio Georgio Coniteo audivimus) die ac nocte strenue decertant pro dignitate sedis Apostolicae. Non diffidimus de Domino, neque de potentia ejus, quia sicut occasione unius faminae, auctoritas Sedis Apostolica in Regno Angliae suppressa fuit, sic nunc per tot Heroicas faminas (illas imitantes qua a Galileo sequebantur Dominum) societatem ejus assidue sequentes, brevi in eodem Regno restituenda sit. Adhortare igitur illas ut opus aggressum viriliter prosequantur; &

Pope Urbane VIII. to his beloved Son Tobias Mathew Priest, and one of the Order of the Jesuits.

BEloved Son, Health and Apostolical Benediction. Your burning zeal for the salvation of souls, by which for so many years you have approved your self a diligent and faithful Workman in our Lord's Vineyard, deserveth its due praise and grateful remembrance from us. The truth is, the account of those troubles that you have gone thorough for the enlargement of the greatness of the Apostolical See, and that charitable zeal, whereby you have become all things to all men, that you may gain some, we have heard with a great deal of rejoycing. It becometh indeed such an Apostolical man (in imitation of the grand Apostle) for the glory and dignity of the Apostolical See, to become as a Jew to the Jews, and as one without Law to those who are without Law: Therefore when we had resolved to send our beloved Son Count Rosetti (a young man full of divine zeal) into Britain with power and authority of our Legate à Latere and Nuntio of the Apostolical See, we did account our selves freed and acquitted of all our Apostolical anxiety and duty, when we had recommended him to your care: and upon that account we have commanded him to communicate to you all those instructions which are given to him, and subscribed by our beloved Son and Nephew, the most Reverend Cardinal Francisco Barbarino; and we conjure you by that zeal and respect you have for the dignity of the Apostolical Sea; yea, we charge and command you, that (so far as it is needful) you not only direct, advise and instruct our aforesaid Son and Nuntio in all things, but that you correct all his escapes and errors (which by reason of his youth he may easily be guilty of) that the glory and Dignity of the Apostolical See, may remain chaste and inviolate; and in short, that in all things, you be to him an Angel-Guardian. We have indeed assured our self of a plentiful Harvest from the labours of our foresaid Son and Nuntio (by the help of your Counsel) in the Catholick concern. Go on therefore beloved Son, do the work of an Evangelist, fulfil your Ministry, enkindle the Catholicks with a divine zeal: comfort them all, but chiefly those Amazones and Virago's for the Catholick cause, who (as we have had an account from our beloved Son Georgio Conneo) night and day do Champion-like fight for the glory and dignity of the Apostolical See. We neither distrust God nor his power; for as the Authority of the Apostolical See was suppressed in the Kingdom of England by the power and influence of one Woman, so now we hope by the help of so many Heroick and noble spirited Women, in a short time to have it restored in that Kingdom to its antient right and glory again: Pray therefore exhort and encourage them, to prosecute with a Masculine spirit the design on foot, and to go on in meriting from the Apostolical See, which hath an extraordinary and peculiar care and concern for that devouter Sex. We beseech the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ to send you his holy Spirit to direct and preserve you in all things. Beloved Son, we send you again and again both the Apostolical and our Benediction.

Given under our Signet at Rome in St. Peter's Palace, prid. id. Maii. Car. 16.

The cunning Steersman the Jesuit ('tis not in the least to be doubted) might look one way and row another, pretend a kindness for his Majesty and interest, and yet act underhand quite contrary, pursuant hereunto were collections of Moneys made heretofore here in England by that party for the supply of the King's necessities, and by the procurement of the Queens Majesty to the value of twelve thousand pounds, or thereabouts, which was paid into the Exchequer; and this affair managed by Seigneur Con the Pope's Resident with the Queen, Sir John Winter, Sir Knelme Digby, Sir Basil Brooks, Mr. Walter Montague, and Mr. Foster; a person much valued by Seigneur Con, as appears by the Examinations of Sir Knelme Digby, and Mr. Mountague taken before a Committee of Parliament in January last past: All which Monies were made use of by his Majesty in the War against the Scots; which yet, as we have before intimated, was much influenced by the endeavours and actions of these men, and of the great Cardinal Richlen, as you may see before, Anno 1638. of these Annales p. 768. And yet notwithstanding all these Intrigues they bore a mortal enmity to the great Archbishop of Canterbury the great Pillar of our Church, and his late Majesties most intimate Counsellor, and indeed they had no small occasion or reason for their so doing, for that his Grace having so great an influence upon the King, did openly in the Counsel complain of the insolency and haughty deportment of Sir Knelme Digby, and Mr. Walter Mountague in Court as well as of the audacious resort of the Papists to hear Mass openly said at Denmark-house, which he did in the presence of the King, with some expressions of vehemency, Anno 1637. and in the following year writes his unanswerable Book against the Jesuit Fisher, which one nameth the exactest piece of Polemique Divinity yet extant. These were injuries not to be forgiven by that Faction, and so the destruction of that eminent and learned Prelate became the great concernment of their interest.

We have told you before, that a Treaty was begun at Rippon, but this was only a Treaty of Celsation of Arms till the Parliament might meet, which the Scots and Scotiz'd party in England only aimed at, hereupon as to the remaining Articles upon the Scots and their desires, the Treaty was adjourned from Rippon to London, a place where both these had many Abettors, and where the Parliament was to convene, an oversight his Majesty upon the insolencies of the Tumults was very sensible of, For, saith he, *I am prone to think, that had
I call'd this Parliament to any other place in England (as I might opportunely enough have done) the sad consequences in all likelihood with Gods blessing might have been prevented, a Parliament would have been welcom in any place, and no place afforded a confluence of so various and vitious humours, as that where it was unhappily convened, but we must leave all to God who orders our disorders, and magnifies his wisdom most when our follies and miseries are most discovered.*

Hereby

Anno.
1640.

Hereby the Scottish Commissioners had that opportunity, they were not nice to make use of, to inflame the City and People to the worst impressions. They were publickly feasted and caressed by the Presbyterian party; here they had preaching and praying after their own mode, which Q. Elizabeth would never permit: The Scotch Commissioners which came here into England to settle some differences in her time, when they petitioned to be allowed in publick, Her Majesty and Council was hereat so startled (fearing Innovation,) that they were absolutely forbidden, as formerly, to use their meetings in Perry France in Turtle-fields.

And at these Religious Assemblies (they should have been so) were framed and modelled the most of those factious Petitions, Designs and Tumults (as was afterwards made appear) which made a separation, unkindness and distrust betwixt his Majesty and his People; in one word, a departure of his Majesty from London, by reason of the repeated affronts and tumults offered and raised against both his Royal Person, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and even the Members of the House of Commons in their rightful Priviledges in their attendance on the Parliament, all which were frequently complained of by his Majesty to both Houses of Parliament, but no remedy was by them ever applied or endeavoured to free his Majesty from the daily affronts of the rude Multitude, or the Lords and Commons who approved not, or abetted these Indignities; but all went on unpunish'd, if not underhand were applauded and encouraged: And these were the grounds and causes of his Majesties leaving London, and of the departure likewise of the far greater number of the House of Peers and of near 200 Commons, who afterwards adhered and declared for his Majesty in the War made upon his Majesty by the residue of the Parliament remaining at Westminster.

In the Calling of this Parliament, his Majesty did resolve not only to oblige his Friends, but his very Enemies also, it was not so much the effect of his necessity, as of his own choice and inclination, he had well hoped to have extinguish'd all the sparks of former Dissentions by forbearing such Conventions for some years; but it was now his resolution to redress all publick grievances in Church and State, and if possible, to exceed the desires of the most factiously discontented, if they had contained themselves within any bounds of moderation: But the Elections of the Members were in very many places carried on with great animosities, popular heats and partiality, which indeed were very ill symptoms of the Crisis of our Distempers, which hereafter ended in the ruin of all Order, both in Church and State.

The Parliament was summoned to meet at Westminster, Novemb. 3. and a very fatal Parliament it proved in the consequence thereof to this Kingdom; we shall omit the usual Solemnities, only acquainting our Reader, that William Lenthall, a Benchman of Lincolns-Inn, was chosen Speaker thereof; and in regard many (if not most) of the Members thereof, were very remarkable and eminent for several Services and Exploits in both Parties of Royalists and Parliamentarians, these later afterwards being divided amongst themselves into Presbyterians and Independants, we shall give the Reader a List of that Parliament, not in the least intending to reflect upon the Misfortunes of the one, or the Crimes of the other Party. The goodness of the Cause is a glory to the former, and the latter in their unhappy success I shall not reflect upon.

Causa placet multis Victorix sed Villa Catoni.
Conquest perhaps may some men please,
But the Cause Cato, not Success.

The King being late in his Throne in the House of Peers; the House of Commons were Commanded by the Black-Rod to attend at the Bar of the Lords House, where his Majesty spake as followeth.

My Lords,

‘ The knowledge that I have of the Scottish Subjects, was the cause of my calling of the last Assembly of Parliament, wherein if I had been believed, I do most sincerely think that things had not fallen as we now see; but it is no wonder that men are so slow to believe, that so great a Sedition should be raised upon so little ground. But now (my Lords and Gentlemen) the Honour and Safety of this Kingdom lying so heavily at Stake, I am resolved to put my self freely upon the love and affections of my English Subjects, as those of my Lords that waited upon me at York very well remember I there declared.

‘ There-

Anno 1640.

‘Therefore (my Lords) I shall not mention mine own Interest, or that support I might justly expect from you till the common safety be secured: though I must tell you, I am not ashamed to say, those charges I have been at, have been merely for the securing and good of this Kingdom; though the success hath not been answerable to my desires. Therefore I shall only desire you to consider the best way both for the safety and security of this Kingdom, wherein there are two things chiefly considerable; First, the chasing out of the Rebels. And Secondly, That other, in satisfying your just Grievances, wherein I shall promise you to concur so heartily and clearly with you, that all the World may see my intentions have ever been, and shall be to make this a glorious and flourishing Kingdom. There are only two things more that I shall mention to you. The one is to tell you, that the Loan of Money which I lately had from the City of London, wherein the Lords who waited on me at York assisted me, will only maintain my Army for two Months from the beginning of that time it was granted. Now (my Lords and Gentlemen) I leave it to your consideration, what dishonour and mischief it might be, in case for want of Money my Army be Disbanded, before the Rebels be put out of this Kingdom. Secondly, The securing of the calamities the Northern people endure at this time; and so long as the Treaty is on foot. And in this I may say not only they, but all this Kingdom will suffer the harm, therefore I leave this also to your consideration. For the ordering of the great Affairs whereof you are to Treat at this time; I am so confident of your love to me, and that your care is such for the Honour and Safety of the Kingdom, that I should freely leave to you where to begin: only this, that you may the better know the state of all Affairs, I have Commanded my Lord Keeper to give you a short and free account of those things that have happened in this interim, with this Protestation, that if his account be not satisfactory, as it ought to be, I shall whensoever you desire it, give you a full and perfect account of every particular.

‘One thing more I desire of you, as one of the greatest means to make this an happy Parliament, that you on your parts, as I on mine, lay aside suspicion one of another, as I promised my Lords at York, it shall not be my fault if this be not an happy and good Parliament.

The Lord Keeper Finch, by his Majesties Command, gave the two Houses an account of all things referring to the Scotch Invasion, which his Majesty had plainly (for so indeed it was) called Rebellion, which expression being taken in evil part by some of the House of Commons, his Majesty justifies the expression, and saith two daies after in a Speech in the Peers House, That though they were his Subjects, and he then in Treaty with them, yet so long as they have an Army against him and invade this his Kingdom of England also, they are not otherwise to be esteemed than such. The first week of the sitting of this Parliament was spent in settling (as is usual) their grand Committees for Grievances, Religion, Priviledges, &c. where, for the first of these there was work enough cut out, for that several thousands of Horse and Foot came from several of the Neighbouring and Adjacent Counties (in the same manner as you have before heard they of Scotland did in the foregoing Commissions mentioned Anno Domini 1637.) with their Petitions craving redress of great exorbitances both in Church and State, which were taken in by the leading-men of those times, and carefully delivered to the Grand Committees, and in set and framed Speeches aggravated accordingly, and now also Mr. Pryn, Mr. Burton, and Dr. Bastwick appear in publick, enlarged from their respective Prisons, and were accompanied into London with Shouts and Acclamations to the affront of Publick Justice.

The first matter of note in the Commons House, was, the Speech of Mr. Pym, the manner whereof was much to the import of another of the same Gentlemans, spoken in the Parliament lately dissolved, and formerly set down, which for Brevity we shall here omit.

The Lord George Digby, son to the Earl of Bristol, seconds Mr. Pym, and complains of the intolerable burden of Ship-money, of the multitude of Monopolies, of the new Canons, and Oath &c. by them enjoyed, of great abuses in the Pressing of Souldiers and raising Moneys concerning the same, &c. This Noble Person, with others of the House of Commons (which we desire our Reader to take notice of) followed his Majesty in his Fortunes in the Waresuing, and seeing the drift and intentions of some of their fellow Members to tend to Innovation, and in Fine to the ruin of the established Government both in Church and State, betimes deserted the Parliament at Westminster, and were by them for this their loyalty declared (very illegally) Traytors; such were the Lord Faulkland, Sir John Culpeper, Mr. Hyde, afterwards Earl of Clarendon, Mr. Bagshaw, Mr. Waller, adjudged to Death for adhering to King Charles the First, and other eminent Speakers in that Parliament for the pretended Reformation, were by them afterwards illegally Sentenced, Censured, and Imprisoned; such were Sir Edward Deering, Sir Benjamin Rudyard, and others, who in the simplicity of their heart, spoke against (as they thought) matters of the Grievances of these times, yet perceiving the Intentions of their fellow Members to throw down all before them, openly deserted them.

His Majesty willing to take away all matter of offence from the Parliament, Commands by Proclamation, the departure of all Papists from the Cities of London and Westminster; and puts the Command of the Tower (formerly under the Lord Cottington, as Lord Constable thereof) under the power of a Lieutenant, on purpose to take away all umbrage of discontent from the Parliament and City of London, but all (as you will after see) in vain.

On the Tenth of November a Complaint was made in the House of Peers, of the infringement of the Priviledge thereof by the searching of the Studies, Cabinets, and Pockets of the Earl of Warwick, and the Lord Brooke, upon the dissolution of the late Parliament, by Sir William Beecher, who producing a Warrant from the two Secretaries of State for his so doing, was notwithstanding Committed to the Fleet.

Anno 1640. The day following Mr. Pym was sent from the Commons to the Lords with a Message of Impeachment of High Treason against the Earl of Strafford Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, who was thereupon committed to the Black-Rod, and his Brother Sir George Wentworth sent for by order of the Peers by a Serjeant at Arms out of Ireland; and the Commons the same day passed an Order, that all persons who had lately any benefit by Monopolies, and were Countenancers of the same, should be disabled to sit in the House, and that the Speaker should issue out new Warrants for Electing other Members in their places.

Upon the Twelfth of November, the Parliament (in regard of the insupportable burden which lay upon the Northern Counties by reason of the two Armies) borrowed of the City of London the sum of 100000*l.* upon Interest, until the Subsidies might be raised to repay it.

The Peers on the Sixteenth, Petition his Majesty for the liberty of the Bishop of Lincoln a Member of their House, who was accordingly set at liberty from his Imprisonment in the Tower, and was the day following, being a Fast-day, introduced by four Bishops into the Abbey Church of Westminster, where as Dean of that Church he officiated before the Lords.

On the Twenty first, one John James, son of Sir Henry James of Feverisham in Kent, a Romish Catholique, stabbed Mr. Howard (a Justice of Peace for Westminster) in Westminster-hall, to the great hazard of his life. The impulsive to this savage Assault, was supposed to be, because Mr. Howard had framed a list with the names of such Recufants, as were within the Liberties of Westminster, which he was to deliver up to the Committee for Religion. Mr. James was committed to the Gate-house, and the King sent an Express to the Commons, that they should proceed severely against him.

And now the Parliament, by reason of the severity of their intendments and overt actions, began to appear formidable, hereupon Sir Francis Windebank Secretary of State, thought it his best course to retire into France; and for that the Tax of Ship-money was complain'd of as one of the principal Grievances, the Commons did on the seventh of December, Vote the said Tax illegal, which was also, notwithstanding the greatest Lawyers in the Kingdom had subscribed to the legality thereof; and that all the Judges of England had definitively (as before is at large set down) sentenc'd for the King in that Cause against Hampden; yet now without any review or Counsel heard, or the Judges reason for their Opinions then delivered so much as required, it was by the House of Peers also voted illegal, and an Order was in February ensuing by that House made for the vacuating of the said Judgment and Record.

Upon the Eleventh of December, Alderman Pennington with a Rabble of Petty Shop-keepers and Apprentices (for as yet the great ones would not appear) presented a Petition against the Bishops and the Ceremonies of the Church, whereat their tender Consciences were offended, though the Presenter of that Petition was not tender to Vote and act against the life of his Sovereign in the bloody Sentence put upon him by that treasonable Court of injustice which sentenced his sacred Majesty to the Block in the year 1648. and for which he afterwards in the year 1660. received the condign Sentence as a Traytor for his enormous Treason; but he began with the ruin of the Church, and ended in the blood of his Sovereign, and so we leave him to God's mercy. Car. 16. But however, for the Honour of the City it may be spoken, that this Petition did not come from, neither was it owned by that Honourable City, but was only carried on by certain Beutifeus managed by some Members of the Commons House, who now taking the advantage of the Complaints of this Petition, Vote on the Sixteenth of December, That the Clergy without a Parliament have no power to make Canons so bind either Laity or Clergy, and that the late Canons are against the Law of the Land, the King's Prerogative, the rights of Parliament, and the property of the Subject, and that they tend to Faction and Sedition. Concerning which Vote one hath this Observation, That this Parliamentary Doctrine was but now newly known, Convocations heretofore not depending on Parliaments but only on the King himself, and that not in Parliament neither, but in his Palace according to the Tenor of the Statute of the twenty fifth of Henry the Eighth, and the constant practice ever since; and as to these particular Canons, they were Authorized by his Majesty, communicated to the Privy Council, the Judges then attending, reading and approving the same, and were passed under the Broad Seal of England, June 30. preceding.

This condemnation of the Canons brings on a Storm upon the head of the Archbishop of Canterbury, whom the Commons name the Author thereof, and a Committee is put upon that Reverend Prelate to enquire into all his actions, and to prepare a Charge against him, the same morning he was named as an incendiary by the Scottish Commissioner in the Upper-House, and a Complaint is promised to be brought in against that great Prelate; accordingly on the Eighteenth he is accused for High Treason by the Commons, the Messenger Mr. Hollis, and the Archbishop was committed to the Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod, though without any particular charge brought against him [a thing not very usual.] On the Twenty first, the Archbishop was Fined 500*l.* for the Imprisonment of Sir Robert Howard for keeping the Lady Purbeck in a lewd manner, and Sir John Lamb, and Sir Henry Martin 250*l.* each for the same offence, the Money was ordered to be paid down immediately, and the Archbishop for the sudden advance thereof was forced to sell his Plate, as he himself saith in his Diary; after this he was kept until the first of March under custody of the Black-Rod, and no impeachment was brought up against him until the Twenty sixth of February following, when Sir Henry Vane Junior, brought up fourteen Articles; all consisting of Generals, from the Commons House; these they craved time to prove in particular, but in the mean time without any particular matter alledged, he is Voted guilty of High Treason by the Peers, and sent to the Tower, where afterwards he lay four years, and was then most illegally beheaded. The Parliament having thus removed these two great Supporters of the Church and State, and growing every day more and more upon the affections of the people, at least upon those who were discontented and dissatisfied with the Government of our Church, as it was now by Law established, they began to hammer a Bill for Triennial Parliaments, which was afterwards passed into an Act, as we shall particularly declare.

And

And now the Sages of the Law must in order take their turns, these worthy persons had according to their Consciences, delivered their Opinions in the Exchequer Chamber, that the Tax of Shipmoney was legal, and they were under an Oath to do Justice to every man without respect of persons, bribe or reward. The Lord Keeper Finch was the person chiefly aimed at, for that he was Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas when that Case was Argued, and was by the Commons thought to have been most hearty and active in that great matter, hereupon the Commons prepare an Impeachment of High Treason against him; in justification of himself, he desires leave to speak in his own behalf before the Commons House; which he did, and gave an account of himself and that action, that there was no carriage or demeanor of his that did in the least influence the Opinions of the rest of his Brethren the Judges, but that they all agreed in the thing, That if the whole Kingdom were in danger, it was reasonable and fit to lay the burden upon the whole Kingdom, and not upon the Ports only; after at Serjeants Inn, Crooke and Hatton differed in Opinion, but not of the thing (as we before said) but whether his Majesty was sole Judge; and as to this, this was not upon the matter in Argument, but upon the Demurrer. The very next day he was accused before the Lords, but he wisely considering of the violence of those times withdrew himself into Holland, and there remained, until his accusers became the more guilty, and then he returned to his native Country again.

And now we come to the Trial of the great Earl of Strafford: The Commons had delivered in seven Articles all consisting of Generals, on the fatal day the Thirtieth of January; these they distribute into twenty eight Particulars, which Mr. Pym then by order of that House delivered to the Peers as their compleat charge against the said Earl, who being sent for, desiring from his Peers three Months time to answer, in regard some of the Treasons were of fourteen years standing, and his Witnesses remote, besides the charge was long and consisted of two hundred sheets of Paper, and that his answer would be commensurate to the Charge, and in a rough draught it could not be less, and therefore would require more time to engross it, which accordingly he had time given until the 24 of Feb. when it was read in the House of Peers in his Majesties presence, and the day following in the House of Commons. Hereupon several Debates arose betwixt the Lords and Commons, as whether the Earl was to have Counsel allowed him, which the Lords said he should in Pleading matter of Law, but not in matters of Fact. The next was where the place of Trial should be, which was agreed should be Westminster-Hall, for that the House of Peers was deemed too little to contain both the Houses; and for that the Commons said they would come in the body of their House with their Speaker, the Lords would not assent hereto, therefore they yielded at last to come as a Committee.

Accordingly the 22 of March was appointed for the day of his comparing, when Scaffolds being erected on either side of the Hall, the Commons late hereon uncovered as Impeachers and Accusers, in the midst of the lower ascent the Peers, and behind them, but raised above them, there was placed the Chair and Cloth of State for his Majesty, on each side of which there was a Gallery of privacy for the King, Queen, and Prince, suitable to the antient Mode.

At this Trial the Lords Spiritual refused to be present, with respect to the Oath of the Church in the Council of Toledo, Contil. Tol. 4. and according to former Precedents, as 11 Rich. 2. and 21 of Rich. 3. when they did refuse to sit and Vote in those Impeachments in their own persons (for in the later of those they did by their Proxies) with a salvo of their knowndright of being present as Peers and Barons of the Land at all things in any manner to be treated of by the Parliament of England, as any other Barons may, Which Protestation of theirs was allowed by the whole Parliament, and at the desire of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and others, the Prelates aforesaid, was entered upon the Roll of Parliament by the Commandment of the King, and the assent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal.

The Earl of Arundel was appointed for this great Judgment, Lord High Steward of England, and the Earl of Lindsey Lord High Constable, and this great Court set, the Lord Lieutenant the Noble Earl of Strafford was brought to the Bar, when the Lord High Steward declared to him that he was call'd to answer to the Impeachment of Treason presented against him by the Commons of England and Ireland, at the same time his Accusation was read, and his answer thereto, which took up most of that day; the next day he is brought again to the Bar of this great Court, when Mr. Pym aggravated the seven General Articles against him, saying he had subverted the fundamental Laws of England and Ireland, and produced a Paper sealed, which being opened and read, it contained a Vote of the Commons House in Ireland, where they had Voted the Earl Guilty of High Treason, at which the Earl was very much discomposed and said in haste, that there was a Conspiracy against him to take away his life, which was immediately catcht up by the Commons as if he had aspersed the two Parliaments of England and Ireland, but this the Earl denied, and said, he did not thereby intend any reflection upon either of these Parliaments, but upon some particular persons, Members of these Parliaments; now Mr. Pym craves leave to annex three Articles more to the Earls Charge, and that he should immediately answer thereto, to which the Earl Replied, That now his Process being closed, he well hoped he should not be ordered to answer to this new and unexpected Charge, without allowance of more time; but the Peers finding those Articles of no great importance, he was urged to a present Answer. These Articles were three.

First, That he had withdrawn 24000 l. (some New Ards. Copies have 40000 l.) sterling from the Exchequer in Ireland, and converted to his own use. cles against the Earl.

Secondly, That in the beginning of his Government the Garrisons of Ireland had been maintained by the English Treasury.

Thirdly, That he had advanced Popish and Infamous persons, as the Bishop of Waterford, and others to the prime Rooms in the Church of Ireland.

The Earl Answered thereto.

To the first he said, That England was indebted to Ireland that sum, and that he took up the Money upon his own Credit, and paid it again, and that he had the King's Authority for the same, producing his Majesties Letter. The Earl's Answer.

To the second, That the Garrisons had been burdensome to England in former Deputies times; that Anno. 1640. that he so found them, but that he had so improved the King's Revenues there, as they were not onerous at all to England.

To the last, That he never preferred any but such whom he conceived to be conscientious and honest men; that he could not Prophecy of mens future conditions; and for the Bishop of Waverford, he hath satisfied the Law.

These Articles containing no great matter of moment, upon March 24. the particular Articles came to be insisted on, they were in number 28. but in regard the Commons did not insist on, nor indeed bring any proof for some of these, these I shall pass by, and briefly set down those whereon they laid any stress, and the great Earl's Answer to them.

The further Impeachment of Thomas Earl of Strafford by the Commons Assembled in Parliament.

The first Article was not insisted upon:

II.

That shortly after the obtaining of a Commission dated the 21 of March, in the 8 year of his now Majesties Reign (to wit) the last day of August then next following, he the said Earl (to bring his Majesties Liege People into a dislike of his Majesty and of his Government, and to terrifie the Justices of the Peace from executing of the Laws: he, the said Earl, being then President of the King's Council in the Northern parts of England; and a Justice of Peace) did publicly at the Assizes held for the County of York in the City of York, in and upon the said last day of August; declare and publish before the people there attending for the administration of Justice according to the Law; and in the presence of the Justices sitting, That some of the Justices were all for Law, but they should find that the King's little finger should be heavier than the Loyns of the Law.

Testified by Sir David Fowles and others:

The Earl's Answer.

That Sir David Fowles was his profess enemy, that his words were clearly inverted, that his expression was, That the little finger of the Law (if not moderated by the King's gracious clemency) was heavier than the King's Loyns. That these were his words, he verifys'd; First, by the occasion of them, they being spoken to some whom the King's favour had then enlarged from Imprisonment at York; as a motive to their thankfulness to his Majesty. Secondly, by Sir William Penniman a Member of the House; who was then present, and heard the words; Which Sir William declaring to be true; the House of Commons required Justice of the Lord's against him, because he had Voted the Articles as a Member of the House; whereupon Sir William wept.

III.

March 25. That the Realm of Ireland having been time out of mind annexed to the Imperial Crown of this his Majesties Realm of England, and governed by the same Laws: the said Earl being Lord Deputy of that Realm, to bring his Majesties Liege people of that Kingdom likewise into dislike of his Majesties Government, and intending the subversion of the fundamental Laws and settled Government of that Realm, and the distraction of his Majesties Liege people there, did, upon Sept.

30. in the ninth year of his now Majesties Reign, in the City of Dublin (the chief City of that Kingdom, where his Majesties Privy Council, and Courts of Justice do ordinarily reside, and whether the Nobility and Gentry of that Realm do usually resort for Justice) in a publick Speech before divers of the Nobility and Gentry, and before the Mayor, Aldermen, and Recorder, and many Citizens of Dublin, and other his Majesties Liege people, declare and publish, that Ireland was a conquered Nation, and that the King might do with them what he pleased; and speaking of the Charters of the former King's of England made to that City, he further said, that their Charters were nothing worth, and did bind the King no further than he pleased.

Testified by the Earl of Cork and two other Lords.

The Earl's Answer.

That if he had been over liberal of his Tongue for want of discretion, yet could not his words amount to Treason, unless they had been revealed within 14 daies, as he was informed. As to the Charge, he said, True it is, he said Ireland was a conquered Nation, which no man can deny; and that the King is the Law-giver, in matters not determined by Acts of Parliament, he conceived all Loyal Subjects would grant.

IV.

That Richard Earl of Cork having sued out Process in course of Law for recovery of his possessions, from which he was put by colour of an Order made by the said Earl of Strafford, and the Council Table of the said Realm of Ireland. The said Earl of Strafford upon a paper Petition, without legal proceedings, did Feb. 20. in the Eleventh year of his now Majesties Reign, threaten the said Earl of Cork (being then a Peer of the said Realm) to imprison him, unless he would surcease his suit, and said, That he would have neither Law nor Lawyers dispute or question any of his orders. And the 20 of March in the said Eleventh year, the said Earl of Strafford speaking of an Order of the said Council-Table of that Realm, made in the time of King James, which concerned a Lease which the said Earl of Cork claimed in certain Rectories or Tithes which the said Earl of Cork alledged to be of no force, said, That he would make the said Earl and all Ireland know, so long as he had the Government there, any act of State, there made, or to be made, should be as binding to the subjects of that Kingdom, as an Act of Parliament: And did question the said Earl of Cork in the Castle Chamber, upon pretence of breach of the said Order of Council Table, and did sundry other times; and upon sundry other occasions, by his words and Speeches arrogate to himself a power above the fundamental Laws, and established Government of that Kingdom, and scorned the said Laws and established Government.

The Earl's Answer.

It were hard measure for a man to lose his honour and his life, for an hasty word, or because he is no wiser than God hath made him. As for the words, he confessed them to be true, and thought he said no more than what became him, considering how much his Master's Honour was concerned in him, that if a proportionable obedience was not as well due to Acts of State, as to Acts of Parliament, in vain did Councils sit. And that he had done no more than what former Anno 1640. Deputies had done, and then what was agreeable to his Instructions from the Council Table, which he produced. And that if those words were Treason, they should have been revealed within fourteen daies.

V.

28.

That according to such his Declarations and Speeches, the said Earl of Strafford did use and exercise a power above, and against, and to the subversion of the fundamental Laws, and established Government of the said Realm of Ireland, extending such his power to the Goods, Free-holds, Inheritances, Liberties and Lives of his Majesties Subjects of the said Realm, viz. The said Earl of Strafford the twelfth day of December, Anno Dom. 1635. in the time of full peace, did in the said Realm of Ireland, give and procure to be given against the Lord Mount-Norris (then and yet a Peer of Ireland, and then Vice-treasurer and Receiver General of the Realm of Ireland, and one of the Principal Secretaries of State, and Keeper of the Privy Signet of the said Kingdom) a sentence of death by a Council of War called together by the said Earl of Strafford, without any Warrant or Authority of Law, or offence deserving any such punishment. And he the said Earl did also at Dublin within the said Realm of Ireland, in the Month of March in the fourteenth year of his Majesties Reign, without any legal or due proceedings or Trial, give or cause to be given, a sentence of death against one other of his Majesties Subjects, whose name is yet unknown, and caused him to be put to death in execution of the said sentence.

The Earl's Answer.

That there was then a standing Army in Ireland, and Armies cannot be governed but by Martial Law: that it hath been put in constant practice with former Deputies; that had the sentence been unjustly given by him, the crime could amount but to Felony at most, for which he hoped he might as well expect pardon from his Majesty, as the Lord Conway and Sir Jacob Aspley had for doing the like in the late Northern Army.

That he neither gave sentence, nor procured it against the Lord Mount-Norris, but only desired Justice against the Lord for some affront done to him as he was Deputy of Ireland.

That the said Lord was judged by a Council of War, wherein he sate bare all the time, and gave no suffrage against him; that also to evidence himself a party, he caused his Brother Sir George Wentworth, in regard of the nearness of blood, to decline all acting in the process.

VI.

That the said Earl of Strafford without any legal proceedings, and upon a Paper Petition of Richard Rolstone, did cause the said Lord Mount-Norris to be disseised and put out of possession of his Free-hold and Inheritance of his Mannor of Tymore in the County of Armagh, in the Kingdom of Ireland, the said Lord Mount-Norris having been two years before in quiet possession thereof.

The Earl's Answer.

That he conceived the Lord Mount-Norris was legally divested of his possessions, there being a suit long depending in Chancery, and the Plaintiff complaining of delay, he upon the Complainants Petition called unto him the Master of the Rolls, Lord Chancellor, and Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and upon proofs in Chancery decreed for the Plaintiff. Wherein he said he did no more, than what other Deputies had done before him.

VII.

That the said Earl of Strafford, in the Term of Holy Trinity, in the thirteenth year of his now Majesties Reign, did cause a Case commonly called, The Case of Tenures upon defective Titles, to be made and drawn up without any Jury or Trial, or other legal process, and without the consent of parties, and did then procure the Judges of the said Realm of Ireland to deliver their Opinions and Resolutions to that case, and by colour of such Opinions, did without any legal proceeding, cause Thomas Lord Dillon, a Peer of the said Realm of Ireland, to be put out of possession of divers Lands and Tenements, being his Freehold in the County of Mago and Rosecomen in the said Kingdom, and divers others of his Majesties Subjects to be also put out of possession, and disseised of their Free-hold by colour of the same resolution, without legal proceedings, whereby many hundreds of his Majesties Subjects were undone, and their Families utterly ruined.

The Earl's Answer.

That the Lord Dillon with others producing his Patent according to a Proclamation on the behalf of his Majesty, the said Patent was questionable, upon which a Case was drawn and Argued by Counsel, and the Judges delivered their Opinions. But the Lord Dillon or any other, was not bound thereby, nor put out of their possessions, but might have traversed the Office, or otherwise have legally proceeded, notwithstanding the said Opinion.

VIII.

That the said Earl of Strafford upon a Petition exhibited in October, 1635. by Thomas Hibbotts against Dame Mary Hibbotts Widow, to him the said Earl of Strafford, recommended the said Petition to the Council Table of Ireland, where the most part of the Council gave their Vote and Opinion for the said Lady, but the said Earl finding fault herewith, caused an Order to be entered against the said Lady, and threatened her, that if she refused to submit thereunto, he would imprison her, and fine her five hundred pound; that if she continued obstinate, he would continue her Imprisonment, and double her Fine every Month by Month, whereof she was enforced to relinquish her Estate in the Land questioned in the said Petition, which shortly was conveyed to Sir Robert Meredith, to the use of the said Earl of Strafford.

And

Anno 1640.
And the said Earl in like manner did imprison divers others of his Majesties Subjects upon pretence of disobedience to his Orders and Decrees, and other illegal Commands by him made for pretended Debts, Titles of Lands, and other Causes, in an arbitrary and extrajudicial Course, upon Paper Petitions to him preferred, and no other Cause legally depending.

The Earl's Answer.

That true it is, he had voted against the Lady Hibbotts, and thought he had reason so to do, the said Lady being discovered, by fraud and circumvention, to have bargained for Lands of a great value, for a small Sum. And he denied that the said Lands were after sold to his use, or that the major part of the Council Board voted for the Lady; the contrary appearing by the Sentence under the Hand of the Clerk of the Council: which being true, he might well threaten her with Commitment, in case she disobeyed the said Order. Lastly, Were it true that he were criminal therein, yet were the offence but a misdemeanour, no Treason.

IX.

April 1. That the said Earl of Strafford, the Sixteenth day of February, in the Twelfth Year of his now Majesties Reign, assuming to himself a Power above and against Law, took upon him by a General Warrant under his Hand, to give power to the Lord Bishop of Down and Connor, his Chancellor, or Chancellors, and their several Officers thereto to be appointed, to Attach and Arrest the Bodies of all such of the meaner and poorer sort, who after citation should either refuse to appear before them, or appearing, should omit, or deny to perform, or undergo all lawful Decrees, Sentences, and Orders issued, imposed or given out against them, and them to commit and keep in the next Goal, until they should either perform such Sentences, or put in sufficient Bail to shew some reason before the Council Table, of such their contempt and neglect: And the said Earl, the day and year last mentioned, signed and issued a Warrant to that effect, and made the like Warrant to send to all other Bishops and their Chancellors in the said Realm of Ireland to the same effect.

The Earl's Answer.

That such Writs had been usually granted by former Deputies to Bishops in Ireland; nevertheless, being not fully satisfied with the convenience thereof, he was sparing in granting of them, until being informed that divers in the Diocese of Down were somewhat refractory, he granted Warrants to that Bishop; and hearing of some disorders in the execution, he called them in again.

X.

April 2. That the said Earl of Strafford, being Lord Lieutenant, or Deputy of Ireland, procured the Customs of the Merchandize exported out, and imported into that Realm to be farmed to his own use.

And in the Ninth Year of his now Majesties Reign, he having then interest in the said Customs (to advance his own gain and lucre) did cause and procure the Native Commodities of Ireland, to be rated in the Book of Rates for the Customs (according to which the Customs were usually gathered) at far greater values and prices, than in truth they were worth; (that is to say) every hide at 20 shillings, which in truth was worth but five shillings, every stone of Wool at Thirteen shillings four pence, though the same ordinarily were worth but five shillings, at the utmost but nine shillings; by which means the Custom which before was but a twentieth part of the true value of the Commodity, was enhanced sometimes to a fifth part, and sometimes to a fourth, sometimes to a third part of the true value, to the great oppression of the Subjects, and decay of Merchandize.

The Earl's Answer.

That his Interest in the Customs of Ireland accrued to him by the Assignment of a Lease from the Dutchess of Buckingham: That the Book of Rates, by which the Customs were gathered, was the same which was established by the Lord Deputy Faulkland, Anno 1628. some years before he was employed thither. That as he hath been just and faithful to his Master the King, by encreasing his Revenue; so hath he also much bettered the Trade and Shipping of that Kingdom.

XI.

That the said Earl, in the Ninth Year of his now Majesties Reign, did by his own will and pleasure, and for his own lucre, restrain the Exportation of the Commodities of that Kingdom without his Licence, as namely Pipe-staves, and other Commodities, and then raised great Sums of Money for licensing of Exportation of those Commodities, and dispensation of the said restraints imposed on them, by which means the Pipe-staves were raised from Four pound ten shillings, or five pound per thousand, to ten pound, and sometimes eleven pound per thousand: And other Commodities were enhanced in the like proportion, and by the same means by him the said Earl.

The Earl's Answer.

That Pipe-staves were prohibited in King James his time, and not Exported but by licence, paying Six shillings eight pence a thousand, and that he had not raised so much thereby to himself, as his Predecessors had done for such Licences.

XII.

That the said Earl being Lord Deputy of Ireland, on the Ninth day of January, in the Thirteenth year of his Majesties Reign, did then, under colour to regulate the Importation of Tobacco into the said Realm of Ireland, issue a Proclamation in his Majesties Name; prohibiting the Importation of Tobacco without licence of him and the Council, therefrom and after the First day of May, Anno Dom. 1638. After which restraint, the said Earl, notwithstanding the said restraint, caused divers great quantities of Tobacco to be Imported to his own use, and freighted divers Ships with Tobacco, which he Imported to his own use: And that if any Ship brought Tobacco into any Port there, the said Earl and his Agents used to buy the same to his own use, at their own price.

price. And should the Owners refused to let him have the same at under values, then they were not permitted to vend the same; by which undue means the said Earl having gotten the whole Trade of Tobacco into his own hands, he sold it at great and excessive prices, such as he list to impose for his own profit.

And the more to assure the said Monopoly of Tobacco, he the said Earl, on the Three and twentieth day of February, in the Thirteenth year aforesaid, did issue another Proclamation, commanding that none should put to sale any Tobacco by whole-sale, from and after the last day of May then next following, but what should be made up into Rolls, and the same sealed, with two Seals by himself appointed, one at each end of the Roll. And such as was not sealed to be seized, appointing six pence the pound for a reward to such persons as should seize the same: And the persons in whose custody the unsealed Tobacco should be found, to be committed to Goal: Which last Proclamation was covered by a pretence of the restraining of the sale of unwholesome Tobacco, but it was truly to advance the said Monopoly.

Which Proclamation the said Earl did rigorously put in execution, by seizing the Goods, fining, imprisoning, whipping, and putting the Offenders against the same Proclamation, on the Pillory; as namely, Barnaby Hubbard, Edward Coven, John Tumen, and divers others: And made the Officers of State, and Justices of Peace, and other Officers, to serve him in compassing and executing these unjust and undue courses. By which Cruelties and unjust Monopolies, the said Earl raised 100000 pounds per Annum gain to himself. And yet the said Earl, though he enhanced the Customs, where it concerned the Merchants in general, yet drew down the impost formerly taken on Tobacco, from six pence the pound to three pence the pound, it being for his own profit so to do. And the said Earl, by the same, and other rigorous and undue means, raised several other Monopolies and unlawful exactions for his own gain, viz. on Starch, Iron-pots, Glasses, Tobacco-pipes, and several other Commodities.

The Earl's Answer.

That before his time the King had but 10. or 20*l.* per Annum for that Custom, which now yielded 10000*l.* For the Proclamation, it was not set out by his means principally, or for his private benefit, but by consent of the whole Council. The prices of Tobacco not exceeding two shillings the pound. And this he conceives cannot be made Treason, were all the Article granted, but only a Monopoly, for which he was to be fined.

XIII.

April 3. That Flax being one of the principal and native Commodities of that Kingdom of Ireland, the said Earl having gotten great quantities thereof into his hands, and growing on his own Lands, did issue out several Proclamations, viz. One dated the One and twentieth day of May, in the Eleventh of his Majesties Reign, and the other dated the One and thirtieth of January, in the same year, thereby prescribing and enjoying the working of Flax into Yarn and

Thread, and the ordering of the same in such ways, wherein the Natives of that Kingdom were unpractised and unskilful: Which Proclamations so issued, were, by his Commands and Warrants to his Majesties Justices of Peace, and other Officers, and by other rigorous means, put in execution, and the Flax wrought or ordered in other manner then as the said Proclamation prescribed, was seized and imployed to the use of him and his Agents, and thereby the said Earl endeavoured to gain, and did gain in effect the sole sale of that Native Commodity.

The Earl's Answer.

That he did endeavour to advance the Manufacture of Linnen, rather than of Woollen, because the last would be the greater detriment to England. That the Primate of Ireland, the Archbishop of Dublin, Chancellor Lofin, and the Lord Mount-Norris, all of the Council, and Subscribers of the Proclamation, were as liable to the Charge as himself. That the reducing of that Nation by Orders of the Council-Board, to the English Customs, from their more savage Usages, as drawing Horses by their Tails, &c. had been of former practice: That the Project was of so ill avail to him, as he was the worse for the Manufacture thirty thousand pounds at least, by the Loom he had set up at his own Charge.

The XIV. Article was not urged.

XV.

That the said Earl of Strafford traiterously and wickedly devised and contrived by force of Arms, in a warlike manner, to subdue the Subjects of the said Realm of Ireland, to bring them under his Tyrannical Power and Will, and in pursuance of his wicked and traiterous purposes aforesaid, the said Earl of Strafford, in the Eighth year of his Majesties Reign, did by his own Authority, without any warrant or colour of Law, tax and impose great Sums of Money upon the Towns of Balsmore, Baudenbridge, Talowe, and divers other Towns and places in the said Realm of Ireland, and did cause the same to be levied upon the Inhabitants of those Towns by Troops of Souldiers, with Force and Arms, in a warlike manner. And on the Ninth day of March, in the Twelfth year of his now Majesties Reign, traiterously did give Authority unto Robert Savill a Serjeant at Arms, and to the Captains of the Companies of Souldiers, in several parts of that Realm, to send such numbers of Souldiers to lye on the Lands and Houses of such as would not conform to his Orders, until they should render obedience to his said Orders and Warrants, and after such submission (and not before) the said Souldiers to return to their Garrisons. And did also issue the like Warrants unto divers others, which Warrants were in warlike manner, with Force and Arms, put in execution accordingly, and by such warlike means did force divers of his Majesties Subjects of that Realm to submit themselves to his unlawful Commands.

And in the said Twelfth Year of his Majesties Reign, the said Earl of Strafford did traiterously cause certain Troops of Horse and Foot, armed in warlike manner, and in warlike array, with Force and Arms, to expel Richard Butler from the possession

Anno 1640. possession of Castle-Gumber, in the Territory of Idaugh, in the said Realm of Ireland; and did likewise, and in like warlike manner, expel divers of his Majesties Subjects from their Houses, Families, and Possessions, as namely Edward Brennan, Owen Oberman, Patrick Oberman, Sir Cyprian Horsfield, and divers others, to the number of about a hundred Families, and took and imprisoned them and their Wives, and carried them Prisoners to Dublin, and there detained them until they did yield up, surrender, or release their respective Estates and Rights.

And the said Earl, in like warlike manner, hath, during his Government of the said Kingdom of Ireland, subdued divers others of his Majesties Subjects ease to his will, and thereby, and by the means aforesaid, hath levied War within the said Realm, against his Majesty and his Liege-people of that Kingdom.

Testified by Serjeant Savill.

The Earl's Answer.

That nothing hath been more ordinary in Ireland, than for the Governours to put all manner of Sentences in execution by the help of Souldiers; that Grandison, Falkland, Chichester, and other Deputies frequently did it. [Sir Arthur Terringham to this point deposed, That in Falklands time he knew twenty Souldiers assailed upon one man, for refusing to pay sixteen shillings.] That his Instructions for executing his Commission, were the same with those formerly given to the Lord Falkland, and that in both there is express warrant for it. That no testimony produced against him doth evidently prove he gave any Warrant to that effect; and that Serjeant Savill shewed only the Copy of a Warrant, not the Original it self, which he conceived could not make faith in case of life and death in that High Court, especially it being not averred upon Oath to agree with the Original, which should be upon record. That he conceived he was for an Irish Custom to be tried by the Peers of that Kingdom.

This Article pinch'd the Earl so close, as notwithstanding his Answer, the Commons thought the evidence so strong against him, and were so confident that the Fact was Treason, as they were very desirous to proceed to vote upon that very point; but the Lords withdrawing, returned Answer, That they could not agree to it, but desired them to go on to the remaining Articles.

XVI.

April 5.

That the said Earl of Strafford, the Two and twentieth of February, in the Seventh year of his now Majesties Reign, intending to oppress the said Subjects of Ireland; did make a proposition, and obtained from his Majesty an allowance, that no complaint of injustice or oppression done in Ireland, should be received in England against any, unless it first appeared that the party made first his address to him the said Earl: And the said Earl having by such usurped tyrannical and exorbitant Power, expressed in the former Articles, destroyed the Peers and other Subjects of that Kingdom of Ireland, in their Lives, Consciences; Land; Liberties, and Estates; the said Earl, to the intent the better to maintain and strengthen his Power, and to bring the People into a disaffection of his Majesty, as aforesaid; did use his Majesties name in the execution of his said power. And to prevent the Subjects of that Realm of all means of complaints to his Majesty, and of redress against him and his Agents, did issue a Proclamation bearing date the Seventeenth day of September, in the Eleventh year of his Majesties Reign, thereby commanding all the Nobility, Undertakers and others, who held Estates and Offices in the said Kingdom (except such as were employed in his Majesties Service, or attending in England by his special Command) to make their personal residence in the said Kingdom of Ireland, and not to depart thence without licence of himself. And the said Earl hath since issued other Proclamations to the same purpose, by means whereof the Subjects of the said Realm are restrained from seeking relief against the oppressions of the said Earl, without his licence: Which Proclamation the said Earl hath by several rigorous ways, as by Fine, Imprisonment, and otherwise, put in execution on his Majesties Subjects, as namely, one — Parry, and others, who came over only to complain of the exorbitances and oppressions of the said Earl.

Testified by the Earl of Desmond, the Lord Roch, Marcastee, and Parry.

The Earl's Answer.

That the Deputy Falkland had set out the same Proclamation. That the same restraint was contained in the Statute of 25 of Hen. 6. upon which the Proclamation was founded. That he had the King's express Warrant for the Proclamation. That he had also power to do it by the Commission granted him; and that the Lords of the Council, and three Justices, not only yielded, but pressed him unto it. That it was done upon just cause; for, had the Ports been open, divers would have taken liberty to go to Spain, to Doway, Rhemes, or St. Omers, which might have proved of mischievous consequence to the State. That the Earl of D'Esmond stood, at the time of his restraint, charged with Treason before the Council of Ireland, for practising against the life of one Sir Valentine Coke. That the Lord Roch was then a Prisoner for Debt in the Castle of Dublin, and therefore incapable of a licence. That Parry was not fined for coming over without licence, but for several Contempts against the Council-Board in Ireland, and that in his Sentence he had but only a casting voice, as the Lord Keeper in the Star-Chamber.

The XVII. and XVIII. Articles were not insisted upon.

XIX.

That the said Earl having taxed and levied the said Impositions, and raised the said Monopolies; and committed the said Oppressions in his Majesties Name; and as by his Majesties Royal Command, he the said Earl, in May the Fifteenth year of his Majesties Reign, did of his own Authority contrive and frame a new and unusual Oath; by the purport whereof, among many other things, the party taking the said Oath; was to swear that he should not protest against any of his Majesties Royal Commands, but submit themselves in all obedience thereunto. Which Oath he so contrived, to enforce the same on the Subjects of the Scottish Nation inhabiting in Ireland,

Anno 1640. land, and out of a hatred to the said Nation, and to put them to a discontent with his Majesty and his Government there, and compelled divers of his Majesties said Subjects there to take the said Oath; some he grievously fined and imprisoned, and others he destroyed and exiled; and namely, the Tenth of October, Anno Dom. 1639. he fined Henry Steward and his Wife, who refused to take the said Oath, five thousand pounds a-piece, and their two Daughters and James Gray three thousand pounds a-piece, and imprisoned them for not paying the said Fines. The said Henry Steward's Wife and Daughters, and James Gray, being the King's Liege people of the Scottish Nation, and divers others he used in the like manner: And the said Earl upon that occasion did declare, that the said Oath did not only oblige them in point of Allegiance to his Majesty, and acknowledgment of his Supremacy only, but to the Ceremonies and Government of the Church established, or to be established by his Majesties Royal Authority; and said, That the refusers to obey, he would prosecute to the blood.

The Earl's Answer.

That the Oath was not violently enjoined by him upon the Irish Scots, but framed in compliance with their own express Petition, which Petition is owned in the Proclamation, as the main impulsive to it. That the same Oath not long after was prescribed by the Council of England. That he had a Letter under his Majesties own Hand, ordering it to be prescribed as a Touch-stone of their Fidelity. As to the greatness of the Fine imposed upon Steward, and others, he conceived it was not more then the heinousness of their offence deserved; yet had they petitioned, and submitted the next day, that would wholly have been remitted.

XX.

That the said Earl in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth years of his Majesties Reign, and divers years past, laboured and endeavoured to beget in his Majesty an ill opinion of his Subjects, namely those of the Scottish Nation, and divers and sundry times, and especially since the pacification made by his Majesty with his said Subjects of Scotland, in Summer, in the Fifteenth year of his Majesties Reign, he the said Earl did labour and endeavour to perswade, incite, and provoke his Majesty to an offensive War against his said Subjects of the Scottish Nation, and the said Earl, by his counsel, actions, and endeavours hath been, and is a chief Incendiary of the War and Discord between his Majesty and his Subjects of England, and the said Subjects of Scotland, and hath declared, and advised his Majesty, that the Demand made by the Scots in this Parliament, were a sufficient cause of War against them. The said Earl having formerly expressed the height and rancor of his mind towards his Subjects of the Scottish Nation, viz. the Tenth day of October, in the fifteenth year of his Majesties Reign, he said, That the Nation of the Scots were Rebels and Traitors: And he being then about to come to England, he then further said, That if it pleased his Master (meaning his Majesty) to send him back again, he would root out of the said Kingdom (meaning the Kingdom of Ireland) the Scottish Nation both root and branch. Some Lords, and others who had taken the said Oath in the precedent Article, only excepted. And the said Earl hath caused divers of the said Ships and Goods of the Scots to be stayed, seized, and molested, to the intent so set on the said War. Car. 16.

The Earl's Answer.

That he called all the Scottish Nation Traitors and Rebels, no one proof is produced, and though he is hasty in Speech, yet was he never so defective of Reason, as to speak so like a mad man: For he knew well his Majesty was a Native of that Kingdom, and was confident many of that Nation were of as Heroick Spirits, and as faithful and loyal Subjects as any the King had. As to the other words, of rooting out the Scots both Root and Branch, he conceives a short Reply may serve, they being proved by a single testimony only, which can make no sufficient faith in case of life. Again, the Witnesses was very much mistaken, if not worse, for he deposeth that these words were spoken the Tenth day of October in Ireland, whereas he was able to evidence, he was at that time in England, and had been so near a Month before.

The XXI. and XXII. Articles were not urged.

XXIII.

That upon the Thirteenth day of April last, the Parliament of England met, and the Commons House (then being the representative Body of all the Commons in the Kingdom) did according to the trust reposed in them, enter into debate and consideration of the great grievances of this Kingdom, both in respect of Religion, and the publick Liberty of the Kingdom, and his Majesty, referring chiefly to the said Earl of Strafford, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, the ordering and disposing of all matters concerning the Parliament, He the said Earl of Strafford, with the assistance of the said Archbishop, did procure his Majesty, by sundry Speeches and Messages, to urge the said Commons House to enter into some resolution for his Majesties Supply, for maintenance of his War against his Subjects of Scotland, before any course was taken for the relief of the great and pressing grievances, wherewith this Kingdom was then afflicted. Whereupon, a Demand was then made from his Majesty, of twelve Subsidies, for the release of Ship-money only; and while the said Commons then assembled (with expressions of great affection to his Majesty and his Service) were in debate and consideration of some Supply, before resolution by them made, He the said Earl of Strafford, with the help and assistance of the said Archbishop, did procure his Majesty to dissolve the last Parliament, upon the fifth day of May last: And upon the same Day, the said Earl of Strafford did treacherously, falsely, and maliciously endeavour to incense his Majesty against his loving and faithful Subjects, who had been Members of the said House of Commons, by telling his Majesty, they had denied to supply them. And afterward upon the same, did treacherously and wickedly counsel and advise his Majesty to this effect, viz. That having tried the affections of his people, he was loose and absolved from all Rules of Government, and was to do every thing that power would admit, and that his Majesty had tried all ways, and

and was refused, and should be acquitted both of God and Man, and that he had an Army in Ireland, (meaning the Army above-mentioned, consisting of Papists, his Dependents, as is aforesaid) which he might employ to reduce this Kingdom to obedience.

The Earl's Answer.

That he was not the principal cause of dissolving the last Parliament; for before he came to the Council Table, it was voted by the Lords to demand twelve Subsidies, and that Sir Henry Vane was ordered to demand no less; but he coming in the interim, he perswaded the Lords to vote it again, declaring to his Majesty (then present) and them, the danger of the breach of the Parliament: whereupon it was again voted, That if the Parliament would not grant twelve Subsidies, Sir Henry should descend to eight, and rather then fail, to six. But Sir Henry not observing his Instructions, demanded twelve only, without abatement, or going lower. That the height of this Demand, urged the Parliament to deny, and their Denial moved his Majesty to dissolve the Parliament: so that the chief occasion of the breach thereof, was, as he conceived, Sir Henry Vane. He confesseth, That at the Council Table he advised the King to an offensive War against the Scots; but it was not until all fair means to prevent a War had been first attempted. Again, others were as much for a defensive War, and it might be as free to vote one, as the other. Lastly, Votes at a Council-Board are but bare Opinions; and Opinions, if pertinaciously maintained, may make an Heretick, but never can a Traytor.

The XXIV. Article not urged.

XXV.

That not long after the dissolution of the said last Parliament, (viz. in the Months of May and June) he the said Earl of Strafford did advise the King to go on rigorously in levying of the Ship-money, and did procure the Sheriffs of several Counties to be sent for, for not levying the Ship-money, divers of which were threatened by him to be sued in the Star-Chamber; and afterwards by his advice were sued in the Star-Chamber, for not levying the same; and divers of his Majesties loving Subjects were sent for and imprisoned by his advice, about that and other illegal payments.

And a great Loan of a hundred thousand pounds was demanded of the City of London, and the Lord Mayor and the Aldermen, and the Sheriffs of the said City, were often sent for by his advice to the Council Table, to give an account of their proceedings in raising of Ship-money, and furthering of that Loan, and were required to certify the names of such Inhabitants of the said City as were fit to lend, which they with much humility refusing to do, he the said Earl of Strafford did use these or the like Speeches: viz. That they deserved to be put to Fine and Ransom, and that no good would be done with them, till an example were made of them, and that they were laid by the heels, and some of the Aldermen hanged up.

The Earl's Answer.

That there was a present necessity for Money; that all the Council-Board had voted with, Yea before him. That there was then a Sentence in the Star-Chamber upon the Opinion of all the Judges, for the legality of the Tax of Ship-money, and he thought he might advise the King to take, what the Judges had declared was by Law his own. He confessed, that upon refusal of so just a Service, the better to quicken the Citizens to the payment of Ship-money, he said, They deserved to be fined. Which words might perhaps be circumspectly delivered, but he conceives cannot amount to Treason, especially when no ill consequence followed upon them; and it would render men in a sad condition, if for every halty word, or opinion given in Counsel, they should be sentenced as Traytors. But that he said, it were well for the King's Service, if some of the Aldermen were hanged up, he utterly denieth, (as well he might, the words being spoken by the Lord Cottington). Nor is it proved by any, but Alderman Garway, who is at best but a single testimony, and therefore no sufficient evidence in case of life.

XXVI.

That the said Earl of Strafford, by his wicked counsel, having brought his Majesty into excessive Charges without any just cause, he did in the Month of July last (for the support of the said great Charges) counsel and approve two dangerous and wicked Projects, viz.

To seize upon the Bullion and the Money in the Mint.

And to imbase his Majesties Coin with the Mixtures of Brass.

And accordingly he procured One hundred and thirty thousand pounds, which was then in the Mint, and belonging to divers Merchants, strangers and others, to be seized on and stayed to his Majesties use. And when divers Merchants of London, Owners of the said Bullion, came to his House to let him understand the great mischief that course would produce here, and in other parts, what prejudice it would be to the Kingdom, by discrediting the Mint, and hindring the importation of Bullion; he the said Earl told them, That the City of London dealt undutifully and unthankfully with his Majesty, and that they were more ready to help the Rebels, than to help his Majesty; and that if any hurt came to them, they might thank themselves; and that it was the course of other Princes, to make use of such Moneys to serve their occasions.

And when in the same Month of July the Officers of his Majesties Mint came to him, and gave him divers Reasons against the imbasement of the said Money, he told them That the French King did use to send Commissaries of Horse with Commission to search into nuns Estates, and to peruse their Accounts, that so they may know what to levy of them by force; which they did accordingly levy: And turning to the Lord Cottington, then present, said, That this was a point worthy his Lordships consideration.

The Earl's Answer.

That he expected some proofs to evidence the two first particulars, but hears of none. For the following words, he confessed, probably they might escape the door of his lips. Nor did he think it much amiss, considering their present posture

flure

Anno 1640. *W*sture, to call that Faction Rebels. As for the last words objected against him in that Article, he said, That being in Conference with some of the Londoners, there came to his hands at that instant a Letter from the Earl of Leicester, then at Paris, wherein were the Gazets inclosed, relating that the Cardinal had given order to levy Money by Souldiers. This he only told the Lord Cottington standing by, but made not the least application thereof to the English Affairs.

XXVII.

That in or about the Month of August last, he was made Lieutenant General of all his Majesties Forces in the Northern parts against the Scots, and being at York, did in the Month of September, by his own Authority, and without any lawful Warrant, impose a Tax on his Majesties Subjects in the County of York, of 8 d. per diem, for maintenance of every Souldier of the Trained Bands of that County, which sums of Money he caused to be levied by force. And to the end to compel his Majesties Subjects out of fear and terrour to yield to the payment of the same, He did declare that he would commit them that refused the payment thereof, and the Souldiers should be satisfied out of their Estates; and they that refused it, were in very little better condition than of High Treason.

The Earl's Answer.

That his Majesty coming from York, it was thought necessary, in regard the Enemy was upon the Borders, to keep the Trained Bands on foot for defence of the County: And therefore the King directed him to write to the Freeholders in Yorkshire, to declare what they would do for their own defence; that they freely offered a Months pay, nor did any man grudge against it. Again, it was twice propounded to the great Council of Peers at York, that the King approved it as a just and necessary Act, and none of the Council contradicted it, which he conceived seemed a tacit allowance of it. That though his Majesty had not given him special order therein, nor the Gentry had desired it, yet he conceived he had power enough to impose that Tax by virtue of his Commission. But he never said, That the Refusers should be guilty of little less than High Treason, which being proved by Sir William Ingram, he was but a single testimony, and one who had formerly mistaken himself in what he had deposed.

XXVIII.

That in the Months of September and October last, he the said Earl of Strafford being certified of the Scottish Army coming into the Kingdom, and he the said Earl of Strafford, being Lieutenant General of his Majesties Army, did not provide for the defence of the Town of Newcastle, as he ought to have done, but suffered the same to be lost, that so he might the more incense the English against the Scots. And for the same wicked purpose, and out of a malicious desire to ingage the Kingdoms of England and Scotland in a National and bloody War, he did write to the Lord Conway the General of the Horse, and under the said Earl's Command, that he should fight with the Scottish Army at the passage over the Tyne, whatsoever should follow, notwithstanding that the said Lord Conway had formerly by Letters informed him the said Earl, that his Majesties Army then under his command, was not of force sufficient to encounter the Scots, by which advice of his, he did, contrary to the duty of his place, betray his Majesties Army then under his Command, to apparent danger and loss. Car. 16.

The Earl's Answer.

That he admired how in the third Article he being charged as an Incendiary against the Scots, is now in this Article made their Confederate, by betraying Newcastle into their hands. But to answer more particularly, he said, That there was at Newcastle the 24th of August ten or twelve thousand foot, and two thousand Horse, under the Command of the Lord Conway, and Sir Jacob Astly, and that Sir Jacob had written to him concerning the Town of Newcastle, that it was fortified, which also was never under his particular care, and for the passage over the River of Tyne, his Majesty sent special directions to the Lord Conway to secure it, and therefore that Lord is more (as he conceives) responsible for that miscarriage than himself.

The Earl having answered every particular, the Commons pray that if he had any thing farther to say in his own defence, he might do it presently; but the Earl desires leave till the next day, which was with difficulty granted. In the night his Lordship was taken with a terrible fit of the Stone, and continued so ill that day, that he could not possibly stir abroad, but in sudden danger of his life; the Commons deeming (for they were ever charitable, and fair in their constructions of the Earl) this to be counterfeit, meerly to gain time, whereupon the Lords ordered some of their House to go and see the Earl in the Tower: When they came to him, they found him ready and desirous to attend their Lordships and his Trial, for that he had by Physick obtain'd ease and ability to stir abroad. But he was not required to appear before the Tenth of April following, when Mr. Pym produced supplemental proofs upon the 23d. Article, founded upon some Notes taken by Sir Henry Vane Senior, Secretary of State, of some expressions of the Lord Lieutenant at the Council Table, May 5. 1640. the discovery whereof was, as was given out, in this manner following.

Secretary Vane, upon some occasion delivered to his Son Sir Henry Vane the Key of a Cabinet, to fetch some Papers laid therein. In this Cabinet young Sir Henry Vane finds a Key of another Cabinet, which he openeth, and there accidentally lights upon these Notes, who presently gives thereof an account to Mr. Pym, and he to the House of Commons. Secretary Vane's Notes, how discovered.

These Notes being thus brought to light, were read, the Title of which was;

No danger of a War with Scotland, if Offensive, not Defensive.

Then followed the Opinions interlocutory and by way of Dialogue.

themselves

K. C. H. How can we undertake Offensive War, if we have no more Money?

L. L. IR. Borrow of the City 100000 l. Go on rigorously to leavy Ship-money. Your Majesty having tried the affection of your People, you are absolved and loose from all rule of Government, and to do what Power will admit. Your Majesty have tried all ways, and being refused, shall be acquitted before God and Man. And you have an Army in Ireland, that you may employ to reduce THIS Kingdom to obedience, for I am confident the Scots cannot hold out five Months.

L. ARCH. You have tried all ways, and have always been denied, it is now lawful to take it by force.

L. COTT. Leagues abroad there may be made for the defence of the Kingdom. The Lower House are weary of the King and Church. All ways shall be just to raise Money by in this inevitable Necessity, and are to be used being lawful.

L. ARCH. For an Offensive, not any Defensive War.

L. L. IR. The Town is full of Lords, put the Commission of Array on foot, and if any of them stir, we will make them smart.

To these the Earl Answered,

That being a Privy Counsellor, he thought he might have as free a Vote as another; that his Opinion was no other then what he thought the present exigent required; that it were hard measure for the Opinions or Discourses resulting from such Occasions, and at such Debates, to be prosecuted under the notion of Treason. And whereas the main dint of this Accusation received derivation from his suggested saying, The King had an Army in Ireland; which he might employ here to reduce this Kingdom; He answereth,

First, That it is proved by the solitary testimony of one man (Secretary Vane) which is not of validity enough in Law to create faith in a matter of Debt, much less in point of life and death.

Secondly, That the Secretaries Deposition was exceeding dubious; upon two examinations he could not remember any such words, and the third time his testimony was not positive, but that I spake those words; or the like; and words may be very like in sound, yet differ much in sense, as in the words of my Charge, here for there, and that for this, puts an end to the Controversie.

Thirdly, There were present at this Debate but eight Privy Counsellors in all, two whereof (the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Secretary Windbank) are not to be produced; Sir Henry affirms the words, I deny them: Then there remain four still to give in Evidence; viz. the Marquess Hamilton; the Earl of Northumberland, the Lord Treasurer, and the Lord Cottington; who have all declared upon their Honours, that they never heard me speak those words, nay nor the like.

Lastly, Suppose (though I grant it not) that I spake those words, yet cannot the word This rationally imply England, because the Debate was concerning Scotland, as is yielded on all hands, because England was not out of the way of obedience, as the Earl of Clare well observed, and because there never was any the least intention of landing the Irish Army in England, as the foresaid Lords of the Privy Council are able to attest.

And now all things coming to close, the Lord Steward acquaints the Earl, that if his Lordship had any thing further to say in his own defence, he might proceed, which his Lordship did, and made a summary repetition of his former Answers and Defence; and in the close, concluded with the Address to their Lordships about a new sort of Treason lately discovered, called Accumulative Treason, of which he was said to be guilty. For, says he,

My Lords,

Here remains another kind of Treason that I should be guilty of, for endeavouring to subvert the Fundamental Laws of the Land. That this should be Treason together, that is not Treason in one part; a Treason accumulative, that when all will not do it alone, being weaved up with others, it should do it, seems very strange. Under favour, my Lords, I conceive there is neither Statute nor Common Law, which doth declare this endeavouring to subvert the Fundamental Laws of the Land to be High Treason; for I have been diligent in the inquiry, as you know is deeply concerns me, and could never discover it. It is hard to be questioned for Life and Honour upon a Law, that cannot be shewn; for it is a Rule in Sir Edward Coke, De non apparentibus & non existentibus eadem est ratio. Jesu! Where hath this fire lain hid so many hundreds of years, without smother, to discover it, till it thus burst forth to consume Me and my Children? That punishment should precede promulgation of a Law, to be punished by a Law subsequent to the Fact, is extreme hard; What man can be safe if this be admitted? My Lords, it is hard in another respect, that there should be no token set by which we should know this Offence, no admonition by which we should avoid it. If a man pass the Thames in a Boat, and split himself upon an Anchor, and no Buoy be floating to discover it, he who overth the Anchor shall make satisfaction; but if a Buoy be set there, every man passeth upon his own peril. Now where is this mark, where the token upon this Crime to declare it to be High Treason. My Lords, be pleased to give that regard to the Peerage of England, as never to expose your selves to such moot-points, such constructive interpretations of Laws, If there must be a trial of Wits, let the subject matter be of somewhat else, than the lives and honours of Peers. It will be wisdom for your selves, for your posterity, and for the whole Kingdom to cast into the fire these bloody and mysterious volumes of constructive and arbitrary Treason, as the Primitive Christians did their Books of Curious Arts, and betake your selves to the plain letter of the Law and Statute, that telleth us what is, and what is not Treason, without being more ambitious to be more learned in the Art of Killing than our Forefathers. It is now full Two hundred and forty years, since any man was touched for this alledged Crime to this Height before my self; let us not awaken these sleeping Lions to our destructions, by raking up a few musty Records, that have lain by the walls so many Ages, forgotten or neglected. May your Lordships please not to add this to my other Misfortunes; for my other Sins beslave me, not for Treason: Let not a President be desired from me, so disadvantageous as this will be in the consequence to the whole Kingdom; Do not, through me, wound the Interest of the Commonwealth. And howsoever these Gentlemen say they speak for the Commonwealth, yet in this particular I indeed speak for it, and shew the inconveniencies and mischiefs which will fall upon it.

Anno For, as it is said in the Statute 1 of Henry 4. No 1640. man will know what to do, or say, for fear of such Penalties. Do not put, my Lords, such difficulties upon Ministers of State, that men of Wisdom, of Honour, of Fortune, may not with cheerfulness and safety be employed for the Publick; if you weigh and measure them by Grains and Scruples, the publick Affairs of the Kingdom will be waste, no man will meddle with them who has any thing to lose. My Lords, I have troubled you longer than I should have done, were it not for interest of these dear pledges a Saint in Heaven hath left me. [At this he stopt awhile, offering up some tears to her Ashes.] What I forfeit my self is nothing, but that my indiscretion should extend to my Posterity it woundeth me to the very soul. You will pardon my infirmity, something I should have added, but am not able, therefore let it pass. And now, my Lords, for my self, I have been by the blessing of Almighty God taught, that the afflictions of this present life, are not to be compared to the eternal weight of Glory which shall be revealed hereafter. And so my Lords, even so, with all tranquillity of mind, I freely submit my self to your judgment; and whether that judgment be of life, or death, —Te Deum laudamus.

The Gentlemen that prosecuted by the Commons order, were, Mr. Jeffrey Palmer, Mr. John Maynard, Mr. Bulstrode Whitlocke, the Lord George Digby, Mr. Oliver St. John, Sir Walter Earle, Mr. John Selden, Mr. John Hampden, Mr. Stred; of these Mr. Selden and the Lord Digby, hearing the Earl's Defence, became Converts, and left the prosecution after the Bill of Attainder was brought into the House. But as to the particular Answers and Replies made, both by the Earl and the Prosecutors, they may be seen in the Continuation of Sir Richard Baker from pag. 485. to pag. 504. and are worth the Readers perusal.

The Earl having finisht his Defence, Mr. Glyn and Mr. Pym began their Harangues, endeavouring to lay all the Load they possibly could upon his shoulders, but all to no purpose, for that the Matters of Fact said to be committed by the Lord Lieutenant, did not fall under the letter of any Statute of Treason; only they urged a Proviso in the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, which was repealed 1 Hen. 4.

That because all particular Treasons could not be then defined, therefore what the Parliament should declare to be Treason in time to come should be punished as Treason; within which compass they intend to bring him, and that by Bill of Attainder.

The Earl put upon a point of Law, desires Counsel, which by no means the Commons would assent unto, and notwithstanding all the reason in the World, it was canvassed three days, and at last concluded, that his Counsel should plead such matters as they should be restrained unto.

The Earl Saturday the Seventeenth of April, the Earl answers appears with his Counsel, Master Lane the Prince's satisfaction. Lane argued, That the said Statute of 25

Edward 3. was a Declarative Law, and so not to be interpreted as of consequence, equity, or construction, but by the express Letter only: That it was a Penal Law, and so not to admit of any Constructions or Inferences; for the true nature of Penalties enforce the keeping of known Laws, not of conjectural and dubious. And for the Salvo, he affirmed, That in the sixth of Henry 4. the Nobility petitioned the Parliament to limit all Treasons by Statute; in which Parliament, Chapter 10. an Act passed thereupon, that the Salvo should be holden repealed in all times to come, nothing to be esteemed Treason, but what was literally contained in the Statute of 25 Edward the Third, nor could the rest of the Counsel speak more then what had been said by Mr. Lane, being so sufficient for matters of Law, unless their Lordships would state any other Questions, to which they were ready to answer; upon which the Court adjourned without prefixing any time of meeting.

The Commons meant it not to meet any more; the Earl had satisfied all curious Observations of his Defence, and the Commons knew it well enough: But they resolved to Attaint him by Bill, which was debated by the Commons the Nineteenth day, and the Earl voted by them guilty of High Treason merely upon the Evidence of Secretary Vane, and his Notes: But upon reading the Bill engrossed in their House the One and twentieth day, it was hardly canvassed by the Poll; the Dissenters being Fifty nine, and my Lord Digby the most eminent, that urged for him, and yet it passed.

That Afternoon, with all expedition it was brought to the Lords, and the Four and twentieth day, they were put in mind to fix a day for reading of it: To which they returned answer, That on Munday and Tuesday after they would not fail, being not over harty to do it then; for it was debated by the Lords to be a Business of very high concernments, and so perplext as necessarily required a conference with the Commons, who put it upon Master St. John the King's Solicitor, to satisfy them, and to justify the Bill by Law, upon Thursday the Nine and Twentieth, and to offer Reasons enforcing them to this way of proceeding against the Earl, who was ordered to be there present.

The Bill of Attainder was as followeth.

Bill of Attainder.

Whereas the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of the House of Commons in this present Parliament assembled, have in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of England, impeached Thomas Earl of Strafford of High Treason, for endeavouring to subvert the Ancient and fundamental Laws and Government of his Majesty's Realms of England and Ireland, and to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government against Law in the said Kingdoms; and for exercising a Tyrannous and Exorbitant Power over and against the Laws of the said Kingdoms, 1640.

Anno

Kingdoms, over the Liberties, Estates, and Laws of his Majesties Subjects; and likewise for having by his own Authority commanded the laying and assessing of Souldiers upon his Majesties Subjects in Ireland, against their consent, to compel them to obey his unlawful Commands and Orders, made upon Paper-petitions, in Causes, between party and party, which accordingly was executed upon divers of his Majesties Subjects, in a War-like manner within the said Realm of Ireland; and in so doing, did Levy War against the King's Majesty and his Liege-people in that Kingdom. And also for that he upon the unhappy Dissolution of the last Parliament, did slander the House of Commons to his Majesty, and did counsel and advise his Majesty, that he was loose and absolved from Rules of Government, and that he had an Army in Ireland, which he might employ to reduce this Kingdom; for which he deserves to undergo the pains and Forfeitures of High Treason.

And the said Earl hath been also an Incendiary of the Wars between the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland, all which offences have been sufficiently proved against the said Earl upon his Impeachment.

Be it therefore Enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, and by the Lords and Commons in this present Parliament Assembled, and by Authority of the same, that the said Earl of Strafford, for the heinous Crimes and Offences aforesaid, stand and be adjudged and attainted of High Treason, and shall suffer such pain of death, and incur the Forfeitures of his Goods and Chattels, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments of any estate of Free-hold or Inheritance in the said Kingdoms of England and Ireland, which the said Earl, or any other to his use, or in trust for him, have or had the day of the first sitting of this present Parliament, or at any time since.

Provided that no Judge or Judges, Justice or Justices whatsoever, shall adjudge or interpret any Act or thing to be Treason, nor hear or determine any Treason, nor in any other manner than he or they should or ought to have done before the making of this Act, and as if this Act had never been had, or made. Serving alwaies unto all and singular persons and bodies politique and corporal their Heirs and Successors, (others than the said Earl and his Heirs, and such as claim by, from or under him) all such right, title and Interest, of, in and to all and singular such of the said Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, as he, they, or any of them, had before the first day of this present Parliament, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Provided that the passing of this present Act, and his Majesties assent thereunto, shall not be any determination of this present Session of Parliament, and all Bills and matters whatsoever depending in Parliament, and not fully enacted and determined; And all Statutes and Acts of Parliament, which have their continuance until the end of this present Session of Parliament, shall remain, continue, and be in force, as if this Act had not been.

His Majesty had been present at this great trial from first to last, and was not satisfied of the Earl's guilt, as to any matters of Treason; of Misdemeanours he would not acquit him, and therefore on the first of May, he called both the Houses together, and declared himself as follows:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Car. 16.

I Had no intention to have spoken to you of this business to day, which is the great business of the Earl of Strafford, because I would do nothing which might hinder your occasions. But now it comes to pass that I must of necessity have part in the judgment, I think it most necessary to declare my Conscience therein.

The Kings Speech in defence of the Earl of Strafford.

I am sure you know I have been present at the hearing of this great Cause, from one end to the other; and I must tell you that in my Conscience I cannot condemn him of High Treason.

It is not fit for me to argue this business, I am sure you will not expect it, a positive Doctrine best becomes the mouth of a Prince, yet must I tell you three truths, which I am sure no man can tell so well as my self.

First, That I had never any intention of bringing over the Irish Army into England, nor ever was advised by any body so to do.

Secondly, That there was never any Debate before me, either in publique Council, or private Committee, of the disloyalty of my English Subjects, nor ever had I any suspicion of them.

Thirdly, That I was never Counsell'd by any to alter the least of any of the Laws of England, much less to alter all the Laws. Nay, I tell you this, I think no body durst ever be so impudent as to move me to it. For if they had, I should have made them such an Example, and put such a mark upon them, that all posterity should know my intentions by it, they being ever to Govern by the Law, and no otherwise.

I desire rightly to be understood, for though I tell you in my Conscience I cannot condemn him of High Treason, yet cannot I clear him of Misdemeanours; therefore I hope you may find out a way to satisfy Justice, and your own fears, and not oppress my Conscience.

My Lords, I hope you know what a tender Conscience is, and I must declare unto you, that to satisfy my people I would do great matters; but in this of Conscience, neither fear, nor any other respect whatsoever, shall ever make me go against it.

Certainly I have not deserved so ill of this Parliament at this time, that they should press me in this tender point, therefore I cannot suspect you will go about it. Nay, I must confess for Misdemeanours I am so clear in them, that, though I will not chalk out the way, yet I will shew you, that I think my Lord of Strafford is not fit hereafter to serve me, or the Commonwealth, in any place of trust, no not so much as a Constable. Therefore I leave it to you, my Lords, to find out some such way as to bring me out of this straight, and keep your selves and the Kingdom from such Inconveniencies.

This Speech of the King's did not at all please the Parliament, and upon the Sunday following the Pulpits of London echoed nothing but the necessity of Justice to be inflicted upon high Delinquents; and indeed this way of influencing the Rabble, was one chief means of the miseries which followed, for on the Monday morning following, a Rabble of the light-headed City, set on work by some Members of the Commons House, came thronging down to Westminster near Anno 1640. W six thousand Armed with Swords, Staves and Cudgels; crying out for Justice against the Earl of Strafford; and complained of the decay of their Trade, &c. and this way of Tumult was lately taken up and taught us from Scotland to enforce a consent and execution of any Parliament designs, the Mutineers posting up a Catalogue of the names of the Members of Parliament who had voted for the Earls acquitment, stiling them Straffordians, menacing some of them, assaulting others, and reproaching them as they pleased: Upon which his Majesty hath the ensuing discourse upon the insolencies of those Tumults.

Eikon Bas. Chap. 4. W Upon the Insolency of the Tumults.

I Never thought (says the King) any thing (except our sins) more ominously presaging all these mischiefs which have followed, then those Tumults in London and Westminster, soon after the Convening of this Parliament; which were not like a Storm at Sea, (which yet wants not its terror) but like an Earthquake, shaking the very Foundations of all; then which, nothing in the World hath more of Horror.

As it is one of the most convincing Arguments that there is a God, while his power sets bounds to the raging of the Sea, so 'tis no less, that he restrains the madness of the people. Nor doth any thing portend more God's displeasure against a Nation, than when he suffers the confluence and clamours of the Vulgar, to pass all boundaries of Laws, and reverence to Authority.

Which those Tumults did to so high degrees of Insolence, that they spared not to invade the Honour and Freedom of the two Houses, Menacing, Reproaching, Shaking, yea, and assaulting some Members of both Houses, as they fancied or disliked them: Nor did they forbear most rude and unseemly deportments, both in contemptuous words and actions, to My self and My Court.

Nor was this a short fit or two of shaking, as an Ague, but a Quotidian Fever, alwayes increasing to higher inflammations, impatient of any mitigation, restraint, or remission.

First, They must be a Guard against those fears which some men scared themselves and others withal, when indeed, nothing was more to be feared and less to be used by wise men than those Tumultuary confluxes of mean and rude people, who are taught first to Petition, then to Protest, then to dictate, at last to Command and Over-awe the Parliament.

All obstructions in Parliament (that is, a freedom of differing in Votes, and debating matters with reason and candor) must be taken away with these Tumults: By these must the Houses be purged, and all rotten Members (as they please to count them) cast out: By these the obstinacy of men, resolved to discharge their Consciences, must be subdued; by these all factious, seditious, and Schismatical Proposals against Government, Ecclesiastical or Civil, must be backed and abetted, till they prevailed.

Generally, who ever had most mind to bring forth confusion and ruin upon Church and State, used the midwifery of those Tumults; whose Riot and impatience was such, that they would not stay the ripening and season of Counsels, or fair production of Acts, in the order, gravity, and deliberateness befitting a Parliament; but ripped up with barbarous cruelty, and forcibly cut out abortive Votes, such as their Inviters and Encouragers most fancied. Car. 16.

Yea, so enormous and detestable were their out-rages, that no sober man could be without an infinite shame and sorrow to see them so tolerated and connived at by some; countenanced encouraged, and applauded by others.

What good man had not rather want any thing he most desired, for the publique good, then obtain it by such unlawful and irreligious means? But mens passions and God's directions seldom agree; violent designs and motions must have suitable Engines; such as too much attend their own ends, seldom confine themselves to God's means. Force must crowd in, what Reasons will not lead.

Who were the chief Demagogues and Patrons of Tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them, to direct and turn their clamorous importunities, some men yet living are too conscious to pretend ignorance: God in his due time will let these see, that those were no fit means to be used for attaining his ends.

But, as it is no strange thing for the Sea to rage, when strong winds blow upon it; so, neither for multitudes to be insolent, when they have men of some reputation for parts and piety to set them on.

That which made their rudeness most formidable, was, That many Complaints being made, and Messages sent by My self and some of both Houses; yet no order for redress could be obtained with any vigor and efficacy proportionable to the malignity of that now far-spread disease, and predominant mischief.

Such was some mens stupidity, that they feared no inconvenience; Others petulancy, that they joyed to see their betters shamefully out-raged and abused, while they knew their only security consisted in vulgar flattery: So insensible were they of Mine, or the two Houses common safety and Honours.

Nor could ever any order be obtained, impartially to examine, censure, and punish the known Bombers, and impudent Incendiaries, who boasted of the influence they had, and used to convoke those Tumults, as their advantages served.

Yea, some (who should have been wiser States-men) owned them as friends, commending their Courage, Zeal, and Industry; which to sober men could seem no better than that of the Devil, who goes about seeking whom he may deceive, and devour.

I confess, when I found such a deafness, that no Declaration from the Bishops, who were first foully insulted and assaulted; nor yet from other Lords and Gentlemen of Honour; nor yet from my self could take place for the due suppression of these Tumults, and securing, not only Our Freedom in Parliament, but our very Persons in the Streets; I thought My self not bound by My presence, to provoke them to higher boldness and contempts: I hoped, by My withdrawing, to give time, both for the ebbing of their Tumultuous fury, and others regaining some degrees of modesty and sober sense.

Some may interpret it as an effect of Pusillanimity for any man, for popular terrors to desert his publique Station. But I think it a hardiness, beyond true valor, for a wise man to set himself against the breaking in of a Sea; which Anno. 1640. to resist, at present: threatens imminent danger; but to with-draw, gives it space to spend its fury, and gains a fitter time to repair the breach. Certainly, a gallant man had rather fight, to great disadvantages for number and place in the field, in an orderly way, then skuffle with an undisciplined Rabble.

Some suspected and affirmed that I meditated a War, (when I went from White-hall only to redeem My Person and Conscience from violence) God knows I did not then think of a War. Nor will any prudent man conceive, that I would by so many former, and some after-Acts, have so much weakened my self, if I had purposed to engage in a War, which to decline by all means, I denied my self in so many particulars: 'Tis evident I had then no Army to fly unto, for protection, or vindication.

'Who can blame me, or any other, for with-drawing our selves from the daily baitings of the Tumults, not knowing whether their fury and discontent might not fly so high, as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but played with in their paws? God, who is my sole Judge, is my Witness in Heaven, that I never had any thoughts of going from my House at White-hall, If I could have had but any reasonable fair Quarter: I was resolved to bear much and did so, but I did not think my self bound to prostitute the Majesty of my place and Person, the safety of my Wife and Children to those, who are prone to insult most, when they have objects and opportunity most capable of their rudeness and petulancy.

'But this business of the Tumults (whereof some have given already an account to God, others yet living know themselves desperately guilty,) Time and the guilt of many hath so smothered up and buried, that I think it best to leave it, as it is, only I believe the just Avenger of all disorders will in time make those men, and that City see their sin in the glass of their punishment. 'Tis more than an even-lay that they may one day see themselves punished by that way they offended.

'Had this Parliament, as it was in its first Election and Constitution, safe full and free, the Members of both Houses being left to their freedom of Voting, as in all reason, Honour, and Religion, they should have been; I doubt not but things would have been so carried, as would have given no less content to all good men than they wished or expected.

'For, I was resolved to hear reason in all things, and to consent to it so far as I could comprehend it: but as Swine are to Gardens and orderly Plantations; so are Tumults to Parliaments, and Plebeian concourses to publick Councils, turning all into disorders and sordid confusions.

'I am prone sometimes to think, That had I called this Parliament to any other place in England (as I might opportunely enough have done) the said consequences in all likelihood, with God's blessing, might have been prevented. A Parliament would have been welcom in any place; no place afforded such confluence of various and vicious humours, as that where it was unhappily convened. But we must leave all to God, who orders our disorders, and magnifies his wisdom most when our follies and miseries are most discovered.

The Names of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, posited up as Straffordians, were:

Car. 16.

Lord Digby, Lord Compton, Lord Buckhurst, Sir Robert Horton, Sir Thomas Fanshawe, Sir Edward Alford, Sir Nicholas Stanning, Sir Thomas Dunby, Sir George Wentworth, Sir Peter Wentworth, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, Sir William Carnaby, Sir Richard Wynn, Sir Gervase Clifton, Sir William Widdrington, Sir William Pennymann, Sir Henry Slingsby, Sir William Fortman, Sir Patrick Cornwell, Sir Richard Lee, Mr. Gervase Hollis, Mr. Sidney Godolphin, Mr. Cook, Mr. Coventry, Mr. Benjamin Weston, Mr. William Weston, Mr. John Selden, Mr. Alford, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Herbert, Captain Digby, Serjeant Hide, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Griffith, Mr. Scowen, Dr. Turner, Dr. Parry, Mr. Bridgeman, Mr. Fettiplace, Captain Charles Price, Mr. Arundel, Mr. Newport, Mr. Robert Holborne, Mr. Noel, Mr. Kirton, Mr. Pollard, Mr. Price, Mr. Trevanion, Mr. Jane, Mr. Edcombe, Mr. Chickley, Mr. Mallory, Mr. Porter, Mr. Warwick, and Mr. White.

And now comes on the National Protestation occasioned by fears and jealousies studiously fomented and kept up by the Commons, as if Popery were about to enter; hereupon the publique Doctrine of the Church of England, as it was opposite to Popery and Popish Innovations, and not to the maintaining of any form of Worship or Government, nor any Rites or Ceremonies of the Church, is now protested to be only in the foregoing; since maintained and owned by both Houses, and ordered to be taken by all the people of England. Hereby it plainly appeared, that they intended to question the Discipline of our Church.

At last the Parliament think of satisfying the great Accounts which the Kingdom stood charg'd with two Armies then in being in this Kingdom, but with this Condition, That his Majesty would pass a Bill not to Adjourn the Parliament, nor Prorogate it, nor Dissolve it without the consent of both Houses, until the Grievances of the Kingdom were redressed. And Complaints were never wanting, nor matter of Grievance neither, therefore this Parliament was afterwards called the Everlasting Parliament. And accordingly a Bill was ordered to be brought in Parliament hereto.

The Bill of Attainder stuck still in the House of Peers, for that it brought in the King as Judge, and so was on that account laid aside, and his Articles against him taken in debate, when amongst forty five Lords, twenty six of them Vote him Guilty of High Treason upon the fifteenth Article, for Levying Moneys by force in Ireland; and upon the Nineteenth also for imposing an Oath upon the Subjects in Ireland, and so both those Bills of a perpetual Parliament, and the other of Attainder were both compleated, and a Conference of both Houses, had thereupon the day following, and some Lords were dispatched away to his Majesty to request his Answer, which was, That on Monday following he would satisfy them.

His Majesty had under his own Hand promised the Earl of Strafford that he would save him, and that the Bill of Attainder should not pass against him; and this Promise did indeed stick with the King; hereupon he sends for five Bishops, the Archbishop of Armagh, the Bishops of London, Lincoln, Durham, and Carlisle, and desires their direction as to this Promise, which was to this effect:

That

Anno 1640. That herein, the Matter of Fact, and the Matter of Law were to be distinguished; that of the Fact, he himself might make a Judgment, having been present at all the proceedings against the said Lord; where, if upon the hearing of the Allegations on either side, he did not conceive him guilty of the Crime, wherewith he was charged, he could not in Justice condemn him. But for the Matter of Law, what was Treason, and what was not, he was to rest in the Opinion of the Judges, whose Office it was to declare the Law, and who were sworn therein to carry themselves indifferently betwixt him and his Subjects; which gave his Majesty occasion to complain of the bad dealing of the Judges with him, not long before; that having earnestly pressed them to declare in particular what point of the Earl's Charge they adjudged to be Treason, (for as much as upon the hearing of the proof produced, he might in his Conscience perhaps find him guiltless of that Fact;) he could not by any means draw them to name any particular, but that upon the whole matter, Treason might justly be charged upon him.

But more particularly the Bishop of Lincoln finding that the Promise made by his Majesty was the great matter that stuck with the King; he hereupon tells his Majesty, That he was confident that the Earl was so great a lover of his Majesties peace, and so tender of his Conscience and the Kingdoms safety, as he would willingly acquit his Majesty of that Promise, which words were taken by the King in evil part, but the whole discourse imparted it seems cunningly to the Lord Lieutenant, who being told that his Majesty was satisfied of his Guilt in Law (which yet was false) and was only bound by his Promise to his Lordship; at which, 'tis said, that the Earl starting out of his Chair, calls for Pen, Ink and Paper, and writes the ensuing Letter to his Majesty:

May it please your Majesty,

The Earl's Letter to the King upon the Tumult of the Prentices.

It hath been my greatest grief in all these Troubles, to be taken as a person which should endeavour to represent and set things amiss between your Majesty and your People, and to give Councils tending to the disquiet of the three Kingdoms.

Most true it is, that this mine own private condition considered, it had been a great madness, since through your gracious favour I was so provided, as not to expect in any kind to mend my fortune, or please my mind more, than by resting where your bounteous hand had placed me.

Nay, it is most mightily mistaken, for unto your Majesty it is well known, my poor and humble advices concluded still in this, that your Majesty and your people could never be happy, till there were a right understanding betwixt you and them; no other means to effect and settle this happiness, but by the counsel and assent of the Parliament, or to prevent the growing evils upon this State, but by intirely putting your self in your last resort, upon the loyalty and good affections of your English Subjects.

Yet, such is my misfortune, this truth findeth little credit; the contrary seemeth generally to be believed, and my self reputed as something of separation between you and your people, under a heavier censure, than which I am persuaded no Gentleman can suffer.

Now, I understand the minds of men are more incensed against me, notwithstanding your Majesty hath declared, that in your princely opinion I am not guilty of Treason, nor are you satisfied in your Conscience to pass the Bill.

This bringeth me into a very great strait, there is before me the ruin of my Children and Family, hitherto untouched in all the branches of it with any foul Crimes. Here is before me the many ills, which may befall your sacred person, and the whole Kingdom, should your self and the Parliament part less satisfied one with the other, than is necessary for the preservation of King and people. Here is before me the things most valued, most feared by mortal man, Life or Death.

To say, Sir, that there hath not been a strife in me, were to make me less than God knoweth mine infirmities give me.

And to call a destruction upon my self and young Children, were the intentions of my heart (at least have been innocent of this great offence) may be believed will find no easie content to flesh and blood.

But with much sadness, I am come to a resolution of that which I take to be best becoming me, to look upon that which is most principal in it self, which doubtless is the prosperity of your sacred Person, and the Commonwealth, infinitely before any private mans interest.

And therefore in few words, as I put myself wholly upon the Honour and Justice of my Peers, so clearly, as to beseech your Majesty might please to have spared that Declaration of yours on Saturday last, and intirely to have left me to their Lordships. So now to set your Majesties Conscience, &c. at liberty, I do most humbly beseech you, for the preventing of such mischief as may happen by your refusal, to pass the Bill, by this means to remove (praised be God) I cannot say this accursed, but (I confess) this unfortunate thing forth of the way, towards that blessed Agreement, which God I trust shall for ever establish betwixt you and your Subjects.

Sir, my consent herein, shall more acquit you to God, than all the World can do besides. To a willing man there is no injury done. And as by God's Grace I forgive all the World, so Sir, I can give up the Life of this World with all cheerfulness imaginable, in the just acknowledgment of your exceeding favours: and only beg, that in your goodness, you would vouchsafe to cast your gracious regard upon my poor Son and his Sisters, less or more, and no otherwise, than their unfortunate Father shall appear more or less guilty of his death. God long preserve your Majesty.

Tower,
May 4. 1641.

Your Majesties most humble and faithful Subject and Servant,

STRAFFORD.

On Monday the Tenth of May, the King was solicited from both Houses for the passing both these Bills for a perpetual Parliament, and for the Earl's Attainder, which his Majesty did by Commission to several Lords, and thereby lost, at one blow, both his own Prerogative and Strafford's Life.

And

Anno 1640.

And here we must be forced to crave pardon of our Reader, for that we have (though we hope for his benefit) set the whole of this great Personage his Tryal before him, though the latter part thereof was in some part of the beginning of the year 1641. which we purposely did, that the story might not appear abrupt by the intermixture of other matters occurring in time with this.

We left the Scots in their five Months of warm Quarters in the four Northern Counties, and their Commissioners at London soliciting for the pay of their Army, and underhand debauching the City in their Loyalty; at which time they exhibited also Articles and Charges against the Lord Deputy of Ireland, and his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, which were as followeth:

Scots
Covenanters charge against the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Scots Covenanters Charge against the Archbishop of Canterbury concerning Innovations in Religion, the main causes of Commotions in Kingdoms and States, the true causes of our present Troubles, many and great; besides the Books of Ordinances and Homilies.

First, Some particular Alterations in Religion without Order or Law, a new Book of Canons and Constitutions Ecclesiastical.

Secondly, A Liturgy or Book of Common Prayer, full of dangerous Errors; and we challenge the Prelate Canterbury the prime cause on Earth.

That he was Author of our changes in Religion by fourteen Letters of his to our pretended Bishops to promote the English Service-Book, and for which neglect he lost the Bishoprick of Edinburgh; but may deserve a better; advising him to return a List of the Names of such persons of Honour and Office that refuse.

More appears by Papers, memorative Instructions to the Bishop of St. Andrews and Ross, for ordering the Affairs of the Kingdom, to obtain Warrants, to order the Exchequer, Privy-Council, Commissions of Surrenders, the matter of Balmerino's Process, as might please Prelates, Warrants to sit in the High Commission once a Week, and to gain from the Noble-men the Abbies of Kells, St. Andrews and Conday, for the Prelates, ordering by his command even the meanest Offices in the Kirk.

Secondly, The Book of Canons obtruded, being devised for establishing a Tyrannical power in the persons of the Prelates over the Consciences, Liberties, and Goods of the People, and for abolishing the whole Discipline of our Kirk, settled by so many general and provincial Assemblies, Presbyteries, and Kirk-Sessions, by Law and continual practice since the Reformation.

The Book of Common-Prayer which by our National Assembly is found to be Popish, Superstitious and Idolatrous, and repugnant to all our Doctrine and Discipline reformed.

And that Canterbury was the main Actor they prove by several Letters to several pretended Bishops for promoting and ordering the use thereof; and the Book it self in Writ, is interlined, margined, and patched up by his hand, the changes and supplements taken from the Mass-Books, different from the Service-Book in England, and without the King's knowledge, as in the Sacraments of Baptism, and the Supper of the Lord.

That our Supplications were many against these Books, but Canterbury procured them to be answered with terrible Proclamations, whereby we were constrained to use the Remedy of Protestations; we were called Rebels and Traitors, and procured War against us; and after the Pacification at Barwick he advised to have it broken, and to bring upon us this new War; that our Covenant he called damnable, treasonable, railing against us in the presence of the King and Committee.

That his hand was to the Warrant for Restraining and Imprisonment of some of our Commissioners; when we had manifested the truth of our Intentions, Declarations, Remonstrances, and Representations, true, just, and lawful.

That he advised the breaking up of the last Parliament, but sat still in his Convocation, to make Laws against them, tending to our utter ruin.

That he caused a Prayer to be used in all Churches in England, whereby we are stiled as Traiterous Subjects, &c.

That if the Pope had been in his place, he could not have been more zealous against the Reformed Churches, to reduce them to the Heresies, Doctrines, Superstitions, Idolatries of Rome, &c.

All which they will prove, and desire justice upon him.

The Charge of the Covenanting Scots against the Lord Deputy of Ireland; were to the effect following:

That they had conjoyned with Canterbury (by no other name) the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, whose malice was to do mischief to their Kirk and Country; no cause moving, but his own pride and superstitious disdain of their Kirk, so much honoured; first, by sundry other Reformed Kirks, by many worthy Divines in England, by their oppositions against Innovations in all his Majesties Dominions; which he promotes by advancing his Chaplain Dr. Bromholm to the Bishoprick of Derry, and Vicar-General of Ireland, one prompted to exalt Canterbury's Popery and Arminianism; and Dr. Chapel to the University of Dublin, on purpose to impoverish and corrupting the Fountain of the Kirk: and when the Primate of all Ireland pressed a Ratification of the Articles of the Confession of that Kirk in Parliament, for barring of Innovation, he boldly threatened him, with burning of it by the Hangman, although confirmed in England.

He disgraced our new Reformation begun in Scotland, by a Pamphlet, Examen conjurationis Scoticae, The ungirding of the Scottish Armour, by simachus Nicanor, and he, the Patron of the Works and them.

That notwithstanding their National Oath and Covenant, warranted by General Assemblies, approved by Parliament there, and to be taken by all the people, and their Loyalty to the King, and lawful proceeding, the Innocency of their Covenant and Cause, yet did he tend all his malice and force against them.

First, By summoning some of the Scotch Nobility and Gentry there in Ireland to Dublin, and there conspired with the Prelate of Röibes, and framed a Petition, which the Scots there must exhibit, to renounce the Scots Covenant; and so thereby enforced all the Scots above sixteen years of age, to the same; upon pain of close Imprisonment, whereby a thousand others were forced to fly into Scotland, leaving all they had behind them, to the weakning of the Scots Plantation, and disservice to the King and Kingdom.

Ann
1640

That by his means a Parliament is there called, and although by six Subsidies unduly gotten and levied, the Parliament before the Land was impoverished; He now again extorted four Subsidies more, otherwise Forces should have been levied against us as Rebels. This being intended as a President to the Parliaments in England, for levying a joint Army over the Subjects of both Nations.

And accordingly an Army was raised, and brought to the Coast, threatening to invade Scotland, and to make us a conquered Province, to the extirpation of Religion, Laws, and Liberties, which enforced us of necessity to maintain our Forces on Foot, to prevent his coming: our Ships and Goods taken as Prize on the Irish Coasts, inciting England to a War also against them.

Thus fitted, he hastning over into England, and at the delivery up of the Sword there he uttered these words, If ever I return to this honourable Sword, I shall not leave of the Scots neither Root nor Branch.

Being come to Court, he acts all Officers to our Commissioners who were to clear all our Proceedings at the Junto, using persuasions to stir up both King and Parliament to a War against us.

That course failing, he plotted to break the Parliament, and to have the Conduct of the Army in the Expedition against Scotland, which he exercised according to the largeness of his Patent of his own devising; and when the Scots Army came but in peace, far from intentions to invade, but with supplication and petition of peace; he gave order to his Officers to fight us, and so to be engaged in blood, the better for his wicked designs against both Kingdoms.

And although his Majesty with consent of his Peers were inclined to a Peace (as before) he only in that Honourable Assembly raged against us as Traitors and Enemies to Monarchical Government, to be sent home; nay, he himself would undertake to whip us home in our own blood.

That after the Cessation of Arms, he, during the Treaty, drew up his Army near the Tees, and gave his Warrants to the several Governours of Barwick and Carlisle for their Acts of Hostility; and he the Man that continueth several parts of England in terms of difference, sundry Scots imprisoned still, no free Trade, nor other face of affairs there, as before the Cessation.

And therefore desire their Lordships, that this great Incendiary not only against private persons, but even against Kingdoms and Nations, may come to his Trial, and endure condign Justice and punishment.

And to shew that the Parliament, I mean the Commons House, were not unmindful of the Scots, they now Voted them the sum of one hundred thousand pounds for the expence of their Army, though at the same time they had put the Northern Counties under Military Execution. They had already at Rippon and at London, put in their demands to his Majesty; they were in number eight, and hereafter follow, with his Majesties or the Parliaments Answer to them.

The Scottish Commissioners demanded.

Car. 16.

First, That his Majesty would be graciously pleased to command, that the Acts of the late Parliament may be published in his Highness Name, as our Sovereign Lord, with the consent of the Estates of Parliament convened by his Majesties Authority.

1. Demand

To this it is answered, and agreed 30 Decembris 1640. That forasmuch as the King's Majesty at the humble desire of his Subjects, did call and convene a Parliament to be holden at Edinburgh, the 2 of June, 1640. wherein certain Acts were made, and agreed upon, which Acts his Majesty is pleased to publish in his own Name with the consent of the Estates, and therefore commands that the said Acts bearing date the 2 day of June, 1640. be published with the Acts to be made in the next Session of the same Parliament, and that all the said Acts, as well of the precedent, as of the next Session to be holden, have in all time coming the strength of Laws, and to be obeyed by all the Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland.

Answer.

Secondly, That the Castle of Edinburgh, and other Strengths of the Kingdom, should with the advice of the Estates of Parliament, according to their first foundation, be furnished and used for defence and security of the Kingdom.

2. Demand

It is agreed unto.

Answer.

Thirdly, That Scottish men within his Majesties Dominions of England and Ireland may be freed from censures for subscribing the Covenant, and be no more pressed with Oaths and Subscriptions unwarranted by their Laws, and contrary to their National Oath and Covenant, approved by his Majesty.

3. Demand

It is agreed Decemb. 8. 1640. that all those who in his Majesties Dominions of England and Ireland, have been imprisoned or censured any way for subscribing of the Covenant, or for refusing to take any other Oath contrary to the same, shall be freed of these Censures, and shall be fully restored to their Liberties, Estates, and Possession; and for time coming, that the Subjects of Scotland, as Subjects of Scotland, shall not be constrain'd to any Oath contrary to the Laws of that Kingdom, and the Religion there established; but such of the Kingdom of Scotland as shall transport themselves into the Kingdom of England or Ireland, and there be settled Inhabitants, either by way of having Inheritance or Freehold, or by way of settled Trades, shall be subject to the Laws of England or Ireland, and to the Oaths established by the Laws and Acts of Parliament in the said Kingdoms respectively, wherein they live. And the English and Irish shall have the like priviledge in Scotland.

Answer.

Fourthly, That his Majesty would be pleased to declare, that whosoever shall be found upon Trial and Examination by the Estates of either of the two Parliaments, (they judging against the persons subject to their own Authority) to have been the Authors and Causes of the late and present Troubles, and Combinations, whether by labouring to make and foment Division betwixt the King and his People, or betwixt the two Nations, or any other way, shall be liable to censure of the said Parliaments respectively.

4. Demand

Anno 1640.
Answer. It is answered, December 11. 1640. That his Majesty believeth he hath none such about him; therefore, concerning that point, he can make no other Declaration than that he is just, and that all his Courts of Justice are to be free and open to all men. Our Parliament in this Kingdom is now sitting, and the current Parliament of Scotland, near approaching the time of their meeting; In either of which respective, he doth not prohibit the Estates to proceed in trying and judging of whatsoever his Subjects.

And whereas it was further demanded, that none after the Sentence of the Parliament should have access to his Majesty, or be maintained, or enjoy Places, or Offices, and have credit or authority to inform or advise his Majesty.

It is declared in his Majesties Name, December 30. 1640. That he will not employ any person or persons in Office or Place, that shall be judged incapable by Sentence of Parliament: nor will he make use of their service without the consent of Parliament, or grant them access to his Person.

5. Demand Fifthly, That their Ships, and Goods, and all Damages thereof may be restored.

Answer. It is agreed, January 7. 1640. That all Ships taken and staid should be reciprocally restored on both sides. And that the Scottish Commissioners having informed that about eighty Ships of Scotland are yet staid in the Ports, and are like to suffer much loss if they shall not be delivered into some hands who may have care of them. It is agreed that Warrants shall be presently granted for delivery of all their Ships. And that four thousand pounds be presently advanced, for Caulking, Sails, Cordage, and other necessities, for helping the present setting forth of the said Ships.

6. Demand Sixthly, They desire from the Justice and the kindness of the Kingdom of England, Reparation concerning the Losses which the Kingdom of Scotland hath sustained, and the vast Charges they have been put unto by occasion of the late Troubles.

Answer. That this House thinks fit that a friendly assistance, and relief shall be given towards Supply of the Losses of the Scots, and that the Parliament did declare that they did conceive that the Sum of three hundred thousand pounds is a fit proportion for the friendly assistance and relief, formerly thought fit to be given towards supply of the Losses and Necessities of their Brethren of Scotland, and that the House would in due time take into consideration the manner how, and the time when, the same shall be raised.

7. Demand Seventhly, That as his Majesty hath approved the Acts of the late Parliament, wherein all such Declarations, Proclamations, Books, Libels, and Pamphlets, that have been made, written, and published against his loyal and dutiful Subjects of Scotland, are recalled, and ordered to be suppressed: So his Majesty may be pleased to give order that the same may be suppressed, recalled and forbidden in England and Ireland; and that the loyalty, integrity, and faithfulness of his Majesties Subjects of Scotland, towards his Majesties Royal Person and Government may at the closing of this Treaty of Peace, and at the time of publick Thanks-giving for the same, be made known in all places and all Parish Churches of his Majesties Dominions.

It is agreed upon the 10th of February, 1640. That all Declarations, Proclamations, Acts, Books, Libels, and Pamphlets that have been made and published against the Loyalty and Dutifulness of his Majesties Subjects of Scotland, shall be recalled, suppressed and forbidden in England and Ireland. And that this be reciprocal in Scotland, if any such have been made or published there in prejudice of his Majesties honour. And this upon diligent enquiry to be done by the Authority of Parliament next sitting in Scotland, of which the Commissioners of Scotland do promise to have an especial care. And we do also agree, that when it shall please Almighty God to grant an happy close of this Treaty of Peace, the Loyalty of his Majesties Subjects of Scotland shall be made known at the time of publick Thanks-giving in all places, and particularly in the Parish Churches of his Majesties Dominions.

That all Monuments, Tokens and shews of Hostility upon the Borders of the two Kingdoms may be taken away. That not only the Garrisons of Barwick and Carlisle may be removed, but that the Works may be slighted, and the places dismantled. 8. Demand

To the Eighth Demand it is said, [That being offered the Twelfth of this Month there was no Answer.] But there was this Answer, Die Lunae 8. Martii 1640. Hist. p. 212.

This House of Commons concur with their Lordships, that when a Peace shall be established, all things reciprocally be reduced into the Terms they were before the Treaty. Answer.

And do agree with their Lordships that the Scottish Commissioners shall set down all their particular heads and demands at once together, that for their eight Articles which they propound for establishing a peace, may with all speed be concluded, that being done this House shall willingly concur with their Lordships to settle all things their just satisfaction.

Then comes the Scots remaining heads to the Eight Demands.

1. Our desires concerning Unity in Religion and Conformity of Church Government, as a special means for preserving of peace between these Kingdoms.

2. That some Scottish-men of respect, and entrusted by their Nation may be in place about the King, Queen, and the Prince.

3. That none be in place about his Majesty, and the Prince, but such as profess the Reformed Religion.

4. Concerning the manner of choosing the Council and Sessions in Scotland.

5. Naturalization; declaring the capacity, and mutuality of the Subjects of both Kingdoms.

6. Concerning Customs in the Kings Dominions, and Foreign Nations.

7. Concerning freedom of Trade and Inter-courses.

8. Concerning Manufactory and Assessations by Sea and Land.

9. Concerning Equality and course of Coin in his Majesties Dominions.

10. Concerning Fishing.

11. An Act of Oblivion of all by-gone deeds betwixt the Kingdoms of Scotland, England and Ireland, since the beginning of the late troubles.

12. An Act of Parliament for the ratifying this Treaty, and Articles, and establishing the means of a firm and perfect peace.

13. That none of his Majesties Dominions shall take Arms or invade others, without consent of the Parliament of that Kingdom; and after declared Peace, no stopping of Trade, or taking of Ships, or any Acts of Hostility; the contemners to be punished as Enemies to the State.

14. That neither Scotland nor England engage in a Foreign War without mutual consent, and to assist each other against all Foreign Invasions.

15. Concerning the remanding of offenders or debtors in both Kingdoms.

16. Concerning exacting Decrees and Sentences.

17. In either Nation Authentick extracts, without production of the principal Warrant about the late borders, and middle Marshes; and that this peace may be inviolably observed, Trials may be taken in the Triennial Parliament of both Kingdoms, of all wrongs, to be done by either Nation to other, that the differences may be removed; and some Commissioners to be appointed of both Kingdoms for the conserving of peace in the Interval of Parliaments.

And now at last, they were required to bring in an exact account of their Charges in writing, which they did, and it amounted unto 514128*l.* 14*s.* Sterling, abating the odd pence, besides which they demand the losses, their Nobility and Gentry have sustained by neglect of their Fortunes and own affairs at home to make War upon England the sum of 4041000*l.* besides the sum of 800*l.* per menssem, Contribution paid them from the Northern Counties, a comfortable and advantagious War indeed this proved to the Scots, but the English Commissioners hereat stood amaz'd, and demand whether this were a positive account, or only an intimation of their Charges to induce the Kingdom of England to afford them some friendly assistance, to which they answered, 'That they could be no less willing to undergo the Charge than they had the hazard, but the Charge surpassing their strength and ability, they had exhibited to their Lordships the whole of their Charges and Losses, not intending a total reparation [you see their modesty] but in some measure desiring to bear the remnant, but they well hoped their Lordships had considered their reasons, and would not judge a matter of their [Self-denying people] covetousness, but of the justice and kindness of the Kingdom of England.

These demands were by some Scotiz'd Commissioners thought not very extravagant or unreasonable, but others truer English-men were of another Opinion, in particular Sir Benjamin Rudyard in his Speech in the Commons House, January 22.

Mr. Speaker,

Sir Ben.
Rudyard's Speech.

The prudent Endeavours of our Commissioners, with the Scots, probably have drawn near to a blessed Peace. The King being graciously pleased to assent to their Acts of Parliament, including the Articles of their Assembly, their Religion, Laws, and Liberties ratified; their Grievances relieved, for which we use to give the King Money. The Scots Remonstrance professing, that they would take nothing of the English but for Money or Security. But we have defrayed them hitherto, and are still provided to do longer.

That heretofore we established their Reformation, and bore our own Charges: and concerning mutual restitution of Ships and Goods, which now our Commissioners have fairly accommodated already. As for inferential and consequential Damages, such a Representation would not administer unacceptable matter of contestation.

We could truly alledge that Northumberland, Newcastle, and the Bishoprick will not recover their former Estate these twenty years; that the Coal-Mines of Newcastle will not be set right for an hundred thousand pounds, besides the price of Coals doth cast this City and other parts of this Kingdom above that value in loss. And much more of this nature and damage might be justly urged.

They say, they do not make any former Demands, but yet they make their Sum appear above four hundred and fourteen thousand pounds, more than ever we gave the King; A portentous Apparition, which shows it self in a very drytime, the King's Revenue totally exhausted, the Kingdom generally impoverished, and yet all this Supply is to be drawn out of us only without the least help from any his Majesties other Dominions, an utter draining of this Nation, unless England be Puteus inexhaustus: yet I shall afford what is reasonable and honourable to a convenient considerable Sum of Money, that they may go off with a handsome friendly Loss; if they shall reject it, we shall improve our Cause.

It was never thought any great wisdom over-much to trust to a successful Sword. A man that walks upon rising ground, the further he goes, the more spacious his prospect; success enlarges mens desires, extends their ambition, breeds thoughts never dreamt on before. But the Scots being truly touched with Religion, according to their professions, that only is able to keep their words; for Religion is stronger and wiser than Reason is self. But we hope of a good conclusion, of the effects of all these (hitherto Inconveniences) to the advantage of Religion, King, and Kingdoms.

The Commons had already Voted the Scots 300000*l.* Sterling for their losses and pay; but those Gentlemen who loved their native Country, were very ready to bid them adieu, whereas others put in delays and excuses for their stay, for that they did not believe the Kingdom [indeed their own designs] not yet in safety; and to shew how the Pulse of the Commons then beat, may well appear, for that Mr. Gervase Hollis a Burgess for Grimsby in Lincolnshire for saying upon the motion made in that House for the best and speediest means for their payment, That he knew no better or suter than by English Arms to expell them the Kingdom, was call'd to the Bar of that House, and then expelled the House.

However for their farther and present Supply, the Speaker was ordered by the House to write to the City to advance sixty thousand more upon the security of an Assignment for their repayment out of the next Subsidies.

The

Anno.
1640. The Dutch Ambassadour had made some former Propositions for a marriage betwixt the Prince of Orange, and the Lady Elizabeth, the King's eldest Daughter, which upon the arrival of the said Prince on Sunday the second of May following, was celebrated at Court, to the very great satisfaction of the whole Kingdom.

But these Joys lasted not long, their suppositions of Plots continually and studiously cast abroad by some of the Commons House of Parliament, said by them to be against Religion and Liberties, and more particularly by the Papists: Hereupon the very next day; after his Majesty had acquainted the Peers with his resolution, which was (as we said) so well taken by the Parliament and People, of his marrying his eldest Daughter to the Prince of Orange, four Members were appointed by the Commons House to carry up a Message to the Peers, of a great design of the Papists, who they said had in Lancashire 15000 men in Arms, when there was not one man then in Arms in that County, besides 8000 in Ireland, and many thousands more in sundry places in England well armed and appointed, and in pay under the command of the Earls of Strafford and Worcester. These matters, says one, may possibly be thought Fictions and Hyperboles [which were indeed real Messages sent from one House of Parliament to the other] and in truth gave occasion to some Commoners to influence the People to frame Petitions suitable to these Plots, Fears, and Jealousies of their own fomenting: And the Authors of these evil Com-motions which after followed, were very sensible of the Service which these suggestions did them.

On the Thirteenth of February Sir Robert Berkeley, one of his Majesties Judges, who had argued for the Imposition of Ship-money, was by a motion of the Commons accused of High Treason, and the next day was by the Black Rod taken from the King's Bench in Westminster-Hall, and shortly after also his Brethren the Judges, Lord Chief Justice Bramston, Chief Baron Davenport, Crawley, Weston, and Trevor, was impeach'd of High Misdemeanours: But the Commons thought fit to make no further prosecution therein.

On the Sixteenth of February the Bill for the Triennial Parliament passed the Royal assent, his Majesty expressly then telling the Commons, That he might well question his doing of it, looking to the outward face of their Actions or Proceedings, and not to the inward intention of their hearts; but that now he did this to shew them, that he had done all on his part, he hoped they well knew how to do theirs, &c. But this very great Trust his Majesty did out-do in his confidence he had in these Commoners, when he passed the Bill to make this very Parliament perpetual, as before we have mentioned in the Trial of the Earl of Strafford.

And now first was practised the way of tackling Subsidy Bills to others, the Commons had a mind should pass; for together with this Bill, the Parliament grant to his Majesty Subsidies for payment of the two Armies: And for his passing this Bill, the Parliament by Sir Edw. Littleton return their humble thanks, and order thorough the City the ringing of Bells, and making of Bonfires.

Car. 17.
HIS Majesty having signed the Bill of Attainder, as you have before heard against the Earl of Strafford, upon Information that his Lordships Estate was unsettled, desired by Letter from the Peers (which Letter he sent by the Prince of Wales) a respite of his Execution for some days, for the reason above said: The Peers acquainting his Majesty that they intended to become Suitors to his Majesty for favour to be shewed to his innocent Children, in which the Commons, after they had done their business also, joyned with the Lords.

Upon Wednesday, May 12. he was conveyed from the Tower by the Trained Bands of the City, the Sheriffs Officers, and the Wardens of the Tower; before him went his Gentleman-Usher bareheaded, and next him the Earl himself, accompanied by his Friend the Primate of Armagh. Upon his first coming forth he lifted up his eyes to the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury's Lodgings, upon whom, standing at his Window, he bestowed a low Obedience, saying, My good Lord, your Prayers and your Blessing. The Archbishop lifted up his hand, and bestowed both upon him, and overcome with grief, sank down in a swoond. The Earl proceeding a little further, he bowed again towards his Grace, saying, Farewell (my good Lord) the Lord protect your innocency. And being brought to the Scaffold, he address his Speech to the Lord Primate.

The Earl's Speech upon the Scaffold.

My Lord Primate of Ireland,

It is my very great comfort, that I have your Lordship by me this day, and I do thank God and your Lordship for it, in regard that I have been known to you these many years: I should be very glad to obtain so much silence as to be heard a few words, but I doubt I shall not, the noise is so great.

I come hither, by the good will and pleasure of Almighty God, to pay the last Debt which I owe to sin, which is death, and by the blessing of that God to rise again through the merits of Jesus Christ to righteousness and life eternal.

I come hither to submit to that Judgment which hath passed against me; I do it with a very quiet and contented mind; I do freely forgive all the world; a forgiveness that is not spoken from the teeth outwards (as they say,) but from the very heart. I can very well say in the presence of Almighty God, before whom I stand, that there is not a displeased thought arising in me towards any Creature. I thank God, I can say, and that truly too, and my Conscience bears me witness, that in all the employments since I had the honour to serve his Majesty, I never had anything in the purpose of my heart, but what tended to the joint and individual prosperity of the King and People. If it hath been my fortune to be misunderstood, surely I am not the first that hath been so; it is the common portion of us all, whilst we are in this life, to err, but righteous judgment we must wait for in another place, for here we are very subject to be misguided one of another.

There is one thing I desire to free my self of, and I am confident [speaking it now with so much cheerfulness] that it cannot be but that I shall obtain your Christian Charity in the belief of it: I did always

1641.

always think the Parliaments of England the happiest Constitution that any Kingdom or Nation lived under, and next under God, the best means to make the King and his People happy; so far have I been from being against Parliaments.

For my death, I here acquit all the World, and beseech the God of Heaven heartily to forgive them, though in the intentions and purposes of my heart I am innocent of what I die for.

And, my Lord Primate, it is a very great comfort unto me, that his Majesty conceives me not meriting so severe and heavy a punishment as is the uttermost execution of this Sentence. I do infinitely rejoice in this mercy of his, and I beseech God to return it upon him, that he may find mercy when he stands most in need of it.

I wish this Kingdom all the prosperity and happiness in the World: I did it living, and now dying it is my wish. I do most humbly recommend it to every man that hears me, and desire that they will lay their hands upon their hearts, and consider seriously, whether the beginning of the happiness of the Reformation of a Kingdom should be written in letters of blood: Consider this when ye are in your own homes, and let me be never so unhappy, as that the least drop of my blood should rise up in judgment against any one of you. I acquit you all, but I fear you are in a wrong way.

My Lord, I here profess, and with that I shall end, that I do die a true and obedient Son to the Church of England, wherein I was born, and in which I was bred; peace and prosperity be ever to it. And whereas it is objected (if it be an Objection worth the answering) that I have been inclined to Popery, I may truly say, that from the time of One and twenty to this present, going on now towards Nine and forty years, I never had in my heart to doubt of this Religion of the Church of England, nor ever had any man the boldness to suggest any such thing (to the best of my remembrance) to me. So being reconciled by the merits of Christ Jesus my Saviour, into whose bosom I hope I shall shortly be gathered to those eternal happinesses that shall never have end.

I desire heartily the forgiveness of every man, for any rash and unadvised words, or for any thing done amiss: And so my Lords and Gentlemen, Farewell. Farewell all the things of this World.

I desire that ye would be silent, and joyn with me in prayer, and I trust in God we shall all meet and live eternally in Heaven, there to receive the accomplishment of all happiness, where every tear shall be wiped away from our eyes, and every sad thought from our hearts; and so God bless this Kingdom, and Jesus have mercy on my soul.

To this he added a Prayer, (not taken by any) to strengthen his Faith, confirm him in Patience and Charity, to preserve the King and his Realms in prosperity, the Church in Unity, and to have mercy on his Soul.

Rising from his knees, he delivered these Commands for his Children.

To his Son William Wentworth commends himself, gives him charge to serve his God, to submit to his King with all Faith and Allegiance in things Temporal, to the Church in things Spiritual: Gives him charge, as he will answer it to him in Heaven, never to meddle with the patrimony of the Church, for it will be the Cancer that will eat up the rest of his Estate; again, charges it as he will answer him in Heaven. And so ended.

And to shew that his Speech on the Scaffold was not sudden, but premeditate, the Paper of the Heads written with his own hand, as it was left upon the Scaffold, doth evidence, which the Primate took up.

Come to pay the last debt we owe to sin.

Rise to Righteousness.

Die willingly.

Forgive all.

Submit to justice, but in my intentions innocent from perverting, &c.

Wishing nothing but prosperity to the King and People.

Acquit the King, constrained.

Beseech to repentance.

Strange way, to write (the beginning of Reformation and Settlement of a Kingdom) in blood.

Beseech, that demand may rest there.

Call not for blood upon themselves.

Dye in the Faith of the Church.

Pray for it, and desire their prayers, &c.

By the Triennial Parliament before spoken of, the power of calling Parliaments was put into the hands of Sheriffs and Constables, which without doubt was a great confidence his Majesty had in his People; but for that many conceived evil matters also of his Majesty's Privy Council, and Orders issuing thence, the King called to the Board the Earls of Hertford, Essex, Bedford, and Warwick, the Lord Viscount Say, and these were made great Officers by the resignation of others. The first was made Governour to the Prince in the room of the Earl of Newcastle; Essex Lord Chamberlain in the room of Pembroke; the Lord Say Master of the Court of Wards in the place of the Lord Cottington; and the Earl of Leicester Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the Earl of Strafford's room.

And moreover, that his Majesty might leave no matter of Complaint to the Commons, an Act of Parliament was now made to take away the Courts of Star-Chamber and High Commission, several privileges of the Forests, his Majesties sole right to make Gunpowder: Another Act also for regulating the Office of the Clerk of the Market within the verge of his Majesties Household, &c.

The disbanding of the two Armies was at last accomplish'd, and a Pole raised for the payment thereof, and the Scots ordered to have 100000 £ sterling at Midsummer paid them, and the 200000 £. two years after, which was exactly paid. And accordingly the Earl of Holland being made General of the English Army for this purpose, both Armies were disbanded in August following. And for that his Majesty was by the Treaty of Pacification to be present at a Parliament in Scotland, there to be held, for the ratifying several Acts desired by the Scots, on the Sixth of August both Houses of Parliament here in England adjourned until the Twentieth of October following, only a Committee of Fifty Members were ordered to sit during this recess: And in the mean time his Majesty goes for Scotland, where he was entertained with the greatest demonstrations of joy and affections imaginable; and there in Parliament he confirms the Treaty between the two Nations by Act of Parliament, and all his former Concessions, and whatever had been acted by them in their general Assemblies. And the more to gratify them, Hamilton was made a Duke, and Lesly their General is made Earl of Leven, who in sente

Anno. of gratitude, said at Perth in the House of the 1641. Earl of Kinoul, upon his knees avowed, That he would never bear Arms against his most gracious Prince. How this he made good, the World very well afterwards saw. Not long had his Majesty been in Scotland, but a Plot was said to have been found out to have been against the lives of Hamilton and Argile, whereat they withdraw from Parliament, and the King is muttered to be in the Design. His Majesty hereupon orders the examination of the matter in open Parliament, where nothing of truth or design appearing against the persons, his Majesty openly told Hamilton, at the delivery of his Patent when he was made Duke, 'That he had not deserved 'to be intrusted in that matter by him, for that he
 'well knew when he was accused to him of High 'Treason by the Lord Rea in England, he yet per'mitted him to lye in his Bedchamber. This matter, though false, was strangely represented here in England, so that the Committee which sat during the recess of Parliament, and even the Parliament itself afterwards, when assembled, resolve and petition for a Guard for the defence of London and Westminster, and the two Houses of Parliament, during the Session of Parliament.
 And with these vain and false Alarms, some principal Ringleaders in the after Commotions continually entertained the Rabble.

About the end of October there broke out a most bloody Rebellion of the Papists in the Kingdom of Ireland, and this was managed with such secrecy, that not the least discovery was thereof made, until the evening preceeding the bloody Tragedy.

The innocent Protestants were upon a sudden disseized of their Estates, and the persons of above 200000 Men, Women and Children, murdered, within the space of one Month, and many of them with exquisite and unheard of Tortures. That which increas'd the wonder of most men was, the consideration that the ancient hatred which the Irish (a thing incident to conquered Nations) had born to the English, did now seem to be forgotten; forty years of peace had compacted those two Nations into one body, and cemented them together by all conjunctions of Alliance, by inter-marriages and consanguinity, which was in outward appearance strengthened by frequent entertainments, and all kinds of friendly Neighbourhood.

This design was to be put in execution on the 23 of October, upon which day, not only the Castle of Dublin, the Kingdoms chief Magazine, a Storehouse of 10000 Arms at that time, but all other Forts and Magazines in that Kingdom, were to be surpriz'd, and all the English and Protestants that joyned not with them to be murdered.

The seizure of Dublin Castle was prevented by timely discovery of the Plot to the two Lords Justices, by one Owen O'Connell of Irish Extract, but a Protestant, which discovery was but the very night before that fatal day, and the occasion of it very accidental, by one Hugh Mac Mahon, Grandson to the great Tyrone, a Gentleman of a plentiful Fortune, in the County of Monaghan, and one that had been a Lieutenant Colonel in the King of Spain's Service, who trusted this Owen with some relations concerning it at a Tavern.

Upon this discovery, Mac Mahon and the Lord Mac Guire were presently apprehended by the Lords Justices, and many Conspirators of great note escaped that night out of Dublin; so was Dublin saved, that all Ireland might not be lost in one day. But the horrid design was past prevention, as to the general; for the Conspirators were up at the day fixed in all Counties round about; and poor English Protestants arrived at Dublin every day, robbed and spoiled of all they had, relating how their Houses were seized, how Towns and Villages in all parts were fired, and cruel Outrages committed.

The Lords Justices, Sir William Parsons, and Sir John Burlace, taking those Arms which they found in Dublin, and arming whom they could to defend themselves, dispatched Letters to the King in Scotland, and the Earl of Leicester, then chosen Deputy, but staying in England.

It was generally said, the late Insurrection (we must not call it Rebellion) in Scotland, gave the first Incouragement to this in Ireland, and the pretences were in many of them the same, namely, for Liberty of Conscience, not to have the English Bishops and Liturgy imposed upon them, and these, as those in Scotland, being mighty zealous in their Religion, when once they were possessed with a possibility of compassing their Desires, executed whatever the impetuous dictates of Superstition or wicked Exhortation of Priests could infuse into them, in this exceeding the actions of the Scots, whose Religion founded on more pious Principles, instructed them not to such bloody ways of propagation of it.

The Lords Justices sent Sir Henry Spotswood to Scotland to the King, with intelligence of all that hapned, and thereupon he sent Sir James Stuart to the Lords of the Privy Council in Ireland, to acquaint them with his knowledge and instructions, and to carry all that Money that his present Stores could supply, He moved also the Parliament of Scotland (as being nearest) to a speedy help, but they excused their Aids, because Ireland was dependent upon the Crown of England; but they said, if the State of England would use any of their men for that Service, they would make propositions in order to it; at the same time likewise he sends Post to the Parliament of England, and a while after Owen O'Connell, the first discoverer of the Plot, brought Letters to London to the Earl of Leicester, with an account of it, wherein the Lords Justices desired some reward might be given to him: Upon the receipt of which the Parliament Voted him a gift of 500 pounds, and an Annuity of 200 l. a year, and at a Conference of both Houses they resolved to consider of the relief of Ireland, and passed several Votes to that end; but little was done for their Relief till the King returned to London, which was about the end of November.

The Irish to dishearten the English from any resistance, bragg'd that the Queen was with their Army; that the King would come amongst them with Auxiliary Forces; that they did but maintain his Cause against the Puritans; that they had the King's Commission for what they did (shew-ing indeed a Patent that themselves had drawn, but thereto was affixed an old Broad Seal that had been taken from an obsolete Patent out of Farnham Abby by one Blunher, in the presence of many of their Lords and Priests, as was afterwards attested by the Confession of many.) That the Scots were in Confederacy with them, to beget a faith of which, they abstained for some time from the lives and fortunes of those of that Nation among them.

Anno
1641. On the other side, to encourage the Natives of their own party, they produced fictitious Letters wherein they were informed from England, that the Parliament had passed an Act, that all the Irish should be compelled to the Protestant worship; and the Refusers for the first offence should forfeit all their Goods, for the second their Estates, and for the third their Lives. Besides, they presented them with the hopes of Liberty: That the English yoke should be shaken off; that they would have a King of their own Nation; and that the Goods and Estates of the English should be divided among the Natives.

With these hopes of Spoil and Liberty in the Irish, the Rebellion increased. The Rebels in Ulster under the Conduct of Sir Phelim O'neal, assisted by Turbeck O'neal his Brother, Rory Mac-Guire Brother to the Lord Mac-Guire, Philip O'Rely, Mulvere O'Rely, Sir Conno Mac Gennes, called Mac Ruian, and others, had possessed themselves of all the strong places in Ulster, (London-Derry, Colreyn, and the Town and Castle of Eniskellen excepted) many places which the English defended, and they could not either surprize by Treachery, or take by plain Force, they had surrendered to them upon Composition and Articles, which they afterwards most perfidiously broke, butchering and massacring the poor English without pity or compassion to Age or Sex, though they still spared the Scottish Plantations in Ulster, because of their numbers; and likewise for fear of the Scottish Army so easily to be transported into the North parts of Ireland, till such time as their General Sir Phelim O'neal (one of the Race of the late bloody Earl of Tyrone, of English Education, a Gentleman of Lincoln-Inn, and a professed Protestant till some time before) having gathered together a numerous Rabble of the Natives, who daily flocked in to him, fell upon their Quarters; where though he exercised not that cruelty upon their persons which he did upon the English, yet he deprived them both of their Goods and Livings, enforcing many of them to fly away naked to the Scottish shore; from thence he marched into the English Pale, and in the beginning of November he took Dundalk, and soon after he encamped at Ards within seven miles of Tredagh.

The King finding his stay in Scotland to be somewhat longer than he expected, that the business of Ireland might not suffer thereby, refer'd the whole business of Ireland to the Parliament of England, who had undertaken the Charge and Management of the War, wherewith the Earl of Leicester acquainted the Lords Justices, letting them know further, that they had declared a speedy and vigorous assistance, and had designed for their present Supply the sum of 50000*l.* which would be raised with all convenient speed.

By this time the Lords of the Council of Ireland had armed as many as they were able, and given Commissions for raising of several Regiments, which were put into the hands (for the most part) of Gallant men, as their Actions afterwards testified to the World; Sir Charles Coote, an active and valiant man (who was also made Governour of Dublin) with great speed made up his Regiment out of the poor robbed and stripped English which had fled to Dublin; Sir Henry Tichbourn, a worthy Commander, was dispatched away with a Regiment of Foot, to keep Tredagh from the approaching Rebels; the Lord Lambert, and Sir Thomas Lucas, Capt. Armstrong, Capt. Turner, with others, raised many Companies of Souldiers there.

This was done about the middle of November, at which time also the Earl of Ormond with his well armed Troop of Horse came to Dublin; wherewith in few days after, he was by a Commission sent from the Earl of Leicester, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (as likewise by the King's approbation from Scotland signified in a Letter) made Lieutenant General of all the Forces there, who being a person of great Estate, Credit, and Reputation in that Kingdom, and a Protestant, did very eminent Service against the Rebels.

The Parliament, in prosecution of their great promises, sent over Twenty thousand pounds in Money, which arrived seasonably at this time, their Treasure being much exhausted, by paying the new Companies they had raised, but with this small relief they were much encouraged, and very successful service was performed in divers places against the Irish, but no levies of men were made in England, till the King had disclaimed his power of pressing Souldiers, and thereby laid himself open to those Arms that were afterward raised against him: The first Souldiers they sent was a Regiment under Sir Simon Harcourt, who arrived in Ireland on the last of December.

His Majesty about the end of November returns from Scotland, a contented King from a contented People, (so said the Scots;) And to give his Majesty a demonstration hereof, they caused an Act (then in force) to be published, That it should be detestable and damnable Treason in the highest degree that could be, for any of the Scotch Nation, conjunctly or singly to levy Arms upon any pretence whatsoever, without the King's Commission. How well they performed this all men know, and we shall not now speak.

At his coming to London he is caressed and feasted by the City; and he again entertains the principal men at Hampton-Court, and bestows Knighthoods on the Aldermen and others; but these things lasted not long: For within few days afterwards he is entertained by a Remonstrance of the State of the Kingdom, presented by the Commons to him at Hampton-Court, and together with it a Petition.

1. That his Majesty would concur with the People for depriving the Bishops of their Votes in Parliament.
2. That he would only employ about his person such as the Parliament might confide in.
3. That no confiscated Lands in Ireland might be alienated from the Crown, on condition the Parliament of England would undergo the charge of War.

The plain truth was, his Majesty was supposed to have gained much on his Scottish Subjects at his last being there, and some in the Parliament of England evil disposed to his Majesties Person and Government, being fearful hereof, endeavoured by all ways of private solicitations, threats, and promises, to bring about the matter of this Remonstrance and Petition, the debate whereof in the House of Commons lasted from ten in the Morning until three of the Clock in the next Morning, and then it was carried by but eleven voices, when many of the more aged, or persons of best Fortunes, not accustomed to such watchings, were wearied out; others perhaps not daring to provoke the prevailing party left the House; & thus this matter was carried, that it seemed rather the Verdict of a starved Jury (saith one) than the result of a Parliamentary debate. However, presented it was to the King, who promiseth a speedy Answer thereto; but in the mean time desires the Commons to forbear the printing and publishing of this or such matters to the People, which notwithstanding Anno 1641. standing (a thing never before done) was now done, and so became the first Appeal of the House of Commons from his Majesty to the People. Notwithstanding, his Majesty answered hereto so moderately, and withal so effectually, that from hence many prime Actors were much troubled to find their practices fully discovered; and therefore they had again recourse to their own old way of raising the Rabble, and a Tumult was immediately raised in the City, which came down to Westminster, and assaulted and evilly entreated some of the Peers, even at the Doors of their own Houses, crying out against Bishops, for that at that time the Bill about taking away their Votes in the House of Peers was under debate, and found but a cold reception in their House; hereupon they are tumultuously assaulted by this insolent Rabble in their attendance upon the House, and afterwards demanding of the Commons a Conference of both Houses, that they would joyn with them in a Declaration against such Tumults. Mr. Pym openly then said, God forbid that the House of Commons should proceed in any way to dishearken the People in obtaining their just desires.

The Lords finding themselves disappointed in their expectation of the House of Commons compliance with them for the suppressing of these Tumults, consult the Judges, who legally advise the Peers to direct their Writs to the Sheriffs and Justices, according to sundry Laws, to raise Force and suppress these Tumults, and to hinder the conflux of the rude Multitude to Westminster; which Order of the Peers House being obeyed, the Justices and Constables attend accordingly to secure the Peers in their attendance, and to hinder the Rabble from gathering together about the Parliament Houses, as formerly: The Justices and Constables are immediately sent for by the Commons, and shewing their Order, which was for no other matter then as before, the Commons straightway Vote this a breach of Privilege, and without any Conference desired with the Lords hereabout, they discharge the Watch, and send the Justices of the Peace to the Tower; The like matter never heard of in England till this time.

The impunity and licence given to these Tumults, gave occasion to the Lords Spiritual to frame their Protestation, and Petition to his Majesty and the other Temporal Peers as followeth. They protest, ‘That whereas the Petitioners were called up by Writ to attend in Parliament, and have a clear and indubitable Right to Vote in Bills and other matters debated, and ought to be protected.

‘They protest before God, that they are most willing to do their Duties there accordingly.

‘That they abominate all Actions or Opinions tending to Popery, all Propensions or Inclinations to any malignant party, or any other party, to which their Consciences shall not move them to adhere.

‘That they have been many times menaced, affronted and assaulted by multitudes of people in their coming to do their service to the Parliament, and lastly chased away, in danger of their Lives without any redress of their Complaints to both Houses, &c.

‘They do therefore in all Duty and Humility protest before your Majesty and the Peers in Parliament, against all Laws, Orders, Votes, Resolutions and Determinations, as in themselves null and of none effect, which in their absence since Decemb. 27. have already passed, as likewise against such as shall hereafter pass in that most honourable House, during the time of this their forced and violent absence, &c. and humbly beseech his Majesty, to command the Clerk of the House of Peers, to enter this their Petition and Protestation.

The Temporal Lords, who afterwards lived to see their own Error, and the whole House of Peers voted by the Commons House useless, dangerous, and burthensome, hereupon desire a Conference with the Commons, & this Conference produceth an Impeachment of High Treason against the Bishops; and they were by the space of four Months committed to the Tower, and then the most of them let out.

We had therefore acquainted the Reader that the Peers were hindered in their attendance on the Parliament, by the rude multitude out of the City, and by whom influenced; this sort of men not content to have broken the Privilege of the Peers House, as before we have related, they afterwards with shouting and acclamations go for Whitehall, where finding no admittance, they cry out They must and will speak with his Majesty, They will have no Bishops, No Porters Lodge, but they would speak with the King when they pleased. Hereupon Col. Lunisford by his Majesties command orders them to repair to their respective habitations, but he finds resistance, and hereupon draws, with some other Gentlemen in his company, and they dissipate themselves, but this however so exasperates them, that the next time they came down armed, and in great numbers, to the terror and affrightment of the Members of Parliament, which caused his Majesty to command the Mayor of London for the future to prevent all riotous Assemblies of such people about his Palace of Whitehall and his City of Westminster, during the time of the Holy-days (wherein these matters fell out) and then also sends a Message to the two Houses, desiring their concurrence with him for the suppression of the Irish Rebellion, and at the same time a Proclamation was sent forth against the Irish Rebellion, in hac verba.

By the King.

Whereas divers lewd and wicked persons have of late risen in Rebellion in our Kingdom of Ireland in surprizing our Ports, Garrisons, Arms, and Munition, dispossessed many good Subjects of the British Nation and Protestants, of their Houses, Lands, and Goods, massacred multitudes of them, &c. we do therefore declare our just indignation thereof, and denounce them Rebels and Traitors, with all such as adhere and abet them, Commanding them immediately to lay down their Arms.

Proclamation of the Rebellion of Ireland.

Having authorized his Justices of Ireland, and other his Governour, Governours, General, or Lieutenant-General of his Army there, to prosecute them with fire and sword, and to be countenanced and supported by him and his powerful succours assisted by his good Subjects of England, and this his Royal Pleasure he commands his Justices and other his Officers there to proclaim throughout the Kingdom of Ireland.

His

Anno 1641. His Majesty having sent, as before is related, his Orders to the Lord Mayor of the City of London, for the suppression of the Tumults; they to obviate his Majesty herein, Petition his Majesty for a Guard for the security of their Persons also under the Command of the Earl of Essex, a known and confiding person, and this Guard to consist of Citizens.

His Majesty hereto answers, That he will protect them himself, and they shall be as much his care as his own Wife and Children; and if this general Answer will not satisfy them, he would command such a guard to wait upon them, as he would be responsible for to God Almighty. The truth is, his Majesty himself was now in more danger than they, he was the person attack'd as before, and the Rabble the Assailants; hereupon his Majesty was enforc'd to accept of a Guard of some Gentlemen of Grays-Inn and others of the Inns of Court, under the Command of Sir William Mason.

His Majesty was very sensible from whence all these Mutinies came, and indeed of the beginning and progress of all our Troubles he was made acquainted with at his being in Scotland, where expostulating with some chief of the Reasons of their late Hostile Invasions of his Kingdom of England, he was there first acquainted that some prime men in the two Houses of his Parliament of England had invited them to it; and having furnish'd his Majesty with proofs, he commanded the Attorney General to draw up an Impeachment of High Treason against some of them, viz. the Lord Kimbolton, a Member of the Peers House, and against five Commoners, Denzil Hollis, Sir Arthur Haslerig, Mr. John Hampden, Mr. Pym, and Mr. Stroud, and acquainted the Peers House with the generals of their Accusation, which were as followeth:

Articles against the five Members.

1. That they have trayterously endeavoured to subvert the Fundamental Laws and Government of this Kingdom, and deprive the King of his Legal Power, and to place on Subjects an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Power.
2. That they have endeavoured by many foul Aspersions upon his Majesty, and his Government, to alienate the affections of his people, and to make his Majesty odious unto them.
3. That they have endeavoured to draw his Majesties late Army to disobedience to his Majesties Command, and to side with them in their trayterous Designs.
4. That they have trayterously invited and encouraged a Forreign Power to invade his Majesties Kingdom of England.
5. That they have trayterously endeavoured to subvert the very Rights and being of Parliament.
6. That for the compleating of their trayterous design, they have endeavoured, as far as in them lay, by force and terror to compel the Parliament to joyn with them in their trayterous designs, and to that end have actually raised and countenanced Tumults against the King and Parliament.
7. That they have trayterously conspired to levy, and actually have levied War against the King.

These Articles his Majesty had sent also to the Commons, to acquaint them herewith, and did also require by the Serjeant at Arms that their persons should be secured, who coming to execute his Office, meets with a Countermand from the Commons not to do it, and passed a Vote, That if any person came to attach them without order of their House [though the Crimes alledged were Treasons, &c.] they might stand in their defence, and make resistance. Hereupon his Majesty seeing all obstruction of Justice made by the Commons House, resolves, and did go in Person, accompanied by his Nephew the Palsgrave, and about 100 Lords and Gentlemen and their followers, to the Commons House, where he entred alone with the Palsgrave, commanding all others to stay without doors, & to offer no violence, nor return any uncivil Language (though provoked) to any person whatever. At his entrance the Speaker left the Chair, where fate down, he acquaints the House again of his demanding five of their Members into his hands, to be proceeded against only according to Law; but the Members, as is said, being acquainted hereof beforehand by the Countess of Carlisle, had withdrawn themselves, which his Majesty perceived also; then he expected they should send them to him so soon as they should return hither, &c. His Speech is as followeth.

Gentlemen,

I Am sorry for this occasion for coming unto you; Yesterday I sent a Serjeant at Arms upon a very important occasion to apprehend some that upon my Command were accused of High Treason, whereunto I did expect obedience, and not a Message. And I must declare unto you here,

That albeit that no King that ever was in England, shall be more careful of the Priviledges, to maintain them to the uttermost of his power then I shall be; Yet you must know that in Cases of Treason no person hath a Priviledge. And therefore I am come to know if any of those Persons that I have accused (for no slight crime, but for Treason) are here.

I cannot expect that this House can be in the right way that I do heartily wish it.

Therefore I am come to tell you, that I must have them wheresoever I find them.

(and with that he casts his eye again round about.)

Well, sithence (says he) I see all the Birds are flown, I do expect from you that you shall send them to me, as soon as they return hither; But I assure you in the word of a King I never did intend any force, but shall prosecute against them in a legal and fair way, for I never meant any other.

And now, sithence I see I cannot do what I came for, I think this no unfit occasion to repeat what I have said formerly, that whatsoever I have done in favour and to the good of my Subjects, I do mean to maintain it.

I will trouble you no more, but tell you, I do expect as soon as they come to the House, you will send them to me, otherwise I must take my own course to find them.

His Majesty was no sooner down the Stairs, but the House was in an uproar, crying out that his Majesty might plainly hear them, Priviledge, Priviledge; and on Wednesday, Jan. 5. the day following, by their Votes declare as followeth.

Whereas his Majesty in his royal person yesterday did come to the House of Commons, attended with a great multitude of men armed in warlike manner, with Halberds, Swords, and Pistols, who came up to the very Door of the House, and placed themselves there, and in other places and passages near to the House, to the great terror and disturbance of the Members thereof, then sitting, and according to their Duty in a peaceable able and orderly manner, treating of the affairs of both Kingdoms of England and Ireland. And his Majesty having placed himself in the Speakers Chair, did demand the persons of divers Members of the House to be delivered to him.

It is this day declared, &c. that the same is the high breach of the privileges of Parliament, and inconsistent to the liberty and freedom thereof.

And therefore this House doth conceive, they cannot with the safety of their own persons, or the indemnity of the Rights and Privileges of Parliament, sit here any longer without a full vindication of so high a breach, and a sufficient guard, wherein they might confide; for which both Houses jointly, and this House by itself, have been humble Suiters to his Majesty, and cannot as yet obtain.

Notwithstanding which, this House being very sensible of the greatest trust reposed in them, and especially at this time, the manifold Distractions of this Kingdom, and the lamentable and distracted condition of the Kingdom of Ireland, doth order that this House shall be adjourned until Tuesday next at one of the Clock in the Afternoon, and that a Committee be named by this House, and all that will come shall have Voices, which shall sit in the Guildhall in the City of London to morrow morning at nine of the Clock, and shall have power to consider and resolve of all things that may concern the good and safety of the City and Kingdom, and particularly how our Privileges may be vindicated, and our persons secured; and to consider of the Affairs of the Kingdom of Ireland; and shall have power to consult and advise with any person or persons touching the premises; and shall have power to send for parties, witnesses, papers and records.

And it is further ordered, that the Committees for the Irish Affairs shall meet at the Guildhall aforesaid, at what time they shall think fit, and consult and do touching the Affairs of Ireland, according to the power formerly given them by this House. And both the said Committees shall report the results of their consideration and resolution to this House.

And in a subsequent Declaration further they declare,

'That if any person shall arrest either of them, or any Member of Parliament, by any Warrant from the King only, is guilty of the breach of the privileges of Parliament.

And whereas by several Examinations taken the seventh of this instant January, before the Committee in London, it did appear that many Souldiers and Papists, to the number of five hundred, armed, came with his Majesty on Tuesday last, the fourth of this present, to the House, &c.

We do declare, That it was a Traiterous Design against the King and Parliament.

And whereas they the said Members did with approbation of the House absent themselves, since which time a printed Paper, in the form of a Proclamation, dated the sixth of this Instant issued out for their apprehending and imprisonment,

We do declare, That the said Paper is false, scandalous, and illegal; and that notwithstanding they may and ought to attend the service of the House.

And we do declare, That the publishing of several Articles of High Treason against them was a high breach of the privileges of Parliament, a scandal to his Majesty, and dishonour to the said Members, which cannot be sufficiently vindicated, unless his Majesty discover the Names of such persons who advised him thereto, that they may receive condign punishment.

This House declaring, That all such persons, &c. are declared publick Enemies to the State, &c.

Car. 17.

Hereupon strange Reports were raised in the City of London, wholly now Parliamenters, That his Majesty had offered violence to the House of Commons, coming thither with force to murder several persons thereof Members, with which the City was so possessed, that unusual Watches and great Guards were placed in many places thereof; hereupon the Commons, as is before intimated, petition his Majesty for a Guard;

Presenting to his Majesty their just Fears of Designs and practices to destroy them by a Malignant party in the Face and at the Doors of the Parliament, and at your Majesties own Gates, &c.

They humbly desire therefore to have a Guard out of the City of London, commanded by the Earl of Essex, Chamberlain of your Majesties Household, And to this end they humbly desire a gracious and speedy Answer; because theirs and the Kingdoms safety depends upon it, and will not admit of any Delay.

To which his Majesty answered,

'That with great grief of heart, after their twelve Months sitting, wherein they have obtained those things for their security and happiness, as no Age can equal; they should now be disturbed with jealousies, distrusts, and fears: protesting before God, that had he any knowledge or belief of the least Design in any of violence against them, he would pursue them to condign punishment with the same severity as the greatest attempt upon his Crown. Engaging solemnly the word of a King, that their security from violence shall ever be his care as the preservation of Himself and Children. And if this general Assurance shall not suffice, he shall command such a Guard to wait upon them, as he shall be responsible for to God, who hath entrusted him with the Protection of his Subjects.

And the City joyn with the Commons, and Petition likewise in form hereafter following.

To the Kings most Excellent Majesty.

'Wherein they represent their Dangers and Distractions by the bloody Rebellion in Ireland, fomented and acted by Papists, and of their Designs, forreign and at home, tending to the ruin of the Protestant Religion. The putting out of Persons of Honour from being Constables of the Tower, and the preparations there made, the fortifying of Whitehall, the late Discovery of divers Fireworks in the hands of a Papist; His Majesties late manner in the House of Commons.

The effects of which just Fears overthrow the Trade of this City, to the utter ruin of the Protestant Religion, and the Lives and Liberties of the Subject.

'And pray, that by the Parliaments advice the Protestants in Ireland may be relieved, the Tower be put in the hands of Persons of Trust, a Guard appointed for the safety of the Parliament, and that the late Five Members may not be restrained nor proceeded against, but by the Privileges of Parliament.

For

1641.

For answer to this Petition, his Majesty told them who delivered it,

That he cannot possibly express a greater sense of Ireland than he hath done, and hopes by assistance of the Parliament, may be effected, to which he will contribute all his power.

And he hath removed a Servant of good trust and reputation from the charge of the Tower, only to satisfy the Cities Fears, whose Safety is as his own.

And for the fortifying of Whitehall, they must needs know of the Tumult there and at Westminster; his own person endangered; and if any Citizens were wounded, it happened by their own corrupt De-means.

That his going to the House of Commons with his Attendance only, nor otherwise armed but as Gentlemen with Swords, was to apprehend those five Members for Treason, to which the Priviledges of Parliament cannot extend, nor to Felony, nor Breach of the Peace, against whom his Majesty intends lawfully to proceed with justice and favour. And is confident that this his extraordinary way of satisfying a Petition of so unusual a nature, will appear to be the greatest Instance of his clear Intentions to the City, &c.

And because the proceedings against the five Members, as they are numbered (besides Kimbolton) began much Dispute; and willing the King was to retrieve his former Actions therein, is now pleased (by Message to both Houses) to waive his former proceedings in reference to the Priviledges of Parliament; and all Doubts being thereby settled, when the minds of men are composed; he will proceed thereupon in an unquestionable way, and upon all occasions be careful of their Priviledges, as of his Life or Crown.

The Petitions and Actions drew down great multitudes of Citizens and others to Whitehall and Westminster, in the most tumultuous and menacing manner; and that the good County of Bucks might not seem to desert their chosen Member, Mr. John Hampden, they also petition his Majesty, 'For that their [deep] judgment and care, &c. was wounded in the aforesaid Im-peachment, which they conceive to be against Privilege of Parliament, &c.

The confux of such Petitioners, and the bringing down the five Members to the Commons House by water to Westminster, with many hundreds of Boats, Barges, Flags of Triumph by some Citizens and Seamen, braving and threatening as they went by Whitehall, and in an insolent and contemptuous manner enquiring, Whether his Majesty was at home, enforced his Majesty, with the Queen, Prince, and Duke of York, to retire for fear of these Tumults to Hampton Court, where, to whose assistance several of the Nobility and Gentry came; and this offer of their Service to his Majesty for his guard against the Rabble cost Col. Lunsford his Liberty, who was imprisoned in the Tower, and the Lord Digby was forced to fly beyond Seas.

His Majesty at Hampton Court omits no means unelayed, that he might make manifest to his People the clearness of his Intentions, and by a Message to the Parliament of the twentieth of January, conjures them for Peace and Settlement; And for that particular Grievances and Distractions were too many, and would be too tedious to be presented by themselves, that they would comprise and digest them into one entire Body, that so both he and themselves might be able to make the more clear Judgment of them: And that it should then appear, by what he would do; how far he hath been from intending or designing any of those things, which the too great fears and jealousies of some persons, seemed to apprehend; and how ready he would be to equal or exceed the greatest examples of most indulgent Princes in their Acts of Grace and favour to the people.

This Message is received with thanks; but the accused Members and their Partizans endeavour by all means any reconciliation, fearing their Empire would then be very short, 'Stir up the Parliament in pretence the better to enable them to perform their duty in those great matters mentioned in his Majesties Message, they desired him to raise up to them a sure ground of confidence, by putting the Tower of London into their hands, together with the command of the Navy Royal, and also all Forts, Castles, and the Trained Bands of the Kingdom, which in one word they called the Militia of the Kingdom. To which his Majesty answers,

That his Majesty having preferred to the Lientenancy of the Tower, a Person of a known Fortune and unquestionable Reputation, wonders that he should be pressed to remove him without any particular Charge objected against him; and therefore until some just Exception be, he is obliged to preserve his own work, lest his favour and good opinion become a misfortune to his Servants.

As for his Forts and Castles of this Kingdom, they shall always remain in such hands as the Parliament may confide in, which being the inseparable Flowers of the Crown vested in him, derivative from his Ancestours, by the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, he will reserve to himself, and to bestow them as their Eminence shall not be disproved by his Parliament.

For the Militia, which by Law is subject to no command but his own, when any particular course shall be digested by them for ordering the same, in reference to his honour and safety of the Kingdom, he will then return to them a satisfactory Answer therein.

And that he having granted to them more than ever any King hath done, they will not ask more than ever any Subjects have desired.

And therefore conjures them by all the Acts of Duty and Favour, which they have received, by their hopes of future happiness, by their love of Religion, and Peace of the Kingdom, in which, that of Ireland cannot be forgotten. That they will not be transported by unnecessary jealousies and Fears, but that they will speedily pursue the proposed way by his former Messages to compose the Distractions of this Kingdom.

And now the old way of petitioning is again set on foot from the County of Suffolk, and City Dames of London, for the taking away of the Votes of the Popish Lords and Bishops out of the House of Peers, where (they said) they had the greatest power. And for answer, the Commons tell them, They are just now under the consideration of this matter. And the Petitioners reply, That they doubted not of the care of the Commons, but that their whole distrust was in the House of Peers. And afterwards, for their fuller Answer, the Commons told them, That the House of Commons had already endeavoured relief from the Lords in their requests, and shall so continue, till redress be obtained.

On

Anno.
1648.

On the second of February the House of Commons sent for Sir Edward Dering, one of their Members, and examined him touching his Book of all his Speeches in this Parliament, and some others intended to have been spoken, in which some particulars therein tended to the dishonour of their House, and the privileges thereof, for which they excluded him their House, and Vote that his Book should be burnt at Westminster, Cheapside, and Smithfield; and that his Person should be Committed to the Tower during the pleasure of their House, which was done accordingly.

At last, after the many Instances of his Majesty, the Commons seem to lay the Affairs of Ireland to heart, and accordingly meeting in a Committee at Merchant-Tailors-Hall for the bringing in a Bill for the speedy raising of 400000 £ for the relief of Ireland, which was afterwards completed, and the Money raised; yet but very little of the Money sent to their relief.

About the midst of February his Majesty and the Queen went to Canterbury, with the Princess Mary, and from thence to Dover, where her Majesty Embarked with her Daughter the Princess for Holland, and his Majesty return'd by the way of Canterbury to Greenwich, where he was met with the Bill for taking away the Bishops Votes in Parliament which was then passed, from Greenwich he sends for the Prince of Wales and Duke of York; knowing neither himself or children safe at London, he resolves for York as a place of safety till a better way might be found for reconciling of these differences; in his Journey thither he was overtaken by two Petitions, the one about the Militia, which they desire may be settled by the Parliament, the other for the Trial of the Five Members, wherein they say, 'That 'tis their undoubted right, that no Member of Parliament can be proceeded against without the consent of Parliament. To the first his Majesty said, 'That when he shall know the extent of power which is extended to be established in those persons to be Commanders of the Forts and Militia, and to what time limited, no power shall be limited, no power shall be executed by his Majesty alone without advice of Parliament, so that they declare them such by Names, whom he shall have just cause to refuse.

And to the other Petition, 'That as he once conceived, he had ground enough to accuse them, so now he finds as good cause wholly to desert any prosecution of them. And lest some of his Subjects may be involved in some unknown and unwilling Errors, he is ready to grant such a free and general pardon as his Parliament shall think convenient.

These Petitions answered as before, and the Militia being the main point they would gain, finding his Majesty resolved not to devert himself thereof, they go about to settle it by an Ordinance, whereto they desire his Majesties concurrence, and for answer from Greenwich by the Lord Keeper Littleton, 'That he finds great cause to except against the Preface thereof, which confesseth a most dangerous Design upon the House of Commons, supposed to be an effect of the bloody counsels of Papists, which some may understand by their Printed Papers, to be his coming in person the fourth of January to demand the five Members.

'In which he had no other Design than to require them to justice, without any intent of violation upon any person, nor was there any provocation by any of his Train.

'As for the Militia, he is contented to allow the persons named for the Counties; but concerning the City of London, and other Corporations, it cannot stand with Justice or Policy to alter their Government in that particular, but will grant to them such Commissions as he hath done this Parliament to other Lieutenants, or otherwise he shall do it, than to have it first by some Law invested in him with power to transfer it to others, and to be digested into an Act of Parliament, rather than an Ordinance, lest there be a latitude for his good Subjects to suffer under any Arbitrary power whatsoever.

'As to the time for continuance of that power, he cannot consent to devert himself of the power which God and the Laws have placed him, to put it into the hands of others, for an indefinite time.

'And since the ground of their Designs refers to their Jealousies and Fears, he hopeth that his grace to them since the former Exceptions, is sufficient to expel any fear from former suspicions.

'And since, he is willing to condescend to all their Proposals concerning the County Militia, only excepting that of London, and other Corporations, which will be more satisfactory, if the Parliament weigh it well, than their Proposals by an Ordinance, to which (for these Reasons) he cannot consent.

'And because he perceives that in some places some persons begin to intermeddle of themselves with the Militia, he expecteth that his Parliament should examine the particulars thereof, being of great concernment and consequence, and to be proceeded against according to Law.

In his Progress to York, he stayed at Theobalds, where another Petition, or rather peremptory demand, of the Parliament for the settling of the Militia, overtakes the King, wherein they protest, 'That if his Majesty persist in the Denial of the Militia, the Dangers are such as will endure no longer Delay, but to dispose of it by Authority of Parliament, and resolve so to do, as it hath been by them propounded.

And that for the safety of his person and people, in much Jealousie and Fear, he will be pleased to continue his abode near London and the Parliament, and to continue the Prince of Wales, or any other Houses near London, to prevent the Jealousies and Fears of the people.

'That by the Laws of the Realm, the power of the Militia, of raising, ordering and disposing thereof, in any place, cannot be granted to any Corporation, by Charter, or otherwise, without consent of Parliament: and that those parts of the Kingdom that have put themselves in a posture of Defence, have done it by Declaration and Direction of Parliament.

With this so amazing a Message, his Majesty was much surprized, and finding as before, that in some places some persons of that party had already according to the Ordinance of both Houses, intermeddled with the Militia to the prejudice of

Car. 17.

Anno 1641. of his Majesties just right, he, under his own hand to the Parliament, saith, 'That he is amaz'd at this their Message, that he knew not well what to answer; You speak (saith he) of Jealousies and of Fears, lay your hands to your hearts, and ask your selves, whether I may not in earnest be disturbed with Fears and Jealousies.

'And if so, I will assure you, this your Message hath nothing lessened them.

'For the Militia, I thought as much before my last answer, being agreeable to what in Justice or reason you can ask, or I in honour grant, which I shall not alter in any point.

'I with my Residence near you might be so safe and honourable, that I had no cause to absent my self from White-hall. Ask your selves whether I have not?

'I shall take that care of my Son which shall justify me to God, as a Father, and to my Dominions as a King.

'I assure you upon mine Honour, I have no thoughts but of Peace and Justice to my People, which I shall by all fair means seek to preserve, relying upon the goodness of God, for the preservation of my self and Rights.

At the Receipt hereof they proceed and Vote all the particulars of their former Petitions, and that his Majesties answer thereto was unsatisfactory, That the Kingdom be put into a posture of Defence in such a way as is agreed upon by Parliament, and it was referred to a Committee to prepare a Declaration upon the two Heads.

1. The just causes of the Fears and Jealousies given to the Parliament, and to clear them from any Jealousies conceived against them.
2. To consider of all matters arising from his Majesties Message, and what is fit to be done.

Upon the second of March, Northumberland is sent down to the Fleet, Beacons are set up to fright the people, great riding and posting up and down with Pacquets and Dispatches, whispering and telling of dangerous and strange news amongst the Vulgar; whereas in truth, Only wise men say the truth of all, and that our Enemy was only at home.

The Parliament having finished their Declaration, send it by two Lords, Pembroke and Holland to Royston, where the King then was, the former whereof read to his Majesty, who composing his countenance in which was visibly a mixture of compassion and disdain, it consisted of these particulars: How on the 12th of January, 1641, the King's Majesty, by his Letters under the Great Seal, did command the Lord Kimbolton, and the Lord Digby, to raise a Guard about your person, labouring to infuse into the people an ill opinion of the Parliament, as if to raise Arms for a Civil War: in which Combustion Ireland would be lost.

The manifold Attempts to provoke your Majesties late Army, and the Scots Army, and to raise a Rebellion in London, and other parts, the Actors having their dependence, countenance, and encouragement from the Court; witness Jermia's Treason, who was transported beyond Sea by your Majesties Warrant; and how dangerous Petitions delivered to Captain Lee by your Majesty's own Hand, with a Direction signed by your Majesty's own Hand, to the Lord Kimbolton, and the Lord Digby, to raise a Guard about your person, labouring to infuse into the people an ill opinion of the Parliament, as if to raise Arms for a Civil War: in which Combustion Ireland would be lost.

That the Lord Digby was sent to Sir John Pennington to be landed beyond Sea, to vent his traitorous conceptions for the King to retire to some place of strength; offering to correspond by Cyphers with the Queen, as if to procure some Foreign Forces to assist your Majesty, answerable to your remove with the Prince as in a readiness for the atting of it.

Manifold Advertisements which they have from Rome, Venice, Paris, and other parts, expecting the effects of the King's Design, to alter Religion, and ruin the Parliament.

That the Pope's Nuncio hath solicited the Kings of France and Spain, to lend his Majesty four thousand men a-piece to help to maintain his Royalty against the Parliament.

And this Foreign Force, the most pernicious and malignant design of all the rest, so they hope it is from his thoughts. Because no man will easily believe you will give up your People and Kingdom to be spoiled by Strangers, if you did not likewise intend to change both your own profession in Religion, and the publick profession of the Kingdom, that so you might be more assured of these Foreign States of the Popish Religion for the future support and defence.

They beseech his Majesty to consider how fair a way he hath to happiness, honour, greatness, plenty, security, if he would but join with his Parliament and people in defence of the Religion and Kingdom?

This is all they expect from him, and for which they shall return their Lives, Fortunes, and utmost Endeavours, to support him and Sovereignty. And for the present, have but only this to desire, To turn away his wicked Counsellours, and put his trust in Parliament.

For answer hereto his Majesty put forth his Royal Declaration in justification of himself and proceedings, the purport whereof followeth:

'That he hath little encouragement to make replies of this nature, when he is told of how little value his words are with them, though accompanied with love and justice. He disavows the having any evil Counsellours about him, but leaves such to their censure where they shall find them: in the mean time, they ought not to wound his Honour, under the common stile of evil Counsellours.

'He hath formerly declared his faithful affection to the Protestant profession, his whole life answerable in practice, which should rather be acknowledged by them, than to declare any Design of his to alter it in this Kingdom. Imprecating God to be witness, and that the Judgments of Heaven may be manifested upon those that have or had any such Design.

'As for the Scotch Troubles, these unhappy Differences are wrapt up in perpetual silence by the Act of Oblivion passed in Parliaments of both Kingdoms, which staies him from any further Reply to revive the memory of these Evils.

'He thinks himself highly and causlessly injured in his Royal Reputation to have any Declaration, Action, or Expression of the Irish Rebels, or any Letters or strange Speeches to be uttered by such in reference to beget any misapprehension in the people, of his justice, piety, and affection, an evident advantage to the Rebels, by raising Fears to us here, and security to them there. Concerning this sense of his good Subjects in Ireland, what hath he not done in his Messages to both Houses, offering his own person ready to adventure for their Redemption, being to give an account to God for his interest in them.

'He

Anno. 1641. He calls God to witness, he never had thought of any Resolution with his late Army to raise a Faction in London, or to force his Parliament.

That Captain Leg was then lately come from the Army to White-hall, with a Petition from the Officers, desiring the Parliament might have no interruption in the Reformation of the Church and State to the model of Queen Elizabeth's daies; and for confirmation of Sir Jacob Ashley of my opinion therein I writ C. R. The Petition will satisfy, if you shew it.

Mr. Fermin was gone from White-hall before the Restraint, nor had he the King's Warrant after that time, for the Lord Kimbolton and the five Members; it hath been rubbed over so oft, that but looking to his former Answer, they will appear abundantly satisfied.

He had great reason to raise a Guard at White-hall, to secure his own person, and to receive the dutiful tender of his good Subjects service, which was all he did to the Gentlemen of the Inns of Court.

And assures them in the word of a King, that the Lord Digby had left the Court with Warrant to pass the Seas, before the Vote of the House of Commons, or that his absence could be excepted against.

As for the wilde Advertisements from Rome, Venice, Paris, the Pope's Nuntio, the Kings of France and Spain, which he is confident no sober man in all the Kingdom can believe, that the King is so desperate, so senseless, to entertain such Designs, to bring the Kingdom in destruction, and bury his Name and Posterity in perpetual infamy.

Can there yet want evidence on his part to join with his Parliament?

Hath he given no earnest but words?

Bids them look back upon their own Remonstrance in November last of the State of the Kingdom, which valued his Acts of Grace and Justice at so high a Rate, that it declared the Kingdom a Gainer, though it should charge it self by Subsidies and Poll-money six Millions of Pounds, besides the contracting the Scotch Demands of two hundred and twenty thousand pounds.

Nay more, hath he not passed these Bills, for the Triennial Parliament, for relinquishing his Title to impose upon Merchants Goods, and his power of pressing of Souldiers, for suppressing the Courts of Star-Chamber, High Commission, regulating the Council-Table? Are these but words? The Bills for the Forests, the Stannery Courts, the Clerk of the Markets, the taking away the Votes of the Bishops, nothing but words? What greater earnest can he give, than the Bill for the continuance of this Parliament, the length of which he wishes may never alter the nature of Parliaments? and for a perfect recontrition with his people, he offers a free Pardon. Nor doth he repent, but will meet them to add more, with alacrity and kindness, for the Peace, Honour, and prosperity of this Nation.

But they proceed however and resolve, That the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance is not in the least prejudiced by their Ordinance for the defence and settlement of the Kingdom. That his Majesties Commissions of Lieutenancy over the respective Counties are illegal and void.

That their Ordinance for the Militia is to be obey'd as a fundamental Law of this Kingdom; And these particulars be the heads of another Declaration.

However his Majesty now at Huntingdon [on the fifteenth of March] sends yet again this Message:

That he means to make his Residence at York, desires them to expedite the business of Ireland, and if Calamities increase upon that People, he shall wash his hands before all the World from imputation unto him.

He expects, that as he hath been forward to retract any Act of his entreuching upon them, so he expects an equal tenderness in them towards him, in an unquestionable Priviledge and fundamental. His Subjects not to be obliged to obey any Act, Order, or Injunction, to which his Majesty hath not given consent; And therefore he requires that they presume not upon any pretence of Order or Ordinance (to which his Majesty is not a party) of the Militia, or any other thing, to do or execute against the Laws; he being to keep the Laws himself, and his Subjects to obey them: and commends unto them, his Message of Jan. 20.

To which they give no other answer than, That they are resolved to adhere to their former Vote of the Militia. And furthermore, That to have their Votes question'd and contradicted, is a breach of Priviledge of Parliament; that a Committee be appointed to examine where and by whom this Message was counselled, being suspected therefore favourers of the Rebellion in Ireland; and in fine, an Answer by a Message, in every particular justifying their late Declaration.

So that now at last we are come to the true ground of intestine Divisions, the Parliament was resolved to wrest the Power of the Militia from the King, and his Majesty was resolved not to part with it (as he told the Earl of Pembroke at Royston) No, not for an hour, it is a thing never asked of any King, with which I will not trust my Wife and Children. However, the Parliament was resolved by force to have it, and had accordingly by an Ordinance settled it; this Ordinance was framed in February, and declared to be a Law whether his Majesty would give his consent to or no in March following, and had made settlements of the Militia in sundry places pursuant to the said Ordinance, whereas his Majesty had not then issued out any Commission of Array, for the said Commission appeareth by the date thereof to bear date the eleventh of June following in the eighteenth year of his Reign.

The Ordinance of both Houses of Parliament, for Ordering the Militia of the Kingdom of England, and Dominion of Wales.

Whereas there hath been of late a most dangerous and desperate design upon the House of Commons, which we have just cause to believe to be an effect of the bloody Counsels of Papists, and other ill-affected persons, who have already raised a Rebellion in the King-

Kingdom of Ireland; And by reason of many discoveries, we cannot but fear they will proceed not only to stir up the like Rebellions and Insurrections in this Kingdom of England, but also to back them with Forces from abroad:

It is ordained by the Lords and Commons, now in Parliament assembled, that shall have power to assemble and call together all and singular his Majesties Subjects within the County of as well within Liberties as without, that are meet and fit for the Wars, and them to train, exercise and put in readiness, and them after their abilities and faculties well and sufficiently, from time to time, to cause to be Arrayed and Weaponed, and to take the Muster of them in places most fit for that purpose. And shall have power within the said County to nominate and appoint such Persons of Quality as to him shall seem meet to be his Deputy Lieutenants, to be approved of by both Houses of Parliament. And that any one or more of the said Deputies so assigned and approved of, shall in the absence or by command of the same have Power and Authority to do and execute within the County all such power and Authority before in this present Ordinance contained. And so shall have power to make Colonels and Captains, and other Officers, and to remove out of their places, and to make others from time to time, as he shall think fit for that purpose. And his Deputies, Colonels, Captains and other Officers, shall have further Power and Authority to lead, conduct and employ the persons aforesaid, Arrayed and Weaponed, as well within the County of as within any other part of this Realm of England, or Dominion of Wales, for the suppressing of all Rebellions, Insurrections and Invasions that may happen, according as they from time to time shall receive directions by His Majesties Authority, signified unto them by the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament.

And it is further ordained, that such persons as shall not obey in any of the Premises, shall answer their neglect and contempt to the Lords and Commons in a Parliamentary way, and not otherwise, nor elsewhere; and that every the powers granted as aforesaid, shall continue until it shall be otherwise ordered or declared by both Houses of Parliament, and no longer.

John Brown, Clerk Parl.

The Commission of Array was as followeth:

CHARLES by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, &c. to our most dear Cousins Henry Earl of Huntingdon, and William Earl of Devonshire; and also to our beloved and trusty, Henry Hastings Esquire, Son of the said Earl of Huntingdon; Henry Barkley, George Villiers, Thomas Burton, Barons; Henry Shipwish, &c. Knights; Henry Hastings of Humberton, &c. Esquires; and the Sheriff of our County of L. for the time being, greeting. Know ye, that we willing to take care and provide for the safety and defence of Our Self and Kingdom, and our Lieges thereof, according as our duty is, and by God's good favour resolving to resist the malice of our enemies, if they shall presume to invade this our Realm of England: Have appointed you, or any three or more of you, to Array and Train all and every person and persons in Arms, Bow-men, &c. dwelling within your said County, with Liberties and without; and that you cause to be Armed all such as are able of body, and fit to bear them, who have of their own where-with to Arm themselves, viz. every one according to his Estate or condition, to rate and proportion according to your advice and discretion, or of any three of you; and to distrain all those who have Lands and Possessions, and through debility of body are unable for Service, causing them to find according to the quality of their Lands and Goods, what Arms conveniently and reasonably (saving their condition) they can bear; and to provide men at Arms, armed but with Bows and Arrows, so that they who shall stay and continue at their own home in their County for the defence of this our Kingdom against our enemies, shall receive no wages nor expences for this their stay at home aforesaid: and that you likewise dispose and cause to be disposed the said men so Armed and Arrayed, into Regiments, Troops, and Companies, or other Divisions as you shall see convenient. And we have assigned you, or any three or more of you, whereof you the said Earl of Huntingdon, and in your absence you the said Earl of Devonshire, or you Henry Hastings, son of the said Earl of Huntingdon, to be one of the said men at Arms, and Bow-men, so Arrayed and Trained, as well to the Sea-Coasts as to any other places, where, and as often, and as need shall require, to expel, overcome and destroy our said enemies, from time to time, in any eminent peril, to command and lead. And we have likewise Commissionated you or any three or more of you, to cause Muster or Musters of the said men so Armed and Arrayed to be made, and to supervise them, as oft as occasion shall require.

And also to proclaim, ordain, and diligently examine, and see that all, and every such men at Arms, armed men, and Bow-men in such Musters, be armed with their own, and not others Weapons, upon penalty of losing them; those only excepted who are to be armed at the Charge of others. And to Arrest, take, and in our Prisons to put all, and every of those who in this behalf you shall find enemies or Rebels, and to continue them in such Prisons until they shall be thence delivered by Law. And therefore, as straightly as we can, upon your Faith and Allegiance which you owe us, we enjoin and command you, that forthwith upon the sight of these presents, that in the best and safest manner you can, you Arm and Array your selves; and that before you at certain daies and places which you shall judge most convenient and expedient, and of least hindrance to our people, you cause all men dwelling in your County by whom the Array and Arming may be best effected and compleated, to be called and come together, there and then to be Arrayed and Armed; and them so Arrayed and Armed, to keep in the same Array. And furthermore, that you cause Beacons to be set up in the usual places, by which the several Counties may in fit time be fore-armed against the coming of our Enemies. And the same men so Arrayed and Armed in eminent danger, ters to be made Patents. Witness Our Self

Per ipsum Regem.

By comparing the Dates of both these, our Reader may see who were the Aggressors in this War, and what Calamities hereafter ensued; whilst on the one hand His Majesty endeavours to retain the power of the Milizia, and the Parliament to snatch it out of his Royal Hands; wherein by God and the Laws it was intrusted, it would fetch Tears of Blood from the Eyes of any obdurate person, to think seriously thereupon; which makes however some, not imprudent men, think and believe, that considering the Wisdom of the English Nation, and the sad remembrance of our Sufferings during the late unnatural War, we shall hardly be brought again by the Artifices of any self-seeking persons, who labour to embroyl us, especially by Methods and Means not very distant and remote from those, whereby some of us saw them formerly to have attained their evil Ends, by our own Hands and Engagements, to bring that Ruine and Devastation upon the Kingdom; of which ('tis to be hoped and wished) the Authors have seriously repented; and so we shall finish these our Collections in this Critical time, and leave the Prosecution of them to an afterhand.
